● Biased Reporting

Editor, The Guardsman:

Since emotionality has greater appeal to the majority of people than does rationality, there are certain honorable tactics which take advantage of this to control or incite others.

Recent evidence of this can be seen in the "red scare" of the "twenties" and in the "red baiting" of the late Senator Joseph McCarthy.

It is reprehensible that The Guardsman, in order to appeal to what seems to be the opinion of most City College students (the more vocal element), has to stoop to such practices.

In order to maintain what it recently stated to be "freedom of ideas" lacking by Vietnam protestants, there should be a somewhat more objective, unbiased reporting, if not space given to opinions contrasting to the views of The Guardsman.

Grover Klemmer Sprints Through 20 Years Of Coaching Campus Teams

By Greg Frazier

Next year, Grover Klemmer, physical education and hygiene instructor, will celebrate his 20th year here at the college as a member of the coaching staff.

Commenting on his long-time friend and colleague, Ralph Hillsman, Dean of Men, said, "Klemmer is a rare breed—one out of seven athletes ever to have won a block letter in three major sports at the University of California." (Hillsman himself was a basketball star of much repute while attending Cal.)

Although primarily a track man, Klemmer won his three letters in basketball and football as well as track. A native San Franciscan, he attended Galileo High School prior to entering Cal in 1941. Upon graduation, he was given a professional offer by the Cleveland Browns and the now defunct Los Angeles Dons.

However, the Navy needed Klemmer more than the pros, so he joined the service as a flight cadet. At the Great Lakes Naval Training Center he played football with Blanton Collier, now head coach of the Cleveland Browns.

Klemmer, who looks more like a student than a faculty member, came to the college in 1946 after obtaining his masters at Stanford.

Presently, he doubles as a head lineman for the National Football League. "Officiating has been very good to me," Klemmer said. "Sports are my life's work. Instricting keeps me in touch with the future stars, and officiating keeps me in touch with the pros."

Although Klemmer's position as an official prevents him from commenting on today's pro football scene, he did venture to say that the San Francisco 49ers "are gaining support and look better than they have for a long time."

Klemmer has nothing but praise for the City College Rams. "The Ram offense is particularly effective," he said: "the team can score from any position on the field.

"O. J. Simpson is an excellent halfback and a threat from anyone's point of view. Ron Fassler is perhaps the most valuable player in that he performs well in either defense or offense."

The Rams are the only undefeated team in their conference and with three games left to play they could capture the championship.

"Game attendance could be better," Klemmer lamented. "I've seen many teams come and go at the college and I know it means a lot to the players to have maximum spectator support."

When asked who is the greatest football player he has ever seen, Klemmer answered without hesitation. "Fullback Jim Brown of the Cleveland Browns is the greatest running back of all times. His record speaks for itself. Brown has broken practically every record in the book, and he has the best running balance of any football player I have ever seen."

There can be no doubt as to Klemmer's judgment in these matters, and if he says it's Jim Brown, then Brown it is.

COACH GROVER KLEMMER displays that 20-year smile.

Unusual Means The Usual In Job Placement

Students willing to do the unusual have been supplied just that this semester, because of the variety of jobs which have been available in the college placement center.

Along side those office-clerk, department store-worker, typist, and other "usual" jobs available, students have found other not-so-common ways to make a buck.

Joseph Amori, student placement director, reported that 31 students filled employment openings for mock interviews.

"They worked for the Telephone Company in a series of interviewing workshops," Amori said," and their conversations were tape-recorded and later analyzed by the workshops in order to improve employment interview techniques."

One North Beach night club is looking for coeds to work as topless shoeshine girls.

Coed geology students are wanted to collect rock specimens for the "Pebbie Palace." This job pays on a commission basis.

One household is looking for a woman dog walker. It seems the dog must be exercised at night and by a woman. He, (the dog) is a "man-hater."

Slenderizing salons have requested coeds to give exercise instructions. This job requires that the girls have "good shapes," themselves, Amori said.

News To Nobody

The Vanishing Californian

By Peter Dorn

WELL, it's finally happened. California, the fattest state in the affluent society, has exhausted one of its natural resources. Recently, the draft board announced that the supply of eligible men for the draft is dwindling and the board is beginning to give the students of the land the old fish eye.

Although the idea of reclassifying many students is strictly tentative, to date, and speculation is festooned with if's, students of the state should, in the true Minuteman tradition, prepare themselves for any possibilities of induction.

Students may not be the only ones to suffer inconvenience. It should be evident to everybody that, what with the supply of young males being depleted every month, the women of the land will have to take up the positions in the defense plants that the men left vacant.

A labor shortage in the state will, therefore, exist. With many patriotic women giving up their various civilian positions to work in the factories, many services and products that Californians have enjoyed in the past will be sacrificed for The Effort.

It shouldn't be at all surprising, then, that rationing of both services and products will come into being. And, as the supply of manpower is reduced to legitimate 4 F's and heads of large, very large, families, there will come an accelerated need for further rationing because of the increased labor and product shortages.

Agriculture and defense factories, the state's foremost enterprises, will continue to produce at the same, if not an increased, scale. However, looking back to when men were plentiful and refused to pick strawberries because the work was too hard, there is going to be some trouble in hiring field hands.

The Mexicans, being no fools, will probably all move to Central or Southern Mexico and live in the hills for a while, just in case—far, far away from the California border. Braceros will be as scarce as pickpockets in a nudist camp.

The movie industry will be in full production however; they'll be busy dragging out those old Star Spangled scripts of '43, and Private Mulvaney, Sad Sack and GI Joe will live and love once again on every remaining asbestos screen in the land.

The women of California will have to go to the shows alone, however, because there just won't be any young men around, remember?

Meanderings

By Mike Smith

IN a William Shakespeare tragedy, Hamlet said to a character known as Horatio, "There are more things in heaven and earth . . . than are dreamt of in your philosophy."

It is often difficult to distinguish between fact and fiction, but there are those who believe that they can easily separate the two. One example of dividing fact and fiction is embodied in the phenomenon of UFO's, more commonly known as Flying Saucers. Quite a few officials of the U. S. Air Force tell us that saucers are nothing but the product of science-fiction.

Then does this mean that all there is "between heaven and earth" is our world? Astronomers have said that there is a countless number of stars in the universe, and possibly one star in a hundred is similar to our sun, capable of having planets.

In our own galaxy, one star in a million can have a planet like earth. This would suggest that in our galaxy alone there may be one million planets like earth. And there are millions of galaxies in the universe.

In a very extreme sense this can be considered as "science-fiction." But it is a start. There are many theories in science-fiction "stories" that were written in the past that are fact today. One "fiction" writer who often wrote what was supposedly pure fantasy was Jules Verne.

Johnathan Swift, author of Gulliver's Travels, spoke of two moons circling Mars—which at the time was considered an imagination of the mind.

The world has not only ridiculed "fantasy" writers, but philosophers and scientists as well. One Greek philosopher, Aristarchus, who lived about the third century B.C., suggested that the earth circled the sun and rotated on its axis.

No one took him seriously, nor did the world look on the Polish astronomer Nicolaus Copernicus as "sane" when in 1543 he tried to prove that the earth really did circle the sun.

When Shakespeare said "things," he undoubtedly meant everything including the curious practice of Astrology. Today we look on this as we view witchcraft. But according to an article in the November 1965 issue of True Magazine, "the climate of scientific opinion is changing somewhat and evidence is emerging which seems to suggest that what goes on in the heavens may well have some cause and effect connection with all of us here on earth."

In effect, this could imply that we could possibly forsee the future. But then, how much of Astrology, that of which is proved to be true, is pure coincidence?

In this age, we are occupied not only with astrology, but with a more serious matter called ESP.

Nevertheless, there is always a "scientific thinker" who must have everything proved to him before he accepts it as fact. In the late 19th century, the director of the U.S. Patent Office suggested to Congress that the Patent Office be closed because all the inventions which could possibly be made had been made.

During the time of America's constitutional convention, one of the biggest problems dealt with the question of slavery. The convention was warned a dozen times of what could happen if slavery continued. The delegate who was against human bondage more than any other man at the convention was Colonel Mason of Virginia.

In a heated argument with Roger Ellsworth of Connecticut as to whether States had a right to import slaves, Mason warned Ellsworth, "Every master of slaves is born a petty tyrant. They bring the judgment of Heaven on a country. As nations cannot be rewarded or punished in the next world, they must be in this. By an inevitable chain of causes and effects, Providence punishes national sins by national calamities."

Happiness Is A Pie

HAD IT NOT BEEN that the fraternities were recruiting members last week and putting them through all kinds of initiations, this scene might have passed unnoticed as, perhaps, some kind of a demonstration protesting the overcrowded cafeteria. But last week was Hell Week, and the bareback boy is Pledge Bob Fife, who wanted to be in Alpha Kappa Rho so badly that he was willing to partake in this pastry eating contest, which he won. Perhaps when they let him into Kappa Rho he will wear a shirt.

Theta Tau, Beta Tau Sponsor City Of Hope Rally Nov. 18

Two Greek-letter societies on campus, Theta Tau sorority and Beta Tau fraternity will jointly sponsor a charity rally Thursday, November 18, to collect funds to be donated to the City of Hope.

A professional combo, the Dovermen, of recent Off Broadway fame has donated its time and talents to assure the rally's success. Theta Tau President Janis Goldberg made the Dovermen's appearance possible.

Both the Inter-Fraternity Council and the Student Council unanimously endorsed the effort being made for the charity project by both the sorority and fraternity.

Each semester the sororities and fraternities on campus are expected to give time to a service project for a charitable organization. The selection of the organization which is in need of the most help is usually the target, Theta Tau and Beta Tau spokesmen said.

Since there are only three rallies a semester for the benefit of charity, "much time and consideration" was given before the two organizations chose the City of Hope.

Additional Plays On Drama List

An additional program of three one-act plays will be presented by the drama department at 8 p.m. Friday, November 19, in the theater, director Walter Krumm announced today.

The program will consist of a repeat performance of the "American Dream" by Edward Albee, which was excellently received in its initial College Hour production.

The other two are Before Breakfast, by Eugene O'Neill, and Krapp's Last Tape, by Samuel Beckett.

"All three plays are of the theater of the absurd, and Before Breakfast and Krapp's Last Tape provide excellent vehicles for the actor, since there is only one performer in each play," Krumm commented.

The next scheduled major production of the drama department was to have been the musical comedy, Trial By Jury, by Gilbert and Sullivan, Krumm added, but it has been called off because of lack of response.

Instead, Lillian Hellman's Little Foxes will be presented in four performances in January.

Tryouts for that production are expected to be held open to all students, sometime this month.

February 7-9 Set For Registration

Registration days for students returning for the Spring semester are February 7, 8 and 9. On February 7, students with numbers 1-4700 will register; on February 8, those with numbers 4701-5950, and on February 9, 5951-6750.

A complete schedule of registration times is available in the counseling office in S-160.

Thomas Nesbitt, director of testing, said that registration numbers are determined by two factors: grade point average and seniority. Each is of equal importance.

Students who have pre-programming appointments with their counselors are expected to keep them. Those who cannot for any reason are expected to make arrangements with their counselors for another appointment before the time of their original date.

Students who fail to do this will lose their original registration number and be given another for a later registration hour, the counseling staff warned.

State To Provide Partial Tuition For Worthy Students

State scholarships, valued at a total of $25,000 dollars, will be awarded to students this fall which will pay partial tuition to any university in California, according to Mary Golding, dean of women.

To qualify, a student is expected to present a grade point average of 2.5, to be under 24 years of age at the time of application for the scholarship, and be in need of financial assistance to further his education.

To qualify financially, a student and both his parents must earn a combined total of less than $4000 dollars a year. However, if the combined total exceeds this amount, a scholarship may still be acquired if the student and his family can present evidence of unusual financial strain.

If the student qualifies he can receive anywhere from $300 to $1500 dollars in $100 dollar intervals at private universities varying according to the student's need for financial assistance and the tuition of the college he will attend.

Awards for public universities will be in the amount of the fees charged —at the University of California, approximately $250 dollars; at State Colleges, approximately $100 dollars.

Students interested in applying for scholarships are expected to apply for the Scholastic Aptitude Test scheduled for December 4.

The State Scholarship Application must be filled out and postmarked by midnight, January 7, Dean Golding said.

Weathered Mascot Gets A Facelifting

Pledge Week activities of two local fraternities improved the appearance of the Redwood Ram at the entrance to the campus near Smith Hall.

The Ram was treated to a scrubbing and cleaning and a fresh coat of paint. Redwood stain and white paint, for the base, were applied by Phi Beta Delta and Alpha Sigma Delta fraternities.

According to George Brasi, vice president of Phi Beta Delta, the Ram was badly weathered and provided a service project for the new members of the fraternities.

This is not the first bit of rejuvenation for the Ram, as it has previously been painted red and white as a symbol of the college colors when it was mounted on its present base in 1956.

Legal Rights And Religious Factors Opposing Points In Discussion Over Kashmir

By Giuseppe Greco

Pakistani students supported the claims of their country upon Kashmir referring to the decisive religious factors, while Indian students spoke effectively to defend the legal rights of India, in a panel discussion held on October 28, sponsored by the International Relations Club.

Ahmad Saed, an electronics student from Pakistan, opened the discussion on behalf of his country. He stated that from every possible consideration—historical, geographical, economical, ethnical and strategical—Kashmir belongs to Pakistan.

"Kashmir is contiguous to Pakistan on three sides," Saed said, "and if it is contiguous to India, it is only by a pass scarcely 30 miles wide. All the roads running through the Himalayan chain lead to Pakistan."

RIVERS PLAY MAJOR ROLE

Saed also stressed the important role of the rivers in the economy of his country. He said that since the rivers have their source in Kashmir, a hostile rule in this country could produce irreparable damage.

"Besides," he added, "about 80 per cent of the population is Muslim and since Pakistan is a state founded on the basis of religion, Kashmir should become part of Pakistan."

In order to strengthen his points, Saed produced examples of the states of Junagadh and Hyderabad, in which the circumstances led India to take them over so that they could be admitted to the Indian territory. But the two states were contiguous with India and not with Pakistan.

"But the situation with Kashmir is different," Saed declared, "and Kashmir will never become a possession of India."

After this speech came the turn of another Pakistani, Zafar Abdulla.

He spoke of the efforts made by countries friendly both to India and Pakistan to achieve an amicable settlement of the war satisfactory to the two parties in collision.

PROPOSALS FOR SETTLEMENT

Abdulla enumerated these efforts: In August, 1949, the United Nations Commission to India and Pakistan made a proposal. Following this, in 1951, the prime minister of the British Commonwealth suggested three subsequent resolution and in March of the same year, Ambassador Munis of Brazil made an interesting suggestion.

He proposed that all the points of difference between the two countries be referred to arbitration.

In 1962, the late President John F. Kennedy offered the services of Eugene Black, president of the World Bank, to India and Pakistan.

"Of these proposals, none were accepted by India while all were unconditionally accepted by Pakistan," Abdulla said, and added, "in accordance with the United Nation's own resolution in 1949, Pakistan, during Secretary General U. Thant's visit, made a three-point proposal."

LEGAL ANNEXATION TO INDIA

It included an immediate cease-fire, withdrawal of all Indian and Pakistani forces to be replaced by UN troops, and plebiscite within three months.

At this point, Adil Yunus, an engineering student from India, spoke.

"The annexation of Kashmir to India in October, 1947, was and is legal, constitutional and unconditional," he said. "By that time, Pakistan wouldn't be able to get Kashmir by popular vote because the people had recently had active participation in the movement of Independence of India, and these same people certainly would not participate in any 'pro-Pakistan movement.'"

Yunus described what happened in 1948. Pakistani leaders had sent troops into Kashmir because they knew that the maharaja would not be strong enough to choose Pakistan. On that occasion, India had the moral duty of sending troops in defense of what was an integral part of its territory.

"Pakistan will never get Kashmir. If this happened, it would mean that India was and is unfit to rule itself," Yunus pointed out.

Then Saed got the chance to add something in defense of his country. He said that no longer were the Indians the non-violent people that the admirers of Mahatma Gandi supposed.

RELIGION IS NOT A BOND

They had used their armed forces in starting popular uprisings in Kashmir in 1947 and, in a way, enforcing the maharaja to secede from India, to take over the state of Hyderabad in 1949, in Nagalandin in 1956, and to oust the Portuguese from Goa in 1961.

As the debate went on, Ravi Goswami, an Indian student, criticized the Pakistani concept of a nation, saying that religion alone cannot form the bond between peoples; a nation does not have to be based on religion, but on territory and common tradition.

"Our history is of one united people," he said, adding, "in India, there are 60 million Muslims who hold important public duties as well as Hindus, and no racial or religious discrimination exists.

"We were the first to offer the possibility of a plebiscite in 1947, and we have held universal elections since then, three times during this period."

Goswami's statement was in response to the accusation of a Pakistani student who had affirmed that India was undemocratic if it did not allow Kashmir to hold a plebiscite.

Santa Needs Christmas Helpers

With the release of millions of dollars of Christmas Club deposits in San Francisco last week, employers have initiated massive personnel recruitment drives on college and university campuses, according to Joseph A. Amori, student placement director.

"A four per-cent increase over last year's Christmas Club deposits points toward one of the better Yule seasons in San Francisco history, and employers have begun to build their personnel staffs for the Christmas buying sprees," Amori said.

"Experienced sales personnel, both men and women, are the most in demand by the department stores, specialty shops and confectionary firms. In addition to the required experience, applicants must be sales oriented, well groomed, and demonstrate a verbal capability," he added.

Pay increases of approximately five per cent over last year will bring the average hourly rate up to $1.50 per hour. One season's experience will bring a 25 to 50 cent per hour premium while the unionized shops will pay the maximum $2 to $2.50 per hour.

Work schedules are expected to be rigid because of customer demand, and employers are seeking employees who can work nights from 5 to 9 p.m., and all day Saturdays.

"There will be a demand for full-time schedules beginning with the closing of college December 11, for Christmas vacation," Amori emphasized.

Several employer groups are seeking workers with machine accounting experience. Either men or women may apply. Most of the work will be performed in the evenings, 5 to 11 p.m., with pay ranging from $1.75 to $2.00 per hour.

Experienced truck drivers will be in demand who have a thorough knowledge of the city, and who have clear driving records. These jobs will pay from $1.75-$2.25 per hour.

"Clerical workers, including typists and stenographers, as in previous years are not on the most-wanted list, even though there will be some call for these workers. A typing speed of 45 to 60 words per minute and 90 to 120 words for shorthand are necessary for these jobs. The pay ranges from $1.50 to $2.50 per hour," Amori said.

Applications for the jobs are being accepted now in the college placement center, S-190.

Campus-Made Ceramics On Sale December 2

A ceramic sale will be held on Thursday, December 2, Roy Walker, head of the department, announced today.

The colorful, hand-thrown potteries to be sold will include all of the bowls, vases and bottles that have been donated by faculty and students, and proceeds of the sale, according to Walker, will be used to purchase additional supplies for the department.

San Mateo Belted As Records Fall

45-6 Is Margin Over Bulldogs As Rams Now 5-0

By Randy Koernig

Two more records were broken by O. J. Simpson and City College as the Rams rolled over arch-rival San Mateo, 45-6, for their fifth straight Golden Gate Conference victory.

Simpson set a new conference single season scoring mark of 78 points. O. J. is also in sole possession of the national scoring lead with an overall total of 90 points on 15 touchdowns. The Rams eclipsed the old team conference record of 165 points as they have now tallied 187 points.

The pattern of the game was the same as it has been for the past three contests, with the Rams taking the opening kickoff and then marching 72 yards with Simpson taking it the final 33 yards for the score. Fred Loville then kicked the extra point to give the San Franciscans a quick lead of 7-0.

Later in the first quarter, Simpson capped a 79-yard drive as he scored from the one to give City College a first-quarter lead of 13-0.

In the second quarter Bob Lee, replacing the injured Bill Gianquinto at quarterback, unleashed a 45-yard bomb to Eural Smothers for a score. The play capped an 87-yard Ram drive.

On one of the most exciting plays of the battle, halfback Ron Fassler put on a brilliant exhibition of broken field running as he went over and around San Mateo defenders for 54 yards and a touchdown. Fassler was also the Rams' leading rusher with 165 yards and two touchdowns.

In the third quarter, Fassler scored his second touchdown of the afternoon, this one from one yard out. It was in this quarter that San Mateo got on the board as they put together a sustained drive with a young man named Laich taking it for the final eight yards.

Simpson concluded his scoring in the fourth when he went over from nine yards out, while shortly afterward, reserve halfback Craig Rodeick concluded all scoring as he powered over from the one to make it a total of 45 points for the Rams on the afternoon.

In the statistics department, Bob Lee was fantastic as he hit on 10 of 13 passes for 273 yards. As was stated earlier, Fassler was the leader on the ground with 165 yards and Simpson was second with 66 yards and three scores. The Rams' offensive for the day was 542 yards.

The Ram defense, although shaky at times in the first half, settled down in the second half and forced the San Mateans into many punting situations. Anchoring the defense was end Chris Davis who made a tremendous effort, repeatedly smashing into San Mateo quarterbacks and throwing them for huge losses.

O. J. DOES IT AGAIN! O. J. Simpson (close-up in inset) displays the running style he's used all this year as he breaks off right tackle for 61 yards and a touchdown against Foothill. Simpson also scored on runs of 19 and 57 yards against the Owls and established a new single-game individual rushing record as he gained 207 yards in 16 carries. Going into the San Mateo game the freshman halfback had gained 509 yards in 55 carries and scored 10 touchdowns. His 72 points put him in a tie for the national lead.

Scoring Duel Foreseen As Rams Face Jags For Title

Powerful San Jose City College comes to San Francisco on Friday to take on the Rams in the Golden Gate Conference Football Game-Of-The-Year.

If the Rams can knock off the Jaguars, they will cinch the conference title a week ahead of schedule. San Jose is currently 4-1, with wins over Diablo Valley, Foothill, Merritt and Contra Costa.

The Jaguars' lone loss was a 26-7 upset by Chabot. In that game San Jose gave up the ball three times inside the ten yard line.

A San Francisco win will give the Rams a 6-0 record with one game to play while their nearest opposition will have a 4-2 record. The win would also guarantee the Rams a berth, as the host team, in the 1965 Prune Bowl in San Jose.

But the Rams cannot let their minds wander to "bowl thoughts" until they have disposed of the Jaguars. And that will be some chore.

San Jose boasts what is probably the league's finest passing attack in quarterback Bob Toledo and receivers Mike Goodman, Cragi Shupe and Jim Heckendorn.

Heckendorn is the only end in their attack. He plays tight and switches from side to side. Goodman and Shupe are both halfbacks but one man is the split-end and the other plays flankerback.

The Jaguars have been running well while the defense is spread out in anticipation of a pass. But when San Jose nears their opponents' goal the defense tightens up, looking for the run, and the Jaguar rushing attack has lacked punch up close. Because of this, Toledo has had to throw close to the goal, and against Chabot this strategy didn't work.

San Francisco was fortunate in drawing the home field advantage, but a good showing by Ram supporters would definitely not hurt the cause.

San Francisco will break many team and individual records this year, but none of them will mean a thing if the Rams do not win the conference championship.

Three Teams Take Lead In Intramural Basketball Race

The semiannual intramural basketball league sponsored by the Associated Men Students, got under way last week in the men's gymnasium.

Stan Angel, president of the Associated Men Students, said that 16 teams will play each Tuesday and Wednesday night.

On Tuesday nights the eight club teams will play each other. The following night the Independent and the Fraternity teams will complete.

In last Tuesday's action the Newman Club outlasted the American Filipino Club, 50-45, in the first contest of the evening.

The second contest was not so close as the Negro Students Association clobbered the Ram Ski Club, 81-36. The other one-sided victory was recorded by the Block S.F. who defeated the Sophomore Club, 74-27.

In the initial night a big controversy resulted between The Guardsman and Lawson's Ten. The argument came about at the final buzzer, when the scoreboard read, Guardsman - 32, Lawson's Ten - 31. The next morning the scorekeeper reported that he had made an error in scoring and that the actual score was Lawson's Ten - 33, and The Guardsman - 32.

Mike Smith, captain of The Guardsman team filed a protest.

In the club division, The Newman Club, Block S. F., Negro Students Association, and either Lawson's Ten or The Guardsman is in first place.

The Independents and Fraternities played Wednesday night when four games were scheduled, but only one played. The reason for this was that there were three forfeits. The three winners by forfeit were The Chiefs, The Celtics and the N.B.A. Rejects.

In the only game that was actually played, The Irish of the Independent League, easily defeated Alpha Phi Epsilon, 75-43.

Leading the way to the Irish victory were Pat Kearns with 16 points, and Tom Courtney with 20 points. Courtney was strong on backboards, and Kearns was a fine playmaker as well as scoring key baskets.

Sights Set On State Title

Apathy Possible Title Spoiler

Holding a 12-1 overall season record, and a 5-0 conference total, the Ram soccer men are thinking in championship terms as they eagerly await the Southern California Soccer Conference race to be decided, and a possible Ram opponent chosen.

At press time, Southern California conference favorite, Victor Valley College, is tied for the lead. The Rams have faced Victor Valley in the State Championship game the last two years, earning 4-1, and 8-0 victories.

"Any time a team holds a 12-1 record, it has to be a fine team. I wish we could erase that lone loss, but it was our first game and we were somewhat unorganized. San Jose played a fine game," Ram coach Roy Diederichsen commented concerning the team's season so far.

"I still will have to contend that when this team wants to play, it is capable of holding its own with any team in the United States. The teams only flaw has been a tendency to play only hard enough to win," Diederichsen said.

An example of this was illustrated in the Rams' second meeting with Santa Clara. After having defeated the Broncos, 9-0, three days before, the Rams found themselves trailing, 0-1, at the end of the first half.

"The deciding factor this season has been that each time the team has slowed up, someone has always been ready to pick it up. If it was not Alex Mendieta, then it was Envir Safir, or Tom Samuelsen or George Hernandez," Diederichsen added.

The coach also disclosed plans to schedule a game either with Stanford or San Francisco State before the game down south.

Booters, Stopped In First Half, Crush Santa Clara Broncos, 7-1

The local soccer players ran their overall record to 12-1 last Tuesday, as they scalped the University of Santa Clara Broncos, 7-1, at Balboa Stadium.

Offensively, the game was highlighted by Envir Safir, who tallied three times in the second half. It was impossible for any Ram to score on Santa Clara in the first half.

Defensively, it was Connie Shishkin who took charge in the backfield once again. Shishkin seems to age with every game and it appears as though there will not be many players who can surpass his type of defensive action.

In the first 45 minutes, the Rams looked as though all they had to do was appear on the field in order to win.

The visitors' only goal was undeserved, since the home team cage defender made a technical error by bouncing the ball and punching it out on the ground in a crowd of Santa Clara offensive "threats." The Santa Clarans took advantage of the "given" opportunity and placed the ball safely in the cage.

This made the score 1-0 in favor of the visiting team and that score stood unchallenged until the second half of play.

Safir made it a brand new game as he scored on a 20-yard blast. Next in line was Peter Rossi, who put a well-aimed shot in the foes' left hand corner. Minutes later Nelson Artiga was found open, and local scoring ace Alex Mendieta slipped him the leather which the former easily put in the cage.

Safir received a pass from right wing Ronnie Vanvelthuysen for still another Red and White tally. Safir then lobbed the ball over the visiting goalie from a distance of 25 yards to make it 5-1 for the locals.

Athletes To Receive Certificates At Block Banquet December 2

Block S.F. Society, the college's athletic organization, is planning to hold its semi-annual awards banquet December 2, President Tom Csekey announced today.

"At the banquet those athletes who have earned letters will receive certificates of recognition," Csekey said. "I extend an invitation to all present lettermen, and to those members who will receive their blocks at the banquet to join Block S.F. I also would like to encourage them to participate in all our functions," Csekey added.

"Our main goal is to achieve the highest total membership," Csekey disclosed.

Besides the banquet, the organization's main function is to perform services for the college. Members do this by selling refreshments at all the games held at City Colleges. This includes all high school games, as well as Ram games.

Csekey also announced the selection of Block S.F. officers. Joe Callan will serve as Vice President, Biff Barnes will be Treasurer, and Linda Castro will function as Secretary for the society.

Records Keep Falling As Bowl Hopes Near

By William Pates

MANY PEOPLE are hard put to define just what is the ingredient responsible for the difference in the performance of last year's football team against that of the presently nationally twelfth-ranked City College club.

In three words—it's O. Jay Simpson, and in two more it's veteran experience.

Whatever it is, big or small, it has enabled the 1965 football squad to develop one of the most offensively explosive teams in years.

Several Golden Gate Conference records have already fallen before the Ram offensive machine—"The Prune Bowl Express."

With 509 yards in 55 carries in four league contests, Simpson has a legitimate chance at breaking Travis Williams' single season rushing record of 835 if he plays his usual game the rest of the season.

He has already broken the single contest rushing record of 189 and the single game scoring mark of 20 points.

With 207 yards (unofficially) against Foothill, Simpson broke Williams' former record by nearly 20 yards while passing John Travis', Frank Lynchs' and Williams' 20-point scoring record by four with four td's against Contra Costa.

There is a great chance of Simpson setting a new seasonal scoring mark what with 78 points in five contests far and away ahead of the rate by Travis Williams when he set the present scoring record of 68 points last year.

Simpson has already tied the seasonal td mark of 10 and consequently that will be broken every time he scores—if he scores during the rest of the season.

The college offensive team as a whole should break the total yardage record of 2287 set by the 1963 Comets with an average of 326.7 yards a game.

Unless catastrophe strikes, City College will likewise break the season scoring record easily and set a new mark which could possibly be broken in the near future what with the league only in its fourth year.

For that matter, every record broken by the 1965 City College powerhouse may be broken sometime in the future.

Beta, Theta Tau Sponsor Fund Raising Rally

Beta Tau and Theta Tau, the brother and sister organizations, are sponsoring an on-campus fund raising rally for the City of Hope during College Hour tomorrow at the Ram.

Janis Goldberg, president of Theta Tau sorority, stated that members of Theta Tau and Beta Tau will pass through the crowd during the rally collecting donations for the City of Hope medical organization.

Miss Goldberg mentioned that the Dovermen, who have won four battles of the bands, will donate their time to provide music for the rally.

The City of Hope hospital, which is located in Duarte, California, researches and treats such killer-diseases as cancer, leukemia, heart disease and tuberculosis.

The hospital gives free treatment to those who cannot afford to pay for surgery and treatment which may save their lives.

All of the money collected during the rally will be presented to the San Francisco chapter of the City of Hope, the Golden Torch.

This rally is only one of the many service projects sponsored on campus by the fraternities and sororities this, and every semester.

Notable among the past service projects are the March of Dimes and the on-campus Blood Drives.

Each One Teach One —Students Aid In Tutoring Program

Each One Teach One is the key phrase in a program in which students from the college are cooperating with the San Francisco Unified School District and local churches to provide free tutoring services to youngsters with academic problems.

The program grew out of the school district's Compensatory Education Program.

Associated Student President Dennis Sweeney explained that the college actively entered the program in response to the request of Reverend Frederick Bird, who is in charge of the study hall operated at the St. John's Methodist Church.

"Most of the students served need help in arithmetic and reading skills," Sweeney explained. "However, the attempt is also made to aid those who request assistance in other fields.

"About 65 tutors are currently working at the study centers. Although a ratio of one tutor to one student has been feasible in most cases, it has sometimes been necessary to overload the tutors by asking them to work with two or more students," he added.

Study halls are conducted on weekday afternoons and evenings at St. John's, 756 Union St. At Temple Methodist Church, where the study hours additionally include Saturday, the system operates under the guidance of Reverend Jerry Walker.

The study hall at St. John's serves a housing project, where study facilities can never reach a desirable level. The districts in which the two study halls are located are well integrated, and students of all races and ethnic background are encouraged to seek aid.

Additional tutors are still being sought for the program. Students with time to give are urged to consult Dennis Sweeney or Student Activities Adviser James Wyatt in B-6, or Reverend Bird or Reverend Walker directly at the study halls.

RA Members Win Awards At Monterey

Awards were won by several members of the Recreation Association here at a sportsday at Monterey Peninsula College on October 23.

In individual sports, several RA members received awards. James Damon, George Pena and Karla DeYoung took first, second and third places, respectively, in the fencing competition.

Two RA members captured both top places in archery, with Genaro Jose placing first and Mike Scott second. In bowling, Len Beckum had the high men's score. Sharon Harris and Pam Maul tied in bowling for the high women's score.

Bus Signups End Friday For Trip To Grid Finale

Buses for students planning to attend the City College-Diablo Valley football game this Saturday, can be boarded at Bungalow 5 at 12:15 p.m.

According to Jim Wyatt, student government adviser, sign-ups, which began Monday, will run through Friday at Bungalow 5. The bus ride will be free to those with an Associated Student Card.

The number of buses will depend upon the number of students who have signed up, Wyatt said.

Three One-Acts Make Theater Showing Here

Krapp's Last Tape by Samuel Beckett, American Dream by Edward Albee and Before Breakfast by Eugene O'Neill, a program of one-act plays, will be presented for one performance only at 8 p.m. Friday in the theater, director Walter Krumm announced today.

American Dream, which was recently staged during College Hour, will have the same cast, with Gale Bradley as Mommey, Jamie O'Neill as Daddy, Gail Ross as Grandma, John Leveck as The Young Man and Lana Tershy as Mrs. Barker.

In Krapp's Last Tape and Before Breakfast, which have only one performer in each play, the players are Jamie O'Neill and Phyllis Melnon, respectively.

In addition, in Before Breakfast there is also the character of Alfred, Mrs. Rowland's husband, who is not heard, and who is seen only in the form of a hand.

The appendage to be used is that of Michael Dobrinski, veteran participant in drama productions here, and most recently noted in the role of Shawn Keogh in Playboy Of The Western World.

Dobrinski is following in a "fine tradition," since in the initial production of Before Breakfast by the Province Town Players of Massachusetts in 1916, the hand was played by the author, Eugene O'Neill.

It is "curious to note," Krumm stated, that although the three plays were written in varied circumstances Before Breakfast in 1914, American Dream in the late 1950's by an American and Krapp's Last Tape at about the same time by a European, "they all concern themselves with the drabness and shallowness of middle class life and values, and use middle class dialogue to point up these conclusions."

The technical crew, supervised by Victor Vaio, technical director, will include Sandra Moses and Dennis Russo, stage managers, Harriet Reich, lighting and the stagecraft classes.

Free tickets for the performance can be obtained from any drama or English instructor, or at the drama office in Arts Hall, Krumm said.

Tryouts for the semester's next major drama production, Little Foxes, by Lillian Heliman, which are open to all students, with parts for six men and four women, will be held on November 22 and 23 from 2 to 4 p.m. in the theater, Krumm stated.

Youth And Civil Liberties Is C-Hour Topic

Youth and Civil Liberties will be the topic of a lecture to be given by Dr. Edgar Z. Friedenberg, a member of the department of sociology at the University of California in Davis.

The lecture will be given in the theater during College Hour tomorrow.

Professor Friedenberg is considered an authority in the field of education; his area of concentration has been the special problems facing young people in the United States.

His latest book, Coming Of Age In America, which was published this fall by Random House, is a study of how the American high school molds its students into its own image of what young people should be.

Dr. Friedenberg is described as an outspoken critic of this policy and of all the forces in society which believes in interference with the personal autonomy or particular individuality of American adolescents.

In addition to Coming Of Age In America, Professor Friedenberg is the author of The Vanishing Adolescents and The Dignity of Youth and Other Atavisms.

He received his B.S. degree from Centenary College in his native Louisiana and his M.S. from Stanford. Both degrees were in chemistry.

While at Stanford, his interest shifted to sociology and upon his return from the Navy after World War II, he earned his Ph.D. degree in that field at the University of Chicago.

Before coming to Davis, Professor Friedenberg taught at the University of Chicago and at Brooklyn College.

The Student-Faculty Lectures are sponsored by the Associated Students and the Faculty Association. They are given by speakers in areas of wide appeal, according to Edward Taylor of the Political Science department, faculty sponsor, and Stella Thalinger, student chairman of the series.

"This lecture will probably be the kick-off for a series of student-faculty symposia on the nature and problems of education at City College," Mrs. Thalinger stated.

Poise A Key To Success

Best-Dressed Winner Carmine Meyer Seeks Career With Airline

Carmine Meyer was chosen Best-Dressed Coed for Fall, 1965 at the semiannual fashion show and tea sponsored by the Associated Women Students on November 4, in Smith Hall.

Though a major factor in her selection was poise, Miss Meyer said:

"I was very nervous inside during the entire show. In fact, when the winner was being announced, I was on my way up the steps to the platform. As I heard my name spoken, I tripped, much to the amusement of the audience."

Miss Meyer is a native San Franciscan and has had past modeling experience. She was trained at the Grimme Modeling Agency.

This is her fifth semester on campus where she has been pursuing a liberal arts major.

After completion of this semester, she stated, "I hope to become an airline stewardess, preferably with American Airlines." Considering her personality, appearance and background, experts believe it unlikely that she will encounter any difficulty in her pursuits.

Alumni Honored At UC Graduation

Five former students of City College were graduated with honors from the University of California this past June.

The honorees were Kathryn Kafafian, Etta Lyn Kwan, Marie Annette Dufau, Susan Lois Rosenthal and Soliman Selim.

Miss Kafafian, the only student of the five who was born in San Francisco, and Miss Kwan were both graduated from George Washington High School. Miss Kwan received her honors in zoology.

Like George Washington High School, Abraham Lincoln High School had two of its former students among the honorees, Miss Dufau and Miss Rosenthal.

The only male student among the honored, Soliman Selim from Cairo, and a graduate from De la Salle High School there, is a member of the Tau Beta Pi fraternity. He was bestowed honors in engineering.

Council Approves Suggestion Boxes, USRP Political Party

By Rich Heintz

Student Council passed a resolution last week to establish student suggestion boxes on campus, 10-1-2.

There will also be blackboards placed on campus and perhaps the printing of a daily bulletin by Student Council.

Notices would be set up daily on the blackboards, such as Student Council minutes, Council of Organizations minutes, and those from any special meeting.

An amendment to the resolution also requires the posting of the present Associated Student budget.

Suggestions collected from the boxes by the Vice President are to be considered at council meetings under the heading of new business.

Boxes will be located around the campus where the proposed maps, giving directions on campus, will also be placed.

"During the last couple of weeks, it has been brought to council's attention that some of us feel that we (council) are not communicating with the students, Jim Soletti, council member who introduced the motion, explained.

"This is one more mechanism of communication by which students can have their ideas expressed," Soletti added.

Lincoln Pain caused some confusion when, after he proposed a motion to have council appoint a committee to take care of the blackboards, he failed to vote on the motion himself. The motion failed, 0-10-2.

Pain explained the reason for his action, saying that he "was about to withdraw the motion when they called for the question (the vote). I had already been convinced by Jim (Soletti) that the motion was unnecessary, since the President (Dennis Sweeney) was going to appoint a committee anyway."

Blackboards on campus will be open for the posting of anyone's notices with the only requirement being approval by Dean Ralph Hillsman.

Pain also tried to pass a motion to make the blackboards permanent, but it died for lack of a second.

He also added that "to double the size of the bulletin board on top of the hill by Cloud Hall would cost $500."

Sweeney announced that David Minkin submitted his resignation from the chairmanship of the Council of Organizations, but the resignation was withdrawn with Sweeney's approval.

Sandy Sager, election commissioner, announced that the United Student Representative Party had registered for the next election. Sweeney, Soletti and Ernie Woodcock, freshman council member, were the three students who signed the petition.

Pledges To Be Presented At ISC Cotillion

Both campus sororities will join to present their new pledges at the traditional Inter-Sorority Council Winter Cotillion scheduled from 9 p.m. to midnight this Friday at the Forest Hills Clubhouse, according to Dean of Women Mary Golding.

The purpose of the event is to present the new pledges of each sorority, Phi Beta Rho and Theta Tau. The coeds will be introduced during the intermission, after which their dates will escort them to a position of honor.

A small diploma, ribbon-tied in the colors of her sorority, will be awarded each pledge.

The 60 available bids for the event will be given primarily to the 24 pledges and members of sororities. Any remaining bids will be sold for $2, but not at the door, Dean Golding said.

Dress for the ball is formal. Pledges of Theta Tau sorority will be identified by their red dresses. Phi Beta Rho pledges will be wearing white dresses. Dark suit and tie is preferred for the men.

Janis Goldberg, president of Phi Beta Rho, will introduce the pledges of her sorority. They are Edie Alley, Wallette Amoy, Margie Cheney, Peggy Donovan, Aileen Dowd, Cheryl Grantano, Sandy Kazandjian, Diane Lattimer, Lana Rippee, Sandra Sager, Judy Stewart and Janet Williams.

Theta Tau pledges will be introduced by sorority President Carol Jimenez. They are Charlotte Agrusa, Sharon Aezenberg, Bonita Bartosiewski, Michele Alhadiff, Judy Barling, Lynne Pozza, Ruth Riddle, Judy Saisi, Kathryn St. John and Kathy Lumsden.

USRP Signs For Nomination Confab; ROC Yet To Show

As of November 10, only the United Students Representative Party had registered for a nomination convention date, according to Sandy Sager, election committee chairman.

USRP has registered for the second day of the convention dates, Tuesday, November 23. "The first day of convention, November 22, is still available," Miss Sager mentioned.

Reform On Campus, a new party formed last semester, had as of this time not registered for a convention date.

"Petitions for registration were due November 15, at Bungalow 5," Miss Sager continued. "Anyone is welcome to attend the party conventions but only one person from a club can vote.

"Independents can run for office, but they won't have a convention date," Miss Sager said.

Rules specify that all candidates must have 15 Associated Student member signatures, consent of the finance office, counselors, registrar, and the dean of women or the dean of men.

"Election rules are available in Bungalow 5 during the times the college is in session," Miss Sager emphasized.

The offices open for the coming elections include those of the Associated Student President and Vice President, Associated Men Student and Women Student Presidents, and the respective presidencies of both the Sophomore and Freshman Classes.

All of the 14 Student Council seats, half of which go to sophomores, are open for election," Miss Sager added.

At a recent meeting of Student Council an amendment was passed permitting political parties to start their campaigns one week prior to the conventions.

Candidate petitions are due by Friday, December 10, in Bungalow 5, Miss Sager emphasized.

Proposals Might Defeat Aim Of The Two-Year College

AT A RECENT Northern California Junior College Convention of administrators, trustees and faculty, two severe and rather distressing proposals were introduced which could entirely change the entrance requirements and probation terms now set for the state supported two-year colleges.

The first proposal dealt with probation and would attempt to raise the present 1.5 grade point average to 2.0 as the probationary mark.

The second proposal concerned changing two-year college requirements with regard to entrance. At present, all public two-year colleges are required to accept all high school graduates regardless of previous scholastic aptitude.

Had this proposal been accepted, entering freshmen would be forced to take the American College Testing program battery of tests or the Educational Testing Service, both college board tests.

Fortunately, both of these proposals were rejected by the representatives at the convention, but the final word is still to come from the State Board of Education.

These proposals, especially the second one, would seem to greatly defeat the purpose of the two-year college. These two-year institutions were set up originally so that students might complete the first two years of university parallel courses "at home" and then have the opportunity to transfer, fully qualified for upper division standing, to a four-year institution.

The problem of finances concerns many of today's college students. The cost of a higher education is rising all the time, but the two-year college, in providing a low-cost education, gave, and continues to give, many who might not have a chance to attend college because of low finance, the opportunity to do so.

Two-year colleges were also set up to help students who failed to meet university entrance requirements gain a second chance. For many, it has been a step of vital importance that has meant the difference between success and failure.

No one can dispute the value of a college education today. It is almost totally impossible to secure or, indeed, maintain any type of promising employment without at least two years of college. Many would argue that this type of situation is far from desirable, but we cannot easily change the emphasis placed on college.

With the great advances the world is making today, more highly skilled people will be in constant need, and as such, it seems unlikely that this trend toward the importance of a college education will change.

Therefore, we must not stamp out the last remaining chance for so many that the two-year college affords. There are now and always will be more average minds than there are geniuses.

These proposals must not be passed; they cannot be passed.

For if they are, our society may lose many important, useful minds. The two-year college gives the second chance to many individuals, without whom the loss to our society could be disastrous.

News To Nobody

Hints On GI Survival; Play Dead

By Peter Dorn

AS A REMOTE possibility exists that some students from the college may find themselves serving in the Armed Forces, a few helpful hints pertaining to the facts of Army life have been compiled from the veterans of the college that may or may not help the tyro.

The man with some college background should be informed of the fact that sergeants hate college boys.

The reason for this dislike of the intellectual is because sergeants who have been in the service for years must obey Second Lieutenants, some of whom have undergone a total of 90 days prior military service.

Now the Golden Rule for an enlisted man in "never volunteer for anything," including volunteering information.

When the educated recruit stands in formation for the first time before his drill instructor, his group may be asked for a show of hands from the college men. Stand pat.

There will always be a few to raise their hands in the hope of getting something special. The sergeant will then ask those with the raised hand and spirit to fall out to the side of the formation. He will then inform them that he wants them to be the permanent police detail.

Police detail. This sounds good to the alumnus.

Then the sergeant goes on to explain that when he says that he wants the men to police the barracks, he means that he wants them to pick up, off the ground, anything that doesn't grow, including rocks, cigarette butts, papers, can, bottles. And so it goes.

There are numerous Army anecdotes. Just this one should suffice in illuminating the moral of the story.

They say that this is the modern Army. But the veterans of the old Army advise playing stupid; the enlisted man, say the old veterans, is not supposed to think—only to take orders.

Until this new Army proves otherwise, veterans strongly advise sticking to the old axiom.

An Elder Citizen Observes: "Youth Must Recapture Self-Respect"

By Judy Klink

There lives an elderly gentleman in a house near the campus. He is an observant elder citizen. Not only does he observe, but he thinks.

One sunny day, with only the slightest provocation, he happened to think aloud. Between puffs on his pipe he presented some profound thoughts.

"I was educated at the University of California. My age is 71, so you know my college days were a long time ago. But campus life was not so different.

"We thrived on the unusual and adventurous. Most of all we loved to think and debate and solve the world's problems.

"Today, I see students meander by and I wonder. What happened to respect and dignity for the individual and for others? I see none of it demonstrated by these young people. They are words meaningful only to Webster—it is essential that we regain them."

Reporter: "I don't understand, sir, are you equating respect and dignity with conformity?"

"Not in the least. There is nothing wrong in wearing a beard or long hair. On the conformity side, there is no reason everyone should not drive a car to school. A free education until the age of 22 is not immoral. In and of themselves, these are legitimate. Together, they take us down to the fundamental issue.

"Something intangible has been lost along the road to the affluent society. Self-respect cannot be purchased, nor worn like a hat. Just as regard for another's property cannot be licensed. It must be a part of each individual's character."

Reporter: "You are directing all of your accusations toward youth. Is this where you place the blame?"

"Not at all. Youth is suffering from the unfortunate effect, Society, as a whole, has got to be the cause. Obviously, society is here to stay. It is the effect we must change.

"There is no alternative. I see no hope for world peace or for universal brotherhood unless a respect for oneself and for one's neighbor is recaptured. Who, but the college students of our country, can do this?"

Council's China Dinnerware 'Dream' Gets Top Security

Not the college Ram, the Silver Pole nor the student bank is given the security that the college's treasure, which is locked deep within the Statler wing, is going to get from now on.

The locked door of Statler wing seals off the room which now contains 144 place settings of Melody Shenango China, in a green and white pattern, "the very same type used by the Mark Hopkins Hotel," according to Barbara Kontis, Associated Student vice president.

These dishes are given special treatment since they are special Student Council dinnerware, for which council allocated $196.82 in order to complete the set this semester.

Miss Kontis suggested that Student Council complete the set, now protected in Statler Wing, a few weeks ago because she said there were not enough dishes for everyone who attended the Student Council banquet at the end of the semester, and "the old crockery from Smith Hall had to be used."

After some difficulty, mainly a matter of time in order to wait for a financial report showing that there would be enough money in this semester's AS budget, she was able to order the remaining 36 place settings needed.

But acquiring money for dishes in the past was not so easy.

As Miss Kontis relates it, "Three years ago, the vice president of the AS at that time, Suzanne Fitzpatrick, requested money from council to start the set. Her request was refused.

"One and a half years passed before Wardene Oliver, Associated Women Student president, was able to make any headway. In the Spring of 1964, she asked council's permission to use the profits she received from a turnabout dance, sponsored by the AWS, to purchase some dishes.

"After council's approval of her request, the Faculty Association agreed to contribute an equal amount to buy dishes, enabling her to purchase 144 place settings," Miss Kontis explained.

By the end of this semester, with the addition of the new dishes ordered, there will be a total of 180 settings of the china behind that locked door.

Use of the dishes is confined to the Block SF dinner, Golden Gate Conference, Student Council banquet and other special banquets.

Perhaps there'll be no silver this semester, but any college with 180 place settings of green and white Mark Hopkins-type Melody Shenango China is justified in precautions to protect the treasure from being cracked. —R.H.

What Was Out Will Be In Again—Maybe

Many previously secure students at the college are finding it necessary to ask themselves the musical question, "Am I really in with the in crowd?"

New trends in campus apparel, the wearing of sandals, for example, are revealing that what was formerly out is now in and what was in is still in but on its way out.

The latter, upon being forced out, will promptly be in again, because it has already been established that what is out is in. Therefore, in equals out and vice versa.

How's that for out 'n' out clarity? Or is it in 'n' in clarity?

A Go-Go Coed Frugs Off Hard Labor For Cash

Pussycat A Go Go, at 2215 Powell by the wharf, is one of several discotheques where many persons find the satisfaction of relaxing tense nerves while wrenching their backs.

To attractive 18-year-old Kathy Green, however, Pussycat A Go Go is more than a source of tenslon relief. It's a job.

Miss Green earns $3 an hour nightly as a Pussycat A Go Go dancer.

By day, she is a part time student here, majoring in education.

She is enrolled in eight and a half units, which keep her at the college half the day.

From 5:30 until 7 p.m. Miss Green studies. At about 7:30 she is off to frug the night away with the discotheque set.

Miss Green said that she got the job in a most unusual way. "One night about a month ago I went with a friend to Pussycat A Go Go.

"While we were dancing out on the floor, someone came up to me and asked me if I'd be interested in working there as a dancer. I said 'yes,' and I've been there ever since."

When warned about all work and no play, Miss Green explained "My job is my recreation; it's a great place and I meet a lot of people."

Number Your Blessings On Thanksgiving

By B.T.

EVEN ON Thanksgiving Day students can thank God that they live in America.

Be thankful for being able to speak out against the government. Be thankful for being able to demonstrate. In a totalitarian government these "rights" would not impress officials.

History has proved so, and even to this day, the thousands of defectors from suppression can tell of this truth.

The advocates of a new foreign policy have always come up with the same old line—the "humanitarian" argument. They try to impress upon others that they KNOW something more and are better thinkers.

Whenever one argues that the whole idea of demonstrations and creating suspicious unrest among students is but a Communist tactic, they scoff and spout flowery justifications.

How can they now deny that there is a Red taint to all of this? For some who were sincere in their participation in the Berkeley Free Speech Movement, they are surprised, indeed, to learn that one of their leaders now admits to being a Communist.

"A person who claims to be a humanitarian is not very convincing if, in addition to criticizing our actions, he never criticizes Communist terror, and even DENIES it exists," Dr. Stefan T. Possony, expert on Red techniques and strategy, has said.

Possony, of Stanford University, in a recent interview to the press, said that the Communist game is not a game of numbers. It is a game of INFLUENCE, and that most students care less about what they are demonstrating for.

Within five or ten years, he said, these same students may become conservatives.

The aim, he said, is to disarm the military and "make it impossible for the military to function efficiently as a security organ of the United States. This same idea applies to the police or to the vital institutions.

"The Communist is doing these things for an entirely different reason than the genuine pacifist.

"When anyone who is not a Communist finds that he is following a line which in one or another particular parallels the Communist line, then that person must make absolutely sure that he stands on his own two feet and makes his point in terms of an American message—divorce himself from Communism," he emphasized.

THINK. Beware. It is a "time bomb," said Possony.

Letters To The Editor
RAM'S HORN

• Who Are The Cowards?

Editor, The Guardsman:

Because of the war in Vietnam, the government has expanded the draft (45,000 per month), and has revised and changed its classification of married men and of students. Recently, a law was passed, in one week, making it a crime to burn one's draft card.

The re-evaluation of classification, of course, affect students at City College. Now, it is by no means certain that just because one is enrolled in college, one will escape the draft. This surely must be disturbing to those who have enrolled for that purpose.

People are using college to avoid making a choice—the choice whether an individual has the right to object against serving in the Armed Forces when he feels that his country is engaged in an unjust and immoral war. Many people who are not in college have made this choice; they have become conscientious objectors. In so doing, they have been called cowards.

But who are the cowards? Are they the conscientious objectors or are they the Air Force Pilots who bomb village after village, killing and maiming, and never seeing what they do? Are the cowards those who openly display their disagreement with our government's military policy or those who do not wish to get involved, and hide behind the mask of "twelve units"?

Those students who are in college to avoid this choice will no doubt succeed in not being drafted. But in succeeding, they will also fail. They will fail because educational institutions are not in existence to provide a safe, secure place in which to hide from one's choices, but rather they are in existence to develop in each individual the capacity to make choices.

Meanderings

MISERY is being a journalist. No one loves us, and a great many hate us but everyone wants to use us.

We sometimes (and other times, all the time) believe that our kind and respectable readers forget that we are real people and tend to think that we are a separate breed of the human race known as "dirty scribblers," a vulgar name.

However, what breaks our tender hearts more is the treatment we are given by television plays or the movies. There are, according to these forms of cruel slander, two sterotyped newspapermen.

The first is the half-man, half-monster, often drunk with a big, black, smelly old cigar stuck in his face, who will watch a small puppy, with cute big brown eyes, being mercilessly pushed down a hill into a vat of foaming brine by some fiendish pussycat.

Naturally, the reporter is insanely delighted with the incident, and he will make no effort to rescue the "poor dog" because he is too busy jotting down his notes for the big story.

A second type is the evil reporter, probably possessed by some spirit of a vicious reporter now in hell, who would shove his own lovable grandmother off the Matterhorn for a scoop, and then call his editor before the St. Bernard.

Most of us are a good lot though, who love every single hair on our own grandmother's head; and we would certainly, nine times out of ten (perish the inhuman thought) not sacrifice a single hair on the sweet lady's head for a story.

Nevertheless, people still despise us. We are probably more hated than politicians. At least we can't be voted out of our jobs if we write something that our devoted readers disagree with; but one cannot be sure that there are not those who burn our articles at midnight and put horrible hexes on us.

Politicians do not even show any love toward us. The last two Republican presidential candidates said things about journalists that made us feel terrible, even us amateurs.

Movie actors bust cameras over our heads and punch us; actresses scratch and attack us. Baseball players beat us up in dark alleys, basketball players call us names, and lawyers want to get rid of us.

Somehow we muddle through and overcome these mental stabs and physical tortures. But one of the hardest blows we ever suffered was when a particular ex-president, with the initials D. E., called us sensation-seekers. If there were any readers who felt indifferent toward journalists then, they don't anymore.

We admit we do make mistakes; but when we do, we're original about it. We make a different mistake each time.

But funny people still write letters and phone persecuted journalists and say things that aren't funny such as calling the paper one works for a worthless RAG.

The thing, though, that really depresses us is the fact that most historians have chosen Warren Harding as one of the two worst United States Presidents.

Could the fact that Harding was a newspaper editor have anything to do with this low rating? We sometimes wonder.

Journalists have often thought of going on a protest march against the unnecessary cruelty to all in their field, but if they did, who would write about their cause?

So we guess we'll just have to suffer the pain of being unloved in sorrowful silence.

At least they read us—or we wouldn't be so hated.

Campus Jazz Bash To Go At C-Hour November 23

The college's stage band, under the direction of Arthur Samuels, will present a concert during College Hour, Thursday, November 23, in the college theater.

The program will feature contemporary music of the big band jazz variety with arrangements by such jazz greats as Henry Mancini, Neil Hefti, Bill Holman and Lennie Neilhaus.

Samuels revealed that the stage band and the pep band, which plays at all the football games, will merge into one group to perform at the Junior Rose Bowl, scheduled for sometime late in December.

The concert on November 23 is open to students and faculty, admission free.

Volleyball Squad Rolls To Victory In RA Sportsday

Top honors in three of the five competitive sports at the Sportsday held at the college on November 6 were awarded to members of the Recreation Association, which also sponsored the event.

Len Beckum, Sharon Harris, Dave Longa and Pam Maul formed a winning team in the bowling event. Miss Harris also had the highest women's series and Miss Maul also bowled the high game.

Another winning group, the volleyball team, went undefeated. Joe Marin, Brenda Lee, Jim Torpic, Rose Donaldson, Alex Bonadarnek and Mel Wong comprised the team from RA which won every game.

Tennis and badminton meets showed no stars from the college, but Genaro Jose captured two first-place awards in archery.

Ten two-year colleges took part in this intercollegiate sports event, which featured competition in bowling, archery, volleyball, tennis, and badminton. Since folk dance and modern dance are not on a competitive basis, the groups met as clinics.

About 300 students participated in the Sportsday, which also included a performance by The Lively Ones, a pop instrumental group, during the lunch hour.

College of Marin will host the next Sportsday on Saturday, November 20.

Transportation will be provided to this event, which will feature such sports as archery, badminton, bowling, gymnastics, volleyball, tennis and recreational swimming. Anyone interested in participating may sign up in the women's gymnasium, RA officers said.

Campus Police Issue 1400 Tags

Approximately 1400 citations have been issued to students this semester by the City College police department, according to John McHenry, chief of Campus Police.

The usual citation given bears the number 21113A, which is a $2 ticket for parking illegally on city or state property. It is given to cars parked in the college's parking lots without a valid parking permit.

The next most commonly issued citation is one for zone violations. Its cost to violators is $5.

The Campus Police officer also has the authority to give moving citations. McHenry stressed that if his department meets with any difficulties, the San Francisco Police Department is ready to track down speeders and wreckless drivers who menace the city's streets.

The Campus Police department is composed of 35 men who are required to serve at least four hours a week on duty.

Besides their daytime duties of traffic control and student supervision, there is also a group of officers who serve night security details around the campus. These men are paid through the Economic Opportunities Program, according to Bob Tietjen, assistant deputy chief.

Open City Due In College Theater

Set in occupied Rome, Open City, to be shown at 8 p.m. tomorrow in the college theater, is the personal story of the Italian people with the central character a leader of the resistance.

The spirit of humanity which arises in all crises of mankind is illuminated as the conflict reveals those who side with freedom and those who fail.

Produced and directed by Roberto Rossellini and from the screen-play by Frederico Fellini, this Italian movie (1945) has been called one of the best pictures of the 1940's. It highlights for the world the great power of the realistic film and has influenced postwar production everywhere.

Planned before the Germans left Rome and shot under the most exacting conditions without a studio or normal location production materials, it attracted unanimous acclaim from the critics and catapulted Rossellini, Fellini and actors Anna Magnani and Aldo Fabrini to international fame.

Free tickets may be obtained from Walter Krumm, C332-C, James Haran, Victor Valo or any English instructor.

War-Weary Soldiers Return Home From Vietnam Bitter Over Policy Demonstrations

By Cheryl Crofts

Recent demonstrations against United States policy in Vietnam have seriously and understandably undermined the morale of servicemen stationed there.

Many feel that they may die for a cause that "no one in their country supports."

This reporter has recently talked to many servicemen who were in San Francisco waiting to be sent to, or who had just returned from, Vietnam. A typical comment from those waiting to leave was, "I don't really want to go, but someone has to do it."

Anti-Vietnam demonstrations not only affect the morale of servicemen there, but also have a demoralizing effect upon morale in Stateside bases, especially those where the men are in training to be sent to Vietnam.

A young paratrooper, for example, discussed the great bitterness among the men with whom he had just gone through training.

A soldier who had gotten off his plane from Vietnam only two hours earlier asked, "Are people here really as much against our being in Vietnam as we've been hearing over there?"

In an effort to combat the adverse effect of anti-Vietnam demonstrations upon the morale of GI's in Vietnam, the San Francisco Junior Chamber of Commerce is sponsoring a letter-writing campaign.

The Junior Chamber is asking everyone who would like to let servicemen in Vietnam know that they are not fighting without support from home to write, addressing letters to "GI in Vietnam, c/o Junior Chamber of Commerce, P. O. Box 7923, San Francisco, California 94101."

The servicemen stationed in Vietnam are not there of their own choosing. Most of them are about the same age or younger than students here in this college. They risk their lives every day, yet they conclude from what they read and hear that few people in this country support the cause for which they face death.

As a result, they are very bitter.

A sailor told of his friend:

"He's only 21, married, with one child. I met his wife and child. He stopped a piece of lead, and now he's paralyzed from the waist down. He's home now, but I don't know what he's going to do. He'll never walk again.

"... I'm not an especially charitable person, but if there were something I could have done to stop it, myself, without ending up as he did, I would have done it."

A young Negro from Boston, who had just returned, discussed the time he had spent in Vietnam.

"I didn't really want to go, and while I was there the things I heard about the demonstrations here made me feel very bitter; but we've got to stop those Communists wherever we can so Democracy can survive in this country."

The subject of Vietnam inspires conflicting emotions in civilian and soldier alike, but the prevailing opinion expressed is that the men in Vietnam should not have to go on thinking that people in this country do not support them, or that they are cowardly for not having burned their draft cards.

The men in Vietnam do not claim to be heroes. They will frankly admit they are scared. In one soldier's words, "I'm a machine gunner. Do you know how long they give machine gunners in Vietnam? Seventy-two hours. That means I stand an excellent chance of not living to my 22nd birthday.

"... so yes; I'm scared; I don't want to die. But it wouldn't be quite so bad if I didn't feel that no one in this country really cares."

For that young man and many others like him, the San Francisco Junior Chamber of Commerce believes it worthwhile to write a letter to let him know that he is not making his sacrifice in vain.

Current Musical Hits To Be Added To KCSF Broadcasts

The KCSF Broadcasters Club recently changed its policy by adding current hits to the programs heard in Smith Hall during the morning cafeteria hours from 8 to 10 a.m., Harry Osibin, vice president of the club, said today.

The new policy will feature the latest hits in addition to the present record library. Osibin pointed out that the latest hit records were donated by radio station KYA for the purpose of entertaining students here.

"In the past," Osibin commented, "our policy consisted of the Campus Carriers news announcements and jazz, classical, pop, folk and a little country and western music thrown in for more variety."

Osibin stated, "The Broadcasters Club hopes that by expanding our present music policy and by bringing more personality to the programs we may make the KCSF radio shows more interesting and enjoyable than they have been."

He indicated that any suggestions by the students of the college concerning the material or the policy used by the station would be appreciated.

KCSF features such disc jockeys as Russ Owens, Ken Beck, Skip Classes, Donn Stevens, Brian Criss, Bob Anthony, Tom Edwards, Jerry Scott and Paul Foster.

In addition to this regular staff KCSF broadcast opportunities are being extended to coeds Cheryl Sommers, Gi Gi and Dianne Nichols.

Radio and television personalities have frequently come to the campus.

This semester three well-known radio personalities are scheduled to speak at the college, Jim Dunbar, KGO disc jockey and program director; Don Sherwood, disc jockey for KSFO, and Sly Stone, disc jockey for KSOL.

Plans Drawn For New Buildings

An architect's drawing of the new educational services building, to be constructed here beginning next June, has been submitted to the college, according to John J. Brady, coordinator of student welfare.

Construction of this building, as well as a second building to be located near Arts Hall, was made possible by the passage in last year's election of Proposition B, a bond issue which allocated some $31 million for city school development.

The college also acquired between $200,000 and $400,000 for improvements from the passage of state Proposition 2.

The educational services building will be located near Smith Hall and will contain a bookstore, numerous administration and counseling offices, the finance office and the office of Louis Conlan, president of the college.

After the two buildings are completed, some 18 months after construction begins, the lighting and acoustical systems in Science Hall will be improved and the entire top floor of the building will be reserved for the paramedical departments.

Promotion Expert Ad Art Speaker

John Shnider, an assistant sales promotion manager, will be the guest speaker for the advertising art department at 10 a.m. Friday in S-136, according to William Svabek, graphic arts instructor.

Shnider will discuss the creative use of paper, and advertising and printing reproduction.

The instructors of the photography and art departments take turns arranging for speakers for the departments. Craig Sharp, a photography instructor, will be in charge of the speaker arrangement December 3.

Advertising art will be shown in the City College Close-Up program next Tuesday during College Hour in C-246. This program surveys the career preparation for advertising art majors.

UC Engineering Dept. Drops Entrance Exam

Engineering students who plan to transfer to the University of California's College of Engineering as juniors are no longer required to take the upper division engineering examination, according to Howard Schoon, counselor here.

Schoon explained that, until now, any students desiring to enter the college of engineering were required to take the departmental examination; however, freshmen and juniors will no longer have to take this test.

All that is necessary to enter the college of engineering is satisfactory grades, which would be a 2.4 average in the present program, Scoon added.

Letters to the Editor

November 3 edition, I would like to clarify a few points. First of all, the question of on-campus or club status for ROC was never formally brought before Student Council. COO debated the question for over two weeks and voted, 26-4, against it. So the question was never "shrugged off lightly" by Student Council, or, for that matter by the Council of Organizations.

Secondly, the $200 for dishes was allocated to complete a set started three years ago. These dishes are used for the banquets of the Block SF, the Recreation Association, the Golden Gate Presidents' Conference, Arca 6 Student Government Conference, for any guests of the college, and for the Student Council dinners. They are available for use by any on-campus organization since they are the property of the Associated Students. I feel the allocation was justified and necessary.

Miss James' letter did serve to illustrate one very important point: Student Council is not keeping the students informed as to what it is doing. The Guardsman has given council very good coverage, but I believe it is not enough. Therefore, in my capacity as a councilman I will recommend action to be taken to correct this problem immediately.

I would also like to take this opportunity to invite students to come to a council meeting and participate in their government. The meetings are Monday and Wednesday from Noon to 1 p.m. in Bungalow 6 and open to all.

Jim Soletti,
Sophomore Councilman

• No Cash, No Track

Editor, The Guardsman:

As President of the Associated Men Students, I would like to congratulate the staff on the fine job that they have done his semester by bringing the news to the students.

I would like to make a correction that appeared in the October 27 issue. Because Student Council would not allocate the appropriate funds, AMS will not hold a track meet this semester.

AMS President

Gridders Clinch Title In 48-6 Win

Rams Crush San Jose, Set 9 Records

By Randy Koernig

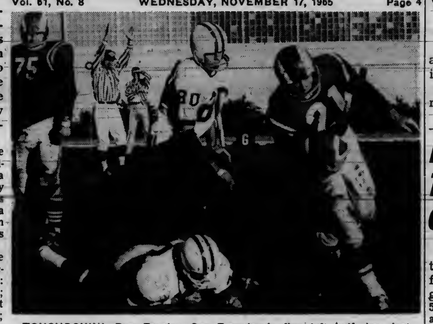
City College's powerful gridders became Golden Gate Conference champs last Friday as they literally stomped the San Jose City College Jaguars into the mud, 48-6. Incidental to the fact that the Rams clinched the title was the fact that nine new records were set during the rain-drenched contest.

Six of the records were set by none other than O. J. Simpson, City College's prime candidate for All-America honors. The other three were set by the Rams as a team. The team records were, most points by one team in a single game, 48; team scoring and team offense for a single season, 234 points and 2,568 yards, respectively.

Meanwhile, Simpson set three single game records and three seasonal records. His single game marks were: rushing, 304 yards; touchdowns, six; and scoring, 36 points. He also set season marks in rushing, 879 yards; scoring, 114 points, and touchdowns, 19.

Two interesting developments occurred soon after the opening kickoff. The first was the ejection of Ram end, Dwight Tucker, who has performed admirably on defense all year, and the other was Ron Fassler's 53-yard return of a San Jose pass for the Rams' first score.

Early in the second quarter Simpson set out after the scoring record as he went 73 yards to paydirt. When Fred Loville kicked his second extra point of the day, the San Franciscans took a lead of 14-0. Later in the same period quarterback Bob Lee found Simpson all alone in the flat and connected with O. J. for a 27-yard scoring play.



As the first half ended the Rams had a lead of 20-0. Jaguar signal-caller Bob Toledo was forced to work from a spread formation from the second quarter until he left the ballgame midway through the final quarter so that he would have time to pass, as the Ram defensive wall completely nullified the Jaguar ground game; 0 yards rushing.

In the third quarter Simpson scored three times on runs of 58, 14, and 88 yards. After O. J.'s 88-yard scamper Bob Lee threw to Reeves Moses for two more points to give the San Francisco club a lead of 40-0.

Midway through the fourth quarter, San Jose finally got on the board. Pat Cavataio hit on a 33-yard pass to highly-touted end Jim Heckendorn.

Only a few minutes before the final gun, Simpson scored his sixth touchdown of the day, this one from 16 yards out. This last scoring run came immediately after fullback Dennis Sullivan had a fine touchdown run called back because of a penalty.

After the game, Simpson was quick to acknowledge the outstanding blocking he received from linemen Mike Taylor, Rich Colombo, Dave Malae, and Joe Ross. Also doing a good job helping to clear the way for Simpson were his backfield cohorts, Ron Fassler, Bob Lee, and Dennis Sullivan.

TOUCHDOWN! Ron Fassler, San Francisco's fine left half, has just blasted his way into the San Mateo end zone for the Rams' fifth touchdown of the day. Fassler scored twice, on runs of 54, and one yards, respectively. He was the locals' leading rusher for the day, with 165 yards in 14 carries for an 11.7 average. He and O. J. Simpson combine to give San Francisco the Golden Gate Conference's most dangerous pair of running backs. Simpson and Fassler rank 1-2 in both rushing and scoring in the conference. —Guardsman photo by Mario Evangelista.

Rams Favored In Saturday Clincher

City College of San Francisco's record-setting football team closes its regular season on Saturday afternoon against Diablo Valley College at Los Lomas High School field in Walnut Creek. Kickoff is at 1:30 p.m.

The Diablo Valley Vikings opened their season with high hopes of finally achieving success in their own conference. Coach Sam DeVito said before the season, "We have our best group of backs in ten years."

And the Vikings did start the season in strong fashion by beating Santa Rosa, 18-13, and Modesto, 6-0. But then came San Jose. Diablo Valley had been rated twelfth nationally before the game, but the Jaguars knocked the team off all rating sheets with a 21-13 win.

Diablo Valley came back to dump San Mateo, 21-7. But then Foothill beat them, 27-22, with no time left on the scoreboard. Again the Vikings came back, this time to knock Chabot out of the title race with a 13-12 win over the Gladiators.

Merritt fell next by a 13-7 count, and the Vikings were expected to beat Contra Costa in their last encounter before the San Francisco game.

San Francisco should break every offensive mark in the books and the fine defensive unit definitely cannot be overlooked.

The Rams have presented many problems to teams trying to defense against them this year. No team has been able to solve the problem of stopping the offense on the ground, especially on straight-ahead running plays.

In O. J. Simpson and Ron Fassler, the San Francisco offense boasts the league's finest-ever halfback duo. The pair is currently 1-2 in both rushing and scoring and it would be a real crime if both did not make all-conference.

City College's "five horses" in the front wall have been fantastic the whole year. Mike Taylor (6-5—255), Joe Ross (6-2—255), Rich Colombo (6-0—220), Suaese Malae (6-2—207) and Mike Dunn (6-0—217) already have caught the eye of many four-year college talent scouts with their crushing blocks.

Line coach Alex Schwartz gave the Rams some food for thought before the San Mateo game when he said:

"This could be your greatest season ever; don't spoil it now. Push yourselves these last three weeks and the rewards will take care of themselves."

This philosophy has really shown itself these last two weeks and the Rams can reach their goal on Saturday.

Head coach Dutch Elston preached a clean, rock'em — sock'em philosophy the entire year, and the Rams' style of play has to be a credit to the coach.

RAMBLINGS

Ego-Happy Soccermen Stumble Into Title

By William Pates

WITHOUT A DOUBT, City College's domination in soccer is in jeopardy, and it's the best thing that's happened to the league since San Francisco joined just three years ago.

Complacency and apathy infected this year's club, and competition could be tough in the future—for once, if this continues.

'DISEASES' CONTAGIOUS

For "diseases" of this sort have a tendency to spread and infect "descendants."

With the season just under way, coach Roy Diederichsen profoundly stated, "I honestly believe that any college in this area would have a hard time beating this Ram team."

We commented in Ramblings before the season was under way that Diederichsen's crew would walk through the motions of winning the college's seventh straight soccer championship. And that is exactly what the crew was doing—walking through the motions.

SLOW MOTION

The Soccermen began playing as though in slow motion; they loafed.

There was that unconscious thought eating up their minds—that they could not lose, that all they had to do was show up on the field and victory would already be theirs, and Diederichsen knew it.

He commented, "The team has not looked too competent in the last few games. The men have been having too much of a picnic. One gets the impression that they are just going through the motions. They will have to play seriously from here on."

On the eve of their biggest game of the year against San Mateo, the coach still had his doubts: "I am still not receiving full effort from any member of the squad."

He went on to say, "San Mateo must beat us, in order to tie. We need only obtain a tie. The Bulldogs' coach tells me his boys have given him 100 per cent effort."

One hundred per cent effort . . . something Diederichsen hasn't seen enough of this year.

ONLY A TIE NEEDED

They only needed a tie to win. And so they went out and that's all they got, a tie. They did just enough to get by, they just played hard enough to win. Of course, this is all that is required, but they must think more of themselves than that.

This soccer club had the potential to be even greater than the 1964 state champions, but it lacks that little something extra that makes the difference.

True, these men kept on winning, and they came through when they had to, sometimes after they had fallen behind when they shouldn't have.

Nevertheless, they seem to lack the qualities of integrity, pride and class of the 1964 squad.

NO REJOICING

If each of the club members could say—"I did my damndest"—there would be reason for rejoicing. But this just isn't the case. In our mind, this group has lost some of the respect and prestige it deserved.

Earlier this year we commented—the team that won't be beat can't be beat —except by a better team. Well, now's the time to prove it.

Booters Tie Bulldogs, 2-2, Win Third Straight Title

The Red and White booters tied San Mateo, 2-2, November 5 at Balboa Stadium and thereby won the Northern California Junior College Soccer Conference for the third year in a row.

This is the first time that a Ram squad has been tied by a league rival since the conference started three years ago.

The Rams as a team are still not playing up to expectations, and to be victorious in the State championship they must show better class.

The team has many outstanding individuals, but in order to be considered a good team these individual talents must be melted together into one great mass for a real team effort.

In this game it was once again the defense that lacked efficiency. The local offense was held to two tallies by a great San Mateo defensive effort. The Bulldogs gave it everything they had, since this was "do or die" for them.

The Rams ended with a 5-0-1 record and thus were on top, while San Mateo finished close behind with a 4-1-1 showing. The Bulldogs have for the past three years ended second best only to the locals, but this is the closest they have ever come to dethrowning the home squad.

Former Polytechnic High great Jose Fabiani reached All-American Alex Mendieta with a beautiful forward pass that slipped through the two San Mateo fullbacks with Mendieta following close behind the ball to put it mercilessly in the Bulldog goalies' left hand corner.

The San Mateans made it a brand new game and then added their go-ahead tally which stood until 14 seconds left to play. At that time Ronnie Van Velthuysen finally made a good corner kick after having been unable to lift the ball into the air all afternoon.

He lifted the ball over everyone's head with the exception of the tall Ram center-halfback George Fernandez whose timing was precise as he headed the equalizer into the visitors' goal.

Injured Tracksters Trip Into Last Conference Meet

The City College cross country team, still hampered by injuries, finished its dual meet season by getting thumped by Foothill, 50-17, and bowing to Merritt, 48-42, in a triangular meet held at Foothill, on October 28.

In the season finale, the Ram spikers came in third in a four-team meet. They nipped University of San Francisco, 27-25, but were also edged by Contra Costa, 27-29, and were easily defeated by Chabot, 17-39. This meet was held November 4 at Contra Costa.

Ram mentor Lou Vasquez pointed out that George Ferguson and John O'Looney ran in the meets, but below par. Vasquez added that Ferguson's leg was still bothering him, and O'Looney was suffering from the flu."

In the contest at Foothill, Bill Long led the Rams with the time of 17:50, followed by Alex Vosher with the time of 18:34.

Vosher ran a 17:54 to pace all San Francisco runners in the four-team Contra Costa meet. His closest teammate was Long with a clocking of 18:52. USF is not in the conference and is the only team that the cindermen defeated.

Vasquez is not making any immediate plans to enter the state meet. However, he is hoping that he can uncover some individuals who might finish fairly high.

"I think if Ferguson and O'Looney are in good shape we could team up and be in contention," he commented.

Vasquez lists his top four runners as O'Looney, Vosher, Long and Ferguson. "If these boys do not falter, they all have a chance to place in the meet," he said.

Negro Students Dominate Intras In Second Round

For the second straight week, the Negro Student Association won a runaway in Intramural Basketball league competition, sponsored by the Associated Men Students.

This time they defeated the Filipino-Americans, 77-21. Gene Holman paced the victors with 18 points.

In the second game, Jim Francis' 14 points led The Guardsman to an easy win over the Sophomore Class, 45-28. Another easy victory was recorded by the Block SF, who downed the Newman Club, 62-49, behind Aaron Amerson's 36 points.

The only fairly close game was between The Ram Ski Club and Lawson's Ten. The Ram Ski Club edged their opponents, 42-36. The Ski Club's Bill Palmini led the scorers with 18 points.

In Wednesday night's action Alpha Phi Epsilon won the first game by forfeit over Phi Beta Delta. In the Independent league, the Chiefs and the Celtics game is under protest.

Protest of last week's Guardsman vs. Lawson's Ten was decided in favor of The Guardsman.

At the final buzzer The Guardsman was leading, 32-31. The next morning the scorer announced that he had made an error in scoring and gave Lawson's Ten an extra field goal.

Mike Smith protested to the AMS, claiming that reversal of the score was unfair.

Since an AMS intramural rule provides that a score cannot be changed after the night it is given, the reversal was reversed.

Industrious Local Eleven In Line For Prune Bowl Honor

By G. Frank Cooney

So City College is graced with the services of a football team that goes through the day-in, day-out sweat and toil of molding itself into championship material, that annihilates six league competitors in a row and looks progressively improved with each slaughter.

And what is it that these industrious prize winners have to look forward to as a reward for their winning ways?

Prunes!

Isn't that a heck of a wrinkle?

Fact is though, that as far as the future of the Ram footballers is concerned, things just couldn't look much prunier.

It seems that the Cambrian Junior Chamber of Commerce has revived a post-season contest which pits the best of the Golden Gate Conference against another worthy college competitor in California in a Prune Bowl.

If San Francisco wins the right to go to the Prune Bowl, it will be the first time since 1961 that a Ram grid squad received a bowl bid. That year saw the Monterey Lobos wilt before the City College eleven, 22-14, in a Lettuce Bowl contest at Salinas.

This year's Prune Bowl game will be played in San Jose City College Stadium, but an exact date for the tilt has not been agreed upon.

When conference action ceases on November 20 it is likely that the Prune Bowl will be held during the ensuing two weeks.

Only two teams now in the Golden Gate Conference have come away from the Prune Bowl as victors. In 1961 the San Mateo Bulldogs, in what was the Big Eight Conference at that time, squeaked by Alan Hancock, 6-0.

The present league's only representative to cop the event was Foothill, which roared over Santa Rosa, 41-6, in 1962.

And so the hard-working Ram squad pushes on game by game striving, pushing, straining, winning, so that some day soon they may get . . . prunes!

Thanksgiving—A Long Way From 1620

By Greg Frazier

To many at the college, both students and faculty, Thanksgiving means nothing more than a day of freedom from the drudgery of college demands. It's a long, long way from 1620 to 1965.

In 1620 the Pilgrims set aside one day to give thanks to God for a bountiful harvest. The preceding year had been one of hardship and peril; half of their numbers had died. The remaining few might yet perish in this, then unhospitable, land.

By present day standards, the Pilgrims had little to be thankful for, but they were a humble and reverent people—a thankful people.

Tomorrow, in the tradition of the Pilgrims, Americans have set aside a day to once again give thanks for their blessings. In this complicated day and age however, many Americans take their blessings for granted.

Thanksgiving means, in the words of one student, "a holiday—no school—that's the best part." To another "it's a day to gorge yourself on turkey and goodies."

Perhaps tomorrow would be the ideal day to re-examine values, to re-establish ideals, and to enumerate exactly what there is to be thankful for, be it the new color TV or a sunny San Francisco morning.

John F. Kennedy had some definite views as to what the people, as a nation, have to be thankful for. It is fitting near this second anniversary of his death to present, in part, a message he wrote for another Thanksgiving Day.

". . . we have, as in the past, ample reason to be thankful for the abundance of our blessings. We are grateful for the blessings of faith and health and strength and for the imperishable spiritual gifts of love and hope.

"We give thanks, too, for our freedom as a nation; for the strength of our arms and the faith of our friends; for the beliefs and confidence we share; for our determination to stand firmly for what we believe to be base; and for the heritage of liberty bequeathed by our ancestors which we are privileged to preserve for our children and our children's children."

Election Of Csekey Brings Council To Full Strength

By Rich Heintz

Tom Csekey, Associated Student athletic commissioner, was elected last Wednesday to fill the only remaining vacancy on Student Council in a secret ballot election held by council.

Csekey received the minimum of seven votes to be elected a council member, while his only opponent, Steve Schoffel, received two. There were also four abstentions recorded.

This was the third and probably last special election this semester, and the first time that council has been at full strength with 14 members.

The sophomore seat filled on last Wednesday was originally held by Doug Bianchi, who took a leave of absence earlier this semester.

Last week's first council meeting, usually held on Monday, was cancelled.

Dennis Sweeney, AS president, gave reasons for the cancellation, "James Wyatt, student adviser, was busy and unable to make the meeting.

"Unfortunately, one of my (Sweeney's) classes required a special session that day, making it impossible to come to the meeting and, since Barbara Kontis, AS vice president, was ill, we felt that there were no responsible officers present and that the meeting would not be held in the proper manner."

In other action, the Student Council passed a resolution, 12-3-0, to "recommend to The Guardsman that it print an apology for the poor coverage given the Homecoming Queen in the November 17 issue of the paper."

The main argument for the resolution was that the quality of the picture was "poor," and that the story "should not have been put back on the third page."

Turning to other matters, council allocated $185.50 to the football squad to buy 75 tubes of tape. The vote was 12-2-0.

Biff Barnes, finance chairman, stated that the team was making a supplementary request for the money now "since they did not receive the money for this in their original appropriation because of some foul up."

Two weeks ago, council unanimously passed a resolution to raise the travel expense rate of seven cents per mile to ten cents per mile, in order to meet the rise in the cost of travel.

At the same meeting, council passed a resolution, 12-1-1, to recommend that the members of council should wear their identification badges.

Jim Soletti, member of council and proponent of the motion, felt it would "help students recognize their elected officials."

Differences Of Opinion Forestall Next G'man

Guardsman staff members have split into two feuding factions as a result of an argument over the chicken's claim to replace the national bird, the turkey, throughout the holidays.

Debate has given way to fisticuffs and typewriter throwing, and so there will be no issue of The Guardsman published until December 8, when order will be restored with Thanksgiving holidays over.

International Fair Due December 3

The 12th annual International Fair will be held Friday, December 3, starting at 8:15 p.m. in Smith Hall, Joseph Jacobsen, foreign student advisor, announced today.

The fair, sponsored by the International Relations Club, will present a variety of acts by more than 100 students from all parts of the world.

The stage show will include numbers performed by students from Latin America, Greece, Israel, Japan, the Philippines, Russia, Samoa, Thailand, and countries of Western Europe.

The gathering of these nations on the stage is intended to symbolize the deep understanding that exists among peoples, an understanding which this group of foreign students hopes to increase by working with peoples from all corners of the world.

Displays of art wares and a sale of foods characteristic of the participating countries will follow the stage show.

Pretty usherettes, dressed in national costumes of the countries taking part in the fair, will add color and beauty to the proceedings.

General admission is $1.25, while admission for all students is 75 cents.

AWS Fetes New Women Faculty

Ten new women instructors on campus will be guests of honor at a sandwich luncheon on Friday, December 3.

The luncheon will be sponsored by the executive board of the Associated Women Students, according to Mary Maurer, AWS president.

Among the guests will be Dorothy Aswag, sociology and speech; Cynthia Berrol, physical education; Morna Bowman, reading; Dr. Catherine Geisler, dental assisting; Mary Kiddle, Spanish; Shirley Hooton, chemistry and Matilda McCullough, business.

Sandra Schlesinger and Rosalie Wolf, both of the English department, plus Elsie Tabaroff, nursing, will complete the guest list.

Executive board members of the AWS include Martha Romero, vice-president; Roseta Pearson, treasurer; Sandra Gallagher, corresponding secretary; Rodjie Smith, recording secretary.

Joeleen Hector, historian; Pam Maul, president of the Recreation Association; Carole Jimenez, president of the Inter-Sorority Council, and Barbara Kontis, vice president of the Associated Students.

Red Tape Hampers Campus Fund Drive For City Of Hope

By Judi Janssen

A previously planned collection of funds for the City of Hope hospital by Theta Tau sorority and Beta Tau fraternity was lost last week in a confusion of authority to stage such a benefit.

According to Janis Goldberg, president of Theta Tau, permission to sponsor such an event was granted the sorority and fraternity last October by Dean of Men Ralph Hillsman.

James Wyatt, student government adviser, informed Miss Goldberg one week prior to the rally however, that she would need approval from San Francisco School Department officials.

Information concerning policy of the city's Unified School District requiring such permission reached Miss Goldberg too late. A request was made to the Board of Education the Monday before the rally was scheduled; too late, she was informed for the request to be put on the agenda of the meeting of the board for that week.

Consequently, successful completion of the drive to raise funds for the City of Hope Hospital in Duarte, California, which researches and treats such dread diseases as cancer, tuberculosis and leukemia, was blocked.

The rally was held Thursday as planned. The Dovermen, a pop combo, played, and donations to the organization were solicited, but not collected.

Officer's Apparel Is A Costly Item

If someone were to ask whom the most expensive dressers are on campus, what person or persons would be selected as the answer?

One answer may be a certain individual, another may be a group of students belonging to the same sorority or fraternity and still another may be several individuals chosen independently to serve collectively.

How much consideration would the law enforcement group get? There might be a tendency to leave them out of mind because of their position on campus.

However, according to the campus Chief of Police, John McHenry, the law enforcement students are issued approximately $180 worth of service apparel and duty equipment by the college, and during rainy weather may very well wear pretty close to that amount while in uniform on duty.

An officer's uniform includes service pants which cost between $20 and $25; light weight, light blue shirts, $5.95; hats, $8.95; belts, $5; leather police jackets, $57; and his duty utensils, handcuffs and service baton.

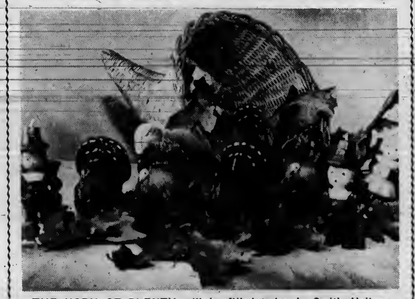
The handcuffs cost $15 and the service baton costs $5 to $10 depending on whether it is wood or plastic—plastic is the more costly.

When cold rainy weather appears, night shirts and raincoats are issued to the officers. The night shirts cost about $15 and the raincoats cost $40.

"The men buy their own plastic hat covers and rubber boots," McHenry said.

It's Turkey Time In Smith Hall

By Sharon Moore



Turkey Day is today at Smith Hall, but the turkeys won't be celebrating. Twenty turkeys, dressed and trimmed in their finest, will head the special menu for Thanksgiving.

Pierre Coste, executive chef, estimates that more than 1600 students will take advantage of the Thanksgiving menu. "The students are getting a real bargain," he said, "for they will be paying only 65 cents for a dinner that would cost $5 in any San Francisco restaurant."

The demand for pumpkin pies shoots up by 80 per cent during the Thanksgiving time. Normally, only nine pies out of a hundred sold at Smith Hall are pumpkin. According to past statistics, more than half of the one hundred pies sold today will be pumpkin. The remaining pies will be chiffon and apple, which is an all time favorite.

Coste and his team of hotel and restaurant workers began the Turkey Day preparations at dawn.

The executive chef added, "We won't serve any meals on Thanksgiving Day. Everyone can cook his own turkey. After cooking a half ton of turkey, we deserve a rest!"

THE HORN OF PLENTY will be filled today in Smith Hall as students from the college feast on the special menu available. Surrounding the horn are the symbols of the original Thanksgiving, signifying the meaning of this day in 1620.

'Youth Most Discriminated Against Group'—Friedenberg

Youth is now the most severely discriminated against minority in the country, according to Edgar Z. Friedenberg, a member of the sociology department at the University of California at Davis, who lectured here last Thursday on Youth And Civil Liberties.

Friedenberg defined discrimination in strictly legal terms, such as when acts become offenses when committed by young people but not by others.

As examples of "the invidious position of youth legislation," Friedenberg cited the arbitrary age limits applied to liquor consumption, voting and operating a motor vehicle.

"For the average adult, an examination is sufficient to determine elegibility to drive," he said. "Not so with young people. The legislature has seen fit to impose an arbitrary age limit."

Friedenberg mentioned a proposed law, recently vetoed, which would require young people to give up their driver's license if they were under 18 and a high school dropout.

"The juvenile court is another example of discriminatory youth legislation," he said. "The legal rights that adults enjoy under the constitution do not apply in our juvenile courts."

According to Friedenberg, when a juvenile is brought before the court as a ward, he cannot exercise any legal options, such as trial by jury, and he can be held in custody without even having committed a crime.

"There is a law in Massachusetts called 'The Stubborn Child Law'," he related. "A child's parents can go before the court, declare the child 'stubborn' and have him put away."

Why this seeming disregard for young people's civil liberties? "Civil liberties are aristocratic contributions to the American Constitution. There is reason to believe that the first ten amendments would never pass if they were proposed today.

"The disenfranchisement of youth is the result of a cultural hazing; a way of teaching youth through indoctrination not to buck the system, not to claim their rights as guaranteed under the constitution."

Friedenberg cautioned youth not to confuse civil liberties movements with other groups such as those which have sprung up in the war on poverty. "Civil liberties groups stand in a class all by themselves," he said.

"The youth of the nation should be the leaders of these groups because it is their civil liberties which are most abused."

Friedenberg has published three books, Coming Of Age In America, The Vanishing Adolescents and The Dignity of Youth. —G. F.

COO Sponsors Yule Drive For Needy

A Christmas drive for the needy, including the traditional Santa Claus contest and a collection of food, clothing and toys, will be sponsored by the Council of Organizations from November 29 through December 10.

David Minkin, chairman of the COO, announced the decision of the organization at a November 16 meeting to sponsor such a drive.

Boxes will be placed around the campus for the collection of discarded clothes and toys and gifts of food.

Funds will also be collected from the proposed Santa Claus contest. Each organization will submit a petition for their candidate. Petitions, which may be obtained in the Associated Student office, are due on November 29, Minkin said.

A "penny" vote is planned to pick the winner of the contest. Votes will be counted only with a monetary donation.

In addition to bringing recognition to his sponsoring organization, the winning Santa Claus will participate in the Christmas procession through Science and Cloud Halls during College Hour on Thursday, December 9.

Another Christmas activity planned by the COO will be a Christmas poster display in Smith Hall from December 6 through 10.

Alumnus Returns To Address Ad. Art Dept.

John Crane, studio director for Sapbier, Lerner and Schindler, Inc., will be the guest speaker for the advertising art department at 10 a.m. Friday, December 3, in S-136.

Crane, a graduate of City College approximately ten years ago, also works for the National Industrial Design and Display Co.

He will discuss industrial design. Industrial design is one of the many fields an art major may enter.

Tutoring Program Provides Assistance And Fulfillment

AS LONG AS schools and colleges are in existence, there will always be a need for tutors to help those students who, in order to succeed in their endeavors, must have outside assistance.

Students at this college fortunate enough to be blessed scholastically, have an opportunity this semester to help those less scholastically endowed.

This tutoring program, headed by the San Francisco Unified School District, is calling on students from the college to give a few moments of their time to assist youngsters who may encounter difficulty in one or more subjects.

For many of these youngsters, this tutoring assistance could eventually mean the difference to them between success and failure in college and in later life when the time comes for them to seek employment.

It has been possible at times to provide one tutor for every youngster but recently, as more student tutors are needed, it has been necessary to double up students so that tutors assist one or more.

This certainly seems to be a worthwhile cause, which not only gives those who volunteer for service a chance to further and improve their knowledge of a subject but at the same time, provides a feeling of fulfillment and the sense of accomplishment in knowing they have helped someone.

It is hoped that interested students will respond to the need for tutors. It is a challenging opportunity to help others and the rewards, already mentioned, can be more than gratifying, both to the donor as well as the recipient.

Guardsman Salutes Gridders

THIS SEASON has proved to be a highly significant one to the Ram football team. Coach Art Elston has guided his team to the undefeated championship in the Golden Gate Conference.

Not since 1957 has this title been brought to the college and, indeed, in that year, the Rams shared the championship through a four-way tie with three other college's in the league.

The last undefeated championship that Ram gridders claimed solely as their own was in 1948.

The Guardsman salutes Coach Elston and his fine, hardworking team for a job well done this season and hopes that in the future, these honors will come time and again to the college.

A Temptation For Pranksters?

By Peter Dorn

THE TEMPTATION of suggestion boxes around the campus may be too much for the practical jokester to overlook. The suggestion boxes, another product of the Student Council brain trust, will be placed about the campus in an attempt to feel out student opinion.

The basic premise of campus suggestion boxes seems to be worthwhile; people who may not wish to write a letter to The Guardsman editor may contribute their ideas to the college and, at the same time, remain anonymous—for some reason.

However, anonymity is to the prankster as silicone is to the topless swimmer. It inflates the prankster's flippant little mind far beyond its natural state of felicity.

There is no telling what Student Council members will find in those suggestion boxes. Of course there'll be the usual crank notes, ranging from suggestions of Melody Shendango dinnerware as standard cafeteria issue for all, to stronger, more incisive suggestions.

As long as the prediction is on, mention should be made of the possible contributions of half-eaten spiced ham-on-rye sandwiches, crumpled issues of The Guardsman, broken shoelaces and bomb scares.

Perhaps the architects of the suggestion boxes should consider the possibilities presented here and design the suggestion boxes accordingly.

A small opening in the box will screen out the sticks and stones, and name-calling written on small pieces of paper will probably never hurt them.

Strong locks on secure hinge mechanisms will prevent the agents of rival colleges from stealing any pertinent suggestions; also, they will render the boxes impregnable from the insertion of live frogs therein.

There is a remote possibility that all of the students at the college have matured past the crank note stage, and that any potential pranksters have graduated on to bigger things—like writing potato chip commercials for television.

Feathers Fly In Fight For Top Bird Spot

Equal rights are being demanded for the nation's barnyards by a left-wing faction of chicken lovers.

Since the Pilgrims started the custom of Thanksgiving, the turkey has become the traditional bird. Thanksgiving is the big day for the turkey. But, what about the chicken?

The chicken is the unsung hero of the barnyard. It gives the eggs for breakfast, the skin for soup.

Why doesn't it have a special day for itself?

The annual problem of Thanksgiving is what to do with the remainder of the uneaten turkey. Reheated turkey is fine for the next night, but after that there's a complete lack of imagination.

The once beautiful specimen of poultry is whittled down to turkey sandwiches, turkey salad, turkey soup, turkey pie and finally, turkey hash. This transformation usually comes in a period of a week or so.

But, there would be a different story if chicken were traditional for Thanksgiving. Since the chicken isn't as big as a turkey, it wouldn't take a week to eat the remainder of it. With luck, and a hungry congregation of relatives, the bird could be consumed in one sitting. —M. W.

Why Wait For Nature?

SCOTT SHELDON, Jack Meyer, Doug Biancalana and Sam Soriano, resting, actually came out to the college on a weekend to ski on the grass. Despite this, the Ram Ski Club usually performs very well on the snow.

College Slopes Provide A Fast Run For Avid Skiers

The fact that it hardly ever snows in San Francisco doesn't discourage members of the Ram Ski Club.

For this enthusiastic club is so anxious for the skiing season to begin that four club members have been seen shussing down the green and grassy slopes at the college on Saturdays with poles, bindings and all.

These four members unanimously decided that the hill nearest Science Hall on the north end is the best hill to practice on.

Doug Biancalana, who promoted the idea of practicing on the college's slopes, said he had heard before that mats, canvasses and sand are used to practice skiing, so he decided "why not the hills at City College."

The first time these four adventurers practiced on the slopes here, they used a ski tow, alternately supported by each member to hold on to so he wouldn't fall. Jack Meyers, president of the Ram Ski Club, said they discovered they didn't need the ski tow as a precaution, since skiing on the grassy slopes "was very slow going."

The four ski enthusiasts are Meyers, Scott Sheldon, business manager, Sammy Sorianox and Biancalana.

Biancalana mentioned that one could turn on these slopes but that it's pretty tricky," and Meyers unintentionally obliged a photographer by demonstrating the snowplow while attempting a turn.

Now that snow has fallen in the Sierra, they doubt if they'll be practicing at the college any more this semester.

The idea of using some other material than snow to slip down the slopes on a pair of slippery sticks is not new.

Many avid skiers, desperately craving to engage in the sport before Nature obliges, resort to a wide variety of innovations to achieve satisfaction. It has been rumored in the past that a christy on other than snow is unreal.

However, the four declined to comment on whether they'll miss practicing on the slopes, but Soriano murmured, "I wouldn't recommend it even to my enemies, and anyway, it's very sticky." —C. H.

● Substitutes A Farce?

Editor, The Guardsman:

I am writing to complain about one vestige of the high school administrator's mind which I have recently seen manifested on this campus. Specifically, the practice of having substitute teachers, a farce, waste of the student's time, and waste of the taxpayer's money when employed in a college level, lecture-type class.

This seems so obvious that there must be some law that absolutely requires the administration to have a substitute teacher physically present when the regular lecturer is absent . . .

I criticize this one specific item because it is just too damned stupid to be overlooked. A college level class is presumably difficult enough to require more than a cursory inspection of the textbook five minutes before the class meets.

I think any instructor that can give a lecture on one hour's notice is a genius . . .

A substitute teacher for a college class is ridiculous and an abomination and is just too, too ridiculous to be seriously considered.

Having attended one university already, and one four-year college, I have been resonably impressed with the standards of City College and have found the faculty, for the most part, quite good, but a substitute teacher is just too much, and gives me a frantic trapped feeling.

Please tell me that the law absolutely requires the above mentioned farce else I will surely die of an excess of disgust in the auditorium of the "Officers of Administration" of this formerly esteemed institution.

Relying on you to restore my shattered faith, by affording a reasonable explanation, I am, . . . R. Birmele

Editor's Note: The presence of substitutes during regular classes when the regular instructor is absent is a legal requirement of the San Francisco Unified School District. However, every effort is made to recruit substitutes from the college's faculty when they are available.

● Guardsman Unbiased

Editor, The Gnardsman:

Your recent letter writers have demonstrated one of the basic signs of extremism, namely, that those not with them are automatically against them.

Your reporting is very fair and unbiased, surprisingly so, since all your articles on controversial issues are bylined, and not presented as straight news. Don Kafafian

Local Talent Emerges At COO Varities

By B.T.

AT THE RECENT Council of Organizations' talent show, the audience was treated to a superb performance of a petite Ethel Merman. This pint-sized version of the Broadway star literally mesmerized everyone and won first place.

Little Lana Tershy, the modest student who acted as Mrs Barker in The American Dream, revealed her magnificent voice. She was poised, confident and skillful.

It wasn't her songs. It was how she sang. She has IT. She needs no props, for her voice is the rare kind that carries loud and clear.

To prove that Miss Tershy is worthy of these adjectives, it can be noted that she was selected to participate in the production, 'Bye 'Bye Birdie, with George Gobel at the Circle Star Theater, San Carlos.

She is also enjoying a scholarship at the San Francisco Conservatory of Music.

Jim Wyatt, student government adviser, helped organize a great talent show.

The Master of Ceremonies, George Yang, displayed know-how in ad-libbing and improvising. He kept the acts moving, and improvised new jokes during scene changes.

Yang has the admirable quality of being able to laugh at himself, and of making the audience laugh with him. He joked about everything; about his heavy accent, his ancestry, the pickets, and a clever way to avoid the draft.

The secret to draft dodging, he said, was to "get your ankle mashed up between those bamboos, in the Filipino tinikling dance." Ouch. However, he should continue his comedy acts, and leave the singing to other performers.

Barry Stevenson and Wesley Green, for instance.

Second prize was awarded to a very camp combo, Biff and Jim. Biff, Bert Lurie and Jim Allins are neighbors. They do a piano and drum act. THEIR neighbors know it too.

Biff and Jim just couldn't play long enough. The audience kept wanting more.

Third prize went to a group of Polynesian dancers and musicians, criminology, airline stewardess and business students all. They opened the show, and temperatures rose with the sexy numbers.

Leroy Lavoi, Tony Tuitele, Dave Malae, husky criminology majors here, jumped around in their own version of authentic Samoan jitterbugging.

Female Polynesian dancers who are talented always manage to keep the audience fascinated with their hand movements. Kahaulani Nalpo and Lani Matau did just that with their Tahitian numbers.

Avau Scott, Miss Naipo and Miss Matsu did Maori, Samoan and Hawaiian numbers. Pamata Noah, a homesick Samoan business major, was disappointed because she did not have the opportunity to dance the Samoan fire-knife dance. She played guitar that night.

Radio has one big advantage over television as an advertising medium. People can listen to radios while doing other things.

Meanderings

By Mike Smith

EARLY THIS month, at Stanford University, a new organization on that campus announced plans to send medical supplies to the Viet Cong.

At the University of California, where there exists a small but active hot bed of left-wing extremism and campus radicalism, there was a similar "help the Viet Cong" campaign — including the urging of students to donate blood to the communist aggressors in North Vietnam.

In last week's Guardsman, reporter Cheryl Crofts told of the bitter resentment many United States servicemen hold toward anti-war demonstrators. There is nothing peaceful, or loyal, in attempting to help the other side to win.

What's more, if Congress had declared war "officially" instead of President Johnson declaring war "unofficially," these pickets who attempt to block troop trains, disrupt military bases, and send aid to U.S. enemies, would be accused of treason.

CARD BURNERS INSTILL FEAR

The cowardly draft card burners will try to instill fear into a coed by telling her that if she supports the war in Vietnam, then she will share the blame if her boy friend is killed there.

In one California college paper, the publication asked certain students why they protest the draft and the Vietnam War so vehemently. One student replied, "President Johnson is trying to kill me, and I have a right to protect myself."

This self-centered man does not care about his country or his fellow Americans. Yet he will act as though he is a humanitarian, and will tell you World Opinion is against the U.S. being in Vietnam.

What is World Opinion anyway?

Bill Jones, columnist for the Foothill Sentinel (Foothill College, Los Altos Hills), put it this way in the October 8, 1965, issue of the Sentinel. "What is World Opinion? It is only the best propaganda machine delivering what the people want to hear."

Many of the peaceniks tell us that World Opinion is against our being in this war, and we should pull out or sell out South Vietnam to the communists through false negotiations and promises.

HITLER APPEASED

World Opinion appeased Hitler, and he nearly conquered all of Europe. And World Opinion looked the other way when the Soviet Union attacked small Finland in 1939, all because that tiny nation would not sell or lease a very small part of its country that the Russians wanted.

And what did World Opinion do when the Soviet Union squelched the Hungarian revolt for freedom in 1956? It just looked the other way.

The United States is the only country capable of halting the communist aggression, and a line must be drawn somewhere. That is exactly why the U.S. is in Vietnam.

Would it be better if we waited until communism is entrenched in Thailand, Formosa, Japan, Australia, and then maybe even Europe. Then we would have no choice but to fight an all-out nuclear war.

Hitler said he wanted to conquer the world, but the world did not believe him and appeased him. Russia, under Khrushchev, said our grandchildren will live under the communist system of tyranny. The United States, the best hope of the free world, believes that threat.

But the anti-Vietnam groups give their blood to the Viet Cong. They, the aggressive pacifists, who claim they are not warmongers, seem to be practically rooting for the other side to win just so they can say, "I told you so."

Secretary of State Dean Rusk has stated that the conflict in South East Asia, if permitted to be lost, would mean that the reason for the Pacific War in World War II would all have been in vain and every ship and every life, be it Asian or otherwise, sacrificed in that conflict would have been a waste.

Phone-Hogs — A Reason For 'Righteous' Vandalism

"Catching" a phone booth while on campus is quite a trick.

Conversations in public phone booths, if any, it is usually understood, are brief and to the point.

Diplomacy seldom works, and windows have been broken for less. But the phone-hog has some kind of immunity, although he could easily be a cause of "righteous" vandalism.

Booths for two are taboo, and only teeth are gnashed. One has also lost that traumatic experience of window busting, an opportunity which not only may never rise again, but is still that favorite of vandals designed for all, but enjoyed now, only be the youngest set that invades the campus on weekends.

When the conversations are not brief, unlimited patience is required to keep an anxious, would-be phone-user from lighting tapping on the window of an occupied booth.

One realizes, however, that some conversations are going to be long, so why are there not more booths on campus?

An insight into the problem was revealed recently by Oscar E. Anderson, coordinator of educational management.

"Not only do we have this problem," he said, "but these tiny invaders are the only reason additional phone booths on campus are discouraged."

He also noted that four more booths have been installed on the campus in recent weeks: one in the women's gymnasium, one in the horticulture department, and two in the Statler wing, one on the left in the lobby and the other on its ground floor level, opposite the cooking laboratory. —Maria Schiano

Youth's Ability 'Shocks' Adults At Governor's Confab

By John Lee

Four City College students attended the Governor's Conference On Youth, November 11 through 13, which literally shocked all of the adults present into a sudden realization that California youth are prepared to participate in state and national affairs.

The four students brought back glowing reports of the California youth's performance in the many forums held with adults in the Senator Hotel in Sacramento.

Percy Jones, Glen Fahs, Brian Engle and Fred Fisher are the students who were chosen by City College administrative officials to attend the conference.

Engle stated, "Many of the usually argumentative adults were quickly put in a defensive role by four or five measly youths."

Jones said that all of the organized youth of California were represented, which included the Red Cross, YMCA's, high schools and colleges.

The convention, which approximately 3300 youths attended, was divided into several forums.

Jones also said, "The idea of the conference was to show adults how they can better understand the youth of today."

One of the findings of the convention is that the youth of today is much smarter, wiser and more independent than those of the past," Jones stated.

Election Campaign Fees Due Monday

Associated Student election nominating conventions were held in Statler wing Monday night for Reform on Campus and last night for United Students Representative Party, after The Guardsman went to press.

The two parties were the only ones officially registered by the November 15 deadline, according to Sandy Sager, Election Committee chairman.

Campaign fees for candidates nominated are due at the finance office by Monday, November 29, Miss Sager emphasized, explaining that fees for candidates are in accordance with the offices sought.

Candidates running for the offices of Associated Student President, Vice President, Associated Men Student and Women Student Presidencies and the respective offices of president of the Sophomore and Freshman Classes are required to pay a fee of $2 to the bank, she said.

The candidates running for Student Council seats, seven sophomore and seven freshman, are required to pay a nomination fee of only $1.

She also reminded students that individual candidate petitions are to be filed by Friday, December 10, in Bungalow 5.

Club Meetings Set For Tuesday

An additional meeting date has been scheduled for on-campus clubs during College Hour November 30, Dave Minkin, Council Of Organizations chairman, disclosed recently. The clubs will also be meeting as planned on December 7.

On-campus clubs cover a wide spectrum of student interests.

Whether it is skiing, a career in dental assisting, horticulture or drama, no matter what a student's vocational plans or avocational interests, there will probably be at least one club in which there are students who share his involvement.

A complete list of on-campus organizations is posted outside the registrar's office and on several bulletin boards throughout the campus.

Band, Orchestra Concert Will Be Presented Dec. 2

Selections from Bach and Handel are included in a band and orchestra concert to be presented during College Hour, Thursday, December 2, in the college theater, Meyer M. Cahn, music instructor, announced today.

The concert will be performed again at 8 p.m. Tuesday, December 7, in the choral room of Arts Hall, Cahn said.

The orchestra will play such compositions as a waltz from Der Rosenkavalier, by Richard Strauss, Symphony No 37, by Joseph Haydn, and a Handel Suite.

Among band selections are If Thou Be Near, by Johann Bach; Mother Goose Suite, including A Lullaby Of The Sleeping Beauty and The Enchanted Garden, by Maurice Ravel, and Divertimento For Band, by Vince Perschetti.

There will be no charge for either presentation, Cahn said.

In the following week, choral groups will be featured in an evening and College Hour Christmas concerts.

The college's Stage Band presented a contemporary music concert yesterday.

Affairs Forum Concludes Vietnam Discussions

By Arturo Rodriguez

In an attempt to encourage critical thinking on current events, members of the Contemporary Affairs Forum hosted more than 800 students and faculty in four open discussions of United States involvement in Vietnam. The last in the series was held Nov. 16.

A similar series on the subject of higher education is now under organization.

The discussions covered four general areas: historical background, national interest, war objectives and peace aims, and public opinion and support.

Each gathering heard two faculty members and two students present to the audience prepared talks on the subject chosen for discussion. These then led to questions from the floor, and general discussion of specifics.

The first forum dealt with the historical aspect of Vietnam. Robert Johnson and Edward Taylor, both of the political science department, were faculty speakers. Fred Steward and Richard Birmele were student speakers.

"Mr. Johnson's excellent presentation of the history of Vietnam got us off to a fine start. He covered the medieval period, the middle ages, and all the way up to the Geneva convention all in about 18 minutes," Richard Ricco, Contemporary Affairs Forum president commented.

The second meeting, concerned with national interest, saw Frank Watters, political science instructor, Ernest Thalinger, Birmele, and Johnson present arguments.

It was Watters who brought to the meetings their first controversy.

Speaking on the practical side of national interest, he stated that "the how and why" the U.S. got into Vietnam, "the why" the U. S. backed certain regimes and, in effect, everything that has happened is not important now.

The only thing that counts now is where the U.S. is to go from here. "Although it may be a sin to fight in Vietnam," he contended, "it might even be a greater sin to withdraw."

The third debate took the subject of Vietnam one more step as it dealt with war objectives and peace aims. Speakers for his gahering were Anatole Bratoff, social science instructor, Taylor, and students David Jenkins and Paul Shuttleworth.

Shuttleworth expressed the belief that if the U.S. is going to fight in Vietnam, "let's win." This, he felt, could only be achieved through intensified bombings—"preferably at night to save lives." Jenkins insisted that a negotiated peace was the answer.

"This type of gathering works best when clash is present and participants commit themselves publicly to their beliefs; the fiery exchange between Jenkins and Shuttleworth, as well as the Watter comments, were highlights of the forum series," Ricco stated.

In the final forum, discussion was of a more general nature when the subject at hand was public opinion.

Speakers were David Everall, philosophy instructor, Robert Berman of the English department faculty, and students Joe Sullivan and Terrance Faulkner.

Ticket Sales To Decide '65 Prune Bowl Location

The site of the 1965 Prune Bowl game, which the San Francisco Rams will host, has been tentatively set for San Jose City College, but a Prune Bowl official stated earlier last week that the game would be changed to San Jose State's Spartan Field if a representative amount of tickets was sold before December 4, date of the game.

Tickets may be purchased at the Silver Pole in Science Hall and in Bungalow 5. A representative number of tickets is believed to be 2000.

Trials Near End For Cuddy & Co.

As of last week in courtroom 17 of the Hall of Justice, proceedings were underway for the criminal trial of four speakers who were arrested near the Ram last May 14, for trespassing and violating the "permission to speak" rule pertaining to the free speech area of that semester.

The defendants in the trials, which are expected to end today, are Ron Cuddy, past leader of Active Campus Today, Eugene Peters and Tom Freel, of San Francisco State College, the latter being the leader of the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee at State, Hugh Namais, a local free-lance writer, and Al Kutchinsky, also affiliated with SNCC at State College.

Testifying for the college have been President Louis Conlan, Ralph Hillman, dean of men, and James Wyatt, student government adviser, who made the citizen's arrest that day.

Ushers Needed For Symphony Concerts

Ushers are needed for the Symphony Forum and regular season symphony concerts that will start December 1 at the Opera House, and continue until May 18, 1966, according to Mary Golding, dean of women.

Interested students can apply for tickets to usher from Dean Golding.

Women will be required to wear dark dresses and heels, and men must wear a dark suit, white shirt and tie.

Ushers must be at the Opera House on time and at the date for which they signed up.

Personal Hardship, Physical Incapabilities Make Half Of All Prospective Draftees 4-F

By Viggo Petersen

According to recent newspaper reports, approximately one-half of all prospective draftees are rejected at the pre-induction physical for a variety of reasons — ranging from personal hardship to physical incapabilities.

The remaining half incur a six-year military obligation which can be fulfilled in a number of ways.

According to the Selective Service, a person may still enlist in the armed forces of his choice after he has taken his pre-induction physical.

Selective Service officials give no definite answer as to how long after taking a physical one can expect to receive his induction notice. This mainly depends on his age, they say.

There are two basic enlistment programs in the service, the regular enlistment and the reserves.

Regular enlistments constitute four years of active duty in all of the services except the army which is for three years. After an enlistment of three or four years, the individual is placed on an inactive reserve list which requires no attendance at meetings. This is distinguished from the active reserves which requires participation at regularly scheduled meetings.

A person volunteering for the draft would undergo the same program as if he were drafted outright. He would serve two years in the active army, two years of active reserve meetings, then two years of inactive reserve.

The length of active duty in the reserves varies from four to 24 months, depending upon the field of training for which the recruit qualifies. After active duty, the remaining six year obligation requires regular attendance at meetings.

The amount of time spent at reserve meetings amounts to approximately 16 hours a month. Meetings are held either one night a week and one Sunday, or on a full weekend, depending on the branch of service and the unit. Also two weeks out of the summer is required for active duty training.

If a person enlists in a six-month program, the actual number of days spent attending meetings and on six months active duty comes to 370 days.

However, certain units of the National Guard have been involved in a reorganization program which requires an obligation of approximately 24 hours a month.

Enlistment in the reserves has become slightly difficult, according to various recruiters. Many reserve units are filled to capacity, as a result of the recent influx of volunteers in the reserves.

Waiting lists are longest in the Coast Guard, Navy and the Air Force. However, the National Guard, Army and Marine Corps indicated shorter waiting lists. No obligation is necessary if an individual places his name on a waiting list. It means that he will be called to enlist, if he chooses to do so, when there is an opening in the unit.

Recruiters emphasize, however, that anyone placed on a waiting list will be sent a notice informing him of the opening and specifying a time to report for enlistment. If the individual fails to show, his name is taken from the waiting list.

The most significant difference in all the services is in the National Guard.

It is basically under control of the state it represents and therefore is subject to call to active duty in event of a state emergency as was exemplified during the recent riots in Watts, California.

Mud, Officials Halt Ram Champs

Booters Vie With Victor Valley For Third State Title

For the third straight year, the City College Rams have earned the right to represent the Northern California Junior College Soccer Conference at the annual state championship game by sweeping past all league competitors.

This year the City College booters, perennial winners of the Northern conference, will clash with Victor Valley (located near Los Angeles) who also go by the name Rams, and who are three-time titlists of the Southern California Junior College Soccer Conference.

The game is scheduled for December 2 in Victorville.

In the first meeting of the two teams in 1963, which was also the college's first year in the conference, the local booters blanked the Southern Californians, 4-0, thus giving them a perfect 11-0 season record.

The following year, November 21, 1964, at Balboa Field before a small but enthusiastic crowd of 150, the City College soccermen crushed Victor Valley, 8-0, and increased their final season record to 12-2.

Coach Roy Diederichsen was instrumental in the arrangement of the beginning of this North-South soccer contest for the State title as well as the development of the NCJCSC.

San Francisco earned its berth in the game by winning five of their six league games to post a 12-2-1 season record. This fact could work against the team.

"This year's team has played twice as many games as have teams in the past. This could account for the lack of enthusiam they've displayed lately. Maybe the team has played too much soccer!" coach Diederichsen said after a 2-1 practice game loss to a weak San Francisco State College team.

In order to combat the effect of "too much soccer," Diederichsen has taken counter action. "I gave the team a rest last week. We held no practices. I want them to get away from soccer for awhile," Diederichsen commented.

As the team begins its final preparation for the State title game, a look at the season might be appropriate, in light of the coach's assurance, "We have never played up to our capabilities."

The injury-hit Ram soccer team has a 12 won-two lost-one tied season record and as conference champs they are eagerly waiting to play their Southern California counterpart December 2.

Many Red and White "greats" have been lost to the squad throughout the season, some for the whole season and some just for a few games. The worst Ram loss must have been that of inside right Ben Boikanyo, who broke his ankle in a contest against Pacific Bible College of Fresno.

Local prep star Roberto "Sapo" Rojas, who showed great promise at the beginning of the season, has been limpling since that time and has seen only limited duty.

All-American center, captain Alex Mendieta has been on a bad foot for the last two weeks. Mendieta's unofficial tally total of 23 for the 14 games in which he participated is less than his total of 28 last year.

Last year's All-Conference center-half George Fernandez was out of action for a few games with a sore ankle. The local's first string goalie, Caesar Castro, was lost after the first game because he would not work and play.

As a team, the locals never reached their potential, and were far from equaling last year's team standard. The difference between this year's and last year's was not ability, but spirit. Last season's Ram squad fought to the last moment of play, while this year's eleven has appeared to be uninspired at the start of a game.

It would be erroneous to say that everything was negative on this booter club since there were some outstanding individuals on this year's eleven.

Such positive points as the play of Enver Safir can not be overlooked, since he consistently played both ends of the game, defense and offense. He scored an unofficial total of ten goals for the Rams, but saved many more from being scored on the locals.

The offense was usually a plus for the locals, but the defense was mostly disorganized. The Red and White offense tallied 72 times, while the opposition scored 21 times against them.

Playing outstanding defense besides Safir was Fernandez, with Mike Montez and Connie Shishkin showing stability on occasions. Rudy Espinosa, who filled in at goal after the first league match has been playing like a tiger in the cage, but inexperience led him to make some costly mistakes.

NSA Hits, 118-36, Title Favorites In Intra Cage Race

The most decisive victory in two semesters was pounded out in Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural cage competition last week when the Negro Students Association thumped the Newman Club Vikings, 118-36.

Jim Bealum, the victors' captain, racked up 30 points to lead the squad to its third straight win.

Other Club League action saw The Guardsman pick up a forfeit over absent Block SF and the Ram Ski Club trounce the Sophomores, 59-22.

In a hard-fought tilt, the Filipino Americans outlasted Lawson's 10 by a 57-51 margin.

Wednesday's Independent - Fraternity League games included one forfeit which saw Phi Beta Delta get the win over Beta Tau.

In games that were played, the Irish outscored the NBA Rejects, 63 to 53, and Alpha Kappa Rho led an uprising to massacre the Chiefs 48-29.

The Celtics and Alpha Phi Epsilon battled out the closest game of the week. The Celts scratched a mark in the win column by coming out with the better part of a 56 to 55 tally over the disgruntled Epsiloners. The fraternity filed a protest on that game.

Stan Angel, AMS president, announced his decisions concerning two former protested contests. Lawson's 10 has been made official winner over the Ram Ski Club, because the skiers aledgedly used ineligible players.

The other decision involves the November 2 clash between The Guardman and Lawson's 10. This time Lawson's club won out. The Guardsman filed another protest.

Harriers End Season In Eighth Place

The City College cross country team concluded the 1965 season by finishing in a somewhat disappointing eighth place in the final conference standings, and seventh in the Golden Gate Conference meet, held at San Mateo November 16.

Foothill walked off with the title by placing its five men first in the entire meet. Foothill's score of 15 points was far ahead of San Jose's 75 points.

Diablo Valley came in third with 94 points, while San Mateo, Merritt and Chabot all came in ahead of the Rams. The lone team to finish below them was Contra Costa.

Foothill's Russ Mahon came in first with the time of 14:11. Alex Vosher was top man for the Rams, with the time of 16:23, a second faster than George Ferguson of San Francisco.

Ram Joe Singer came in 34th with the time of 16:37, only two seconds faster than teammate John O'Looney, who finished 36th. Bill Long of the Rams was the last man to finish. His time was 17:05.

Lou Vasquez, coach of the team, wasn't too disappointed with the showing of the team.

"After all," he said, "we were beaten by ever team in the conference in the regular season but came out ahead of one team in the big meet, where we had all our men in the top 50 of a total of 72 participants."

On January 2, 1865, Con Orem and Hugh O'Neil fought a gory, bloody, bare-fisted fight to a draw—after 185 rounds had gone by.

Gridders Tie Diablo Valley In Final Game Of Season

By John Lee

The powerful Ram football team tied Diablo Valley College 18-18 in the final game of the season on a Pleasant Hill field which both looked and smelled like a recently converted pig wallow.

Throughout the game Ram fans jeered and booed the officials, who called back three Ram touchdowns and penalized the Rams 125 yards, mostly on crucial plays ending threatening drives.

But the tie cannot be blamed entirely on the officiating and the condition of the field. Rather some blame must go to the 48-6 Ram win over San Jose City College last week, which gave the Rams the league title a week early.

The Rams scored the first two times they got the ball. The first score being a 55 yard pass play from QB Bob Lee to End Bruce Rosenberg, which was called back because of illegal procedure.

O. J. Simpson put the Rams on the board with a thrilling 62 yard run in the next few plays. The two point conversion failed.

On the play after the Ram kickoff, Tackle Jerd Lapham intercepted a Viking pass, and four plays and one illegal procedure penalty later, Simpson took the ball in for the Rams' second score.

The two point conversion failed and the Rams led 12-0 as Simpson broke the national scoring record by 6 points with 23 touchdowns.

With no time left in the first quarter the Vikings scored on a 65 yard pass from QB Ron Enos to August Silva. The conversion was blocked.

The Vikings managed to score twice more in the game, but not before both teams had a fumbling spree, fumbling the ball a total of eight times in 16 plays, five of these by the Rams.

Finally the Rams resorted to the trickery of a tackle eligible play, as Lee hit Tackle Joe Ross on an 11 yard touchdown pass. The kick failed and the Rams kicked off with the score 18-18 with just 37 seconds left in the game.

However, Ram Guard Rich Colombo proved that the game was not over, as he recovered a Viking fumble with 24 seconds remaining on the clock. Lee passed the ball away to stop the clock, and the Rams set up the last play of the game.

As everyone in the stadium rose to watch, Lee faded back to pass, then rolled to his right and ran for 14 yards before being dropped by the only Viking near enough to prevent a score.

Cagers Fight For Starting Post

By William Pates

With but one week left before their initial preseason basketball contest, coach Sid Phelan's balanced rookie-veteran cagers are still embroiled in battle as to who will gain the starting five positions.

A turnout of better than 45 men has been cut to a mere 12, all of whom have a good chance for a starting position.

There is a tight battle going on between veterans Ed Wilson, Charlie Parks and rookie Eugene Williams for the center post which should be decided by hustle and may continue all season, Phelan commented.

Girard Chatman's improved play has been a pleasant surprise, and he could easily steal one of the starting berths, the coach continued.

The single center post is not important in itself because of Phelan's utilization of the double post position formation. So conceivably, Parks, Williams, Wilson and Chatman are fighting for two jobs.

For the time being, Parks and Chatman are listed at center, with Williams and Wilson at forward.

Veteran guard Willie Jones and rookie shooting ace Willie Wise are even in their battle for the other forward spot. But if Wise should win out, Jones will be tried at guard where there is considerable opposition being undertaken at the moment.

There are six guards trying out for two starting spots, none of whom have established a definite edge at this time.

John Pezzolo, a one-time guard from Sacred Heart who missed much of last season due to injuries, and Lowell's Paul Batmale hold the current edge because of their heady play against Cal Medical, but any six could open against Laney College in the college's preseason opener, Phelan stated.

Pezzolo has been shooting very well as has former second club All-City guard Rog Langlois. Veteran Fred Owens and rookies Isaac Neal and Larry Gray also have a good shot at winning the guard spots.

Grid Team Reaps 'Great Year' Prize, Hosts Prune Bowl

By Bob Lee

City College of San Francisco, by virtue of its Golden Gate Conference championship, has definitely been selected as the host team in the 1965 Prune Bowl to be held in San Jose Saturday, December 4, with kickoff set for 1:30 p.m.

An opponent has not been selected as of this writing, but the choice had been narrowed to three Northern California teams: College of Sequoias, West Valley College and Shasta.

No definite college from the southern end of the state has been named, but there is a good possibility the opponent could come from Southern California.

On the evening of December 3, the entire Ram team will leave for San Jose and spend the night at the St. Clair Hotel and attend an awards banquet.

The site of the Prune Bowl is tentatively set for San Jose City College, but there is a strong possibility that the game will be changed to San Jose State's Spartan field.

Of the three possible California opponents, College of Sequoias appeared to be the strongest team, having won the title in the always tough Valley Conference, which includes San Joaquin Delta, American River, Fresno, Sacramento and Modesto.

Meanwhile, College of the Sequoias accepted a bid to meet Shasta College of Redding in the Empire Bowl at Santa Rosa December 4.

Shasta College in Redding was a top team in this year's Golden Valley Conference, which includes most of far-Northern California.

West Valley College at Campbell is a member of the Coast Conference and won five straight games before bowing to Monterey Peninsula College. After the game, Monterey accepted a bid to meet Foothill College in the Lettuce Bowl in Salinas on Thanksgiving Day.

No matter which team the Rams play, the game promises to be a good one. San Francisco's record - setting Rams will most likely be the favorites —but the football often takes funny bounces.

When the San Franciscans swamped San Jose, 48-6, they ruined the Jaguars' chances for a bowl berth of any kind.

San Jose had beaten Foothill in league play, although the two tied for second place in the league. But the Owls had the better seasonal mark, not having lost a game since the San Jose affair the second week of the league season.

RA Sportsday Set For Dec. 4 At Diablo Valley

Sports enthusiasts in the Recreation Association will participate in another Sportsday at Diablo Valley College on Saturday, December 4, from 8 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., according to Edna Pope, sponsor of the organization.

Dance mixers, volleyball, badminton, archery, bowling and tennis will be featured for competition or participation. Also offered will be a golf clinic.

Anyone interested in attending the Sportsday may sign up in the women's gymnasium. Free transportation is provided to and from the event.

'65 Prune Bowl Team Sketches

San Francisco

By Bill Pates

The 1965 Prune Bowl shapes up as a battle of powerhouses. San Francisco is the number one team in Northern California, while Long Beach has long been a giant in Southern California grid circles.

Both teams have identical records (7-1-1), and boast All-America halfbacks. The two lines are both strong and experienced.

San Francisco's O.J. Simpson is one of the most explosive halfbacks ever to play junior college football. But in Ron Fassler, San Francisco boasts one of the league's finest all-around players.

In the backfield with Simpson and Fassler are: Fullback Dennis Sullivan, who has done an outstanding job of running and blocking the entire year; and Quarterback Bob Lee, who leads the Rams in passing and touchdown passes.

Mike Dunn, Suaese Malae, Rich Colombo, Mike Taylor, and Joe Ross have done fantastic jobs in the line the entire year and their contributions cannot be overlooked.

San Francisco also has four fine rotating ends in: Bruce Rosenberg, Dwight Tucker, Reeves Moses, and Eurel Smothers.

On defense the Rams gave up only 9.4 points a game, thanks largely to the excellent play of Chris Davis, Tucker, Smothers, Fred Loville, and Orrie McRae.

Both teams will be "up" for the game, which should be rough, with plenty of offensive action.

Long Beach

By Bob Lee

It had been a long time---two years and 19 games to be exact--since Long Beach City College lost a football contest. But Cerritos College did it, 21-15, two weeks ago.

Two days later, the Norsemen voted to accept a Prune Bowl Bid and help to set the stage for what could be the "finest" J.C. football game ever played in Northern California.

Marvelous Marvin Motley led the Long Beach attack, but the All-America halfback missed the Cerritos game with a knee injury ---but the slack was taken up by Elwood Stewart, who gained 108 yards in 13 carries.

Other Norsemen who will pose problems for the Ram defenders are: End Ron Drake, who grabbed five of the seven LBCC aerials, and QB Greg Barton. Long Beach also has an excellent punter in Larry Dixon.

Linebacker Don Sam spearheads the Viking defense which shutout Cerritos in the 2nd half after trailing 21-0!

Directly after the loss Long Beach voted to accept "any" bowl bid that came along so that they might redeem themselves.

But San Francisco would like to redeem themselves also, for their embarassing, 18-18, tie with Diablo Valley College.

A question of regional pride will be at stake when the teams meet. Southern California pol s have long snubbed Northern teams. If the Rams play like they can--NorCal teams will gain prestige.

Prune Bowl Transportation

Three buses are being made available for students wishing to attend the Prune Bowl Saturday. The cost is 50 cents, sign-ups are in Bungalow 5 and the buses will leave campus at 11:30 a.m.

Campus Parties Select Candidates

ROC Platform: 'Separate Board For City College'

By Jim Vargas

An eight-point platform and the emergence of ten candidates to run on the Reform On Campus ticket in next month's Associated Student election were the results of ROC convention meetings held on November 22 and 26.

According to Doug Bianchi, formerly Student Council member and a leader of ROC, the most important plank in the platform is that of a proposed resolution to be made by Student Council advocating the establishment of a separate school board, independent from that now governing the San Francisco Unified School District, to govern City College.

Popular consensus in the party is that the City College student is now on the same level as any second grade pupil in a San Francisco public school, by virtue of the fact that the same Board of Education governs both elementary schools and the college.

Another major issue is that of membership on the staff of The Guardsman. ROC contends that since the Associated Students support the college newspaper financially ($5005.66 this semester) it should be open to all members of the AS, not only to those who enroll in journalism as an academic subject and receive "unit" credit.

Among other points brought up in the platform were the liberalization of the regulations governing the free speech platform, and a provision that political parties function as such throughout the semester, instead of for a few weeks before elections.

(ROC had been given an ultimatum earlier in the semester to stop recruiting members for the party, because such action was termed a form of campaigning.)

The installation of nonrestricted bulletin boards, voluntary membership in the Council Of Organizations, recognition of the rights of all lawful organizations to function on campus, and that students be allowed to collect funds and distribute propaganda on campus were included in the declaration of ROC principles.

All ten candidates are running for seats on Student Council. ROC will field no one for the top six positions.

Sophomores running for council are: Jerry Dresner, unsuccessful candidate in last semester's election; Louis Collins, Joe Sullivan, John Becker, presently a councilman elected on ROC ticket; Gary Hoffman, an independent elected to the council this semester, and an unidentified candidate.

Freshmen running for council are: Fred Stewart, Louis Meunier, Bill Toscano and an unidentified candidate.

At a convention meeting held at the college Monday night, November 22, it was stressed that ROC is in existence to help make City College more democratic. In the words of Lincoln Pain, ROC member of Student Council and one of the original organizers of the party:

"All ROC can ever be is a group to make this college more democratic. All other issues are almost superficial."

The party itself is run on such a basis that no central committee makes important decisions by itself. Rather, according to Dresner, "We want the decisions to be made by the party as a whole."

All members of ROC, and anyone can join, have the right to vote in nominating conventions, not just clubs on campus as is the rule for USRP. This, it is thought, makes ROC closer to the students and, if elected, Student Council, which "controls nearly $50,000," says Pain, will be closer to the electorate.

USRP Nominates Biff Barnes For Presidential Spot

By John Lee

Despite a constantly changing house count and a few minor parlimentary procedure errors, the United Students Representative Party successfully managed to complete its nominations for Associated Student elections during its semi-annual convention November 23.

Throughout the convention the house count changed from 29 organizations present, to 30, then to 31 and back down to 30. Although the constantly changing count shouldn't have had any affect on the nominations under ordinary circumstances, it did.

The candidates were affected by the count because of some close votes. Tom Csekey, who had apparently won the nomination for AS Vice President, felt the twangs of a close vote when a call for a roll-call vote elected Helen Bundros instead.

Sharadan Parker also fell victim to a roll-call vote as she lost her already won nomination for Associated Women Student President to Brenda Jung.

After two and a half hours of voting, revoting, and re-revoting, USRP completed its list of candidates for the upcoming student election.

The list of nominees for the top six offices has for AS President, Merritt (Biff) Barnes; for AS Vice President, Miss Bundros; for Associated Men Student President, Perey Jones; for Associated Women President, Miss Jung; for Sophomore Class President, Bruce Fisher, and for Freshman Class President, Ernest Woodcock.

Also nominated at the convention were Sophomore and Freshman members of Student Council. The seven Sophomore nominees are Csekey, Judy Stewart, Ron Appel, Steve Ahern, Miss Parker, Janis Goldberg and Francine Loskay.

The Freshman nominees are Helen Ferentinos, Mike Nygren, Joe Parnell, Chris Loo, Wayne Wilson, Joan Shaw and Linette Wong.

Not only were USRP's candidates chosen at the convention, but the delegates also succeeded in drafting their party platform for their campaign.

The main part of their eight-point platform is that students be encouraged to use the free speech area and suggestion boxes, write letters-to-the-editor and attend council meetings.

Second on the list of points is the establishment of an informal hour in which the students can meet to talk to faculty members about the problems in modern education.

Third on the list is the establishment of a meet-your-council table in Smith Hall where students can meet to talk with council members about various problems of student government.

Another calls for Student Council meetings in the theater, Statler wing or the court yard to provide greater accessibility to the students.

Last, but not least on the list, is the adoption of the new constitution as a more effective plan for student representation in government.

Jim Soletti Independent Candidate For Presidency

James Soletti, sophomore councilman, is the sole independent candidate to have filed for the approaching Associated Student election, January 5 and 6. Soletti announced his candidacy for AS President by paying campaign fees on the date of the candidate filing deadline, November 29.

The second campaign deadline is today; party rosters are due in B-5.

Party campaigns begin today and extend through January 6. Sandra Sager, election commissioner, explained that all campaign methods and election issues must be approved by the Election Committee and Student Activity Adviser James Wyatt.

Individual candidate's petitions are due in S-121 before 1 p.m. Friday. These petitions are routed through the offices of the deans, the registrar, and the candidates' respective counselors, and then to Miss Sager for final approval.

Meeting Changes Made For Two Campus Clubs

Among the on-campus organizations, only one room change has been made recently, according to Dave Minkin, Council of Organizations chairman. The Christian Science Club, which met in S-212, will now meet in A-209.

Committee for Republicanism, is to meet in A-218.

Club meetings will resume on December 28.

Training Program To Cap 23 Women Students

Capping ceremonies will be held for 23 dental students starting at 8 p.m., Tuesday, January 4 in the theater. Those students receiving their caps are completing their third semester in the dental assisting program.

Louis F. Batmale, coordinator of technical terminal instruction, will extend the welcome. Members of the San Francisco Dental Assistant's Society will assist in the capping ceremony and present a scholarship to the outstanding student.

Those to be capped are Annette Balestrieri, Ella May Bernhard, Melba Borden, Lucille Cadenasso, Muffic Cerruti, Sharon Chan, Glenna Chase, Deanna Chee, Vania D'Andrea, Loretta Dubins, Mariann Ferretti, Kathleen Fung.

Gerry Gibson, Sarah Hardy, Elaine Lee, Sally Micrbach, Joan Olivera, Elaine Pianezzi, Janice Prior, Kathleen Soda, Katherine Wayne, Pamela Wingate and Mable Wong.

The following fourth semester dental students will act as sponsors:

Charlotte Agrusa, Sharon Aizenberg, Rae DeMeester, Roberta Lucibello, Susan MacDonald, Jorli Polison and Joyce Sato.

Virginia Mieger, former 12th District Trustee of The American Dental Assistant's Association, will deliver the keynote address, and Leona Disney, a former student here, will cap the 23 coeds.

In addition to Ruth Inskipp, certified dental assistant and director of the dental assisting program, Catherine Geissler, Dr. of Dental Surgery, who is a new instructor in dental assisting, will take part in the program.

Council In Uproar Over 'Lag' In Pre-Election Publicity

By Rich Heintz

Student Council turned down a motion, 1-10-0, which would have made the dates for payment of candidate fees and the filing of election petitions for the upcoming Associated Student election coincide.

Gary Hoffman, a council member, felt that the dates should coincide because of the "lack of publicity which the deadline for election fees has been given."

"It is common knowledge when the date for the filing of petitions is, since it has been posted all over. This (the poor publicity) may not be fair to those who are running independently and who do not know these things," he said.

Biff Barnes, finance chairman, said that "like most rules this does have a purpose. The dates are set one week apart to guarantee that the candidates, when they do get their petitions, will go out and get them signed right away. Otherwise it's a big problem having everyone running around at the last minute, getting their money."

Sandy Sager, Election Commissioner, also argued, "The dates were clearly printed in the election rules which are available right here in Bungalow 5, Dean Ralph Hilsman's office, Dean Mary Golding's office and at the bank.

"If these people cannot at least read, then they shouldn't be allowed to run for an office," Miss Sager added.

The date for the filing of candidate fees was November 30, with the deadline for petitions this Friday.

Other business at council last week included the allocation of $750 to the soccer team so that Ram booters could defend their state soccer championship against Victor Valley College in Ontario, California.

Council passed the allocation, 12-0-1.

Student Council passed a resolution declaring the following nine organizations inactive: Baptist Student Union, Chess Club, Hawaiian Club, Lutheran Club, Veterans Association, Student California Teachers Association, Real Estate, Forum and Retail Floristry.

Dave Minkin, Council of Organizations chairman, said that he requested council's approval for the action to make these clubs inactive since "the clubs have not submitted any petitions to COO."

He also explained that "this resolution simply means that the clubs cannot sponsor any social activities on campus this semester."

Barnes announced that "there is an added $500 for supplementary appropriations acquired from the vending machines since there are more students attending the college this semester."

A resolution was passed, 11-1-1, to allow COO to give the ten per cent profit made from ticket sales for the Prune Bowl game to the Leukemia Fund at Stanford.

Two weeks ago council approved a resolution to recommend to the Board of Education that Student Council, rather than the board, should have the authority to decide who should be granted the right to collect funds on campus for charity. It was passed, 11-0-2.

Student Delegates Declare CJCSGA Conference Productive

By Karen Carlson

Seven students represented the college at the 40th conference of the Junior College Student Government Association, held November 18-20 in Sacramento.

Chief delegate to the conference was Associated Student President Dennis Sweeney. Other delegates were AS Vice President Barbara Kontis, Finance Chairman Biff Barnes, Associated Woman Student President Mary Maurer, and Tom Cloney, council member.

Jim Soletti, council member, served as chairman of a workshop on the role of campus organizations in student government, where he received a rating of "excellent" from workshop delegates.

Kathy Kidd participated as State Information Chairman, one of 17 officers from the entire state of California.

Sweeney labelled the conference "a lot of hard work," citing the passage of 15 resolutions to be presented to administrators who comprise the California Junior College Association, parent organization of the CJCSGA.

Among resolutions passed were some pertaining to such diverse subjects as non-mandatory student fees, "cold war" G.I. bills, and "the separation of two-year colleges from secondary school limitations and definitions."

A resolution was passed unanimously dedicating the conference to the memory of the late Ambassador to the United Nations, Adlai E. Stevenson.

Sweeney was enthusiastic about the "effective and emotional delivery" of

Yule Concert At C-Hour Tomorrow

Ninety students, including soloists, choir and the brass section, will participate in a 50-minute Christmas concert in the theater during College Hour tomorrow.

William Grothkopp, program director, announced that he and Richard Fenner will conduct a symphony of Christmas carols, with the artists comprised totally of students from the college music department.

The Chamber Choir will make its first appearance of the semester and will perform Britten's Ceremony Of Carols featuring soloist Walter Hight.

The audience will hear selections from Bach's Magnificat and New Living Things, which was composed by Roger Nixon, a professor of music at San Francisco State College.

Grothkopp said that an evening performance will be held on Friday, December 10, starting at 8:15 p.m. This performance will be similar to the College Hour concert.

Nasty, Nasty! Campus Student Party Sneaks Flyers Into 'G'

TWO WEEKS AGO a political party on campus resorted to a tricky misuse of The Guardsman. This party decided that in order to publicize a proposed nomination and campaign meeting, it would use the facilities of The Guardsman. For one thing, this meeting was not even taking place on campus.

Several individuals representing the party very casually inserted flyers publicizing their "get together" within the pages of the newspaper.

The inserters quite frankly boasted that proper approval had been obtained from student government officials. We can only believe that these few either convinced themselves that they were doing nothing out of the ordinary or simply that as long as they could get away with it, why not?

Closer examination by Guardsman staff members disclosed that no approval had been obtained.

With the presence of the leaflet publicizing this political party, The Guardsman was placed in a position where it appeared to favor and/or back said party.

CONSISTENTLY, IT HAS BEEN A FIRM POLICY OF THE GUARDSMAN TO MAINTAIN COMPLETE IMPARTIALITY IN ASSOCIATED STUDENT ELECTION COVERAGE.

Leaders of the organization responsible should realize that they certainly went beyond proper channels for publicizing their meeting.

The leaflets themselves were perfectly legitimate in their content of information and were approved for distribution — but not within the pages of The Guardsman.

It seems quite obvious that these said persons knew what they were doing from the very beginning, and The Guardsman hopes they recognize their mistake. This type of campaigning can only damage the overall image of the party.

News To Nobody

Santa — 'We Will Bury You!'

By Peter Dorn

THAT distant rumble is the sound from the Christmas Machine. Within a few days its calm staccoto will explode into a million Santa Claues, three for every city block, and thousands of apple-cheeked urchins, some singing, some shouting the old Yuletide slogans.

Nobody knows exactly when the Christmas machine is started up; some people say that it is never shut off.

Anyway, it begins to idle rapidly around the first of December, when television commercials abruptly switch from pushing soap, aspirin and diet colas and begin to feature kiddie toys, loan companies and holiday diet colas.

The toys, for the most part, are frightening arsenals composed of tanks that really shoot shells and throw flames, robots that could be commanded to strangle unruly parents (but the batteries are never included, probably a retailer's safety precaution), do-it-your-self kits complete with hydrocloric acid and a variety of automatic rifles, small artillery pieces and schizophrenic dolls.

The machine gets into first gear and Santa is plastered on every billboard in the land.

Banks remind people to start saving for next year's Christmas, weeks before this year's comes about.

1966 automobiles are old hat by now and everybody is waiting, breathlessly, for the all-new 1967 models. Christmas cards outnumber Federal Reserve Notes; post offices are swamped with part-time helpers falling all over each other. Then comes second gear.

The people are becoming asphyxiated by the exhaust smoke as the Big Machine really begins to wind up. The first signs of asphyxiation are seen on the people who, after 11 months, are beginning to smile at each other.

Third and fourth gears are changed with such lightning speed that no one really notices any change in the pitch of the frenzy, and as The Machine declerates and after the noice drops to a mild roar it's happy time already, January 1.

The path of The Machine is littered with broken robots, inoperative automatic rifles, overdrawn checking accounts, laid-off store clerks, barren turkey farms and a national surplus of one and one-half volt batteries.

"Well, that's another one out of the way" is the greeting of the following week, and so the Blitzkrieg Machine is forgotten. It is put away in its garage somewhere around North Pole, Alaska.

But while the people are cold-creaming all those wrinkles around their mouths that were brought on by all that Yuletide smiling, Madison Avenue hotrodders are souping up The Machine with hotter cams, bigger pistons and more carburetors for an even faster 1967 model, which will probably be on the market around August, 1966.

Time Changes Requirements

By Connie Skipitares

Many about-to-graduate students, pre-occupied with their plans for transfer to a four-year college, are finding themselves tripped by the high entrance requirements of many colleges.

Few, however, actually realize how lucky they are, for if they had been born in the last century and had planned to attend South Hadley Seminary, which later became Mt. Holyoke College, they would have had to meet the following minimum requirements.

"Admission. No young lady shall become a member of this school who cannot kindle a fire, wash potatoes and repeat the multiplication table.

"Outfit. No cosmetics, perfumeries or fancy soap will be allowed on the premises.

"Exercise. Every member of this school shall walk at least a mile every day, unless a freshet, earthquake or some other calamity prevents it.

"Company. No member of this school is expected to have any male acquaintances unless they are retired missionaries or agents of some benevolent society.

"Time at Mirror. No member of this institution shall tarry before the mirror more than three consecutive minutes.

"Reading. No member of this school shall devote more than one hour each week to miscellaneous reading. The Atlantic Monthly, Shakespeare, Scott's novels, Robinson Crusoe, and immoral works are strictly forbidden. The Boston Recorder, Missionary Herald, and Washington's Farewell Address are recommended for light reading."

Six Feet High 'N Rising

AFTER THE RAINS FELL, the drain in the reservoir parking lot was stopped up and impeded the smooth exhaust of the water; so city maintainance engineers were called in to remedy the ailment.

The engineer, having discovered the obstruction in the drain pipe, is checking to see whether the radio antenna of the Volkswagen will stand the strain that is necessary in order to extract the vehicle.

A question has arisen as to the scope of that law of the sea that gives the salvager all rights to abandoned vessels.

• Editorial Comment?

Editor, The Gardsman:

In the past few issues of the Gardsman, many editorial columns were devoted to supporting the U.S. commitment in Vietnam and denouncing those that protest. The grounds for protest, however, are never really made clear by the paper, and the editorial columns seem to be content with making the protestors seem grossly ignorant.

Some of the greatest minds in the world oppose the U.S. stand in Vietnam, so I don't think the Gardsman editorials represent the only intelligent side of the issue. I have always felt that it is the duty of the newspaper to present the facts to the people so that they may decide for themselves what is right or wrong.

It would only cost the Gardsman a 5c stamp to ask the Vietnam Day Committee to prepare a terse statement outlining the major reasons for it's protesting U.S. action in Vietnam. This statement could then be printed verbatim (and naming its source) in the Gardsman to prevent selective editing.

I'm sure the statement will take less room than one of your bias editorials and will be worth more than a dozen of them. Berkeley information (411) can give you the telephone number of the VDC and I'm sure they can make arrangements with you. If the Gardsman does not take advantage of this, one can only assume that the Vietnam Day Committee's stand is a justified one and is only kept from the papers to prevent loss of face by the staff of the Gardsman.

Franz Ross

(Editor's note: At no time has The Guardsman taken an editorial stand on Vietnam. Columns appearing express the opinions of the writers themselves, not necessarily those of this newspaper. The Guardsman is using all its extra stamps to send Christmas cards to soldiers in Vietnam, and one can assume anything one wishes.)

• Clash Of Viet Opinion

Editor, The Guardsman:

I have, in the past month, often been disturbed by the column Meanderings by Mike Smith, which appears each week in The Guardsman. While never challenging his statements directly, I have tried, through my letters to the paper, to somewhat balance his views with my own.

However, his column of November 23, 1965, has left me very uneasy. This uneasiness comes because there are over 10,000 students at the college this semester, many of whom read The Guardsman and use it to help shape their own opinion on the war in Vietnam.

When any writing is done on Vietnam it must be accurate in interpreting the facts that are available. It must

Freeloaders Undermine Elevator Key Market

By Rich Heintz

The American economy and City College of San Francisco have one thing in common. They're both experiencing inflation.

An inflationary period in the American economy occurs when there is too much currency in circulation and the purchasing power of the dollar is reduced.

The inflationary period at the college has affected not the purchasing power of the Associated Student cards, but rather the "purchasing power" of elevator keys.

This semester the faculty has had some trouble with students, lacking elevator keys, who take undue advantage of a good thing.

They hop into the elevator in Science Hall whenever the opportunity avails itself and the doors are open long enough to do so.

This has caused the "purchasing power" of keys, approximately three flights of stairs, to depreciate, since there is no guarantee that one can always fit into the elevator with all the freeloaders, key or no key.

In most inflations, some areas are harder hit than others, much like the poverty areas in the United States today.

This is also true at the college since Science Hall's elevator is the hardest hit elevator on campus because of the opportune location it has and the greater temptation it offers, since there are a greater amount of stairs to climb in Science Hall.

Many of the faculty who teach in Science Hall would probably testify that the elevator is a poverty area, since they believe that the situation is pretty poor.

There are many persons who claim that the United States should return to the gold standard, where every dollar is fully backed by gold, thus cutting down currency and slowing inflation.

Proponents of that plan might look toward City College for an example, since the college is on a "nickle-silver" standard, of which most of the keys are made.

But the faculty is confident that the situation will improve; it is even looking up right now—at three flights of stairs.

Play Cowboy On Christmas —Not Guerilla

By B.T.

THAT OLD Christmas feeling is with us again.

The Yuletide spirit is not dampened, despite notoriety and exposes here on very expensive fire hydrants, stolen gasoline, big tax fixes, and naughty boys on Market street, who are no better than those naughty girls on Fillmore street.

"Who cares? It's Christmas time!" Holiday shoppers are creating their annual traffic problems in a frenzied search for just the right gift.

THREE DAYS TO GO

Most students are waiting for the three "remaining" days to pass, so that they can free themselves from the imperative punctuality that is demanded of college students.

Then, they too can join the holiday melee and search for just the right gift, or join their ski buddies in the Sierra. Or spend time in the library searching and finding only skimpy material for a much-needed term paper.

BLOOD TO VIETNAM GI's

Some conscientious students may give an extra pint of blood for our fighting men in Vietnam, while others may sell a pint to finance their Christmas dinner or buy disposable picket signs.

Still others may join a new movement which hopes to ban warlike toys from the Christmas counters. Not a bad idea. Children know how to make trouble. Ask any mother.

Remember, this is Christmastime. Let's have some peace at home too. Kids know how to fight. What they will need are bandaids and scotch tape. They would be delighted with these gifts.

CHILDREN AND TAPE

Children are born menders. Give them band aids and scotch tape, and they'll leave their parents' supply alone. They'll have everything from chairs to pets taped up.

They don't need commando sets, complete invasion equipment (800 pieces) with shooting machine guns, howitzers, tanks, helmets, burp guns, bazookas, carbines, grenades and pistols.

They don't need exploding machine gun nests, complete with the enemy soldiers and the awful details of blood and guts and war.

Let us give the kids back the wild west, Raggedy Ann, and Frankenstein. How about road-race sets, slot cars, electric guitars, new do-it-all dolls, electric cooking utensils, woodcraft sets, paints, erector sets and skates?

MAKE-BELIEVE'S WIDE RANGE

There are Barbie dolls with eight-hundred dollar wardrobes, make-believe make-up for pre-adolescents, handcuffs for busy little hands, and boxing gloves for the aggressive boy scouts.

These may momentarily prevent Junior from using that judo-chop on his friend, but then he'll always have a band-aid or two handy.

Let's ban warlike toys.

Meanderings

By Mike Smith

A FEW WEEKS from now we are supposed to celebrate that joyous season of Christmas and wish for Peace on Earth and Good Will toward All Men.

There was a little article in the San Francisco Examiner last week mentioning the fact that "more than 97,000 West Berliners have applied for passes to visit relatives in East Berlin during Christmas and the New Year holidays."

It is unfortunate that the German people have to be distinguished as West Berliners and East Berliners because the Soviet Union has failed in selling its ideology to Germany, and decided to build that ominous wall.

All is not peaceful and all is not good, nor will it be. Another Christmas is going to roll by with the world in another mess. Today we are plagued by the India-Pakistan and Indonesia conflicts; the Russia-China and France-NATO disputes; and the Rhodesian, Caribbean and South American problems.

Tragic as it is, our armed forced will be spending Christmas on the war front in Southeast Asia while the great majority of us here in America will be within the comforts of our home.

It is a time like Christmas more than ever that makes us realize how important our mission is in Vietnam.

Our problem isn't just on the foreign scene, but on the homefront as well. This Yuletide season as in the past there will be thousands of people and families who will not be able to buy a Christmas tree, much less gifts.

However, those who can afford to buy trees do it because it is the thing to do. The green-fir tree used to be a tradition, but then the red, blue, yellow trees were put on the market; and these were followed by colored plastic ones.

Ironically even the plastic trees are becoming obsolete in many homes because too many people are putting up modern trees that are usually of some weird, way-out design. It's supposed to be the modern look.

Nevertheless the tree is the lesser part of modern America's Christmas. The presents and gifts are now the important thing, and the stores meet this demand by getting ready for the joyous season before Thanksgiving, a day we gorge ourselves and rush to the Christmas holidays because it is a longer time off from college.

Somewhere the real meaning of it all has been lost.

Swiss Ski Party Motif For Awards

Snowflakes may be falling on Donner Pass, but the real ski action will be at the Swiss Ski Holiday Party in Statler wing on Thursday, January 13.

The annual Women's Recognition and Awards Night will be the occasion for festivity. The date was originally January 7.

The Associated Women Students, Inter-Sorority Council and Recreation Association will sponsor the event, according to Mary Maurer, AWS president. All women students are invited to attend.

Naturally, after a hard day on the slopes, appropriate attire will be after-ski clothes. Tentative program plans include a ski film and yodelers.

Various committees are planning the party. Committee chairmen include Linda Blalock, publicity; Marty Romero, programs; Sheridan Parker, food and serving, and Emma Salisbury, decorations.

Completing the chairmen are Pam Maul and Recreation Association, entertainment; Christine Williams, setup; Sandy Gallagher and Lula Tubbs, invitations; and Joan Arndt, Judy Barling and the Inter-Sorority Council are organizing the clean-up department.

Filipino-Americans To Give Christmas Dance

The Filipino-American Club will sponsor a Christmas dance on Friday starting at 8 p.m. in Statler wing. Entertainment will include music by The Infatuations and The Grand Dads, and a dance demonstration during intermission.

According to Joseph Thorn, sponsor for the club, benefits from the dance will help finance two scholarships for club members.

General admission will be $1 stag, $1.50 with date and 50 cents for club members, Thorn said.

'Deserving Student'

Melvin Pierre Named First Eckert Scholership Winner

The William J. Eckert art scholarship was awarded last week to Melvin Pierre, who is "a very deserving student," according to William Davis, head of the advertising art and design department here.

Davis said that Pierre was awarded this scholarship based upon his first and second semester as a departmental major, and for his work "which demonstrates excellence in draftsmanship, composition and emotional content." Davis believes that Pierre has promise of becoming an outstanding professional artist.

The scholarship, awarded for the first time, gave Pierre $200 with which to help him continue his education.

Pierre is a graduate of Balboa High School and his objective at the college is editorial illustration and design.

In other activities, the advertising art department will hold a car wash approximately two weeks after Christmas vacation. Proceeds from the event will go toward the scholarship fund for the art department. A profit of $100 was accumulated from a car wash held on November 28.

In January, the art department will put on small art displays and affairs from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the courtyard. An art festival is being scheduled for May, prior to summer vacation.

Many job opportunities are offered to the students in the advertising art department. John O'Brien, an art instructor, stated, "Sometimes there are more job opportunities than students."

Students Ordered To Stay Off Campus Until Dec. 27

Christmas vacation this year will extend from Monday, December 13, to Monday, December 27, followed by a holiday on December 31, according to the registrar's office.

The unorthodox scheduling of the Christmas vacation is done annually for the benefit of students seeking employment over the holiday period.

The office further disclosed that Wednesday, January 5, is the last day a student may file for a leave of absence. A student must be cleared by his counselor, his instructors and the library, and have his application for leave in by January 5.

Students are expected to present a satisfactory grade point average in order to qualify for the leave.

not manufacture facts that are not there and it must meet the highest standards of journalism.

In dealing with opinion opposed to our policy, the writer must be able to distinguish between constructive criticism and protest for protest's sake. That a writer should express his opinion with the facts is, I think, the essence of lively newspaper reporting. But when only One opinion is expressed constantly, it is time for worry and concern.

Since Democracy survives only by the exchange of different views, I would like to comment on one point Mike Smith made in his November 24 column.

I would like to give Mr. Smith a thought to ponder over: Vietnam is no longer; as it once was, a country free to determine its own destiny; free to choose between our system and that of the Communists. It is part of the overall East-West conflict. No longer are we fighting for the Vietnamese people, but against the "red Chinese Menace."

We cling to Vietnam to show the world that we will not be beaten by Communism. But Communism is an idea, and ideas cannot be bombed or napalmed out of existence.

Hitler murdered eight million Jews, but the idea of Judaism lived. We can destroy every man, woman and child in Vietnam and we will not destroy Communism. If you believe, as I do, that our system of government is better than that of the Communists, then understand that our only victory can come through negotiations.

It takes courage to admit a mistake, more courage than it takes to fight. Let us show our courage to the world by reversing our policy toward peace.

Foultz Scholarship Fund Established

A spokesman for the college's scholarship committee last week disclosed details confirming the establishment of the Frederick Ward Foultz Scholarship Fund, in memory of the English instructor here who died November 19.

The appropriateness of this scholarship, the spokesman said, lies in the fact that the one activity in which Mr. Foultz was most interested during his last years was his work on the scholarship committee.

"It should be noted that presentation of the one- or two-semester scholarship will be based exclusively on academic ability instead of financial need," according to Donald Snepp, chairman of the English department.

The Contributions Commission estimates termination of contributions to the scholarship fund shortly after the Christmas vacation, at which time details of the scholarship will be determined.

Mr. Foultz, a native of Glendale, California, is a graduate of Stanford University, where he was president of the English Club. He received his Master of Arts degree from the University of California.

During World War II he served with the Air Force in the Pacific, and following the war joined the City College faculty in 1946.

Two Win Acquittal In First 'Trespass' Trial

Three San Francisco State College students and an unemployed writer charged with trespassing, failure to disperse and violation of the education code had their day in court November 30.

The quartet, Thomas Friel, Allen Kutchinsky, Eugene Peters and Hugh Namias, were arrested last May on the City College campus by James Wyatt, student government adviser here. Wyatt made a citizen's arrest after the four refused to disperse during an unauthorized rally.

After the jury of six men and six women deliberated for eight hours, it handed down an aquittal for Friel and Kutchinsky, but failed to reach a verdict concerning Peters and Namias. Peters was found not guilty of the trespassing charge.

Namias was not present at the trial due to illness and was tried in absentia. A new trial date was considered on December 3 for Peters and Namias.

Testifing for the prosecution were a number of the college faculty, including President Louis G. Conlan, Robert Utter, English and philosophy instructor, Wyatt and three students at the college.

The defendants presented some nine persons to testify in their defense. The defense attorney, Efrem Margolin, volunteered to defend the four on trial.

Ron Cuddy, erroneously reported by The Guardsman last week as being involved in this trial, instead goes on trial December 13. He was arrested here last May 17 and charged with trespassing and failure to disperse.

COO Backs Santa Contest To Collect Money For Needy

The Christmas spirit is being promoted around campus this week with an accent on donations to the needy as money and food are being collected by the Council Of Organizations for its annual Christmas Fund Drive, according to Dave Minken, chairman of the COO.

Each organization is sponsoring a candidate as part of the Santa Claus contest. Students collecting pennies as votes for their Santa Claus candidate are prevalent on campus, as each contestant is trying to collect votes by filling his six jars.

The winning Santa Claus contestant will be announced in College Hour tomorrow. He will escort campus choral groups and reign as Santa Claus in a procession through the halls of the campus from noon to 2 p.m. on Friday.

As the other part of the drive, certain receptacles around campus are labeled for donations of canned food. The money and food collected by the COO will be distributed to needy families at Christmas time.

The Christmas card posters adorning the walls of Statler wing are another part of the Christmas activities of the COO. Each organization is encouraged to make and donate one poster, Minkin said.

Advisers Move To Arts Hall For Spring Term

Counselor Walter E. McCloud announced today that all registration advisers are being moved to Arts Hall during registration next semester.

This change will be made so that it will be possible to use closed-circuit TV. All open and closed classes will be announced, which should minimize confusion of registration, McCloud added.

The following is a list of registration times, according to registration numbers:

All returning students will register on February 7, 1966, beginning at 8 a.m. with numbers 1 to 399; 8:30, 400-899; 9, 900-1399; 9:30, 1400-1699; 10, 1700-1999; 10:30, 2000-2599, and 11, 2600-2899.

In the afternoon at 1 p.m.: 2900 to 3199; 1:30, 3200-3399; 2, 3400-3699; 2:30, 3700-3899, and 3, 3900-4099.

On February 8, 1966, registration will begin at 8 a.m. with numbers 4100 to 4299; 8:30, 4300-4499; 9, 4500-4599; 9:30, 4600-4699; 10, 4700-4799; 10:30, 4800-4999, and 11, 5000-5099.

Gobble! H&R Turkey Gone

Turkey Day at Smith Hall found the students gobbling.

Executive chef Pierre Coste and his team of Hotel and Restaurant students prepared 24 turkeys for the special Thanksgiving menu, only to run out of turkey at 1 p.m.

This year, the turkeys were attacked by more than 900 students and only the bare bones remained.

Pleased at this compliment to the H&R staff, the executive chef said, "We're going to order 150 pounds of extra turkey next year, which should mean that we won't run out."

Preparations for Turkey Day were begun three days before the big event this year. Pies were prepared the day before.

Even with this efficient organization, H&R workers found it necessary to begin working on the dinner at the crack of dawn on T-Day. With the additional pounds of turkey next year, the college may find its H&R students picketing for a decrease in appetites around the college.

Film Series Has Day Of Wrath

Day Of Wrath, master film piece of motion picture producer Carl Dreyer, is tomorrow night's film series contribution, Walter C. Krumm of the drama department announced today.

It will be shown at 8 p.m. in the college theater.

According to Al Hughes, motion picture historian and student here, the story is one of witchcraft in 17th century Denmark.

The parties concerned are a middle-aged Danish priest who has recently married a girl much his junior. The couple live with the priest's mother and his son.

The girl and the son decide they're in love and the mother, provoked by such scandal, accuses the girl of being a witch.

Next semester's conference will be held in San Diego, March 31 and April 1-2, 1966, Sweeney explained. San Francisco will be the site for the convention in one year, December 1-3, 1966.

Ram Rally Halts Long Beach, 40-20

By John Lee

Despite all of the Rams' hard running backs and sticky-fingered ends, it was the constant hammering of the powerful Ram interior linemen that brought Long Beach City College to their knees in the second half of the third annual Prune Bowl last Saturday.

Although the Long Beach Vikings were favorites in the game and were rated as the number seven junior college in the nation, they suffered the humiliation of a 40-20 defeat at the hands of the 11th rated Ram football team.

QB Bob Lee put San Francisco on the board the first time they had the ball with a 21 yard aerial to Ron Fassler to lead the favored Vikings 6-0 with 4:22 left in the first quarter.

Then after two quick Viking touchdowns John Morrello recovered a Greg Barton fumble for the Rams on the Long Beach 10 yard line and O. J. Simpson took the ball over on the first play from scrimmage to tighten the score to 14-12 in favor of the Vikings.

But the Vikings weren't to be discouraged easily as they scored in the next nine plays to make the score 20-12 with 22 seconds left in the half.

The statistics for the game don't give a clear picture of the action or the hard hitting in both teams lines because they show a close game with each team just a little different than the other statistically, which was not really the case.

From the opening kickoff to the gun ending the second quarter the game was all in favor of Long Beach with QB Greg Barton completing 17 of 27 passes for 249 yards and three touchdowns to lead at the half.

When the gun sounded ending the first half of play the Rams were forced to retire to their dressing room while down by eight points and without the services of Ron Fassler, who had been badly injured.

But something happened in the Rams dressing room during the intermission because the team that came out wasn't the same team that went in. The new team took over the ball, tied the score and then proceeded to beat the Vikings at their own game, ball control.

The poor dumbfounded Vikings never knew what had hit them as they held the ball for only 23 plays in the second half with a net gain of 27 yards and one first down.

When Long Beach finally opened their eyes again they had been cut down by a 20-point fourth quarter scoring spree by San Francisco to even the score to 40-20, and then the game was over.

Lee actually put the game out of the Vikings' reach by following an O. J. Simpson touchdown run with a fourth down touchdown pass to Reeves Moses to lead the Vikings by 12 points.

Then Eural Smothers put the icing on the cake with an interception which he ran back for a touchdown with just 1:24 left in the game.

On the field after the game O. J. Simpson was awarded a trophy as the most valuable player in the Prune Bowl and Tackle Mike Taylor was awarded the trophy for best lineman while Coach Dutch Elston was awarded the trophy for the Prune Bowl.

Although many people will talk about the tremendous effort on the part of one or two individuals during the game, the "stars" didn't do well.

O. J. Simpson, whose name always seems to come up whenever "star" is mentioned, had a bad day, as bad days go for him, carrying 20 times for 91 yards and three touchdowns.

Or then again there's Ron Fassler, who succeeded in getting one touchdown before he was injured early in the second quarter, or Eural Smothers at one point in the season intercepted three passes in one game, managed to intercept one Barton aerial for a touchdown.

All of the above truly did have bad days, sort of, but because of the fine efforts on the part of the usually forgotten linemen who open up the holes and block for them, their bad days weren't bad after all.

No matter what all of the post game wrap-ups say in the newspapers, the Rams won the Prune Bowl by fighting hard and working as a team in both the offensive and the defensive units.

Booters Win Third State Title, Defeat Victor Valley, 14-0

By Arturo Rodriguez

Displaying the latent offensive power they have been praised for in the past, City College of San Francisco captured their third consecutive California State Soccer Championship with a thunderous 14-0 trouncing of Victor Valley College December 3 at Victorville.

This was the third straight year the Ram booters have humbled the Southern California representative in the Championship Classic. Previously they held 4-0 and 8-0 victories.

In what seemed to be an answer to recent Guardsman stories about the lack of desire on this year's team, the Rams turned in the best team effort of the entire season.

Once again it was Junior College All-American Alex Mendieta who sparked the Red and White offense with his splendid play that netted him a game total of 6 goals.

"Although our opponent was not real strong, I am sure that the way the team played out there, they could have beaten almost anyone," Ram Coach Roy Diederichsen declared. "Every team member gave me 200% effort," he added.

The game began on a slow tempo, as both teams took their time in feeling each other out. After the first 15 minutes of play had gone by here was no score.

"Suddenly we broke through and scored the first goal. And when we returned to score a second time not more than a minute later, their spirits were broken, although they never gave up. They fought until the last minute of play," Diederichsen related. At half time the score stood 8-0.

"The return of Robert Rojas to the line-up seemed to give the team a real life, but I want to emphasize that this was a team effort. Everyone who made the trip with the team played an equal amount of time," Diederichsen said.

Sharing the Ram scoring honors with Mendieta were Rojas, 2; Thomas Samuelson, 2; Pietro Rossi, Constantin Shishkin, Ron VanValkhuysen, and Nelson Artiga, each with one tally.

"Much of our success in the game might be accounted for in the superb play of Rudy Espinoza at goalie. He was the subject of many complimentary comments from Victor Valley players. They felt he was the best goalie they had faced all year," Diederichsen revealed.

As far as next year is concerned, the Rams will once again make a strong bid to gain the State title.

RA Members Take Top Honors In Sportsday

Top places in the bowling and volleyball competition were taken by members of the Recreation Association at a Sportsday at College of Marin November 20.

The volleyball team and the bowling team each won games. Sharon Harris bowled the high women's game, and Dave Long had the high score in the men's division.

Badminton, archery and tennis were also to be offered, but weather prevented the competition. No awards were presented at this Sportsday.

Back, Player Of The Year

RAM HALFBACK RON FASSLER, an offensive-defensive standout was voted Golden Gate Conference Back-of-the-Year for 1965 by vote of the conference coaches. Fassler ran for 625 yards in 84 carries and 8 td's.

Nine Rams All-Conference; Simpson Player-Of-Year

City College of San Francisco placed nine players on the 1965 All-Conference football team and copped all three honors in outstanding individual performance categories to obliterate any doubts concerning Ram supremacy in the Golden Gate Conference.

Halfbacks Ron Fassler and O. J. Simpson were voted into a total of four slots.

Simpson was given highest honors as Player-Of-The-Year.

Fassler won laurels for Back-Of-The-Year. Fassler was also picked for offensive and defensive first team.

Dave Malae (6-4, 190), veteran left guard was voted into three spots. Malae took honors for Lineman-Of-The-Year as well as being chosen for both offensive and defensive first squads.

A noteworthy outcome of the Ram-dominated selections is the fact that San Francisco's entire offensive interior line was voted All-Conference.

The impact packed by the line was made evident every time San Francisco employed an end sweep . . . the Rams' bread and butter play.

In what is highly reminiscent of a flying wedge, luge and also swift guards Malae and Rich Colombo would cut a wide path for the runner.

Tackles Joe Ross (6-0, 260) and Mike Taylor (6-5, 258) and center Mike Dunn round out the offensive interior line.

Colombo (5-11, 220), who made All-Conference second squad, is the only Ram interior lineman not placed on the first team.

On defense Chris Davis, who along with Malae played havoc with every quarterback in the league, was put on the All-Conference first team as a linebacker.

The Rams' chief pass thief, Eural Smothers, was voted into the second squad as a defensive halfback. In a game against Merritt College, Smothers intercepted two passes and ran both back for touchdowns.

Still another award was bestowed on Simpson last night when he was an honored guest at the College of San Mateo. Simpson received the first annual Murius McFadden award.

NSA Leads Way In Mural Hoop Loop Competition

Intramural hoop loop action received the brunt of midterm test activity during the last two weeks.

The undefeated Negro Students Association chalked up two decisive victories.

They arrested Lawson's 10 127-44. NSA also passed Block SF in a 92-46 whitewash.

In Fraternity Independent league play, the Irish ran away with two matches. The first victory came over the Chiefs with Tom Courtney racking 34 points to pave the way for a 115-45 victory. They also smashed Phi Beta Delta 73-30.

The Celtics beat the NBA Rejects, 51-44, and the Chiefs, 78-37.

The Rejects were handed their second loss in as many weeks by Alpha Phi Epsilon in a close 60-56 battle.

Phi Beta Delta squeaked by Alpha Kappa Rho, 27-25.

The Newman Club Vikings dished out two defeats, one to Lawson's 10, 41-22, the other to the Sophomores, 40-26.

The Guardsman squashed the Ram Skiers, 57-49.

In forfeited games, Beta Tau gave up one each to Alpha Kappa Rho and Alpha Phi Epsilon. Filipino-Americans split in two forfeitures, surrendering to the Sophomores and picking up a victory over The Guardsman. The Ram Ski Club also got an easy win over absentee Block SF.

Undefeated Grid Champions Rank Eleventh In Nation

By William G. Pates

City College of San Francisco's undefeated 1965 Golden Gate Conference champions ended their conference season with a 6-0-1 record and an 11th place national ranking by the J.C. Grid Wire of Pasadena.

By far the best football team here since the 1948 nationally fifth-ranked champions of All-Americans Ollie Matson and Burl Toler, coach Art Elston's club broke nearly 20 conference offensive records, a number of them by O. J. Simpson.

Ex-Ram Lewis Hits Stride As Young 49er 'Bull'

One of the greatest high school and college football players in San Francisco athletic history since Ollie Matson has recently earned a slot as fullback and kick-off return specialist for the San Francisco 49ers.

Gary Lewis gained considerable recognition at Polytechnic High School in 1959 where his tremendous power as a runner was recognized, and he was selected as high school All-American.

At City College in 1960, he was selected an outstanding back of what was then the Big Eight All-Conference. He led numerous statistics as quarterback for the Rams, completing almost 50 per cent of all passes attempted, scored 11 touchdowns and intercepted six passes for a total return of 63 yards.

He also averaged 9.3 yards per carry and gained 412 yards in 45 carries.

From City College he went to Arizona State and later played for the United Football League when the 49ers extended him an offer to join the team. Last season he started the first three games.

This year he began the season as the National Football League's leading ground gainer and has run the longest gain for the 49ers this season — 60 yards.

Swim Briefing Set For Dec. 27

The 1966 City College swim team will be starting to work out briefly during January to see what sort of material the team has.

Roy Burkhead, Ram coach, has set aside Monday, December 27 at 4 p.m. for a team meeting for all future swimmers in the men's gymnasium.

Any full time student who has a 1.5 grade point average or better, is eligible to go out for the team. Newcomers are welcome to join this year's squad, which Burkhead hopes may be a very promising team.

Like other sports, City College was blessed with a top crop of athletes this year.

Swimming is no exception. Approximately 70 per cent of the top swimmers with All-City honors last spring, entered City College this fall. An additional group is expected to enter the college this February.

Last year the college was forced to drop its swimming squad through lack of interest. At the beginning of the year there were only three members pledged to the team.

Although City College has no pool of its own, the team will use public pools such as Balboa and John Macl aren. Coach Burkhead has been campaigning for better facilities.

Good Response Predicted At Polls; Barnes, Soletti Head Office Seekers

Independent Candidate

USRP Candidate

USRP Sponsors Near Full Slate Of Candidates

With Merritt "Biff" Barnes the standard bearer for the United Students Representative Party and Jim Soletti an independent candidate for President, students on campus will cast ballots today and tomorrow.

A good turnout is expected in this climax to an Associated Student election campaign that has been marked by recent disappearance from the political scene of Reform On Campus, a nearly full USRP ticket and four candidates for council seats emerging as Independents.

According to the official ballot released by Election Commissioner Sandy Sager, USRP, the only party presently on campus since ROC's disbandment, is fielding 19 candidates for the 20 AS offices, Soletti competes as an Independent, and four students are seeking council seats as Independents.

Included on the USRP ticket, led by Barnes, current AS finance chairman, are Helen Bundros as AS Vice President; Percy Jones, Associated Men Student president; Brenda Jung, Associated Women Student president; Bruce Fisher, Sophomore Class president, and Ernie Woodcock, Freshman Class president.

Sophomore candidates for council as USRP nominees are Ron Appel, Steve Ahern, Tom Csekey, Janis Goldberg, Francine Loskay, Sheridan Parker and Judy Stewart.

Those running for freshman seats on council on the USRP ticket are Helen Ferentinos, Christopher Loo, Mike Nygren; Joe Parnell, Joan Shaw and Linette Wong.

Soletti is a member of the Student Council this semester.

Jerry Dresner, Fred Stewart and Louis Meunier, ROC convention nominees, and Manuel Difuntorum are running independently. Dresner and Difuntorum are seeking sophomore seats on council, while Stewart and Meunier are hopeful of gaining freshman seats on council.

James Wyatt, student activities adviser, anticipates a good turnout at the polls since polling places will be "better manned" and anyone attending the college can vote with only a student registration card required.

Wyatt said, "I would hope that it (voter response) would be as good as last year. Too bad we don't have a contest for all offices. However, those running unopposed reached their positions in competition at the party (USRP) convention."

APATHY HAS become a reality throughout our college. Party platforms have been presented as an answer every semester. Yet, apathy and other problems continue year after year. Clearly, something in addition to platform proposals is needed.

I'M RUNNING Independent (responsible to you, not to either political machine), to provide leadership that has been lacking for so long. My goal is to eradicate apathy. If elected, I pledge to keep you informed, to listen to all suggestions, to take action when necessary, to organize student council into a democratic body, and to bring SINCERITY and SERVICE back into student government.

IN MY THREE semesters in student government, I've gained the experience and insight to do a good job. I'm prepared to devote all my time creating an alert, alive and active campus.

IF YOU'RE ready to work and make this a college we're all proud of . . . elect me, so we may begin.

JIM SOLETTI

THE ESSENCE of a student government, if it is to be of any significance, must be a true representation of the students. This statement is so basic that many student leaders overlook it; however, it is the major problem facing most colleges, City College of San Francisco included.

INTEREST and participation are lacking, when a student government election is held and only 1800 of 8000 students vote, especially when this is considered a good turnout. One of the essential reasons for this lack, is that students do not believe that student government will or effectively can, represent them.

A SOLUTION to this problem must precede any program of legislation. In the United Student Representative Party platform, several communication reforms, designed to bring government closer to the students, are proposed.

I ALSO PROPOSE a survey of student opinions be undertaken, to assist student leaders in formulating the desired program of activities.

I BELIEVE that such a survey, combined with communications reform, will truly make student government—YOUR GOVERNMENT.

MERRITT "BIFF" BARNES

H&R Students To Operate St. Francis Hotel Tomorrow

Thirty-six Hotel and Restaurant students will take part in the 15th annual Operation St. Francis which will be held tomorrow at the world-famous St. Francis Hotel.

The operation which was started in 1951 allows each participating student to assume some professional position at the hotel for one day under the supervision of the real professionals.

Among the students slated to take over the management of the hotel are Gerald Asselbergs, managing director; Gerrit Borgman, resident manager; Thomas Greeran, senior assistant manager; Heinz Burger, food and beverage manager and Sueb Punyaratabandu and John Healy, assistant managers.

Those in charge of the hotel kitchen are Ray Miller, executive chef; Robert Evjenth, sous chef; Robb Blake, sous chef; Heinz Selig, sous chef, and Joseph Lupino and Bruce Bauer, pastry chefs.

Others participating in the operation of the restaurant facilities are James Hazlett, Grill Room; Richard Muley, Medallion Room; Joji Kanda, Terrace; Don Cameron, room service, and Gary Vanalstine and Edward Perea, banquet service.

Completing the hotel management are Patrick White, Norman Sanford, Russ Swanson, Gregory Earle, Richard Mullins, Jerry Tannhauser, Richard Hunter, Kent Frampton, David Willett, Frank Concerti, Emile Waldteufel, Fred Sturm, Roger Myles, Howard Blethen, Frank Segurson, David Reid and Michael Rosen.

ROC Withdraws From Election

By Art Rodriguez

The Reform On Campus political party withdrew its candidates before Christmas vacation from this semester's Associated Student elections.

Although there has been speculation as to the reasons for that action, according to Gary Hoffman, a ROC convention nominee for student council, Reform On Campus dropped out of the elections essentially because a year-long effort to prevent the introduction of new ideas worked.

"During the past year, ROC has suffered varying degrees of suppression at the hands of the Council Of Organizations, the political party in power (USRP) and various interest groups on campus," Hoffman said, adding,

"Clearly the business of student government is to run a student government. City College student government has no purpose, no original ideas to contribute, and does not represent the students will be handed out to the first 1000 voters.

The allocation passed, 6-3-0.

Red letters on a white background say "I Voted—Have You?" The buttons are one inch in diameter.

Originally, it was planned to request $80 for 2000 buttons, but it was decided that 1000 buttons would serve as a test.

Also at the meeting, council passed a resolution, 10-3-1, that all resolutions made to council should be in written form and that every member should receive a copy.

In more recent action, council tabled a motion to make the International Relations Club off campus, 12-1-1.

The issue was brought to council's attention when Dave Minkin, Council Of Organizations chairman, asked the council to approve COO's decision that IRC should be off campus.

Minkin stated that the reason for the action was "because of the lack of IRC's attendance at COO meetings.

"I hesitate to do this," Minkin explained, "since it is a long-time chartered organization on campus, but the members have not responded to any warnings."

The motion was tabled in order to invite a representative from the IRC to attend a council meeting.

Student Council also passed a resolution, 8-5-1, to form a delegation to attend the Board of Education's next meeting, to bring to the board's attention a letter previously sent the Commissioners.

The letter concerned a resolution adopted by council, stating its belief that the Associated Students of City College should have the right to determine what charitable organizations might receive campus support.

Constitution Revisions Not Ready For Ballot

Students will not vote today and tomorrow on revisions in the constitution of the Associated Students.

Student Council was delayed in completing action on the bulk of the article because of other business.

Council approval is necessary before the measure can go on the ballot.

As of December 28, Student Council had approved Article I, with some revisions, and was partially through Article II of the constitution. The Constitution has 18 articles.

Student Council, as of that time, had only one meeting pertaining to the consideration of the revisions, that meeting being scheduled December 8, where constitution revision was the "special order of the day."

Student Council meetings run from 12:15 to 1 p.m., but the full 45 minutes was not entirely devoted to this task, and 12:45 to 1 p.m. was set aside for regular Student Council "business of the day."

During the half-hour coverage actually devoted to study of the constitutional revision there was some confusion because of a shortage of copies of the new constitution available, Student Council members noted.

AS Elections Start Today At 6 Voting Booth Locations

Voting booths for the Associated Student elections today and tomorrow will be located in six areas.

Dennis Sweeney, AS President, listed the silver pole in Science Hall, the cafeteria, the south basement entrance to Science Hall and the Arts Building as election sites.

Also included as a site is a booth at the flagpole and there is a possibility of "booths in the men's and women's gymnasiums at sometime during the two days," added Sweeney.

"The booths will remain open from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. on election days. A registration card, not an AS card, must be shown at voting time," emphasized Sweeney.

The change in policy which allows a student without an AS card to vote dates back to 1957.

"The idea behind this move was to get more of the general student population out to vote on issues which would directly affect them," Sweeney stated.

Registration for the current semester was 10,797, of which 8577 were daytime enrollees, according to data in the office of Registrar Mary Jane Learnard.

"Speaking optimistically, we can expect 2500 students to turn out for the elections. Realistically speaking, the figure will probably be around 2000," Sweeney admitted.

Council Debates Removal Of Police From Smith Hall

By Rich Heintz

Removal of the Campus Police from continuous guard duty in the cafeteria areas of Smith Hall was proposed at a Student Council meeting last week by Councilman Lincoln Pain.

Pain said, "I have never heard of any other college having police in uniform in the cafeteria.

"The college student is the image of himself and he is supposed to learn independence. To have police on duty to teach them eating habits is very uncollegiate."

Biff Barnes, finance chairman, said, "It is not the purpose of the police to govern eating habits. It (the reason they're on duty) is because some students are uncollegiate in their attitude and they have to be governed.

"Other colleges point with envy at us," Barnes added.

Pain answered, "In a sense we are convicted before proven guilty."

Council failed to reach a decision on the issue because of lack of time.

Council, before the Christmas break, allocated $40 for the purchase of election buttons, which will be handed out

Sports Night Will Feature Al Collins

The semiannual Sports Night sponsored by the Associated Men Students will be held in the men's gymnasium starting at 7 p.m. next Wednesday, announced Stan Angel, AMS president today.

Al Collins, KSFO disc jockey, will em-cee the show and present the awards along with KCSF sports director, Bob Anthony.

The highlight of the evening's events will be the student-faculty basketball game between a team representing the college's student government and "the more energetic" members of the faculty. Also presented will be a ten-bout boxing exhibition.

The winners of the Club and Independent leagues will compete for the championship of the intramural basketball tournament.

Awards will be given to the winners of the intramural championship, the boxing match, and the student-faculty basketball game. Special awards will be given to the most valuable players in both intramural leagues and to the high point men of the leagues, Angel said.

Karen Carlson, Craig Menefee Win 'Seven Seas' Scholarships

By Judy Klink

Floating through the second semester may be a euphemistic way of expressing the rainy weather to most students but to Karen Carlson, Staff Editor of The Guardsman, and Craig Menefee it will be a fact this spring semester.

They have been awarded scholarships to the University of the Seven Seas, a part of Chapman College in Orange, California. Miss Carlson received a $1200 scholarship and Menefee $700.

A fascinating itinerary gets underway on February 10 from Los Angeles. Ports-of-call will include Tahiti, New Zealand, Australia, India, Ceylon, Tanzania, Egypt, Israel, Greece, Italy, Algeria, Morocco and Madeira. They will return to New York on June 17.

Class routines will be a direct contrast to the City College way of life. Classes are held aboard ship Monday through Saturday, except when the ship is in port.

For the two to five days in each port, there are mandatory field trips, optional field trips and free time. 400 students will be sailing on the M. S. Seven Seas, a West German ship, with 40 instructors and 275 crew members.

Students take 12 to 15 transferrable units. Courses are offered in all areas that can be related to the voyage. Miss Carlson hopes to take a language, comparative education, journalism, philosophy and possibly, marine biology. Cost for the semester ranges between $2640 and $3640 depending on class of accommodations.

Possibilities include a private audience with Pope Paul VI, meeting political dignitaries and student leaders in a variety of ports, contact with aborigines in Australia and rice farmers in India and a possible camel ride.

Miss Carlson says, "I don't know how I am going to make it through finals what with shots, passport, shopping and packing. And you have never seen so many forms in all your life!"

Criteria for selection of the student body are intelligence and overall enthusiasm for a liberal education. An unwritten requisite which is early determined is the ability to tolerate the sea and all the difficulties encountered in the rocking and rolling of a floating life.

Some Ask, Why Vote? The 'G' Asks, Well Why NOT Vote?

ONCE AGAIN it is election time on campus and as usual, The Guardsman comes up with editorial urging of students to vote. It would indeed be novel if such urging were not necessary, but unfortunately, it always is. This is not only true on campus, but in national elections as well.

Some ask, why vote? The Guardsman asks, well why not vote?

It seems a waste of space to go into the usual reasons of why to vote. The old and still legitimate reasons of support of democracy, civic duty and the privilege of choosing officials have been chewed over to a point of saturation.

And beyond all this, after all the long-thought-out words, the lashing remarks and the threatening phrases are printed, one wonders how much good, if any, the effort is worth.

Looking over past elections here at the college, such remarks indeed seem a waste of time. It is difficult to understand why most students here fail to vote. Surely no one can say it exerts too much energy output on hard-studying scholars. Voting is just about the most painless thing that can be done.

Modern voting machines have done away with the listing of candidate choice on the little piece of paper, folding it into several small sections and tossing it into the box with the slit on top.

All one need do is think a moment about whom he would like to see in office, walk into the voting "booth," push down the little tabs, which are very clearly marked, and exit with a great sense of accomplishment and contribution toward the betterment of democracy.

And yet, the majority of today's college students stride through campus life, carefree and oblivious of the voting procedure. Students are indeed an odd lot but still, not so odd. Anyone will avoid a laborious task if he can. But why avoid something as easy as voting?

And then there are the young people who go around protesting the voting age. They demand a lowering of the suffrage age from 21 to say, 18 years of age. When this is granted and practiced as it is in some Southern states, the same trend follows; a small percentage of the eligible voting populace turns out for elections.

This problem of not voting and the questions it presents are very difficult to answer. It looks as if the same problem will be with us always. All we can say is, today and tomorrow are THE days.

Let's see if we can all change the trend and enjoy the rights given to us by the Founding Fathers so long ago. Surely, these rights cannot be a hindrance.

Ground Hog Day '66—Be Gentle

By Peter Dorn

THE NEXT BIG occasion is Ground Hog Day.

American folklore says that the ground squirrel, not to be confused with all the other squirrels, comes out of that hole in the ground where he had hibernated all winter for his New Year's look at the world.

He is said to be looking for his shadow, and if he sees it, he takes it as an omen of foul weather and darts back into his hole, and he stays there until he exhausts his supply of soda and olives.

If the day is cloudy and he cannot, therefore, see his shadow, he believes that spring is coming and decides to stay above the ground.

Plans should be initiated to welcome the ground hog into 1966 as gently as possible, in the event that February 2 becomes a cloudy day. He hasn't been around all winter, and so he hasn't gotten the word yet.

If he comes up out of the ground and hears all this talk of new taxes, accelerated draft quotas, mandatory exhaust smog control devices, hormones, the new pills, cold water soaps and beer top bottle caps, he may retreat into his sanctuary and take his cough medicine straight, without any soda.

Throughout the first week of February, people should refrain from talking about the present state of affairs. Anyone in first floor apartments and anybody on the street should confine conversation to small-talk subjects, like the weather or Aunt Agatha.

There's really no point in debating over the war because the country is already there; it is already committed. Moreover, the ground hogs will only upset themselves while trying to reason out why a country as big as this one has been at war with a country as small as the other one and hasn't won yet.

Ground hogs are really pretty simple, they haven't the capacity to understand all the complexities involved here, the politics, the "saving of face," the Western Big Brother; it's no place for a hog, this modern life.

Is Leg-Gazing A Dying Sport?

A social revolution is occurring. It pervades the campus and, if allowed to prevail, may totally annihilate the fine art of leg gazing.

Long ago a lady's legs were hidden amidst an abundance of attire. If ankles peeked out, the lady was considered most daring. Then a new era came into being. With the lifting of rigid social controls on women, hem lengths also rose.

By the time women won the right to vote in 1920, visualization of the lower extremities was generally accepted. Over the years fashion laws fluctuated so that the lady's legs were observed in varying degrees.

Today, observation of this area of human anatomy is nearly impossible. Stockings, once sheer and flattering, are not what they used to be.

Coed legs here are not only invisible, they are encased in materials of such assorted types, colors and designs that all laws of conformity are defied.

Nonconformity is a commendable quality and warmth of the lower extremities a sheer necessity. However, when chartreuse, gold, purple and red diamonds, circles and zig-zags force the male eye to relinquish the small luxury of leg gazing, to what foul path may this eye turn?

The emancipated female must reexamine her goals and evaluate her motives. The price she pays to stay in vogue may be far greater than a lacy leg is worth.

John Handy Quintet

Group Leader Laments Adolescent Difficulty In Jazz Appreciation

By Greg Frazier

Students here were treated to 50 swinging minutes of great jazz when the John Handy Quintet held forth during a recent College Hour rally in the men's gymnasium.

The quintet, composed of saxophonist Handy, guitarist Jerry Hahn, violinist Michael White, bassist Don Thompson and drummer Terry Clark, was brought here under the sponsorship of the Hillel Foundation and the Associated Students.

The set included three numbers, the first of which, Dancy, Dancy, was a free-moving swinger with just a pinch of Latin flavor that made the gymnasium literally hop with glee.

The second number was entitled Pretty Sad Avenue, a bluesy piece featuring solos by Handy and White. The third, which Handy described as "the tune that's going to make us all rich," was The Spanish Lady which broke up the Monterey Jazz Festival recently and earned the group four standing ovations.

A slow starting piece, it eventually broke into a driving up-tempo with echoes of classical melodies toward the end.

Handy, a Bay Area musician, attended Oakland's McClymond's High School and later was a student at City College for one semester in 1955. The present group has been together for seven months, although Handy has had his own band for the past six years.

Handy acknowledged that Sonny Rollins and John Coletrane are the two saxophonists he admired most. He also had a comment on the position of the violin in jazz.

"The violin seems to be coming back as a jazz instrument," he said. "White makes it sound like it was made for jazz."

Commenting on the current jazz scene, Handy lamented the fact that young people know very little about jazz.

"Aside from a few jazz concerts now and then, in order for a young person to hear live jazz he has to go to a nightclub, which many of them can't do as they're under 21. This is a real shame because jazz is essentially a young people's music."

He went on to say that his group seems to appeal to people of all ages. Handy feels that the many small jazz clubs which have sprung up around San Francisco recently are a boon to the jazz musician.

"It gives us work and provides the fans with more and more jazz," he said.

The quintet, which hopes to tour the Orient soon, can be seen and heard currently at the Both/And. The Spanish Lady can also be heard on a Columbia LP.

● Cafeteria Complaint

Editor, The Guardsman:

It has been disconcerting the last few weeks to be involved in a situation that shouldn't exist, but does. We, the following signers of this letter, would like the administration department of the college to become aware of the cultural lag that exists in the cafeteria during lunch hour from Noon to 1 p.m.

Upon reviewing the Fall semester schedule, one notes that between Noon and 1 p.m., on Monday, there are 94 classes being held on campus. The other most frequent day is Wednesday with 93 classes.

If we take a minimum of 25 persons in one class, we find there are potentially 2350 diners for the college cafeteria. However, let us assume that only one-half of these persons will remain on campus; that is 1175.

Now let us divide this 1175 into one-half again and say that only 588 are headed for the cafeteria since the others either have further classes, have brought their lunch or will use the vending machines to buy their lunches.

Therefore, of these 588 persons let us take one-half again, and assume 294 persons head either for the hamburger area in the cafeteria or to Statler wing.

Thus, we see there are at least 294 persons left who will eat in the main cafeteria.

Now, the disconcerting note arises when the management tries to herd these 294 persons to the tables alongside the windows in the main room of the cafeteria.

With eight tables and 12 chairs to each table, simple multiplication gives one 96 chairs to seat 294 persons . . .

We would recommend: 1. These tables lined against the windows be cleaned first. 2. That one section of the center tables be opened to the students who come in just before 1 p.m. 3. The cafeteria be kept open until 1:30 or 2 p.m.

As matters stand now, the cafeteria closes down at 1:15 p.m., and the ladies who do the cleaning up must be through by 1:30 p.m. We can understand their viewpoint in trying to hurry through their job, as they will not be paid for time after 2 p.m.

But, if a class is held over, or if a student walks from Arts Hall or the gymnasium, he or she is out of luck in being able to buy a hot lunch or in eating in a pleasant manner.

Let's close the gap between number of students at City College during the lunch hour of 1 p.m., and the amount of space and food allowed them in the cafeteria.

Very truly yours,

Mrs. Esther Kahn

I Won't Dance, Don't Ask Me— Just Meditate

By Mike Williams

Whatever happened to the rock 'n roll music of yesterday?

Not too long ago, a person went to a party and danced to the current popular records. Now, he goes to the party, sits on the floor with the rest of the people, and meditates to the latest protest song.

These songs started with the civil rights movement and have built all the way up to world wars. Civil rights and world wars have nothing in common except for the fact that they can be protested about. As these problems illustrate, any idea which has two conflicting views is excellent material for protest songs.

Some of the protest singers sing about the people who protest their clothing and appearance. Hand in hand with appearance is the protest singer's hair.

As a rule, the hair of a protest singer is long. This is an open protest to barbers. The trouble is that it is hard to distinguish the men from the women.

The clothing of the protest singer is one of his most outstanding characteristics. Black boots, levis, bicycle chain belts, sweatshirts and genuine yak-skin jackets are the "in" clothing for the protest singer.

With this attire and the long hair, he looks like a cross between a hobo and a sheep dog.

The funny thing about the clothing is that it is becoming the teenage trend. When a boy and a girl leave on a date, they look as though they have just survived the Battle of the Bulge. When the night comes for the all-important big date, the boys knock the girls out with the essence of their favorite cologne, appropriately titled the Eve of Destruction.

So, isn't it about time that the "twist 'n shout" music got back in the scene? Anyway, young people should be able to dance all the stiffness from their bones after a sit-in.

Sometimes The Sighted Can Be Blind

By B.T.

HAPPY, HAPPY 1966!

During the New Year, may you experience much joyfulness, gladness, delightfulness; gratification, satisfaction, cheerfulness, elation, rapture, gaiety, glee, blissfulness, seventh heaven and contentment.

May you hope, inspire, encourage, hearten and be of good cheer. When woes bring discouragement, perk up, think happy.

HAPPY NEW YEAR!

• • •

A GOOD EXAMPLE of positive thinking is a guy named Harry Cordellos. He is blind.

"If you feel you can do something, give it a try. Have faith. My feeling has always been, have faith in yourself and determination to conquer.

This is Cordellos' personal credo.

Cordellos recently earned his Bachelor's degree in recreation at California State College at Hayward, where he communed five hours each day.

He can teach anyone how to bowl, play golf, swim, save lives, learn photography and creative arts. He has made and narrated several movies, is an expert photographer, and has written a book called Amateur Photography For The Blind.

Cordellos attended this college and was valedictorian at commencement. His pictures of moving athletes in action, and stills of pretty girls are not new to the pages of The Guardsman.

Cordellos was active not only in the photography department but was also an ace reporter for The Guardsman. And he never missed a news deadline.

"I got through the classes by using taped books and lecture notes, mostly. I didn't use many readers because some were not dependable," he said.

Because he was challenged by his friends, he learned how to swim and dive. He learned how to water ski by listening for the sound of the boat horn, which signaled him to turn right or left, or to drop off.

Cordellos describes his golf method as a game of verbal direction, where the other player tells him where the ball is. The other player then rattles the flag in the hole, and Cordellos aims for it. His average is 56-58 on a 9-hole course.

When bowling, Cordellos tapes the approach, feels the tape, uses it as a starting point, and aims his bowling ball. His bowling average is 118.

"The worst handicap of blindness is the attitudes of the sighted world. If the sighted world can accept blind people for what they are and what they can do, and not base their opinions on old tradtions, the problems for adjustments for the blind world would be greatly minimized.

For Cordellos the greatest frustration in being blind is being a photographer without a darkroom assistant.

Meanderings

By Mike Smith

SAN FRANCISCO must have wanted to punish all who come to City College or else the Golden Gate town would have never put this college on top of Hill 29 where it now steadfastly stands—at the moment.

Hill 29 happens to be in the path of something known as the Alemany Gap. And what smashes its way down the Gap like a bunch of no-good knights ramming the castle door? The wind of course. Naturally the college faces this ambitious wind that would just love to "play" hurricane and blow the entire college off the hill and roll it into the freeway.

Anyone who wants to leave Science Hall has to battle Mother Nature on whether the doors stay closed. If one does get past the door, he has to clutch tightly his notebook (while walking down walls which are called steep hills) or the wind will steal the notebook and scatter his papers all over the city.

But we really are living on dangerous ground because City College sits above a huge fault. The majority of earthquakes, which occur about 1000 times every day around the world, are caused by movement along the faults. There are big faults and small faults, unfortunately the college may not sit on the latter, at least we know where the fault lies.

Another perplexing problem that continues to plague students is the fog. The fog hides everything, the college itself, the men's and women's gymnasiums, the Pit and all the cars in it, and Arts Hall.

It is very disturbing to be sitting in the cafeteria and look up the hill to see that the college has suddenly disappeared.

One does not know if he is going out of his mind from suffering through too many exams and term reports or that the fault acted up and caused a small earthquake on Hill 29 which swallowed City College.

City College has never been struck by lightning though, and for this we can give a heap of thanks. But if that lightning ever does come, then it is time to worry. It will probably mean that, especially when it is raining as it did last week, Noah is dragging out his Ark.

Of course this means that a big flood will follow and drown all us evil people.

But if we are at City College during this time, we just might be pretty lucky to escape such a flood because we are on what one might call high ground.

And maybe Noah will bring all the animals to Hill 29. Then City College will have the biggest zoo in the world. So maybe we aren't so cursed afterall.

ACCORDING TO THE January, 1966, Science Digest, the earth has a new look.

"The earth, once thought to be flat, then spherical, then pear-shaped . . . is now basically spherical, but with four barely perceptible corners that bulge 60 yards beyond the earth's roundness."

Berkeley Chamber Group To Perform At C-Hour

The Berkeley Chamber Singers will perform during College Hour tomorrow in the theater, according to William Grothkopp, music instructor here. Their performance is part of the College Hour Concert Series.

The group, which has been in existence since 1948, is composed mostly of amateurs and performs choral literature which dates back to the fourteenth century, Grothkopp said. "The Singers have been giving a great number of concerts during the last two or three years," he added.

The Berkeley Chamber Singers are conducted by Alden Gilchrist, director of music at Calvary Presbyterian.

Solo Piano Recital Scheduled For Jan. 11

A solo piano recital is to be given by Terry Yee, a first semester music major here, during College Hour next Tuesday, January 11, in A-133.

Yee, sponsored by the music department of the college, will play four selections by various composers. They will be Bach's Fifth French suite No. 5, Beethoven's Sonata-opus 28, Dumka, by Tchaikovsky and a selection entitled Grande Etude No. 3 La Campanella by Paganini-Lizst.

Rapid Transit Due Here In 1969

25 Cents For An 80 Mph Ride To Higher Education

By Cheryl Crofts

Transportation and parking problems of students here will be well on the way to being solved by Fall, 1969.

In a fraction of the time now required, and at an estimated cost of only 25 cents, students living in San Francisco will be able to use the facilities of the Bay Area Rapid Transit District to reach City College.

In San Francisco the transit line will be routed along Market Street and then through the Mission District to Daly City. A subway station will be located at Ocean avenue on the east side of the Southern Freeway, convenient for use by City College students.

COORDINATION OF ROUTES

An effort is being made to coordinate the routes of the BARTD trains and Municipal Railway cars, according to James Browne, Community Relations officer for BARTD and son of Edwin C. Browne, first Dean of Men here, now retired.

A supplementary street car line will end at West Portal. Eight subway stations are to be built for the Muni along this line, three of which, on Market street, will be shared with BARTD trains.

STAINLESS STEEL CARS

Cars will be constructed of stainless steel or aluminum, and each train will be two to ten cars in length. They will be 70 feet long and 10 and one-half feet wide and high, with floor to ceiling height measuring 6 feet, 9 inches. The trains will be among the lightest transit cars ever built.

The interiors of the cars will be finished in a combination of plastics, vinyl wood-grain paneling, metallic trim and carpeting. The seats will be made of foam rubber covered with vinyl fabric. Most are of charcoal color; those near the exits are rust brown.

Maps on the walls of the cars will show routes and stations. Temperatures inside them will be automatically controlled. They will be virtually silent and vibration-free.

TOP SPEED—SHORT STOPS

Top speed for the trains will be 80 miles per hour, with average station stops of less than 20 seconds.

During peak hours there will be minimum time intervals of 90 seconds, with maximum intervals of 15 minutes during off-peak hours.

The frequency and size of the trains dispatched, and their routes, spacings and speeds will be controlled automatically by banks of computers in BARTD's future administration building in Oakland.

COMPUTERS ON JOB

As the trains approach a station, local computer systems will take over, stopping them, opening the doors and then starting them again. The attendant riding at the front of each train will assume manual control only in an emergency.

The fare collection system will be automatic. The equipment to be used here is being tested now for BARTD by the Cleveland Transit District.

TOTAL LENGTH 75 MILES

The total length of the system will be 75 miles, to be composed of 31 miles of aerial lines, 16 miles of subways and tunnels, 24 miles of surface lines and a four-mile trans-bay tube.

The solution to the Bay Area's transportation problems is, in the opinion of B. R. Stokes, General Manager of BARTD, "Balanced transportation . . . the concept of all types of transportation systems . . . working together in a coordinated effort to move people quickly and safely through the metropolitan region."

The "balanced transportation" concept was pioneered in Cleveland, and has proved successful.

MISSING LINK

"In the Bay Area we have the cars and busses; we already have, or are getting, the necessary freeways. The missing link is rapid transit . . . and this, thanks to the voters of the Bay Area, is not far off," Stokes said.

"The impact of the new rapid transit system on the metropolitan Bay Area is expected to be tremendous," he added, for "the concept of balanced transportation in the Bay Area will no longer be just a concept; it will be a working reality."

Students here will undoubtedly welcome the completion of the BARTD system as the solution to their transportation problems.

A HOPEFUL SOLUTION to the problem of choked freeway congestion, rapid transportation to and from the city, and alleviation of growing parking problems in the metropolitan area lies in this modern engineering transit car designed for Bay Area use in the early 1970's.

The Little Foxes Will Be Final Drama Production

The Little Foxes, by Lillian Hellman, will be presented in the theater, January 12 through 15, as the final drama production of this school semester, director Walter Krumm announced today.

Members of the cast include Anne Crichton as Regina Giddens, Albert Hughes as Ben Hubbard, Paul Moniot as Oscar Hubbard, Anna Einhorn as Alexandra, Lana Tershy as Birdie, Steve Howes as Horace Giddens, John LaZar as Leo, Jack Ellis as Marshell, Toni Johns as Addie and Irving Jackson as Cal.

Set at the turn of the century, the play is concerned with the greed for money and power of a well-to-do Southern family, and their complete indifference to the methods they use to acquire them.

"Both the set and costumes will be in the manner of that era, circa 1900, and the California Historic Society has been a great help by giving us the use of some authentic furniture of that period," Krumm stated.

However, Krumm added, the cast is still short a newel post, a balustrade, a fire-guard, preferably fan shaped, and two patterned, but unobtrusive rugs.

"The efforts of anyone able to help us procure one or all of these objects would be highly appreciated," he said.

The technical staff, supervised by Victor Vaio, drama technical director, will be composed of Jamie O'Neill, stage manager; John Leveck, assistant stage manager; Adrienne Reilly and Mike Jasinski, lighting; Diane Nichols, Valerie Noakes and Margaret Calhoun, costumes, and Cheryl Willis, properties.

Awards Banquet For Student Leaders Here

Student leaders here will be guests-of-honor at the Student Government Awards Banquet to be held Monday starting at 6:30 p.m. in Statler wing.

Associated Student Vice President Barbara Kontis explained that a total attendance of 150 is expected. Those students involved in student government and their parents have been invited.

Dean H. Donald Winbigler of Stanford University will speak at the banquet, Miss Kontis announced.

Awards in the form of plaques, certificates and pins will be made to the executive officers, Student Council and Cabinet members. Additional awards will be given to the individuals voted outstanding faculty member and outstanding student in service to the AS.

resent the interest of the students on this campus."

Lincoln Pain, present ROC member of Student Council, offered the following comments, "From the beginning there has been an attempt on the part of certain individuals to form some sort of group around which students can organize whenever some concerted democratic action is needed to deal with specific issues during the college semester.

"The people who control affairs on this campus have been against this from the very start, and are therefore essentially anti-democratic. The issue of party rights is one which is used to maintain a separation between student action and so-called representation by government officials."

Hoffman added that "the most effective use to which student government is now being put is the division of student body funds with reasonable fairness among the athletic teams and clubs."

Selective Service Affirms No Basic Change In Student Policy

By Peter Dorn

Rumor has it that there have been changes in the Selective Service Act as it affects college students. According to John J. Brady, co-ordinator of Student Welfare, there has been no basic change in the policy with respect to college students.

Selective Service policy, as it has existed for several years, grants deferments to full-time students (30 units per year) who are accomplishing satisfactory work.

Quoting from an article by Betty Vetter, executive secretary of the Scientific Manpower Commission, which appeared in the December 15, 1965, issue of the College and University Bulletin, Brady cited the following statements:

"Selective Service, through its local boards and its state and national appeal boards, is responsible for determining which registrants are promoting the national interest through study.

"Each educational institution must share in this responsibility by keeping the Selective Service System constantly and currently informed of the presence of the registrant on campus, what he is doing and how he is doing it.

"Students themselves must be fully informed of their obligations and their rights under Selective Service.

"More and more local boards are sending 1-A classifications to all students registered with that board in an effort to differentiate between full-time students making progress toward a degree goal and those registrants who are part-time students, or whose academic progress is lagging.

"In many cases, registrants receiving notices of 1-A classification are uncertain of what action to take . . ."

Brady advised all draft-eligible men to apply, immediately, to his office (S-132) for an SS 109 form.

Waters Lectures On Civil Rights

"Civil rights are the mortar that bind the walls of democracy's fortress. Some deluded and some despicable characters are using it as a battering ram to bring down the walls," Laughlin E. "Lock" Waters, announced Republican candidate for Governor stated here last Tuesday in his lecture, Civil Rights And Common Sense.

Under the sponsorship of the City College of San Francisco Committee on Republicanism, the audience heard Waters go back to the 1954 Supreme Court Case of Brown vs Board of Education (Topeka, Kan.) in discussing the problems of civil rights.

According to Waters the case, which abolished the "Separate but Equal Doctrine," was criticized by lawyers and constitution makers throughout the nation, yet survived to upset concepts of civil rights.

Waters said at least one unswerving principle lies behind the real concept of civil rights, and that is that "the defense of furtherance of civil rights is never a proper excuse for violence."

This holds true particularly, he said, "for those whose full membership in the American community is still to come, whose civil rights in many cases are still a paper mockery—ethnic, social and religious minorities."

On the Watts riots in his hometown of Los Angeles, Waters submitted that no single government issue is greater than that which confronts the public in the background of the riots. —A. R.

Intra Play-Offs Start Tonight; NSA Is Favored

By G. Frank Cooney

First round play-offs tonight in the Associated Men Student-sponsored Intramural competition was made possible thanks to a drawing which decided the final standings in the Club League.

Stan Angel, AMS president, decided that the only logical way to straighten things out in time for tonight's play-offs would be merely to draw straws.

In the drawing, the Guardsmen chose the lucky "straw" enabling them to meet Lawson's 10 in the playoffs tonight at 7 pm in the women's gym.

An already confused situation was completely muddled last month when the Newman Club outscored the Ram Skiers, 53-47.

This left the Club League with a tie for second place between Lawson's 10 and the Newman Club (5-2) as well as with a three-way tie for fourth with the Ram Skiers, Guardsman, and Filipino-Americans each sporting final identical 3-4 records.

In a pre-Christmas vacation clash, the undefeated Irish team of the Fraternity-Independent League drew a bye but remained in undisputed possession of first place despite a forfeit victory by the second-place Celtics.

The Celts, who lost one game this semester, picked up their fifth victory over absentee Phi Beta Delta.

The ailing NBA rejects got back in the groove with a 100 to 73 win over the Chiefs.

Club League action last year on December 7 saw the fantastic Negro Students Association clinch first place when they annihilated the Sophomore Class in a 124 to 31 bombing.

Block SF was handed its third loss via forfeit and therefore booted out of further competition.

In the only other game of that evening, the Ram Ski Club edged out last semester's champions, the Filipino-Americans, 38-37.

B-Of-A Seeks College Man, Woman Of Year

Application deadline for an inaugural Bank of America California Junior College Man and Woman of the Year Award will be Monday, January 31, according to Dean Ralph Hillsman, campus award committee chairman.

The statewide scholarship offers $1000 to the two winners, who will be selected from among competitors from two-year colleges throughout the state.

"Interested students should consult me in S-148 for further details," Hillsman added.

Candidates from the college will be selected by Friday, February 11, with the candidates from this area being selected by Friday, March 12. California is divided into eight areas for the scholarship.

Rams Take Bakersfield Cage Tournament

Despite early implications of impending disaster, coach Sid Phelan's rookie-dominated cagers engaged in a rather successful campaign which saw them win the 11th Annual Bakersfield Invitational Basketball Tournament championship and the consolation championship at the 29th Annual Modesto Junior College Invitational Basketball Tournament.

LANEY COLLEGE: In their season opener, City College warmed up for the Bakersfield Tournament with an easy 62-51 win over Laney College.

Balance, possible key to the team's title chances, was responsible in part for the win. Parks led the scoring with 14 points, followed by Wilson and rookie Willie Wise with 13 each.

BAKERSFIELD TOURNAMENT: Although competition was described by coach Sid Phelan as equal to the "average" team in the Golden Gate Conference, he was plessed with the play of his club who won the title.

San Francisco opened with an easy win over Modesto Junior College by a 74-54 margin. Rookies Isaac Neal and Willie Wise led the scoring with 15 and 14 points respectively. Right behind them was Ed Wilson 11.

SAN JOAQUIN DELTA: In a surprising upset, the Rams came from behind to edge highly touted San Joaquin Delta, 67-66, in the second round of the tourney. Wilson led the scorers with 18 followed by veteran Willie Jones with 15 and Wise and Gene Williams with 9 each. City College was behind, 37-30, at the half.

FRESNO CITY COLLEGE: In the title contest, great defense, outstanding rebounding and balanced scoring brought City College an "easy" 74-56 win over Fresno to give San Francisco the Bakersfield Tournament Championship.

Williams blocked better than 14 shots while hitting for 13 points, and Wilson poured in 17. Jones hit for 10 with 8 others involved in the scoring.

STANFORD BRAVES: The Rams extended their winning streak to five straight with an 82-53 romp over the Stanford Braves. Charlie Parks, who appears to be greatly improved, hit for 21 points while Wise got 17, Wilson 14 and John Pezzolo 8.

USF FROSH: Veteran center Charlie Parks all but single-handedly led City College to a 73-53-46 win over the Don frosh by pouring in 23 points.

UC FROSH: The Cubs handed the Rams their first loss after six consecutive victories. Although San Francisco outhit them from the floor they were overwhelmed at the line 85 per cent to 59 per cent. Parks led the locals' scoring with 12 followed by Pezzolo with 8 and Paul Batmale with 7.

SAN JOSE STATE FROSH: San Francisco got back on the winning track with a close 62-59 win over San Jose's Spartan frosh. Rookie Wise led the scoring with 17 points with Wilson getting 15 and Williams 12.

HAMILTON AFB: With the front three all scoring in double figures and three others coming up with eight points apiece, the Rams picked up their eighth win of the season by humiliating Hamilton, 84-47. Wilson had 15, Williams 13, Parks 11 and Pezzolo, Neal and Berger 8 apiece.

SANTA CLARA FROSH: In the closest game of the season, City College nipped the Santa Clara frosh 49-48 for their ninth victory of the year. Wise led all scorers with 21 points.

MODESTO TOURNAMENT

SAN JOAQUIN DELTA: In but their second loss of the year, coach Sid Phelan's improved club lost in overtime to eventual tournament champion San Joaquin Delta, 70-64. Behind by one at the half, City College fought the Deltans to a regulation 59-59 tie.

Parks, who made the All-Tournament five, hit for 10 field goals and got 25 points for the night. Batmale was next with 11.

FRESNO CONSOLATION: Bouncing back from their disappointing loss to the Mustangs, the Rams won one from the line by hittting 18 out of 31 for a 76-66 victory over Fresno City College, to move up in the consolation title fight.

SANTA ANA: San Francisco walked into the consolation finals with an easy 79-59 win over Santa Ana. Wise led with 22 points followed by Parks with 19 and Wilson 17.

AMERICAN RIVER: Parks' 15-footer from the baseline with five seconds left set up a thrilling 81-79 win with Batmale's basket providing the margin. Five Rams were in double figures: Parks 27, Batmale 14, Wise 13 and Wilson and Williams 12 each.

AMERICAN RIVER: Proving their previous win was no fluke, City College's Ram Cagers picked up their thirteenth win of the year by bombing American River, 96-71, in Sacramento. Parks led with 26 points with Wise following with 16, Wilson 15 and Williams 11.

Mendieta, Shishkin Voted To Soccer's All-America

By Art Rodriguez

The State Champion City College soccer team was showered with honors today when two of their starting eleven were named to the National Junior College All-American Soccer Team. This was in addition to an earlier release which showed seven Ram players on the Northern California Junior College Soccer All-Conference squads.

For the second time, in as many years, Alex Mendieta captured a place on the All-American team. The rellable Ram captain closed out his City College soccer career in brilliant fashion, scoring 29 goals in the team's 15 games.

High point of the season was his six tallies in the State Championship game at Victor Valley.

The only other Ram All-American honored was Connie Shishkin. His defensive charge in the Ram backfield was a key to his berth on the coveted squad.

Named to the All-Conference squad were Ronnie VanVelthuysen and Mendieta, forwards; George Fernandez and Shishkin, backs. Second team choices were Pete Rossi, Mike Montes and Nelson Artiga.

Four Win Most Valuable Player Awards At Dinner

Presentation of 64 jackets, four Most Valuable Player trophies, and four letters highlighted the Block SF Awards banquet held December 2.

From the championship football team, halfback Ron Fassler received his second trophy for Most Valuable Player honors while Dave Malae accepted equal recognition as most valuable lineman.

A trophy was awarded to Alex Mendieta for gaining laurels as Most Valuable Player in soccer. William Long received the valuable player trophy for his cross country efforts.

Since it is customary to give members of championship teams a jacket and block letter, both the football and soccer teams received these awards.

From the football squad 42 players won jackets:

These 22 soccermen were jacket recipients:

Mendieta, Ferdinand Alicia, Vic Boikanyo, Obdulio Carcamo, Bill Freeman, Frank Gagliardi, Art Ganoza, Steve Gazzano, Louis Golcher, John Kazavis, Alex Lopez, Pete Rossi, George Fernandez, Nelson Artiga, Roberto Rojas, Tommy Samuelson, Tony Nerio, Rudy Espinoza, Mike Montes, Connie Shishkin, Envir Safir and Ron VanVelthuysen.

Letter winners from the cross country squad were William Long, John O'Looney, George Ferguson and Alex Vosker.

The unusually large number of jackets presented was due to the fact that both the soccer and football teams won championships.

In addition to these semiannuals awards, members of the football squad received recognition and honors from numerous sources.

After the Prune Bowl victory over Long Beach City College (40-20), each player received a maroon "Prune Bowl 1965" jacket, compliments of the Cambrian Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Along with the "Prune Bowl Champions" trophy, accepted by coach Dutch

Gridders Rate Six Nationally In Post-Season Vote

City College of San Francisco's 1965 Golden Gate Conference Champions received their just reward for a 40-20 blasting of Long Beach City College in the third annual Prune Bowl by being voted the sixth best two-year college football college team in the nation according to the J.C. Grid-Wire's final ratings released December 14.

Monterey Peninsula College, an upset winner over Golden Gate Conference second-place finisher Foothill College in the Lettuce Bowl, was ranked fifth in the nation with six more points than City College.

The sixth-place ranking is the highest rank achieved by any City College football team since the 1948 champions pulled off a fifth-place ranking.

The 1948 champs were undefeated.

This 1965 team parallels the 1948 club in several ways.

Both teams had outstanding backs in Ollie Matson and O. J. Simpson respectively, both enjoyed the services of outstanding lines, and although the 1948 bunch had a better defensive record, with four shutouts in its first five games, both had outstanding offensive machines.

All in all they outscored their opponents--292-62, in 12 games in 1948 and 319-123 in 10 contests this year.

The final sixth-place ranking was the best the college was able to gain all year due in part to the play of the Southern California colleges and out-of-state teams and the prejudice of the J. C. Grid-Wire.

First time on the listing the eventual champions were able to reach but a three-way tie for eleventh with Ventura College and Fort Scott, Kansas. They moved up to ninth, then back down to a tie for twelfth with San Diego before again moving up to eighth and ending their conference schedule ranked eleventh again.

Of the final 25 teams, 14 were from California, three of those from the northern part of the state and two of those were in the top ten.

The other northern school on the lists other than San Francisco and Monterey was eighteenth-ranked College of Sequoias, a 22-13 victor over Shasta College in the Empire Bowl.

1966 Swimmers Meet To Discuss Season Outlook

The 1966 City College swim team met together for the first time December 27 to discuss the outlook of the team for the coming year.

Coach Roy Burkhead, who presided over the meeting, is optimistic about how many men will try out.

At the meeting Burkhead discussed a major qualification for team membership. "Anyone who didn't pass more than 10½ units of work is ineligible for any sport," he warned.

Burkhead ran into some trouble when he was informed that Balboa Pool will be closed for the month of January for inspection.

He commented that "the men will be forced to work out individually at the other pools in the city." He added, "We are lucky that the inspection didn't come during the regular season."

Burkhead hopes to meet every team in the Bay Area for practice meets, if at all possible. "We would like to meet them all before conference competition starts, but I'm afraid we may have to free-lance."

By free-lancing, Burkhead, means meeting teams at random, instead of in regularly scheduled meets.

Elston on behalf of the team, both Taylor and Simpson got handsome trophies as outstanding lineman and outstanding back, respectively.

As champions of the Golden Gate Conference, every player was presented with a football-shaped trophy.

The Ram gridders were again recognized when nine players were chosen for the All-Conference team and Simpson was picked outstanding player for 1965.

Simpson was also given the first annual Murius McFadden award at College of San Mateo for being the outstanding football player in the conference.

Simpson Named To 1965 National Junior College All-America Football Team

By Bill Pates

In an announcement that was all but unexpected, City College sensation O. J. Simpson was named to the 1965 National Junior College Football All-American team compiled by the J. C. Grid-Wire of Pasadena.

As was expected, Simpson was the only member of the All-American team from Northern California, although end Bob Sullivan of American River, qb Dan Holman of Monterey Peninsula and back Clyde Moland of San Joaquin Delta captured positions on the offensive specialists team.

Despite the prejudical tendencies of the Grid-Wire toward the Southern California schools, there was no conceivable way they could avoid noticing the performances of Simpson in helping lead his team to their first Golden Gate Conference championship.

The former All-City halfback from Galileo broke eight conference offensive records and set two national records for rushing yardage in a single game and most points in one year.

Also notable among his achievements were most yards rushing in league, 948-82 carries (1039-102, eight games); most yards rushing one game, 304-18 carries, most points in league, 126 (156-year); most td's in one game, 6 and most points in a single game, 36.

Not one to "hog" the glory, Simpson was never at a loss to praise the outstanding work of City College's All-Conference line. At times his modesty seemed to negate the value of his own work in his praise of the linemen.

Nevertheless, Simpson has been described by Fred Baer of the J. C. Sportswire as "... by far the most polished junior college halfback I've seen. He has fabulous quick elusive moves and ability to shake off tacklers too easily."

Although no other City College player made any of the All-American team positions, four were chosen to the All-America Honorable Mention listings.

They are Lineman Of The Year Dave Malae, Back Of The Year Ron Fassler, tackle Joe Ross and end Eural Smothers. All are veterans.

The 6-2, 210-pound Malae from Balboa, and the 610, 260-pound Ross anchored the right side of the powerful line which ripped open opponents' middles and battered defensive interference consistently on those end sweeps that worked so successfully all year long.

Malae was a standout both ways, while the former Washington Eagle, Ross, added his own unique facit to the college's team play while scoring on an 11-yard tackle eligible play to tie Diablo Valley and save the Rams' unbeaten conference record. It was his second td in two years.

Fassler, the 175-pounder from Sacred Heart, had by far the most satisfying year of football in 1965. Along with Simpson, Fassler composed the most lethal one-two punch in the conference if not in all of Northern California.

Fassler, named to the first club offensive and defensive teams of the 1965 Golden Gate Conference All-Conference teams, was likewise and well deservedly awarded Back Of The Year honors. Now comes an All-America honorable mention. Things couldn't be too much better.

Fassler ends his City College career with 962 yards rushing in 113 carries and 78 points.

Smothers, who was voted to a second club All-Conference spot as a defensive back, surprisingly won his All-America honorable mention as an end. Truth is stranger than fiction.

Smothers averaged 22.4 yards a gain with 14 receptions for 315 yards. He ran back two interceptions of 60 and 35 yards for scores against Merritt as well as scoring the final tounchdown of the Prune Bowl on a 42-yard interception run.

When he really wanted to, Smothers could play some very deliberate ball on offense. Nevertheless, some of his best efforts took place while he was manning his defensive back spot.

It will be interesting, to say the least, to see if coach Art Elston can come up with anybody to fill the positions left by these four next year. Hopefully, O. J. Simpson will return.

Council Approves $40,000 Spring Budget Allocation

By Rich Heintz

Student Council, by a vote of 10-0-1, on January 3 approved the $40,000 Associated Student spring semester budget.

The vote also delegated to Biff Barnes, finance chairman, the power to reduce all budget requests to whatever percentage might be necessary to make the budget total an even $40,000.

Originally, the requests totalled approximately $44,000, but $4000 had to be saved for supplementary appropriations for the spring semester.

Budget approval took up three council meetings. The budget and proposed cuts were presented to council by Barnes, where they were voted upon.

Before it was decided to take a percentage from each budget, selective cuts were made from some of the budgets.

Some of the cuts from the various budget allocations for the spring semester for example were in sports, $102 from the track team; 25 per cent (262.50) from the swimming team; $55 from physical education department for the Block SF dinner; $55 from the golf team; $55 from the varsity baseball team, and $50 from the freshman baseball team.

Cuts from other budgeted organizations included the Recreation Association, $66.42; the stage and Pep bands, $50; the Campus Police, $145; the Associated Women Students, $50; the Associated Men Students, $30; the Executive Council, $40, and the Freshman Class, $50.

In other business, council unanimously approved the design for the spring Associated Student card, five of which were submitted by students in the graphic arts department.

"There was no council meeting last Wednesday because of AS elections and the lack of pending business," AS President Dennis Sweeney explained.

Two weeks ago, the council meeting was opened to nominations for the outstanding student and faculty member on campus in terms of service to AS activities this semester. Recipients of these awards were announced last Monday at the Student Council banquet.

Nominees for the Outstanding Student Award were O.J. Simpson, Frank Mullan, Lynda Castro, Joanne Johnson, Biff Barnes, Wayne Wilson and Janet Hinterman.

Nominees for the Faculty Member Service Award were Roberta Lumb, Victor Vaio, Dan Foley and Edward Taylor.

Last meeting of Student Council this semester is next Wednesday.

Hellman Drama Begins Four-Night Run In Theater

The Little Foxes opens at 8 p.m. tonight in the campus theater as the final drama production of this semester, director Walter Krumm stated today.

Essentially a melodrama, Krumm noted, the play goes beyond this state through its more complex development of characters.

Set in the early 1900's, the play deals with a Southern family's greed for wealth, and their complete disregard of the means to be used to achieve their goals.

Although set in a definite time period, the play is by no means dated or limited in its significance, Krumm stated; on the contrary, there are some very close comparisons with some of the goals of today's society.

Written in 1939 by Lillian Hellman, the play was presented originally on the Broadway stage in that same year, and brought to national prominence both the playwright and the actress Tallulah Bankhead, who protrayed the lead role of Regina Gliddens.

The Little Foxes is slated for four performances each night through Saturday.

Council Honors 48 Students At Banquet

A total of 48 awards was made to student leaders attending the Student Government Awards banquet here on Monday night.

Roberta Lumb, chemistry instructor, was announced outstanding faculty member in terms of service to the Associated Students for her work with the Student-Faculty Relations committee. AS Finance Chairman Biff Barnes won a similar award for outstanding service.

Mike Smith To Head Spring Guardsman Staff

Mike Smith, managing editor of The Guardsman, was elected next semester's Editor In Chief by the outgoing editorial board last week.

Peter Born, feature editor of this semester, will be the new Managing Editor, and William Pates will again serve as Sports Editor.

Karen Carlson, who is Staff Editor, has won a scholarship to the Chapman College Division of the Seven Seas. The positions of Staff and Feature Editors will remain vacant for the present, and will be filled at a later date.

Don Patten, this semester's Edit tor, will transfer to San Jose State along with Jim Rauh, News Editor.

Today is the last issue of The Guardsman this semester.

Glenna Chase Wins Outstanding Dental Assisting Award

Glenna Chase was awarded the Outstanding Student Award in the Dental Assisting program during the capping ceremony held January 4.

The award, given by the San Francisco Dental Assisting Society, was of $25 and is presented each semester to an outstanding dental assisting student.

Dean Mary Golding and Ruth Inskipp, director of the dental assisting program, determine the recipient of the award, which is given on the basis of academic achievement and over-all ability and participation in the dental assisting program, Mrs. Inskipp said.

Miss Chase, a third semester student, is a graduate of Abraham Lincoln High School and is now carrying 16½ units. During the first midterm period, she maintained a 3.1 grade average. According to Mrs. Inskipp, another newsworthy item concerning Miss Chase is that she drives a jeep.

Miss Chase does her practical work in dental assisting at the University of California Dental School and the College of Physicans and Surgeons at the University of the Pacific. At these two colleges, she works with patients and gains experience and knowledge.

Considering continuing her education, Miss Chase wants to become a dental hygenist. A dental assisting major may continue her education at the University of California Dental School to achieve the highest educational goal.

Twenty-three students were capped during the ceremonies, at which Virginia Mieger of the American Dental Assistant's Association, delivered the keynote address.

Wyatt Predicts Successful Spring

Increased student interest for a more responsive student government will hopefully be shown during the next semester, according to James Wyatt, student government adviser.

Campaigns and election speeches have introduced new ideas and improvements, but no drastic changes are anticipated.

"All of the candidates in last week's election are competent leaders," he commented.

Wyatt believes that the present popularity of United Students Representative Party is not to be degraded. However, another political party or a complete changeover to independent candidates would be more democratic.

"Student government fluctuates with the students in office," Wyatt claims, adding that he would like to see more interest and participation by students in "their government."

1413 Vote In Elections As Barnes Loses Race By 358

By Gene Rosendahl

Jim Soletti, running as an Independent for the Associated Student Presidency, won a sweeping victory in the election held last week on campus.

Last semester's high of 1761 students voting diminished by 348 to stand at 1413 students at the polls for the semester's election.

The total number of votes cast for Soletti was 852, in comparison to his opponent, Meritt "Biff" Barnes, of the United Student Representative Party, who had a total number of 494 votes cast in his behalf.

Soletti's victory margin was 358, in the presidential race.

Soletti commented on his election, "I would like to thank the Student Body for their cooperation and I hope they will continue their support next semester."

"As I promised, I will do my best to bring sincerity and service back into student government."

Sophomore Council members for next fall will be Tom Csekey, with 811 votes; Janis Goldberg, with 810 votes; Francine Loskay, with 796 votes; Steve Ahern, with 794 votes; Judy Stewart, with 768 votes; Ron Appel, with 763 votes; and Sheridan Parker, with 754 votes.

All of the members of next semester's Sophomore Council ran on the USRP ticket.

Manuel Difuntorum ran for a Sophomore Council seat, but lost out with 713 votes, running as an Independent.

Freshman Council members for next semester will be Mike Nygren, USRP, with 921 votes; Joe Parnell, USRP, with 861 votes; Joan Shaw, USRP, with 852 votes; Helen Ferentinos, USRP, with 851 votes; Christopher Loo, USRP, with 845 votes; Linette Wong, USRP, with 838 votes; and Fred Stewart, Independent, with 830 votes.

Sandy Sager, Election Commissioner, commented on the election, "I am pleased with the election, however, I do wish there would have been more students running for office, as some of the offices were unopposed."

Miss Sager also noted, "I think that each candidate put up a very good campaign fight. All of the campaigners followed the election rules.

"I would like to thank James Wyatt, student activities adviser, for his cooperation, and the faculty and students that showed up to help man the voting booths. Their time was greatly appreciated," Miss Sager concluded.

Enrollment Jump Foreseen, Precedes Campus Expansion

By Margarita Botelho

An increase of approximately 700 students over last semester's enrollment is expected next fall, which will bring the total number of daytime students to around 9400, Louis G. Conlan, president of City College, said in an interview last week.

"This will make it most difficult for students to enroll in the classes which they want," he predicted.

Conlan said that a faculty committee is presently studying new procedures for registration which will be put into effect next semester and further refined for the fall semester.

"We will do everything possible to insure that everyone is taken care of," Conlan declared.

To further relieve the problems of the overcrowded condition, two new buildings are currently in the planning stage.

One building will be located next to Smith Hall and will be used for student services. It will house administration, counselling, and the registrar's offices.

The other building will contain class rooms and laboratories. It will be adjacent to the Arts Hall. All space vacated in Science Hall will be converted into classes. The new buildings are expected to be ready for use in one and a half years.

Conlan also said that if necessary, arrangements will be made with the Public Utilities Commission to use the second reservoir for parking.

There is no limit to the number of students eligible for admission, Conlan said, adding, "The law says that City College must accept all high school graduates."

But if conditions come to the point when the college is too overcrowded, a cut-off date for registration will be set, Conlan disclosed. "No student would be able to register after a certain date."

Conlan suggested that all students should follow the calendar as far as registration is concerned.

City College H&R Students Take Over Hotel St. Francis

By John Lee

On a quiet, peaceful morning in January of 1966, rumored by hotel officials to be January 6th, the San Francisco St. Francis Hotel was invaded by 40 City College students.

Although the students started to gather outside of the Mural Room in the early hours of the morning, the hotel management didn't make any move to talk to them until 9:15 a.m.

With the help of Sherry Baker, Hotel Publicity agent, David Plant, Resident Manager, managed to disperse the crowd within minutes and the routine of the hotel seemingly returned to normal.

But the City College students seemed bent on taking over the entire hotel, and their youthful faces were a common sight throughout the rest of the morning.

Almost desperately the hotel management tried to bribe the students off with a delicious luncheon of prime ribs in the elegant Mural Room, but the students would not give up their newly found positions and the hotel continued to be controlled by them.

Finally near the end of the day the management that was left decided to try to bribe the students once more, only this time they would not spare the expense.

As the students gathered before the gourmet offerings of Oysters Kirkpatrick, Caviar, Pate de Foie Gras, Prawns, Shrimp and assorted Hors d'oeuvres of salmon and crab meat, tensions eased and everyone present knew that the invasion was over.

The facts are now open to the public, and the so-called invasion was really the 15th annual Operation St. Francis which was initiated by St. Francis General Manager Dan London in cooperation with Lawrence Wong, Hotel and Restaurant director of placement.

Thirty-six Hotel and Restaurant students participated in the program along with two engineering students, two photography students and two journalism students.

The operation was designed to give City College students an opportunity to experience and fully understand the problems involved in the management of a major hotel.

Students occupied almost every position in the hotel, from Room Service to Managing Director.

Although the operation has been in effect for 15 years, Dan London has been present to supervise each year.

Unfortunately London was called away on a business trip this year and was unable to attend the operation.

'Reform' Proposals Exposed Show Total Lack Of Realism

FOR THE PAST two semesters, The Guardsman as well as the entire campus has been tolerant of rather odd, sometimes round-about and wholly unrealistic proposals posed as changes advantageous to the entire student populace. It seems time to expose once and for all some of these "myths," at least in so far as they are directed at The Guardsman.

A number of naive proposals have been outlined, the most recent by a candidate for office in last week's elections. This latest list asked that "contributions to the newspaper (The Guardsman) should be open to anyone who wishes to contribute to the paper he supports."

Contributions are and always have been accepted and published—in the form of letters-to-the-editor. The bluff that such was not the case was called last spring.

Another proposal is for "a guest column, written by students and faculty in which their own opinions on any subject may be expressed." "Guest" implies invitation, and the Editor of course might invite certain contributions of this nature.

A column, however, is the chief goal of many newspaper personnel, and experience, maturity, regular meeting of deadlines for regular publication are essential; signed columns are not for those who "write" only when the spirit moves them.

Furthermore, propaganda last semester called for a newspaper "by and for the students," and The Guardsman wants to keep it that way, although faculty members are certainly welcome to write letters-to-the-Editor.

"An expanded editorial page to contain more letters-to-the-editor," is another proposal. Each semester, all nonlibelous letters-to-the-Editor received have been published; some, of course, have been edited when they were disproportionate in length for publication at a given time. Whatever the "expansion," this situation would inevitably occur.

"A re-evaluation of why The Guardsman does not print advertising is suggested since 'advertising makes for a more professional paper to both readers and staff.'"

Advertising neither makes nor unmakes a newspaper's professional appearance. Its purpose is money. Advertising takes space and the funds obtained are not sufficient to justify the loss of news space. Experience has proved this.

"A special effort to make sure each faculty member has a copy of The Guardsman in his mailbox," is also suggested. Please, let us not force The Guardsman! Faculty members who want it may obtain it quite easily.

Finally, we return to the statement that complains, again, only those enrolled in journalism may "write for the paper." "Write for" a paper means, professionally speaking, to be a reporter. Herewith, The Guardsman opens the door to any reporter provided he shares the full staff work responsibility owed for such privileges, that he attends all staff meetings, meets deadlines readily and is present as required by the staff. If he wants no units, that is his privilege!

And by the way, the Editor would be interested to learn how a budget of $5005.66, which is actually this semester's Guardsman budget, is parlayed by the candidate to $6000.

News To Nobody

Free Sex Move—What Next?

By Peter Dorn

AND THE old people used to sit around watching the antics of the new generation and comment, "What next?"

And so next is the Free Sex movement that is getting a lot of publicity at Stanford, which is a four-year university near Palo Alto.

Among other things, some Stanford-ites want coed dormitories.

Since coed is an abbreviated form of coeducational, which means joint education, that is, the education of both sexes at the same institution, barring all word play and puntnery, they must want one dormitory to house both sexes.

According to one Stanfordite, "sex is a sancrosanct relationship between two adults and is no concern of any institution," and he went on to list churches, governments and the such.

WELL, THIS IS the last issue of this semester, Guardsmanwise, and although this finale is not as dramatic as the one that immediately precedes a long, hot summer vacation, it does mark the close of another semester.

Next semester there will be a few new faces, and most of the old ones will be back (they never learn); which brings about the subject of Guardsman writers, some of whom have suffered new emotional scars at the hands of their critics.

Now there have been a few, very few, writers who have been complimented, either by a letter-to-the-Editor or by having the tires on their cars left alone, and there have been some who have been criticized, either for their point of view or for the way that they may have reported some newsworthy event.

And then there are others who hear nothing at all. It's maddening.

One poor guy has been cranking out a column every week for the past semester, and the column is usually put in the same place on the bottom left corner of the second page, and somebody should have noticed it.

But of his endeavor there is nothing said, not even a criticism, nothing. At least if a person is told that his column is malodorous, it means that someone reads that column; but when there's no word, not even a crank note to the Editor, what is one to think?

There are some people on the campus who think that The Guardsman staff stifles true student opinion, and they have come up with all kinds of suggestions like guest columns, which, incidentally, are not entirely impossible, and yet there is only one letter-to-the-Editor to print in this, the semester's last edition.

Operation Match Key To Automatic Dates

By Connie Skipitares

Used to be all a gal had to do to win a date with a fellow was to bat her eyelashes at him a few times. But today, it'll cost her $3 plus the informal completion of the Personality Projection Test from Compatibility Research to get her beau.

This entirely inconceivable revelation in mate-selection is most commonly known as operation match.

Quite appropriately named, Operation Match, the computer-matching project for the elimination of the stereotype transaction of Boy Meets-Girl is rapidly increasing in popularity among those interested parties, largely 'twixt 12 and 20.

Compatibility Research Inc. endorses the dogma, "You're one in a million," using it as the principal gimmick for the submission of one's name as a prospective matchmate.

"Since you probably have different tastes and different attitudes from those of anybody else you know, the chances for a more compatible relationship are guaranteed through an IBM-computed match, where among several thousand other entries, your compatibility with a member of the opposite sex can be more readily determined," reads the pamphlet that was widely distributed on campus recently.

As Operation Match is the only computer-matching project of its kind, it claims the noncompetitive ability to "take the blindness out of blind dates."

Op Match has administered its Quantitative Personality Projection Test to more than 20,000 students in the two projects it has conducted thus far. Statistically analyzed results from the distributed questionnaires have enabled Compatibility Research to boast its tremendous success in the greatest match of the sexes.

As soon as Compatibility Research receives the "vital statistics" of a prospective matchmate, they are placed in the IBM 7090 computer memory file. The computer then begins its analysis of the qualifications of each member of the opposite sex within the same area.

Through a process of elimination, the computer selects five or more of "supposedly" the most compatible matches for a person in its termination of the mate-selection course.

Within 14 days of the particular deadline date for mailing the Personality Projection Test, the names, addresses, and phone numbers of the compatible matches are made available to the "guinea pigs" of the electronic device.

In the final step of the researcher's Boy-Meets-Girl, one particular thought should be kept in mind: Operation Match will guarantee compatibility in the match between one Beatle-maniac and another and between one Vietnam Day-fanatic and other, but it does not afford a money-back guarantee!

If a customer is not satisfied within the first five dates, his $3 processing fee is not refundable!

Letters to the Editor

Ram's Horn

• College Acclaimed

Editor, The Guardsman:

Recently, I attended the California Junior College Student Government Association Convention which was held this semester in Sacramento.

All 80 two-year colleges in California are members, and each two-year college sends five delegates who discuss common problems, then pass resolutions to alleviate these problems. Many of these resolutions are then acted upon by the State Legislature and are written into law.

I was so proud to find that City College of San Francisco was held in such high esteem by all of the delegates that I felt compelled to write this letter.

Our college has such a wonderful reputation that we delegates, who represented you, were repeatedly envied for attending such a great college.

Our opinions were deferred to in many workshops, and it was most gratifying to find that the advantages which we take for granted here on campus are still being sought after by other two-year colleges.

Charter Flight: Economic Way Across The Pond

There are times when a student gets itchy feet and dreams of picking up his books and traveling to some distant land.

But Dan Kardon, a first semester photography student at the college, has been trying to make his and other students' dream come true.

Kardon hopes to organize a charter flight to Europe, if he can gain the suport of enough students.

The charter flight is open to all City College students, day or night, and their families.

A charter flight usually costs half the fare a regular round trip to Europe would cost. The regular trip fare is about $850, and a charter flight costs $450 or less.

The flight would leave, "tentatively," in late June or early July with the return flight in late August or early September.

While in Europe, individuals would be on their own, in respect to accommodations.

Kardon has had personal experience with charter flights, having traveled to Europe with the United States Surfing Club, on a flight which costs him $425, round trip.

Kardon tells of his experiences in Europe, "While I was there, I found I could live for approximately $100 per month because of the lower cost of living.

Since he lived in Europe for about 14 months total, he found out what the labor situation was like. "I discovered, with the shortage of workers in Europe, it was quite easy to find a job," he said.

Kardon explained, "Many Americans do not know about living in hostels in Europe.

These are places which offer extremely reasonable rates, located in cities and on major highways throughout Europe. The cost for living in overnight dormitories varies from 30 cents to $1 per night.

Because the college cannot officially back the flight, Kardon has had to change the original itinerary which he had made but he hopes the new one will solve the problem.

And if he can find some interested students to help him, he believes there "is a good possibility for success."

Anyone interested can reach Kardon through the mail slot marked "European Trip" in Bungalow 5.

For an interested student, it could be a good way to materialize a dream and cure itching feet—scratch them in Europe.

Look Out! Uncle Sam Is Watching You

The day when the young men of the college could shirk responsibility in their studies and concentrate on the many activities which young men are inclined to delve into is gone.

The serious problem in southeastern Asia is coming to a head and many may be called for active service to combat the Vimet Klonk as well as the vicious mosquitos which are the more aggressive of the two.

It is easy to see the importance of maintaining a decent grade point average as well as it is to stay in college.

The realization of the draft is coming closer to home when students notice the dwindling male attendance. The real shock hits the not-so-academic wonder when a personal friend receives an all expense paid trip, complete with meals and lodging, to the Orient, compliments of Unele Sam.

For those students, or facsimilies thereof, who are beginning to think that education is getting to be a king size drag, this message of enlightenment is dedicated.

An education is an opportunity that should never be taken lightly. Chances are that if a student drops out of college he will probably never return. This fact is not meant to shock, but rather to instill in the student the cold hard truth that college is a must.

The day when Saturday's game was more important to the student than studying for that stupid psyc test is gone.

Students Can Send Telecasts To Far East

By B.T.

OUTPOST refuses to bow to name-callers.

If hoping for peace and writing with truth and purpose is labeled "slanted journalism," tough. We all WANT peace, and each of us must strive for peace in his own humble way.

The price of peace has always been high.

Because no one is denying demonstrators the right to demonstrate, the demonstrators must also NOT deny a columnist the right to express his own opinion about their activities.

Many of us hope for a world that is not clouded in suspicion and distrust.

Many of us are not fooled with vague generalizations about our stand in Vietnam. Many of us feel that mass demonstrations, in the eyes of the opponent, are destructive.

Many of us feel that we should become constructive — by building our fighting men's morale, because they have a big job to do.

The avalanche of Christmas gifts, mail, cookies, books, candy and gifts of blood to our forees in Vietnam is significant and ample evidence of the number of good folks in America.

We are saddened by the news that two anti-Marxist demonstrators in East Berlin were recently jailed. Heaven help them.

And all of us.

• • •

SO HERE IS a chance for moralc-breakers to change their tune. We can all become morale-builders by joining a new movement:

A movement to supply television tapes to our fighting men on the USS RANGER and other ships in those dangerous waters.

So far, no other city has undertaken such a project. Walter McNiff, of Broadcast Communications Group here has pioneered a hasty installation of an expensive transmitter aboard the USS Ranger.

"It was a hasty job, but the boys needed some means of recreation on those well-equipped ships. We're short about $1700 and need money to keep sending tapes over there," said McNiff.

The tapes will include football, baseball, news and major television programs. The USS Ranger will transmit these tapes to ships nearby.

Send your buck to SAN FRANCISCO RANGERS COMMITTEE, C/O Walter McNiff, Broadcast Communications Group, 645 Battery Street, San Francisco. Don't send cash.

Remember, they're changing draft classifications. Some donors may be the very ones who will benefit from these telecasts.

Meanderings

By Mike Smith

THIS is being written rather rapidly. We don't suppose it should be, especially this, but it is. Put it down, they say; you've got a deadline to meet and every minutes counts; put it down before it's too late.

Time is a simple thing, perhaps the simplest; it moves second by second, week by week, until it begins all over again with a new form, a new year, such as this one, 1966.

NEVER-NEVER LAND

So what do we do? We rush it like all the others we rushed. We Americans, particularly we Americans, start planning new deadlines and target dates. We hurry through the todays to get to the tomorrows, and we are forever looking to the far-off future and for a never-never land.

In the United States today, one-fourth of all people are students, and 90 per cent of them are no doubt eager to enter the eight hour day, five o'clock world as quickly as possible.

Those who do live in such a world are obsessed with time. Every phase of their life is enslaved by the ticking of a simple clock.

According to a local radio station, 80 per cent of these people are unhappy in their jobs. Their one main and common goal in life is to get to the retirement age as fast as time allows them so they can join the ranks of the senior citizens.

However, much too often boredom sets in, and a tired and idle human being feels that his master is also his enemy and he must kill it; he must kill time.

He may become a constant television watcher—one of the most disgusting weapons ever invented to murder time. Or he may just "waste" time by puttering around and recalling happier yesterdays.

TIME WAS ALWAYS HERE

The setting of the sun each day made us aware that time was here when mankind got here, but no one told man that he was to be its slave. But he is!

The Brothers Four have a current song out about a sloth who would like to do a hundred-million things if he had the time, but he doesn't because he is too busy sleeping. But he is happy because time is his slave and not his master, and he wishes he had more time so he could sleep more.

Starting next Wednesday, that is one thing most of us will be doing little of —sleeping. It will be the eve of the final examination period again. That date is going to stay there, and we have to meet it within the given time.

Getting sick and lapsing into complete idleness would be going to the other extreme, so we have to take it the way it's happening. But there must be a far better way; maybe we will come across it . . . sometime.

Final Exams To Run Six Days, Start January 20

Final examinations for the Fall 1965 semester will start on Thursday, January 20, and run through Friday, January 28, according to Mary Jane Learnard, registrar.

Following the week of finals, the college will close for the semester break. On February 7, registration for the spring semester will begin and continue through Wednesday, February 9; spring semester classes will meet starting February 10, Miss Learnard said.

Registration for the spring semester is open until January 14. Few transfer students are expected since the deadline date is before most students can get transcripts of their fall semester work.

Miss Learnard stressed that no grades will be mailed out to students because the interim between semesters is too short.

Of the students registered at the college for the fall semester, 5075 are graduates from San Francisco public high schools and 1339 are graduates from private high schools in San Francisco.

Another 980 students are from other cities in California, 784 students are from other states, 379 students are from foreign countries, and 21 students are non-high school graduates.

Local high schools contributing the most students to the college for the Fall 1965 semester were Lincoln High school, Washington High School, and Lowell High School, respectively.

Closed Circuit TV May Ease Pangs Of Registration

Use of the campus closed-circuit TV facilities, which will involve a shift of registration advisers from Cloud to Arts Hall, is expected to make the enrollment process smoother for the spring semester.

The strategy to be employed, according to Walter E. McCloud, counselor, hinges on regular announcement by way of the college's TV cireuit, of classes as they are closed and new sections opened.

Assistance of student registration aides, McCloud said, will be a crucial factor if the experiment is to be successful.

Registration of returning students is scheduled from February 7 through 9, with specific registration time indicated on each program slip.

Start of the registration line remains at the south basement entrance to Science Hall, and conclusion of the procedure is still scheduled for the library.

The big change comes in the middle and calls for programs to be made out and then approved by registration advisers in Arts Hall rather than in Cloud Hall.

Room numbers for advisers in Arts Hall are to be included in the new time schedule and will be posted on campus, McCloud said.

Since Cloud Hall will be free, all of the second floor rooms will be divided to subjects and the pick up point for students' classes. In past registrations the Library had all subject cards plus confusion. Now only Physical Education, Health and English communications are to be in the library, McCloud stated.

"We were able to run registration under the old system until the college's number reached 6000 and now in the past few years it has proven difficult and out of date," McCloud inserted.

"We plan to try this out for at least two semesters and the college is presently looking into better methods for the future, which will keep the registering students walking instead of standing," he stated.

Bay Newsman Discusses City's Cultural Role

By Giuseppe Greco

Problems of interest within the cultural scenes in art in San Francisco were described here by Kenneth Rexroth, poet, and columnist for the San Francisco Examiner, during the December 30 College Hour.

Rexroth has worked as a columnist for The Examiner for the past five years and has written articles for the Saturday Review, Esquire, The New York Times and Harper's.

Problems of community reawakening exist here, according to Rexroth, because of the many different peoples in so cosmopolitan a city.

Rexworth believes that San Francisco is to be considered a cultural capital in the nation, comparable neither to Paris nor London, but broadly in proportion to New York as far as art quality is concerned. As an example, Rexroth believes the San Francisco Ballet to be as good as the one in New York City.

That art should expect and has the right to expect civil support is one of Rexroth's strong beliefs; "I do not expect the city to subsidize me as a poet, but it is desirable to have attention," he said.

To emphasize this point Rexroth pointed to businessmen and technieal people who want to civilize the city to a more cultural level and wish to attract visitors and conventioneers in a special way, subsidizing North Beach and workshops in general.

He stated, "Today we have a technological era with different ways of life and an entirely different moral attitude."

Rexroth eited as great problems in the structure of society as being "leisure time and the way of spending it."

"There should be programs with all sort of facilities which should appeal specifically to people who pose social problems."

"Churees have tried to overcome the problem by undertaking missionary activities among the population as it is happening in Chicago where both the Protestant and Catholic churches have instituted 30 neighborhood coffee-shops just for a social purpose, and not to convert people to Christianity."

"There is no reason why a man should not work only 20 weeks a year and spend his leisure time as he pleases.

"Mankind cannot ignore this," Rexroth emphasized, "but it should also increase the value of life to a maximum appreciation; this is the problem which is indeed everywhere."

Swiss Decor Selected For Awards Recognition Party

An atmosphere of Switzerland will be in the air at the Swiss Ski Holiday party in Statler wing tomorrow from 6 to 8 p.m.

The Associated Women Students, Inter-Sorority Council and Recreation Association will sponsor the annual women's recognition and awards night, according to Mary Maurer, AWS president. All women students are invited to attend.

After-ski attire is in order as the surroundings will consist of ski posters and pamphlets on skiing in Switzerland.

Barbara Briscoe, Jeanette Ferrari, Marti Romero and Carmine Meyer will model the latest in ski fashions, courtesy of Frank Jiminez of the National Trophy and Ski Company. He will also demonstrate skiing equipment and the new plastic ski.

The social dance group will present a program of Swiss dances. Members of the group are Emily Brown, Halina Jasinski, Josephine Lei, Larry Lindholm, Janet Little and Gene Moriarty.

Irene Morishita, Jill Wager, Wesley Green, Bob Zamora, Margaret Watson, Kathy Foley and Carlos Cortes complete the group of dancers.

Vocalists on the agenda are Eddy Phillips and the singing group, He, Him and Her, consisting of Jim Lambro, Jon Wood and Joy Green.

Business will consist of installation of the new club presidents and presentation of the Dougherty Trophy for highest grade point average.

D'Angelo, Boynton Win Scottish Rite Foundation Grants

The committee conducting the selection of appointees to the California Scottish Rite Foundation Scholarship last week announced the names of the top four scholarship winners from a field of 40 applicants.

The two students receiving benefits from the scholarship for the first time this semester are Peter D'Angelo and Marilyn Boynton, also a recipient of the Inter-Sorority Council's award for the women student achieving the highest grade-point average for the fall semester's first midterm period.

The California Scottish Rite Foundation Scholarship is one of the few scholarships awarded during the fall semester. It provides $500 or more each semester for students who have been graduated from San Francisco public high schools.

The scholarship is awarded to students intending to obtain a bachelor's degree following graduation from City College.

Deadline date for filing applications for the California Scottish Rite Foundation Scholarship is no later than two weeks after the end of the first midterm period of the semester.

B-Of-A Petitions Due By January 31

Deadline for filing of applications for the California Junior College Man-Or-Woman-Of-The-Year Bank of America Awards is Monday, January 31, according to Ralph Hillsman, dean of men and awards chairman.

To be eligible, students must have completed 30 units or more with a 3.0 grade point average in all work undertaken, and must be enrolled in a program leading to an Associate in Arts or Sciences degree.

It is also necessary that the applicant will have rendered service to the college and to the community, either through participation and leadership in student government, clubs, athletics or special events.

Students will be chosen by a committee comprised of Mary Golding, dean of women, James Wyatt, adviser to student government, and faculty members Laurine Bergin and Wallace E. Wells.

Phonics Test To Be Added To Entrance Exams

Donald Snepp, formerly in charge of the readmissions committees, this semester replaced James Billwiller as chairman of the English department, so that Dean Billwiller, who formerly acted both as head of the English department and Dean of Instruction, could devote full time to the latter.

Snepp, in revealing expanded programs in the English department, said an experiment is presently underway to present an addition to the entrance examinations at City College.

Entering students will be required to take a phonics test, which had previously been offered in basic reading courses, but now will be given to entering students as an aid in determining spelling and reading comprehension needs.

If the examinees score low on the test it may be recommended that they take segments of the present phonics course, English K.

Snepp further revealed an addition to the English major curriculum, Classic 35, a study of the tragic dramas of Greece and Rome, which would be parallel to the University of California's Classics 35.

Snepp, in discussing English as a major said:

"Increased interest in English as a major has possibly come about as a result of the recent attitudes of students who have shown a marked dislike at being treated as an IBM card."

He pointed out that possibly the subject appeals to these students because the courses presented in the English curriculum provide one with a more liberal and aesthetic outlook on life, as opposed to the more limiting curricula that provide one with training only for a specific type of work.

State Controller Alan Cranston To Speak At C-Hour

Capacities and duties of a State Controller will be the major topic of a lecture to be given by Alan Cranston, State Controller for California.

The lecture will take place in the theater during College Hour Thursday, January 20, according to Terence Faulkner, member of the City College Committee for Republicanism.

Cranston, a native of Palo Alto, is a graduate of Stanford University.

After graduation he worked as foreign correspondent in Europe and Africa, and during World War II served in the Office of War Information.

Author of the anti-Nazi version of Mein Kempf in 1939, Cranston successively wrote Killing Of The Peace, in 1945, a story of the United State Senate fight over the League of Nations.

Elected founding president of the California Democratic Council in 1953, Cranston was re-elected to the same post in 1955 and 1957. He resigned a year later to seek the office of Controller.

He also operated a real estate, investment and property management business prior to election as Controller in 1958.

As controller for California, he is also an ex-officio member of the State Board of Equalization.

A lecturer on world affairs, he has also contributed numerous articles to newspapers and magazines.

This will be the fourth and last Student-Faculty lecture for the Fall semester.

AGS Sets Plans For Statewide Constitution Shift

A revolution is in the making at the college, according to Dolores Talpt, president of the Omega Chapter of Alpha Gamma Sigma, scholastic honor society.

In explaining her statement Miss Talpt clarified the fact that the revolution pertains only to the AGS honor society. The society has chapters in 70 two-year colleges in California.

Under the present constitution, which dates back to the 1920's, all legislative, judicial and executive decisions of the society are done, not by the members, but by an advisory board composed of one sponsor from each college. The sponsor is either an instructor or a counselor.

Miss Talpt stated that a new constitution, drawn up by Diablo Valley College will be submitted to the annual AGS state convention at which City College will be the host on April 22 and 23. The new constitution puts control of AGS into the hands of the students, and the advisory board's powers will be just to advise.

Miss Talpt is now busy drumming up suport for the new constitution in the other colleges around the state, for a three-fourths vote is needed by the students to ratify the new constitution.

Miss Talpt praised the present advisory board for working in the best interest of AGS, But she stressed the point that this is the time for a long overdue change which must be made.

CAF Symposium Winds Up Jan. 18

The Contemporary Affairs Forum will present the last two programs in its student-faculty symposium on education during College Hour tomorrow and next Thursday in S-136.

The program tomorrow will feature Fred Reisinger, student, speaking on Apathy In Education, and Meyer Cahn, music instructor, speaking on Inadequacies In Education.

On January 19 the speakers will be Carolyn McFadden, student, discussing Who Runs The Schools, and Darwin Alonso, life science instructor, discussing, The School As A Catalyst For Social Change.

Each speaker is allowed 15 minutes to deliver his speech, followed by a question and answer period from the audience. All students and faculty are invited by the forum to attend the meetings intended to develop student-faculty participation in exchanging ideas and opinions.

Contra Costa Poses First Hurdle In Ram Title Drive

In by far the most crucial game of the season thus far, City College of San Francisco's co-favored basketball squad meets "improved" defending Golden Gate Conference champion Contra Costa in the San Pablo campus gymnasium at 8 p.m. Friday.

Coach Rudy Hansen's Comets won 12 games in a row during the pre-season before losing to San Joaquin Delta, 119-90, in the Modesto Tournament Championship game.

Although Contra Costa lost three starters, Gary Lloyd, the best all-around ball player on the squad, and Vince Clemons have returned and they've brought some help.

The veterans, of course, provide the experience and the rookies have brought the size. Among the newcomers are Wes Russell, a 6-7 transfer from Bradley University, and Don Lyons, a 6-5 high school All-American from the California School for the Deaf. Others are 6-5 Lou Wright, 6-5 Joe Dixon and 6-4 Frank Byais.

"Small" 6-2 Dave Farr, an All-League pick from Ellis High, is expected to help quite a bit.

Contra Costa drubbed the University of San Francisco Frosh, 83-44, in their opener with 13 Comets in on the scoring. Lloyd got ten fielders for 20 points. Don Lyons got 31 in a 105-60 win over College of Marin. Lloyd got 22 points in that contest.

Veteran Clemons hit for 21 points and five of his teammates scored in double figures in a 111-81 win over St. Mary's Frosh.

It would appear that Contra Costa's obvious liabilities in defense are easily overcome with an overwhelming scoring machine.

In the Modesto Tournament, Lloyd made the All-Tournament team and scored 82 points in 4 contests including 33 in the Comets' 119-90 loss to San Joaquin Delta. Lyons had 27 and 23 point games.

Let there be no doubt that Sid Phelan's club is going to have to have a hot night both defensively and offensively to be able to win out over the Comets.

In the 1964-65 season, City College lost two contests to Contra Costa, 89-85 in double overtime and 87-85 on a halfcount desperation shot and they cost them the title.

Four of the Rams' five losses were by a total of eight points in 1965; two one-point defeats, one to the Comets by two and another by four.

It is hoped things will be different in 1966.

ROOKIE GUARD WILLIE WISE lays one in over three Vallejo defenders in the Rams' 60-55 victory over Vallejo College in the closeout of the 1965 preseason campaign here December 30. Unofficially, Wise leads the club in scoring with 220 points in 16 games. He picked up 11 points in the Vallejo contest. The 6-4 freshman has been averaging nearly 14 points a game and is easily adaptable at the forward position. Wise can hit well from outside and has a season high of 28 against Fresno in the Modesto Tourney. —Guardsman photo by Mario Evangelista.

NSA, Irish Cage Teams Meet In Sports Fete Duel

By G. Frank Cooney

A clash between undefeated Negro Students Association of the Club League and the Irish of the Independent-Fraternity League will highlight the Associated Men Student sponsored Sports Night festivities tonight at 7:30 in the men's gymnasium and will be the end result of a confounded Intramural basketball season.

The NSA earned the right to try for the championship trophy by walking over the Newman Club in what was supposed to be part of the Club League playoffs, 90-69.

Actually a round robin type playoff did not even exist.

When the NSA played the Newman Club the situation was one which had a first place team playing a second place team. Normally teams one and three fight it out to see who wins the honor of playing the victor of a battle between teams two and four.

Run correctly, a round robin playoff allows each of the top four teams to have a mathematical crack at the championships. But the way it was handled in the Club League only the top two teams had a shot at making it into the Sports Night gig.

Stan Angel, AMS president, spent a major portion of last week trying to schedule a playoff contest between the Guardsman and Lawson's 10. It was not until he conferred with a sports-writer from the Guardsman staff that he realized that the Guardsman Club was actually tied for fifth place, therefore not eligible for a playoff spot.

The keyed up journalist squad was informed of the mistake and was asked to take a back seat.

As it turned out the Filipino-Americans were tied for third place with Lawson's 10. A game was quickly scheduled between the two squads.

The Tamarans, playing most the game with only four players, completely outclassed the campus police in their pointless clash, 52-48.

Tonight's championship game though is undoubtedly a meeting of the best from each league. The NSA only played at basketball and romped easily through eight victories. The Irish lost only one game and do not intend to make the championship their second.

In other events of the evening the "Boys from Student Government" will revive their semi-annual cage battle against the faculty's squad.

There will be a boxing exhibition consisting of ten three round bouts under the direction of coach Roy Diedrichsen and judged by Terry Kilpatrick. Awards will be given following each contest. Angel stated that "The bouts are under close supervision and their handling is a tribute to the game."

O. J. Simpson Expected To Join Veteran Track Squad

Sign-ups for the 1966 City College track team are now being held in the men's gymnasium and will run through the month of January.

Lou Vasquez, coach of the team, said that there will not be any tryouts for the team. "Anyone who wants to go out for the team should inform me," Vasquez emphasized.

As of now there has been no meeting scheduled, but Vasquez thinks he may have one in late January. In the meeting he will see who the newcomers are and instruct them for individual workouts.

The Ram mentor has a good idea already who they are, since most of the team is returning. Also the distance men were on his Cross Country team.

Most notable returnees will be the sprinters Bob Prince, with a 9.7 clocking in the 100-yard dash, and football star Chris Davis. Prince and Davis were half of the record-breaking mile relay team.

Lee Benton seems to be an able replacement for departed Rod Coleman. Versatile Sonny Johnson probably will replace the injured Chris Ransom. Johnson will be competing in the 330-yard hurdles, in which he set the conference record last year.

Of the two most promising newcomers, one seems to be All-America grid star O. J. Simpson, who should give the sprinters depth. He may be the one who can fill the vacancy in the mile relay if Ransom is still injured.

The other Ram hopeful is Alex Vosher who will be running the mile or two mile. "Vosher came along slowly after a slow start and turned out to be a fine runner, and should help the track team greatly," Vasquez said.

The Rams finished fourth last year in the Northern California meet. With returning veterans and some promising newcomers the team should go no place but up this year.

RA Round-Up To Be Held Tonight

A western motif will invade the women's gymnasium tonight as the Recreation Association hosts its dinner from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m., according to Pam Mauil, RA president.

RA Round-Up is the title of the affair, which includes dinner and dancing. It is sponsored for all members of the RA.

Entertainment will be provided by a folksinging group called He, Him and Her. They are, in order of the group's name, Jim Lambro, Jon Wood and Joy Green.

The clubs which comprise the RA will participate by arranging six aspects of the event.

Decorations will be handled by the Social Dance Club, dinner by the Archery Club, entertainment by the RA Executive Board, set-up by the Bowling Club, clean-up by the Volleyball Club and hostesses by the Badminton Club.

Baseball Signups To Be Held Tomorrow

The first step toward a 1966 Ram baseball team will be taken during College Hour tomorrow when coach Ernie Domecus will conduct initial signups in the Men's gymnasium.

Students seriously interested in playing baseball here are encouraged to attend and prospective players need not have played varsity ball in high school.

Last year's club, mostly freshmen, finished a tough season with a 9-12 record.

City College Wins League Opener, As Torrid Jaguars Fall In Overtime, 66-63

By Randy Koernig

Three field goals by rookie guard Willie Wise and a "stuff shot" by forward Ed Wilson with less than a minute left gave City College a come from behind 66-63 win over rugged San Jose in their conference opener here January 4.

The varsity cagers started slow and found themselves trying to catch up with the small but accurate-shooting Jags throughout the regulation playing period.

In fact, the Rams were lucky to get the chance to pull the game out in the overtime period.

San Francisco held a 55-54 lead with less than a minute left to play when veteran San Jose guard Paz Rocha stole a Ram pass and was fouled while in the process of shooting.

He sank one of two free throws to tie the score at 55-55 in regulation time.

The Rams took charge immediately in the overtime period as Wise hit three quick fielders to put them ahead to stay.

The last basket of the night is something that will probably be remembered long after the score is forgotten.

Forward Ed Wilson managed to get alone under the basket, took a pass and went up and slammed through an awesome two hand "stuff" shot. Wilson got a standing ovation for that bit of cage artistry.

Wise led the San Francisco scoring with 21 points. He was followed by Paul Batmale with 16, Gene Williams and Wilson with 12 and 9 respectively.

Williams did most of the heavy work in the rebounding department with ample assistance from Wilson, Wise and Charlie Parks.

CCSF	fg	ft	f	pts	SAN JOSE	fg	ft	f	pts
Wise	10	1	2	21	Kendall	6	1	0	13

Rams Tip Vallejo, Prepare For Tough League Scramble

City College's promising basketball team closed out its preseason schedule with a close 60-55 victory over Vallejo College here December 30.

Led by the front three, Ed Wilson, Charlie Parks and Gene Williams who scored 14, 12 and 8 points, respectively, the Rams kept a respectable distance ahead throughout the contest and were never in too much danger of being overcome.

Rookies Willie Wise with 11 points, and Isaac Neal with 9 likewise contributed to the win.

The victory, the club's fourteenth against two losses ended the college's most successful preseason campaign in several years.

Despite their losses to the UC Frosh, 68-56, and San Joaquin Delta, 70-64, in overtime, the Rams were able to earn themselves the rank of fourth best two-year college basketball team in the state, according to the California JC Basketball Ratings compiled by the JC Sportswire released December 24.

At the end of the preseason schedule last year, San Francisco was rated number two in the state. The Rams ended the year ranked tenth.

Scoring at an average of 70 points a game, coach Sid Phelan's squad has amassed 1120 points in 16 contests while limiting the opponents to 948 total points for an average of 59 per game.

Leading the team in total scoring unofficially at this time, with only the preseason statistics compiled, is rookie forward-guard Wise with 220 points. Second is veteran Parks with 212, followed by Wilson with 189, Williams with 153 and Paul Batmale with 79.

Golden Gate Conference cofavorite Merritt College, winner of the Dixie (Utah) Basketball Tournament was ranked third in the state while defending champion Contra Costa was relegated to sixth place in the rankings.

Last year at the end of the pre season, these two colleges were ranked third and seventh respectively. Contra Costa ended second in the state behind two-time State champion, Riverside City College.

Other Conference clubs in the ranking were College of San Mateo—11, San Jose City College—18, Chabot College—19 and Foothill College—21.

Golfers Prepare To Repeat Title

The City College golf team will begin preparation for the 1966 season with the start of the Spring Semester, coach Grover Klemmer announced today.

With three returning members from last year's Golden Gate Conference Co-Championship team (tied with Merritt College), the Ram is expected to offer stiff competition in its first title defense in a decade.

Tom O'Kane and Ron O'Connor, number two and three men respectively in the 1965 squad, will head the list of hopefuls trying to fill the five-member squad. The other returning team member will be Mike Soden, who held the fifth spot on the 1965 team.

Garry Mioloca, a 1959 Ram golfer, has returned to the college and is expected to boost the team's chances in 1966, Klemmer disclosed. Other possible players will include Gary Corvi, Mike Hannigan, Larry Surf and Tom Sullivan.

"All interested students in the varsity golf program should consult me before the end of this Fall semester," Klemmer stated.

John L. Sullivan lost his title to Jim Corbett in 1892 and got nothing, as the first was on a winner-take-all basis.

Wise Hits 21 As Cagers Down CSM, 48-43; Record 2-0

Opening game star Willie Wise and reserve guard Willie Jones provided the necessary offensive punch late in the game as Coach Sid Phelan's varsity cagers came from behind once again to turn back College of San Mateo, 48-43.

Wise was high point man for the second straight contest as he repeated his first-night output of 21 points. Jones, who saw only limited action in the opener, came through with nine counters, most of them during the Rams' second half surge to the lead.

In the first half the San Franciscans committed a great many errors in handling the ball as well as on defense and the Bulldogs held the lead throughout the initial 20-minutes. At the intermission San Mateo led by a score of 24-16. Shortly after the onset of the second half, the peninsula team increased its lead to 13 points.

At that point the City College suddenly tightened up considerably and the Bulldogs were unable to penetrate beyond the 25-foot range. Forced to take long shots the San Mateans were frequently off the mark while Ed Wilson and Gene Williams monopolized the boards for the Rams.

It was Williams who put the game on ice with 50 seconds remaining.

Gene missed the first shot of a one-and-one situation as the Rams were holding onto a shaky 46-43 lead. However, one of the San Mateo players violated the restraining line and Williams was given another chance. He quickly canned two free throws to put the game out of reach.

Oni Williams was the top scorer for the losers with 13 points. He was followed byMike Meyer with 10.

Swimming Signups To Start January 13

A meeting concerning sign-ups and swimming season training policy will be held in 107 in the men's gymnasium, during College Hour tomorrow, coach Roy Burkhead announced today.

Those who are unable to attend the College Hour scheduled meeting, can meet with Burkhead in a meeting scheduled for 4 p.m. in 107 of the men's gymnasium on the same day.

Lively Arts

Drama, Music, Journalism Aid Creativity

IT WAS TOLSTOI who said, "Art is a human activity having for its purpose the transmission to others of the highest and best feelings to which men have risen."

Students with the urge for self-expression in the fine arts as well as the applied arts and the lively arts, can achieve this release here on campus by participating in the many diversified programs offered by the college.

But by far the most popular form is in the lively arts which have a cultural value at the same time that they stimulate and encourage local artists.

MUSIC ENRICHES

The College Orchestra gives formal concerts and performances throughout the year, offering students the opportunity to practice and perform all styles of musical works, ranging from classical music to "soul" jazz.

The A Cappella Choir, Chamber Choir, Men's Glee Club, Women's Choir, and vocal soloists take part in two annual vocal festivals and present choral concerts throughout the year.

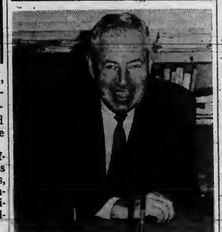
The department of music and the Associated Students also present the fall and spring Concert Series, featuring outstanding professional ensembles, instrumentalists and vocalists. The department also presents the annual Christmas concert.

DRAMA TRAINS, ENTERTAINS

The drama department offers training and experience in all the arts, crafts and techniques of the theater and entertainment. Courses include theory and technique of acting, play reading, speech for the theater, theatrical make-up and stagecraft.

Drama department productions have included Playboy Of The Western World, Little Foxes, Teahouse Of The August Moon, The Good Woman Of Setzuan, The Winslow Boy, Inherit The Wind and No Exit.

For aspiring disc jockeys, the radio and television broadcasting department operates KCSF, the college radio station.



JOURNALISM INFORMS

The college newspaper, The Guardsman, is a member of the Associated Collegiate Press and has received 32 All-American ratings in 48 semesters of membership. The Guardsman is a weekly newspaper entirely produced by journalism students, who plan and direct all phases of the newspaper publication.

The Guardsman is a vital organ of communication of the Associated Students, serving the best interests of the college to its students. The newspaper also invites students' opinions through the letters to the editor column, the Ram's Horn.

ORIENTATION EDITION

This special edition of The Guardsman is published exclusively for entering Freshmen and is the result of joint efforts of both the outgoing and incoming members of the editorial staff.

ON BEHALF OF the administration and faculty, it is my pleasure to extend a most cordial welcome to the Spring, 1966, entering class. We are pleased that you have decided to continue your education here. May I assure you that we stand ready to assist you in every possible way.

YOU MUST REALIZE, however, that this is a cooperative undertaking to which you must contribute your full share if it is to be successful.

JUST A FEW YEARS AGO, students entering college could be quite certain that the world they were preparing to enter upon completion of college, would not change much during their lifetime. This is no longer true for we are living in an age of change brought about by technology and automation.

CONSEQUENTLY, young people today must be better prepared than ever before if they are to succeed in this changing world.

THE PERSISTENT EXERCISE of a little extra effort is one of the most powerful forces contributing to success. This persistence will, no doubt, allow you to meet the challenges of this atomic, automated era.

Time And Place, Cost And Deeds Of Campus Life

For anticipators, worry warts and organizers, seven important items of interest come under the heading, What Every New Student Should Know.

For those interested in details, freshman registration for honor students will start at 1 p.m., Monday, February 7; for all others, at 8 a.m. February 8.

Registrations will stop that afternoon to provide time for any rescheduling of classes. It will begin again at 8 a.m. February 9, end that day, with no late registration planned.

Freshman Class activities as such will start Tuesday, February 15, with a class meeting at 11 a.m. in S-136. Purpose of the meeting is election of officers to work with the class president and selection of a semester project.

Main event of the semester is the Frosh Premier Show and Dance. It is scheduled for 9 p.m. Friday, February 25, in Smith Hall.

For the chronic worrier and others who may wish to know the worst at the onset, the first midterm gnds on March 25 and the second on May 6. Final examinations will be held from June 9 to 17.

Since it is not possible to learn without books and supplies, it might be helpful for all new students to know that the college bookstore, the Ramporium, is open from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m. with the exception of Fridays, when it closes at 3:30 p.m.

Because the campus can be a cold and windy place in the fall, and because the cafeteria is not always the ideal place to study it might help also to know when the college library is open.

The library is open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. during the day Monday through Friday, and from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m., Mondays through Thursdays.

The cafeteria in Smith Hall is open from 11 a.m. to 1:15 p.m. the fountain area from 7:30 a.m. to 1:15 p.m. and Statler wing from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

College Hour, 11 a.m. Thursdays when a minimum of classes is scheduled, provides time for lectures, concerts, plays, rallies and films.

'Big Six,' Council, President's Cabinet Play Important Roles In Student Government System

Student government at the college can best be explained by first noting three distinct groups which play a part in its makeup.

First, there is what is referred to as the "big six." Included in this group are the Associated Student President and Vice President, the Associated Men and Women Student Presidents and the Sophomore and Freshman Class Presidents.

Each is elected by the students-at-large semesterly. However, only one of the "big six" — the Vice President — may vote on the official governing body of the association.

WELCOME TO ONE of the top two-year colleges in California, City College of San Francisco. City College has much to offer you. Our academic and extracurricular activities rate among the finest in the state.

DURING YOUR STAY at the college, we hope you will take an interest in the varied activity program offered by the Associated Students. These activities are primarily supported by the proceeds from the sale of Associated Student cards. As your president, I urge you to become an active member of this association by purchasing your card today.

THE SEMESTER AHEAD looks like a great one, in addition to being the Golden Gate Conference football and soccer champions, we are well on the way to winning the basketball crown. There is a full slate of cultural, social and special events on tap. It is no wonder that the other two-year colleges in the Bay Area look to City College of San Francisco for leadership.

AGAIN, WELCOME to City College—your college. I hope you take the opportunity to make these some of the most memorable years of your life.

Jim Soletti,
President, Associated Students

STUDENT COUNCIL COMPOSITION

This body is known as Student Council. Its members, all of whom may vote and introduce formal motions, include seven representatives of the Freshman Class, seven representatives of the Sophomore Class and the Vice President.

Each is also elected by the general student body each semester.

The AS President presides over all meetings of council and may vote in the case of a tie.

RESPONSIBILITY, AUTHORITY

Student Council is responsible for and has final authority in the supervision of the affairs, policies, properties and conduct of the Associated Students of the college.

"Associated Students" means those registered students who have in their possession a current AS card available at the beginning of each semester for $5.

One of council's major duties is that of allocating funds to official budgeted organizations on campus for the semester succeeding its term of office. For example, last spring council allocated almost $38,000 to operate student activities for last semester.

TWENTY COMPRISE CABINET

After Student Council comes the third and final division known as cabinet.

A cabinet member may either be appointed or elected by the organization he represents at Student Council meetings, or appointed by the AS president. Like the Associated Men and Women Student Presidents and the Freshman and Sophomore Class Presidents, cabinet has a voice but no vote on the official body.

A question frequently asked is: Are the "big six," council and cabinet, all that make up the college's student government system? The answer is no!

PARTICIPATION OPEN TO ALL

All students here are eligible and invited to take an active part in their student government system and are welcome to voice their opinions on campus issues at appropriate times in an appropriate manner.

Council meets from 12 noon to 1 p.m. each Monday and Wednesday in bungalow six, which is directly behind Cloud Hall and the nearest bungalow to Arts Hall.

The college offers units in four areas of student leadership. SL G2. is designed for those students interested in the management of club activities. SL G8 is open to students desiring practice in the organization of assemblies, forums and rallies.

Those students interested in Student Government will be encouraged to enroll in SL G10. This course is primarily for Associated Student officers but is open to others. Student leadership, G16, is for the band.

Lincoln Grads Top Enrollment

Statistics computed by IBM and released by the registrar's office indicate that of the new freshmen on campus last semester, Lincoln High contributed the most with a total of 362.

Second and third were Washington and Lowell with 334 and 317, respectively.

The following figures indicate how the other high schools were represented here: Galileo, 223; Balboa, 185; Polytechnic, 153; Mission, 143; Wilson, 94; Benjamin Franklin, 53; and John O'Connell, 11.

Scrambling for last place were Samuel Gompers and the now defunct Commerce High, with Gompers winning 3 to 2.

Men and women were almost neck and neck, so to speak, in night classes here where there were 1191 men and 1046 women students. Last semester was the first time in the history of the college that registration exceeded 10,000.

With 8577 students crowding day classes, the total reached 10,814.

Because of the accelerated high school programs, the college had two 15-year-olds and two 16-year-olds on the campus last semester. There were 138 students who were 17 as last semester started.

Eighteen-year-olds led enrollment on the campus with 2678. Second and third were 19 and 20-year-olds with 2166 and 1136, respectively.

From ages 21 through 29 there were 2655 students enrolled. In the 30 to 40 age group there were 256. Those more than 40 numbered 110.

Students Adapt, Not Conform To New College Environment

THE TIME HAS COME when a high school education is not enough. Be it technological advancement or just plain status, employers now require a college education before they even give the job-seeker individual consideration.

Students do not usually like to admit that the reason they are attending college is to be eligible for better jobs and therefore more money. They prefer to quote the more-lofty ideals of the desire to seek the Truth—or education for the sake of education alone. There are those who are actually here for this reason and no other, but they are few and far between.

But whatever a person's reasons for continuing his education, one dominant fact remains. He is doing it on a voluntary basis; the time of compulsory education has passed. Anybody on this campus can leave at any time. He will not leave a gap. Annually increasing enrollments show that there will be two new students to take his place.

Entering college means entering a new environment. A person has to adapt to an environment—he does not have to conform to it. There are few rules and regulations to follow at City College, but these few must and will be adhered to.

The two-year college is the backbone of California's system of higher education. It offers relief to the already over-crowded State colleges and universities and it helps the student complete his lower division requirements of a college education with a minimum of cost. It makes possible the dream of a college education to all with the ability to receive one.

But when somebody foots the bill, it is only right that the receiver of the benefits recognize certain obligations. In the case of City College, the city of San Francisco takes care of the major burden of expenses with state funds taking care of the rest.

For their effort, the city and state ask but one thing—that the student receive the best education possible under existing circumstances. Upon graduation, the student is not required to pay back anything. He is not even required to remain a resident in the area that was taxed the heaviest for his education.

The two-year college is a tried and true route to the universities. The time will come when it will be the only route, because of increasing enrollments. A college education is here for the asking, but it is up to the individual to work for it. Learning is never easy, but that is what is offered here. Good luck.

Map Shows Areas For Student Cars

AS Members Have Parking Rights Here

Approximately 1800 parking spaces are available for students driving to the college, provided that the cars parked in these areas have a valid parking permit on their windshields.

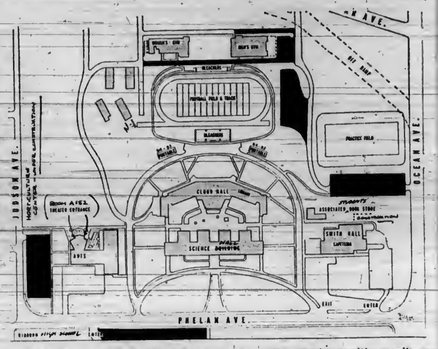
Parking permits are issued by the Campus Police department to those students who have joined the Associated Students. Cars parked in the student parking lots without the permit are subject to citations.

Five student parking lots east of Phelan avenue are as follows:

Parking lot B, the blacked-in area on the map between the football practice field and Smith Hall (cafeteria), is a student parking lot. Entrance to the lot is from Ocean avenue. Walking time from the center of lot B to the flag pole in the center of the main courtyard is three minutes and 20 seconds.

Parking lot C is the area between the football field and track and the practice field. Entrance to this lot is also on Ocean avenue and through lot B. Walking time from lot C to the flag pole is three minutes and 35 seconds.

Lot D is the area next to and along side the men's gymnasium. The spaces against the curb are for physical education instructors only. Students parking there will be tagged. Walking time to the flag pole is four minutes and 35 seconds.



Lots F and G encompass the area between Arts Hall and Judson avenue. Entrance is from Judson avenue. Walking time from the combined lots is clocked at three minutes and 25 seconds.

The "Big Daddy" of all campus parking lots is the north reservoir which can accommodate 1000 cars.

From the reservoir, across Phelan avenue, it takes four minutes and 40 seconds to walk to Science Hall.

All other lots are for faculty or guest parking.

Although the ticket is issued by the Campus Police, it is the same as any citation issued by the regular San Francisco Police force. The fine is payable to the Hall of Justice.

BLACKED-IN AREAS OF MAP denote areas where students with permits may park. On the right, parking lots B, C and D. On the left, parking lots F and G, along Judson avenue. The Big Daddy of all is the reservoir.

Sights To See Around Roller Coaster Campus

City College, located on San Francisco's Hill 29, has seven permanent buildings, only one of which, Science Hall, dominates the top of the incline.

Although true, this is little consolation to the incoming student who may have a high registration number and a comparatively late registration hour.

And a typical class schedule can pose problems.

At 8 a.m. the young student finds himself in front of Science Hall, the major building on the crest of the hill. He proceeds to climb the three flights of stairs to his first class on the third floor.

The 9 a.m. carillon rings, and he dashes from his third floor class and realizes that he has only 10 minutes to reach his next class—physical education.

He then staggers down the three floors of Science Hall, walks out the east door and finds himself in a large courtyard with Science Hall behind and Cloud Hall directly in front of him.

He continues to walk east through Cloud Hall and finds himself at the crest of a downward hill which will eventually take him to the men's gymnasium. Upon descending the incline beyond the stadium, there are two large buildings in front of him.

Coeds enter the building on the north, so he assumes that the place for him is the structure on the south.

At long last, 10 a.m. rolls around and he notices that he has a long-sought-after break. Where does he go?

He decides he needs nutrition and begins to climb the hill from which he descended just 50 minutes earlier.

At the top of the incline, he turns south and walks down a hill where he finds Smith Hall and the new Statler wing directly to the left of it and set further back.

After sipping a cup of coffee in the fountain section of Smith Hall and somewhat rested, he decides to explore. Outside he finds to the immediate east the Ramporium, the Associated Student bookstore. This structure is not considered permanent because of future building plans.

At the chimes for the 11 a.m. class he realizes that he has to trudge to Arts Hall.

Now, he makes an about-face, turns to the north and starts the journey back up the hill that took him to Smith Hall, across the middle of the courtyard and then down the hill on the north side of Hill 29.

There stands Arts Hall, soon to be expanded to house photography, advertising and graphic arts.

Redwood Ram Stands Guard At Main Campus Entrance

The Redwood Ram, the best known symbol on campus, stands guard at the main approach to the campus, serving as a meeting place for students and a reminder of college spirit.

Created in 1939 by sculptor Dudley C. Carter, the Ram made its debut under the admiring glances of the crowds visiting the California Handicraft Exhibit of San Francisco's Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939 on Treasure Island, where it was carved.

Following the fair, the Redwood Ram was formally presented in 1940 to the late Archibald J. Cloud, then president of the college, by the late architect Timothy Pfleuger as Carter's gift to a new and expanding institution.

After an unfortunate five-year stay in the men's gymnasium, forced there by lack of a suitable place to display its beauty, the Ram was moved from place to place as new buildings came and temporary ones went. When the West Campus was abandoned to become reservoirs, it was decided that the present spot was best.

There, on January 3, 1956, at about 10 a.m., the Ram was permanently mounted on a specifically designed pedestal provided by the engineering department.

Carved from a redwood stump, the figure took about 16 eight-hour days of work to complete, and it was carved with a double-bladed axe, some chisels and lots of skill. The complete statue, which was painted Red and White, the college colors, in 1947, weighs about a ton.

Recently, because of an excess of paint that had been splattered on the Ram, his standard Red and White color has been chipped off.

Its future is still to be determined.

The Redwood Ram.

Priceless Rivera In Arts Hall

College Boasts 'Biggest, Best'

A masterpiece by the late Mexican artist, Diego Rivera, self-described as the "biggest and the best," adorns the east wall of the theater lobby in Arts Hall, after lying hidden for nearly two decades before a fitting site was found.

This great masterpiece, a mural, entitled, Marriage of the Artistic Expression of the North and South On This Continent, was given to the college after being painted as part of the living arts displayed at the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939 on Treasure Island.

While being moved to the college at the close of the fair, the mural was insured for $50,000 with Lloyd's of London. It is now insured for $125,000. In the art world, however, "priceless" would be the expression used to indicate its value.

When it arrived at the college, no facilities were available to accommodate the huge mural which is 22 feet high and 75 feet long.

The mural was placed in a protective case and stored in sections near the men's gymnasium where it lay for 18 years.

As the plans were being drawn in 1958 for what is now Arts Hall, provision was made for the mural to be mounted in the theater lobby of the building.

And so with the completion of Arts Hall, the outstanding mural, which is a priceless property of the college, was again displayed after its long period of dormancy.

The mural is divided into panels and in the center one is a serpent-fanged machine god. Around it are inventors, statesmen, personal friends of Rivera and shots from some of his favorite movies.

In the far left panels of the mural, Rivera has created an Aztec motif.

Moving to the right, such great men as George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln are painted.

The Ram was moved to its present location in 1956 where it has staunchly endured vandals and weather.

Rivera also placed dictators Stalin, Mussolini and Hitler in his mural.

Twice Olympic diving champion Helen Crlenkovich, then a City College student, is in the mural as she seems to glide silently above the bay waters and the city of San Francisco.

Finally, on the extreme right of his masterpiece, Rivera showed inventors Thomas Edison and S.F.B. Morse, and Robert Fulton and his steamboats.

The overall theme of the mural was to, and does, depict Pan-American unity.

When asked why he painted himself holding hands with movie star Paulette Goddard, Rivera explained, "It means closer Pan-Americanism."

Success Story — The History Of City College

San Francisco The Campus For 1470 Argonauts In 1935

City College of San Francisco (then named San Francisco Junior College) became a reality August 26, 1935, when the first student body met in the War Memorial Opera House to be addressed as "Argonauts."

Between opening-day formal speeches, 1470 students and 72 faculty members read a newspaper bearing the name Emanon — (try it in reverse).

A high point in the speeches was to become a familiar reminder from pioneer President Archibald J. Cloud: "A college is more than buildings . . ."

There were many buildings, yet each was borrowed.

Morning classes met in the University of California's Extension Building at 540 Powell street, afternoon classes in Galileo High School, where administrative offices also were located. Beyond these bases, classes requiring special facilities found them in from 18 to 25 buildings throughout the city.

An automobile tour of 18 of these sites, made in 1938 by an Associated Student President and a Guardsman reporter, clocked two hours and 35 minutes driving time exclusive of parking mileage and stops at the 18 locations.

Thus, without a campus of their own, the early student bodies could rightly call the city itself their campus, Union Square their recreation center between classes, cable car rides around and over Russian Hill to Galileo a stimulating diversion.

Within 30 days after opening ceremonies, the Argonauts had organized the Associated Students, drafted a constitution and elected officers; named their newspaper The Guardsman; adopted a mascot, the Ram; chosen colors, Red and White, and adopted a motto, Ut Adolescentes Vitae Educantur which, translated from the Latin, means That Youth May Be Educated To Life, all through the democratic process — the vote.

One year later, 40 acres of Balboa Park were acquired as the site for a permanent campus, and on April 25, 1937, Science Hall construction, in the form of ground-breaking, began.

A special bond issue, necessary to qualify the school department for federal funds was passed by San Francisco voters — and the two gymnasiums were assured. So, in 1940, 3000 students occupied their own campus — soon to be dubbed pneumonia hill by the more cynically minded.

For three semesters the new campus, the college's own campus after five years of wandering, was at peace, or at least fighting only for familiar items such as adequate parking facilities.

Until December 7, 1941.

Although enrollment ebbed to fewer than 1000 in 1943, the war years saw the college not only maintaining its two basic curricula, university parallel courses and technical training programs, respectively, but also meeting wholeheartedly every effort to aid in the World War II effort.

Summer sessions were inaugurated, victory gardens of vegetables dotted the campus, evening classes were established, and a variety of specialized programs was provided to service units in San Francisco as the need arose.

Through it all, even though necessarily on a limited basis, the traditions, the activities, the spirit established by the Argonauts in 1935 of accepting any challenge continued.

Campus Hits Big Time With 'Lee' Miss America

Although the college had previously made news nationally, notably when it was listed by Look Magazine as one of the top ten two-year colleges in the country, nothing put it on the map more dramatically than the triumph of Lee Meriwether — City College student, 1954 — Miss America, 1955.

The two years marked the trek eastward to the college's permanent campus, a move that had visual evidence shortly after Louis G. Conlan "came home" as President of the college where he had been a member of the pioneer faculty.

Within two years after his appointment, President Conlan led a building program that was to stretch to the present time. The "war babies" were soon to reach college age, and at City College, as well as throughout the nation, accommodations were being made for their education.

The two-year college, largely a product of California, had proved itself and proved to the nation that every person was to be afforded the opportunity of a college education without tuition.

Construction and occupation were the earmarks of the period started in 1954. Cloud Hall: curiously, dedication ceremonies on April 25 marked an anniversary — 17 years to the day after ground had been broken for the construction of Science Hall.

Smith Hall construction, to house the famed hotel and restaurant department and the cafeteria it operates, was started not only in the Cloud Hall dedication year but also in the same month.

Completed in 1956, and already outgrown as a cafeteria what with steadily increasing enrollments, Smith Hall occupancy was followed in 1959 by the start of construction of Arts Hall and the college stadium.

Arts Hall, 1961 — for the first time City College had a real theater, not too large, it is true, but, nonetheless a theater, possessed of the most modern equipment possible — and comfortable seats.

Music, art, closed-circuit television, ceramics — each had quarters conducive to carrying on the tradition of artistic achievement bravely begun by the Argonauts in 1935.

Building of a sort not anticipated by San Francisco's school department created a minor furor in 1962 when a freeway tentacle chopped off a corner of the campus. The corner just happened to be the site of the horticulture center, built in 1947.

In 1964, however, a new center was completed along with its greenhouse and room for 30,000 plants rescued from the old greenhouse.

Students entering this semester will push the total number of students who have enrolled here past the 147,000 mark.

From Powell street and Galileo High headquarters to Balboa Park and the temporary West Campus — City College is the San Francisco School Department's top Success Story.

The West Campus — 1946-1954

City College had a West Campus from 1946 to 1954.

Buildings, 14 including a gymnasium-turned-auditorium all originally constructed for Navy Waves and situated where the south reservoir across from Science Hall now stands, were used by the college.

With ex-GIs swelling enrollment past 5000, the West Campus era saw major events in college history.

Foremost was the change of name. The hated "Junior" was officially killed and on February 12, 1948, it was City College of San Francisco.

Activities were at their height. Music — Christmas concerts drawing capacity crowds in 1000-seat auditorium . . . drama — Shakespeare, top-drawer . . . Man Who Came To Dinner the same . . . Ramporium established . . . The Guardsman published twice a week . . . campus-wide participation in the music-drama production of Vagabond King . . . 4000 total audience.

And Archibald J. Cloud, retiring as President in 1949, gave this thought in a valedictory message: "Education is not a destination — it is a journey — always, we are en route."

Works Of Art Adorn Campus

MANY ORIGINAL WORKS OF ART adorn the walls and halls of City College in addition to the Diego Rivera mural and the Redwood Ram.

Usually the first to catch the eye of the visitor because of their location just inside the main entrance to Science Hall, are the twin murals by artist Fred Olmstead, depicting a student engaged in study, (top left and bottom right).

Painted in 1940 and 1941, these impressive works were, almost unbelievably, finished by Olmstead in his "spare time," while he concurrently worked on two stone sculptures now in the courtyard facing Cloud Hall.

The two figures, among the last commissioned by the Federal Work Projects Administration, were set in place in 1941, shortly after completion of Science Hall.

Facing each other, they are the heads of Thomas Edison, (top right), and Leonardo da Vinci, (lower left), meant to represent Theory and Science.

For the record, Edison is on the north side of Science Hall's courtyard, while da Vinci stands on the south side of the court.

In keeping with the impressive murals created by Olmstead, is Stanley Sadler's mural depicting the evolution of type and journalism from the invention of type by the Chinese to the latest presses and newest processes, (top center).

The mural is fittingly mounted in room 345 of Science Hall, near the graphic arts laboratory, the advertising art department and the office of The Guardsman, official publication of the college.

Not exactly an art treasure but deeply revered by faculty and students is the college's motto, The Truth Shall Make You Free, from the New Testament, John, VIII, 32.

Other works of art adorning the college's walls include two 40 by 50 foot mosaics by Herman Volz, outside the north and south walls of Science Hall, a portrait of Dr. Archibald J. Cloud, first President of the college, located just inside the entrance to the library in Cloud Hall.

IF ARTS HALL in the above shot appears as one winding ramp — It isn't. This optical illusion was created by pasting the picture in the upper left-hand corner over the large one. Clear? — sure!

Rams In Pursuit Of More Crowns

Veterans Lead Strong Bid For 1966 Track Supremacy

Boasting a team full of returning veterans, and boosted by several promising first-year men, the City College Track team will make a strong bid to capture highest honors in the upcoming 1966 track season.

Coach Lou Vasquez's 1965 squad showed lots of promise on its way to a bright second place in the Golden Gate Conference and fourth in the Northern California Track Championships. In doing so, the team placed more men in the State Championship meet than in the previous four years.

Guardsman SPORTS
Vol. 62 Orientation Edition Page 4

At the State meet, the Rams were able to place eighth among the toughest competition in many years.

Sprinters Chris Davis, Chris Ramson and Lee Benton will lead the Ram attack. Other returning members will include Don Boyle, Robert Reed, Don Shea, William Long, Dave Malae and Maurice Flowers.

O. J. Simpson, City College's All-American football star, and a 9.7 100-yd. sprinter, will head the crop of new track hopefuls. Other freshmen standouts will be Gary Schoelein, Lincoln Miller and Robert Smith from Polytechnic.

There are still positions on the squad open and coach Vasquez expects all interested students to confer with him as soon as possible.

VETERAN CHARLIE PARKS is a mainstay in the club's rebounding forces.

Netters Hopeful Contenders For Golden Gate Title

Ram racket men this Spring will again be strong contenders for the Northern California Junior College Tennis Conference Championship.

The locals took second place not only in the conference last year, finishing behind Foothill, but also was second in the post-season conference tournament.

The Northern California championships were held in San Francisco and here the Red and White took advantage of their home courts and tied Foothill for first place.

Then the locals traveled south for the State tournament, where they did not have one of their better days, and finished in fifth place behind Foothill, Pasadena, Diablo Valley and favored Pierce College.

Last year's second-place conference finish broke a string of three consecutive conference titles for City College.

The local netters lost all of their stars with the exception of number one man George Pontikoff. The loss of Fred Suessman, Louis Engelstein, Ben Levy and Mike Price will be felt.

A great boost to the home-town men will be newcomer Greg Shephard. Shephard finished first in the city's Academic Athletic Association for the last three years. He was a member of the sharp Lowell High School team.

Other bright hopes are last semester's junior varsity performers Larry Peterson and Bob Kypta.

Swimmers Will Return To Action

The 1966 City College swim team should be vastly improved over the last few seasons, a somewhat optimistic coach Roy Burkhead believes.

Over the last few years, there has been a lack of enthusiam on the swimming teams, and as a result of this lack, the Rams were forced to drop out of competition last year.

This year is quite different, since there are 12 men already signed up and ready to swim. This turnout marks a big increase over last year, when there were only three on the team.

As of right now, Burkhead doesn't know who his top swimmers are, since they have been no time workouts. "As of now we do not have any standouts, and they are working out individually," Burkhead commented.

Burkhead has six practice meets scheduled to tune up for Golden Gate Conference competition.

Linkers Seek Repeat Of Conference Title

Once again the City College golf team will make a bid to win the Golden Gate Conference championship.

The team was last year's cochampion with Merritt College, and boasts three returning members from that title-holding squad.

Returning with a year of experience will be Tom O'Kane, Ron O'Connor and Mike Soden, all members of last year's quintet. Coach Grover Klemmer hopes to make them the nucleus of his 1966 squad.

With former Ram Golfer Garry Miolocа returning, and several high school players trying out, Klemmer expects stiff competition for all positions on the squad.

Rookie Influx Puts Cagers In Title Contention

With a tradition of consistent victory under coach Sid Phelan on their side, the 1966 City College basketball squad will attempt to recapture a championship which has been theirs for all but four of the last ten seasons.

Last year's third place finish was the lowest achieved by the Rams under Phelan, and it broke a string of three straight conference championships won in the Big Eight Conference in 1961 and in the Golden Gate Conference in 1962 and 1963.

There has never been a gap greater than one season between titles in the last ten years, so if "tradition" holds true, City College will win again.

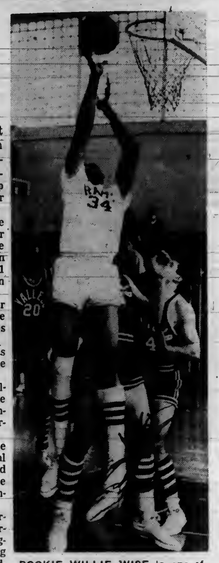
Currently, Contra Costa's Comets are the defending champions in the most balanced circuit in the state.

However, City College, Merritt College and College of San Mateo have been labeled as cofavorites with Contra Costa in the battle for the conference championship.

Although coach Phelan has but one starter returning, there are several returning veterans and some talented rookies expected to put City College in its expected position as a title contender.

Gone are center Henry King, forward Mike Cahill, guard Rich Henderson and late flowering guard Jim Duggan. Cahill was the team's leading scorer, while King led in the rebounding department with Henderson being the club's floor leader.

Returning are veterans forward Ed Wilson, the lone returning starter, center Charlie Parks and guard Willie Jones, who lost his starting spot to Duggan in 1965.



Outstanding rookies on the club are 1965 Triple-A rebounding champ Eugene Williams, high scoring guard Willie Wise, Paul Batmale, Isaac Neal, John Pezzolo and Larry Gray.

Although coach Phelan is considered to have an offense dominated basketball mind, defense is the present club's strong point.

Last year the Rams ended the season ranked tenth in the state in the California Basketball Ratings compiled by the JC Sportswire.

The were ranked fourth in the state at the end of their 1965-66 preseason campaign.

—W. G. P.

ROOKIE WILLIE WISE is one of the reasons for the Rams' contention in 1966.

Intramurals, RA Offer Sports Activity To All

Numerous opportunities are offered each semester to students interested in participating in athletic competition through the efforts of the Associated Men Students and the Recreation Association.

The AMS sponsors two intramural basketball leagues which are composed of Club teams in one league and Fraternity and Independent teams in the other.

Some of the activities offered in RA are coed archery, badminton, bowling, folk, social and modern dancing, and men's and women's basketball and softball leagues.

RAMBLINGS Ram Fields Send Athletes To Pro Ranks

By William Pates

THERE IS a common belief in many quarters that sports at the two-year college level are of little use other than as a last resort for some "aging" athletes who were unable to make it anyplace else.

This just isn't so. It is more than that.

They, the two-year colleges, perform in the capacity of a "farm club" for those athletes passed over by the scholarship-wielding universities to bring their capabilities to the attention of these four-year institutions as well as the professional sports organizations.

In a dual capacity, these two-year colleges exact the role of a "training camp" for these "late flowering" athlete who otherwise would be ignored, or thrust into the background in university and college freshman and junior varsity teams.

City College of San Francisco has had great success in this regard, although several athletes were already "great" when they arrived on this campus.

By far the best known is "old number 74," Ollie Matson, an eventual member of the National Football League Hall of Fame.

Matson came out of Washington High, having broken the Academic Athletic Association scoring record in 1947, to lead the Ram football team to an undefeated season and the old Nor-Cal Junior College Conference title. He scored 19 touchdowns and ran for more than 100 yards in four of the team's 12 games.

Matson went on to the University of San Francisco and fame with the Chicago Cardinals and the Los Angeles Rams. He is spending the waning years of his career with the Philadelphia Eagles.

More recently, former Ram fullback and quarterback Gary Lewis has been availing the 49ers of his talents.

Lewis was an All-American at Polytechnic High and was named 1960 Big Eight Conference Back-Of-The-Year while at City College. The 6-2, 230-pound fullback led the Rams in passing (33-58, 333 yds.), scoring, (70 pts.), interceptions (6-63 yds.) and was second in rushing (45-412 yds, 9.3 av.).

In 1963 he played in the United Football League after being drafted as a "red shirt" by the 49ers. He was called up half way through the '64 season and started the last three games at fullback. Lewis ran for 115 yards in 43 attempts and caught seven passes for 73 yards.

Although pushed out of a starting spot by the talented Ken Willard and John David Crow, Lewis was the third best rusher on the club with 210 yards in 42 attempts. He picked up 319 yards in 25 tries on the kickoff return squad, second only to Alexander, with an average of 24.5 yards a return.

Another professional hopeful is halfback Tom Piggee, a 19th-round draft choice of the Dallas Cowboys who was signed at the end of the year.

Piggee led the Rams in rushing two years straight and tied for the honor of 1961 Back-Of-The-Year in the Big Eight Conference.

In 1960, the 5-11, 200-pound runner picked up 675 yards in 91 attempts and bettered this effort with 742 yards in 1961 with an average gain of 7.4 yards.

Piggee went on to San Francisco State where he carried the load for the Gators in 1964 with 568 yards rushing. He had his greatest day while at City College against Modesto when he ran for 211 yards in but 18 carries and scored four touchdowns.

A current prospect is O. J. Simpson who had a fantastic season in 1965. Simpson set a national record of 138 points, scored three td's in the Rams' 40-20 Prune Bowl victory as well as gaining 948 yards rushing in 82 carries in seven conference games.

O. J. broke numerous conference records while setting a national record of most rushing yardage in one contest with 304 in 18 attempts. The lists of tributes and accomplishments go on and on and on.

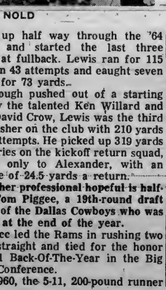
There has been equal success in the field of baseball.

Rich Nold, under contract to the Washington Senators, has had the greatest success. In 1964 he was named the Most Valuable Player in the New York-Pennsylvania League by the National Association of Baseball Writers.

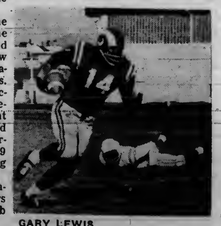
Nold compiled a 20-8 pitching record and set a league record for strikeout with 268 in 242 innings. He spent most of 1965 in the Army and had trouble getting back in shape. Nevertheless, he was able to compile a 5-9 record in the Carolina League, playing for Burlington.

George Case, manager of the Senators Florida Instructional League, says Nold has a delivery like that of Bob Friend.



"It's an off-rhythm deceptive delivery," Case commented. Nold had a 1.34 earned-run average in his first 22 innings, walked two and struck out 26.

Another prospect is George Alvarez, who was signed by the Houston Astros halfway through City College's 1965 season.



Alvarez was named Academic Athletic Association Player-Of-The-Year in 1964 as a pitcher-outfielder. His pitching record was 4-4, but he was second in batting average with a .436 and was the only repeating All-City team member from 1963.

Considered by most scouts an excellent pro prospect, he was nevertheless passed over in the drafting and signing season.

However, he came to the attention of Houston scouts during the 1965 season and was signed for a $5000 bonus and a salary of $500 a month and escorted off to Cocoa Beach, Florida.

Pitching Poses Major Problem For '66 Race

Pitching will be the big question when the Ram baseball club opens its campaign for 1966.

Greg Sinclair is the sole returning starter although reliever Nick Eterovich, '64 starter Hugh Miller and new comers Bill Kirtpatrick (Lincoln) and Dennis Duzdevich (Galileo) are available. None are southpaws.

The infield should be stronger what with the acquisition of three former All-City shortstops; Tommy Callen (Sacred Heart), Paul Giambra (Galileo) and Denny Dalton (St. Ignatius) to help veterans Biff Barnes and Ed Sickinger.

Rookies Maris Pantels, Fred Loville, Larry Bosch and Reeves Moses will fight Bob Farmer, Murray Jacobs and All-League outfielder Barry Carli for outfield positions.

TV Spectacular: Ding .. Ding .. Ding .. Ding .. Closed!

A LIVE TV SPECTACULAR, entitled Ding . . . Ding . . . Ding . . . You Lose, was broadcast campuswide by CBS, campus broadcasting service. The show's story line was the registration gantlet, and Guardsman photographer Cosme Castanleto captured these stills right on the set.

At top left is the campus monitor room, where vanishing classes were relayed to the registration advisers' rooms in Arts Hall beginning at 7:45 a.m. The next still shows some students getting the Big Picture. (Commercialess TV is fine, but when are they going to eliminate those %@!&/$* lines?)

IN THE NEXT SHOT would-be students study the dispatches from Operations HQ. (Would you believe 8 a.m. for English 1A?) The next cut is that of a coed who, upon surviving the advising part of the process, seemed somewhat appalled at the sight of the IBM card room. (Everybody wants into the act.)

Next is a shot of some students at the card desks who, after the first day, were catching as catch can, with friendly advice from the faculty at the desks. But do you really WANT psych. 1-A? We must consider motivation first . . .)

WHILE SEVERAL PEOPLE found it necessary to wait in a short line, spot faculty meetings cleared up misunderstandings. (Let's see now, ah, here it is, imbroglio . . . why, it means a confused mass.)

College catalogs apparently supplied a form of relaxation for the skier's friends, who either finished registration or hadn't started yet, but there's no doubt as to whether the young lady in the last picture was starting or finishing.

Tour Delay Causes Change In C-Hour Artist Series

Massimo Amfitheatrof and Ornella Santoliquido will not appear tomorrow during College Hour as was previously scheduled because of delay in their departure from Italy, Meyer Cahn, music instructor in charge of the Concert Artist Series, announced.

Instead, the artists who will perform tomorrow at the college theater will be Adolph Baller, pianist, and Gabor Rejto, cellist.

Both artists are members of the distinguished Alma Trio. Both are soloists in their own right, and their ensemble playing has brought them wide public acclaim in the United States, Japan, Australia and Europe.

Rejto was born in Budapest and studied at the Royal Academy of Budapest and with Pablo Casals in Spain. He was head of the cello and chamber music departments at the Eastman School of Music, and since 1954 has been chairman of the string department of the School of Music of the University of Southern California.

Baller, referred to recently by a New York critic as "one of the most superb chamber music players to be heard anywhere," began his career at the age of 12 when he appeared as soloist with the Vienna Philharmonic and Vienna Symphony Orchestras.

Baller is also a composer, having written quartets, songs, piano compositions and sonatas for violin and piano. He is at present a resident of Palo Alto and teaches at the San Francisco Conservatory of Music.

Area Coordinator Discusses Aims Of John Birch Society

By B. Takeuchi

History and purpose as well as educational and citizenship backgrounds of key members of the John Birch Society were described in a speech by Robert O. Newell, area coordinator, last Thursday. He was sponsored by the International Relations Club.

Newell emphasized that the Birch Society has four cornerstones of Americanism: "A belief in God, a belief in a limited constitution, a belief in private property and a belief in individual responsibility."

He stressed the fact that his own reasons for joining the society was by admitting his ignorance about Communism even after academic training and personal research on the subject. His quest for enlightenment led him to become a member of this organization.

"We have many organizations that are anti-Communist, but many are not arousing the American public to the dangers of Communism," he said, adding, "our organization is purely educational and not political."

"Unless we weed out all the Communists from this country, we cannot expect to have the sort of govenment we want," Newell pointed out.

A limited group discussion allowed the small audience to participate in direct questions to Newell regarding Ike's loyalty, Martin Luther King's Communist affiliations, the anti-negro, anti-Government, and anti-semitic attitudes, and of exposing the "civil rights fraud."

Newell generalized his answers and cited that students can learn more about these subjects by purchasing their magazines, American Opinion and The Review Of The News, both published by the society.

"We are not against Civil Rights—only to get the Communists out of the Civil Rights movement," he emphasized, adding, "that's the reason we remain a monolithic structure.

"We have to be able to revoke the membership of those infiltrators into our society," he said.

When asked, Newell did not know the exact number of members of the society. Roughly about 100,000 nationwide, but only our leader, Robert Welch knows," Newell said.

Red Cross, IRC Sponsor 'Campus Double' Program

Wallace Wells, cosponsor of the International Relations Club, last week disclosed plans for the Find-Your-Double-On-Campus being sponsored by the IRC and the Red Cross.

American students who volunteer to participate will be paired with a foreign student on campus whose interests are similar. The American will take the initiative in his role as host to invite his foreign double to join him in his everyday activities.

Wells urged students interested in participating to pick up the required IBM card in S-148, S-155, or Bungalow 5, and fill it out, marking interests and proposed majors.

The IBM card asks applicants to list interests in and out of college and major subjects. The American students will receive the name of his foreign double and a list of suggestions of things to do sometime this week, according to Stephen Levinson, cosponsor of IRC.

Foreign students who sign up will find a friend who can answer questions when American customs become confusing to them.

The American Red Cross is sponsoring his program because of its interest in furthering understanding around the world.

IRC's next scheduled speaker will be Levinson, who will discuss education and Kibbutz in Israel in College Hour tomorrow in S-100.

Student Council 'Reminds' The Guardsman Of Elections

By Jeff Kraus

Student Council passed a resolution last week making it mandatory that the campus newspaper, The Guardsman, devote a portion of an issue to the Associated Student election, to candidates and issues, so that the qualifications of those students running for AS offices might be better known to the voters. The vote was 7-3-1.

(Editor's Note: Since The Guardsman has consistently devoted space for all election information of this type available, the motion amounts to an irresponsible "threat.")

Council also heard about the expense account that the basketball team would need to compete in the State Championships at Bakersfield this month.

Orie McRae outlined the expenses for the 17 men expected to go. The motel bill calls for $314, transportation costs amounted to $119, meals total $442, and other expenses equal $100, for a total of $1077.

A motion was made to allocate the money from the supplementary budget. There was much debate on the subject, and Tom Csekey, council member, moved to refer the matter to the Supplementary Appropriations Committee. This latter motion was passed, 13-0-0.

In other action, council approved appointive officers of several organizations.

The Council of Organizations, Associated Men Students and Sophomore Class officers, as well as head yell leader Joe Hayward's assistants, were all accepted as nominated by the respective groups.

Alpha Phi Omega was granted a $10 assessment to help the service fraternity finance its garbage can painting project. Dean Mary Golding said that the fraternity members could use the remaining funds in the treasury of their now defunct sister chapter to help defer the costs. Any remaining money from the $10 grant would be returned to the Supplementary Appropriations Committee.

Council Ron Appel introduced a motion to have a study made on the current styles of dress at the college. The motion was referred to the Recommendations Committee.

Percy Jones, AMS president, announced that the Intramural basketball league petitions should be turned in as soon as possible.

Council Achieves Budget Aim—Slash Across-The-Board

An across-the-board slash of all the Spring, 1966, budgets was made at the end of last semester by Student Council in an effort to bring the total budget to $39,995, within the announced $40,000 available.

As a result of this action, The Guardsman will be forced to limit the number of copies printed each issue to only 2100, Mike Smith, Guardsman Editor In Chief and Publications Board Chairman, announced today.

"In the past we have distributed 3000 copies, but financial limitations imposed on us will make that impossible this semester," Smith emphasized.

The limitation is a result of action taken by the Fall council members when they saw fit to issue a 5.7 per cent cut of all budget requests submitted to them. This action was in contrast to past councils who had reviewed request cuts directly with submitting organizations.

Remaining Guardsman publication dates were also released by Smith. These will be March 9, 16, 23, 30; April 20, 27; May 4, 11, 18, 25, and June 8.

Because of the limitation, a change in Guardsman distribution stations will go into effect. Students may pick up copies only at the Silver Pole in Science Hall or the ramp entrance of Arts.

The Publications Board agreed last week not to request added funds for normal Guardsman distribution. AS President Jim Soletti told the board he hopes the across-the-board cut will serve as an example to future council budget action.

Dental Assisting Coeds Seek X-Ray Volunteers

The Dental X-Ray class needs students to volunteer for free X-rays, according to Dr. Catherine Geissler, instructor in dental assisting here.

Students interested in this program should write their names, addresses, phone numbers and their free hours on Wednesdays on a piece of paper. They should also include the date the X-rays would be required by their own dentists and turn the slips into S-312 or S-222 on Wednesdays.

X-ray labs are held on Wednesdays from 8 to 10 a.m. and from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. Another lab may be offered later in the semester.

This service, Dr. Geissler said, will benefit not only the dental assisting students by giving them experience, but also the volunteer patients "who will receive this usually expensive service free of charge."

Registration Hits Spring Record

For the second semester in a row, registration has tipped the 10,000 scale, according to information received from the office of Mary Jane Learnard, registrar.

At last count on February 9, there were 10,040 registration card holders at the college with more students post-registering.

Although this number falls short of the all-time high set last semester at 10,797, it is a record for spring semester enrollments here. Last year at this time, 9600 was the high for spring.

There are 7880 students treadding the campus lawns at various times during the day presently, almost 700 fewer than last semester's 8577, but almost 600 more than the 7300 registered here last spring.

Coigne Of Vantage

On Top Hill 29

By Greg Frazier

HEREIN ARE CONTAINED a few dregs of information for Entering Freshmen concerning this citadel of higher learning. Upon completion, if read assiduously, the Entering Freshman may consider himself informed, enlightened and initiated into the subtleties of City College Studenthood.

HISTORY: The college was founded in 1935 (a good year for founding colleges)and opened its portals to 1500 eager students. Today there are approximately 9400 eager students. Hence the crowded cafeteria, parking lots, classes, rest rooms.

ARCHITECTURE (Concepts): The campus consists of various halls all named in the hallowed interests of certain distinguished personalities and/or sublime concepts.

Science Hall was named in the interests of Science, although considerably more than scientific pursuits are pursued there. Arts Hall was named in the interests of Arts. The gymnasium needs no explanation. So much for Concepts.

ARCHITECTURE (Personalities): Cloud Hall was not, repeat, was not named after certain weather conditions usually prevailing here. It owes the honor of its name to the late Dr. Archibald J. Cloud, first president of the college.

Smith Hall was named in memory of the late George D. Smith, a gentleman who bore the distinguished title of chairman of the Hotel and Restaurant Department advisory committee and was former president and general manager of the Hotel Mark Hopkins.

GEOGRAPHY: The Entering Freshman will quickly learn that the college is conveniently located atop Hill 29, a very steep Hill 29. Don't try to beat the climb by parking in the faculty parking lot. You may have noticed blue people with silver badges and black books. They know how to write . . .

Freshmen will be thrilled to learn, however, that parking is permitted on Phelan avenue. Set your alarm for 5 a.m., dash down your coffee, jump in your car, race to the campus and if you're a lucky Freshman you might just find a parking space. (You can brush your teeth at any one of the many lavatories strategically placed for such emergencies.)

SCENERY: That large hole in space which offers such a lovely view of the Faralones is called Alemany Gap. An analogy could be drawn between this "gap" and a wind tunnel for testing high speed jet aircraft.

Petite lady Freshmen and scrawny men Freshmen are warned against attempting to open the front doors of Science Hall from the inside.

LANDMARKS: The Billy goat that stoutly guards the road around the campus isn't really a goat and his name isn't Billy. He's a ram and his name isn't Sammie either. He's our mascot.

Council's Thoughtless Action Disservice To All Concerned

THE RECENT budget cut of The Guardsman which reduced the distribution supply of the paper from 3000 copies an issue to 2100 hurt only one group in this college—it hurt 900 individual students who will not be getting a copy of the publication this semester.

Last semester's Student Council, with a share-and-share-alike concept, sliced every organization's budget request a flat 5.7 per cent. What may have seemed like a fair compromise of law-making on the part of the then elected lawmakers was only an act of indifference.

At no time did the council consult the organizations requesting budgets with the wish to re-evaluate their demands. This may have been worthwhile because some of the expenditure applications may have been somewhat overestimated.

Most of those asking for their fully-needed amount of student funds are limited to a particular activity, and only the members connected with such activity are immediately affected by a reduction in appropriations.

But The Guardsman is available to everyone in the college, and a decrease of 900 copies to 2100 in an institution of 10,000 will be noticeably felt. Last semester when The Guardsman was put on the stands on Wednesday at 8 a.m., copies were virtually gone by 10:30 a.m.

In the past it has been the policy of this paper to withhold a small number of each issue for the back-copy files and staff members. However, anyone requesting a back issue after a disrtibution date could have easily obtained a back issue by coming to The Guardsman office.

This practice will have to be stopped, and the supply of back copies will have to be cut down to a smaller amount.

City College students pay for The Guardsman through Associated Student cards, the Ramporium and vending machines. The paper belongs to the students. If they want 3000 copies they can have 3000 copies. If they don't care, then the college government can do almost whatever it wants.

Student Council did a disservice not only to The Guardsman, but to all the organizations by haphazardly cutting every request in a fair and "equal" amount without finding out which of the budget requests were more important than the others.

The council committed an added disservice to every organization on campus whose activities depend on The Guardsman for coverage.

LSD-Utopian Answer

By Rich Heintz

POT, MARIJUANA, LSD and other forms of dope, according to recent newspaper reports, are becoming common routine to the American college student. . . .

A reason often given for students, or anyone, taking dope is that it affords an outlet from a world which can often lack outlets.

But, more startling than their reasons for taking the drugs is their naiveness when using them.

A student in a local news article was quoted as saying that at a pot party she and some friends were discussing the idea of introducing drugs into society to "solve the world's problems." Rather than solve problems, these students are more likely to compound them.

Hallucinatory drugs form a dream world in which the users travel. Already the United States is spending $1,033,588,000 (according to a 1962 figure) in an effort to bring mental patients out of their dream worlds, if at all possible.

One student, who was on a jag, was reported to have been carted off to a mental institution in a straight jacket for a temporary rest, since it seems he couldn't stop ranting and raving about his dream world. In the end, all that he accomplished was to waste the money and time of a hospital.

The use of dope can be paralleled with the use of alcohol. An alcoholic is also looking for an escape from his problems.

It is not the alcohol which dooms the alcoholic, but rather his problems which cause him to turn to a bottle.

Later, the alcohol is blamed as the problem.

The same is true with dope. The marijuana user finds a temporary outlet from his problems and later the dope is blamed.

It is this naiveness, thinking that dope, alcohol or any bottle of cure-all will solve problems, which is so dangerous.

Of course some claim that since, as many medical authorities claim, marijuana is not addictive, there is no harm in a little pot smoking. The danger is that it still can act as a stepping stone to addictive drugs, such as heroine, morphine, opium, or LSD, which can cause permanent damage.

It seems apparent that such drugs, like LSD, when administered by a competent physician may someday aid in treating mental illness. But it's like any Utopia—a long way off.

Less Confusion, Thanks To AWS

WITHOUT THE HELP of the Campus Police and the Associated Women Students, last month's registration would have been a great deal more confused than it was.

The closed-circuit television was a valuable asset, and it saved quite a number of students wasted trips. In some cases, classes okayed by advisers were closed while students were traveling from the registration room to the library.

By using the closed-circuit television, closed classes could be rapidly announced. The coeds of the Associated Women Students kept track of the closed classes and marked them so in the registration rooms.

The Campus Police also did a commendable job in regulating the flow of the line and handling the crowds at the starting point of the registration lines.

Statler Library Offers Hospitality Learning

Located on the ground floor of the Statler wing in Smith Hall is the Alice Statler Library, a part of the college's internationally famous hotel and restaurant department.

This is a unique professional library for the Public Hospitality Industries of the West. In its scope, facilities and material, it is second in the country only to the library of Cornell University's hotel school.

It is named in honor of the widow of Ellsworth M. Statler, a famous hotelman, whose Statler Foundation made possible the construction of the wing. The total collection of bound volumes, magazines and pamphlets numbers about 7500. The present count of cards in the alphabetical file is in excess of 9500.

All of the library facilities are available to the members of the public hospitality industries which is a continuing service of the hotel and restaurant department of the industry, stated Winthrop W. Williams, librarian.

Williams is on the emeritus faculty following retirement after 24 years in the college's hotel and restaurant department. He devotes his spare time to help maintain the library in its high-ranking position in the nation in the hotel and restaurant field.

The library has a collection of every book that has been published since 1960 in hotel and restaurant management or operation. The collection of cookbooks contains more than 150 titles as well as the leading professional books and many regional cookbooks.

The collection has accumulated over a period of 25 years during which the college acquired the leading management and operation books as they were published.

In addition to this initial collection, many students, faculty members, suppliers and hotel and restaurant people have contributed from their own collections. Many books have been purchased from funds provided by the Hotel and Restaurant Foundation of City College.

Library hours are Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. and on Tuesdays and Thursdays from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Campus Survival

By B.T.

REGISTRATION DAY is but another exam: Survival of the fittest.

While trying to recover from that bedlam, some students are suddenly stunned by the astounding prices of textbooks. Especially, used textbooks from that book store across from the college.

America's Literature, by Ghodes and Hart, hard cover edition, is priced at $12.50, brand new. One student bought a used copy for $9.50. This same book was sold in Berkeley for only $8.50, and back in 1956, for only $6.50.

Aristotle's Poetics, a paperback copy, was bought there for $1.25. The disillusioned customer went downtown to Stacey's Book Store, and could have purchased the same book for only 50 cents!

Welcome back to this ratrace. It's for real, by golly!

MORE THAN ONE trembling student has been helped by the college placement office. Honest, it isn't part of the shock treatment which commenced with registration day.

Joe Amori, the placement director, has helped place more than a few grateful students. Underneath that gruff bark, Amori is an understanding man who was trained in behavioral sciences.

Fear not. Walk up to S-188, and apply for that job.

Students who are existing on a net income, within a family of three or more, of $4000 per year, who are American citizens, can qualify for positions that are available in the Economic Opportunity Program. Students must also carry 12 units or more.

The maximum of 15 hours per week, total of 70 hours per month, at $1.42 an hour is available to those students who can qualify for positions that involve arts and crafts, recreation and teaching.

Other skilled positions are offered to students who are willing to work part-time. These start at $1.50 per hour, and need people who are experienced in office work: stenography, typing, office machines and saleswork.

OUTPOST OUTCRY: Stranze, but American taxpayers are allowed to buy back old textbooks. Some people say that these textbooks are obsolete and are sent to the children of the Philippines.

Others have no explanation.

In a little discount store on Mission street, near 21st street, there are thousands of textbooks stamped "Henry Clay Jr. High, Los Angeles," for the special price of 23 cents, four for a dollar.

What a bargain for the taxpayer.

Ascent, Descent A Daily Requirement But No Units

Liberal educational opportunities are available at City College. Of all the courses in the curriculum, the most insurmountable one is given little, if any, credit.

The ascent and descent of The Hill are a daily requirement of each student.

Little consideration is given to the effort involved or the energy expended as the student walks from Arts to Science Hall and down to Smith Hall. Factors affecting the efficiency with which one attacks this phase of one's education are numerous. Body weight, diet, fatigue, smoking and emotional strain all play an important role in the work involved.

Observation of the typical student's rate of progression up The Hill would lead one to believe that the slower the motion the less energy required. This is a fallacy. Neither the slowest nor the fastest walker is the most efficient. Each individual must find his comfortable optimum speed.

According to Sarah Riedman in Physiology Of Work And Play, it takes about 15 times as much energy to climb a hill as to walk over a horizontal distance equal to it. Interestingly enough, walking down, though requiring about one third of the effort of walking up, is still five times as strenuous as walking on a level grade. Could not this vast expenditure of energy warrant some credit?

Its value to the individual is questionable. Approximately 1000 trips up The Hill would be necessary to burn off one pound of body weight.

Puffers, however, can take courage! Innumerable experiments show that the trained person performs with greater physiological efficiency and finishes in a less exhausted state than the untrained person. Those who pant profusely now, may only sigh softly in a semester or two.

Meanderings

By Peter Dorn

LAST TUESDAY was George Washington's birthday, which brings about the subject of soap. When Washington went to the general store and asked for some soap, he got just that; but today there is soap, and then there is soap.

The soap and aspirin manufacturers sponsor the bulk of television air time, or at least they appear to, with the former being the most loquacious.

Pig fat used to be the main source of soap, but anymore is anybody's guess. Soap that is intended for manual dishwashing is now said to be full of skin lotion, while dishwashing-machine soap has water softeners that will eliminate spotted glasses, an evil which has, up to now, been blamed on the machines themselves.

Laundry detergents have certain properties that play havoc on washing machines, which is a fact that the manufacturers of the detergents openly admit.

NO PINKOMETER MACHINE

It's a wonder that, even at this late date, nobody has invented a Pinkometer, a machine that would eliminate all the advertising falderal and get down to the real skinny as to whose detergent really produces the pinker pinks.

Then there are soaps that float while others sink, and yet others that remove skin blemishes and still others that decimate bacteria and, therefore, render the consumer inoffensive, odorwise.

Children have not been forgotten by the soap people. Kiddies have soaps that squirt out of aerosol cans in the shape of a foam, which can be moulded in the child's hand into different forms, or can be made, for the slower children, into a ball which, of course, bounces.

Then there's another kiddie soap that is sold in the shape of an animal such as a dog or a cat. Now this animal has no hair on it but, once the tot removes it from the package and exposes it to the gamma rays in the atmosphere, it will grow hair all by itself.

Although this phenomenon is in itself a clever gag, it is not, by any means, the grand climax. When the tot has used up all of the soap, he will find a prize inside, rather like the one found in the Cracker Jack box.

KIDDIES HAVE THEIR FUN

This is all part of the theory that kiddies must have fun while they wash, or, for that matter, while they do anything. Breakfast cereals come with weird forms and frostings so that they will be fun to eat, while there are many additives for milk so that it will be fun to drink, but then that's another story.

There are special soaps for fabrics, for certain types of floors, for auto finishes, for whitewall tires and redwall tires, for saddles, for sinks and other washroom conveniences, and other special types for nylons and associated unmentionables, just to mention a few.

But when soap manufacturers exhaust their supply of advertising gimmicks, and they are surely on the verge of exhaustion today judging by the bit about the guy flying out of a kitchen or that other stuff that turns into a bird, they are going to combine their resources and make one super soap.

This stuff will be like the old patent medicine that could cure colds, remove warts, restore hair, make the fat skinny and vice versa. It will be shaped like the biblical manna from heaven, about the size of a dime, and can be dropped into any top or side loader or into any bucket or bottle, and it will flat clean anything.

After a little experimenting and the removal of some nonessential properties, such as the one that would make a convenience grow ten feet tall, the Herculean Super Soap will eliminate all of the wasted effort of competition and duplication of pig fats, which effort could be used in getting the real nitty-gritty in the cure of headaches, neuritis and neuralgia.

Best-Dressed Coed Tryouts Continue In C-Hour Tomorrow

Tryouts for Best-Dressed Coed will continue during College Hour tomorrow with the final contest scheduled Thursday, March 24, according to Brenda Jung, president of the Associated Women Students.

The winner of the contest will be introduced at the semiannual AWS Fashion Show and Tea on the same day, with fashions furnished by H. Leibes.

In answer to the search, 24 from an estimated 60 coeds were selected as semifinalists in the competition for City College's Best-Dressed Coed last Thursday.

Eligibility for application was based upon grade-point average and the status of a full-time student.

Criteria for selection of the coeds were based upon general appearance, grooming, walking, poise and smile. Elimination among the 60 participants was achieved through the point system used by each individual judge.

Included among the judges for the contest were faculty members David Spence and Arthur Evans of the business department; Margaret Ancker, counselor; Melia Furgis from physical education, and former Best-Dressed Coeds Susan Schwampee and Susan Roberts who completed the panel.

It is customary that the winner of the contest be awarded a small trophy and each of the runners-up a pin of recognition.

Glamour Magazine, the overall Best-Dressed Coed sponsor, is searching for its 1966 candidate for the Best-Dressed Coed on campus in 300 colleges across the nation.

The part City College will play in the nationwide competition will be accomplished through its selection of the Best-Dressed Coed from this campus.

Poet Ferlingetti Talks, Reads Beat Poetry In America

By Giuseppe Greco

Lawrence Ferlinghetti, San Francisco poet and playwright mentioned in the Italian Mondadori anthology, American Beat Poets, read and criticized his works during College Hour last Thursday.

A graduate of the University of North Carolina, he received an M. A. from Columbia University. He lived in Paris for awhile where he received a doctorate degree from Sorbonne.

He was for a short time an English instructor at the University of San Francisco.

"Poets," Ferlinghetti said, "are like painters. As artists, what is it that makes their works great? Shakespeare for example. How many great poets are here now?

"Those who write plain poetry should all stay home, unless they are very good readers of their own poetry."

Between one poem and the other he explained and criticized his works. Last summer he was in Spoleto, Italy, where he wrote "But the world is a beautiful place to be born into . . ." a theme to which he gave emphasis.

"A good excuse for writing a poem is to come out with your point of view; otherwise you can as well buy an anthology," Ferlinghetti told the College Hour audience.

He continued, saying, "It is important to remember that feelings that we are apt to choose are part of our existence; as for me it is poetry."

Ferlinghetti read passages from three of what are considered his most important and significant works, Pictures of the Gone World, Starting from San Francisco and A Coney Island of the Mind.

Ferlinghetti's appearance here was the first in the Student-Faculty lecture series scheduled this semester.

Meet Your Council

OPERATION Meet-Your-Councilman (?) was underway last week, and Guardsman photographer Mickey Fekete snapped this scene of Associated Student President Jim Soletti (right rear) "meeting" council members Helen Ferentinos and Tom Csekey (seated).

New Booth Gives Students Chance To Meet AS Officers

Meet Your Councilmen, the program designed to give students an opportunity to meet their student government representatives in a casual atmosphere, was instituted last Wednesday in the Statler wing of Smith Hall.

Associated Student President Jim Soletti stated last week, "This is a new program and to my knowledge has never been attempted here before.

"The main purpose of this program is to allow students to talk with their representatives, ask questions, make suggestions, read about all committees and representative groups of the Associated Students, hear about new legislation and learn more about their student government," he explained.

Soletti also said, "The program may stir added interest on this campus in student affairs; it may demonstrate that the candidates elected to serve the student body this semester are sincerely willing to serve; it may begin to stop the apathy on campus or it may just flop."

A booth has been set up in Statler wing, and council members will be present on Wednesdays and Thursdays from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. to answer questions.

Each council member will spend one hour a week in the booth so that students may meet all of their council representatives, Soletti said.

Rushing Week Is Set By ISC

The Inter-Sorority Council last week announced its scheduling of the traditional spring rush starting the week of Monday, March 7.

During next week, women students will be given the opportunity to register as prospective members for either of the two existing sororities on campus, Theta Tau and Phi Beta Rho.

The termination of sorority registration week will be marked by a formal tea sponsored jointly by the two sororities on Sunday, March 13, in the college's Statler wing. The tea is expected to set the pace for a long string of the usual rush activities that follow.

Coeds interested in joining either of the Greek-letter societies were urged to sign up for the rushing activities with the Dean of Women.

COO Names New Committees To Tackle Problems

Though some classes and many students have yet to get off the ground, the Council Of Organizations has already moved into action.

President Paul Shuttleworth, aided by his new appointees, Administrative Assistant Katy Shypert and Parliamentarian Linda Castro, recently established three new committees to tackle some of the more immediate problems of the council.

Wayne Wilson, Associated Student Card Sales Chairman, will head both the Voting Committee, which will undertake a search for simpler and more effective balloting methods within the council itself, and an IBM Committee, which will study the advantages of recording students' activity interests on IBM cards so that names of concerned students can be distributed to the various clubs and organizations.

A banking committee will conduct investigations into banking at other colleges in the State.

Shuttleworth, though encouraged by a COO Day which he termed "highly successful, because of the excellent club turnout and above average sign-up," expressed his concern that the Associated Women Students and the Inter-Sorority Council have, at the suggestion of Dean Mary Golding, declined voting membership in COO.

Seemingly uninhindered by a lack of compieteness, the Council Of Organizations is expected by some to prove to be an efficient and effective "lower house" of student government.

According to the AS Constitution, to maintain on-campus privileges, clubs must have a representative attend COO meetings.

Club Notes: Chinese Students Sponsor Ball

By Bill Fritz

DESPITE the fact that many students are still waiting for the Bluebird of Spring to wake them from their long Winter's sleep, campus clubs have moved into the semester with a full schedule of activities.

The Chinese Club will sponsor its annual Sweetheart Ball this Saturday, March 5, at the Sheraton-Palace Hotel. Music will be provided by Dick Crest, and club president Mike Lee emphasized that all students are welcome. The cost is $3.75 per couple for the semiformal affair.

Continuation of the highly successful faculty-student symposia and the addition to the symposia of off-campus speakers are tentative plans of the Contemporary Affairs Forum. The symposia, open to all, have drawn many students interested in current affairs. Those desiring to take part in these symposiums, should inform CAF adviser Edward Taylor in C-333E.

The Engineering Society will conduct a surprise field trip this Saturday, March 5. At this week's meeting, the destination of the trip and the winner of the William K. Mayo Scholarship will be announced.

With the arrival of the spring semester comes another new club to City College. The Campus Forum, which will conduct biweekly discussions on campus issues, hopes to attract those students who feel concerned about City College, who have criticisms and suggestions to make, but who, perhaps, have lacked a suitable framework within which to express their ideas.

City College's Alpha Phi Omega will hold a car wash this Saturday, March 5, between 9 a. m. and 5 p. m. at Holiday Chevrolet, Taraval and 18th avenue.

For those interested in geology, mineralogy and paleantology, the Pick and Hammer Club, devoted to the study and enjoyment of the earth sciences, meets Tuesdays and Thursdays during college hour in S-45.

The club has been asked by the Gem and Mineral Society of Berkeley to display its fine lawsonite exhibit at their show, March 19 and 20, at the Claremont Hotel in Berkeley.

Alpha Kappa Rho will hold its second rushing affair on March 26 and has planned two dances for the coming months. The first will be held on Friday, March 25, at City College.

A revived drama club has added its name to the roster at City College. The Forum Club, limited in membership to students who have played at least on major role or two minor roles, has been organized to help drama students toward better self expression and to afford them the opportunity to write plays and have them performed.

Piano Player By Truffaut Due For Night Film Series

The Francois Truffaut movie, Shoot The Piano Player, starring Charles Aznavour, will be the film scheduled to start tomorrow at 8 p.m. in the theater in Arts Hall.

Based on an American novel, Down There, by David Goodis, Truffaut's New Wave film is the story of a former concert pianist, played by Aznavour, who, after the suicide of his wife, reduces himself to playing piano for a sordid Paris cafe. There he meets and falls in love with a waitress, Marie Du Bois.

Her devotion to him encourages him to once again attempt a return to the concert stage. But his brothers' criminal acivities intervene and get him involved in further tragedy.

Truffaut, who was born in Paris in 1932, began his film career as a film critic in 1951, under the auspices of Andre Bazin. By 1958 he was in active film production, directing Les Mistons, his first film. This was followed by his most famous motion picture, The 400 Blows.

Soon he was being recognized both on the European continent and in the United States as a major film director of The New Wave school of cinema. He has been compared with Roger Vadim, Louis Malle, Alexandre Astruc and Jean-Pierre Melville.

Goodis' novel appealed to Truffaut's sense of the social predicaments a man of art can become involved in. Translating it into French terms, he has made what is considered one of the truly great films of this decade. His approach is described as both sincere and artistically honest.

Like many of today's film-makers, Truffaut turns the mechanics of the camera into the brush and paint of the artist and creates on film what are now considered his masterpieces, The 400 Blows, Shoot The Piano Player and Jules and Jim.

James Haran, drama instructor, announced that tickets may be obtained from the drama department or from faculty members. Admission is free, but by ticket only.

Drama Students' Thurber Carnival Opens March 16

Drama students are now in rehearsal for The Thurber Carnival, to be presenfed in the college theater, March 16 through 19.

Several new stage techniques will be used in the production, including two revolving platforms to aid in quick costume changes. A four-piece jazz combo will recreate the Broadway score.

"The best career for a female is to be a woman," was the moral of the Drama Forum's production of The Apollo Of Bellac, staged as a College Hour production in the theater, February 17.

The one-act play by Jean Giraudoux was the first to be produced by the Drama Forum, a new campus organization.

In the lead were Margaret Calhoun and Steve Howes, with Michael Cascio, John Adams and Kamron Kowsar in the supporting roles. Jamie O'Neill directed; Anne Crichton was stage manager.

Cage Champions Unbeaten In Conference

Ram Cagers Ready For Bakersfield All-State Tourney

With their most successful season in history behind them, City College of San Francisco's 1966 Golden Gate Conference Champions look ahead now to meeting Metropolitan Conference powerhouse Long Beach City College in the first round of the California Junior College Basketball Tournament at Bakersfield College, March 10-12.

This contest could develop into a battle of defense versus offense with San Francisco's defensive specialists attempting to thwart the offensive power of the Long Beach Vikings, although the Rams are quite capable of having an explosive night offensively.

Long Beach has averaged nearly 95 points a game in 25 games this year while giving up but 78 points per contest. City College on the other hand has held their opponents through 30 ball games to 59.6 per contest while averaging 71.7 points per game.

The loss of 6-5 pivotman Gene Williams, defensive and rebounding standout for the Rams diminshes somewhat City College's chances of reaching the finals in the state championship tournament. Williams, who blocked thirteen shots in one game this season, is as responsible as anyone for San Francisco currently holding the best winning record of any college in the nation at 28-2.

Outstanding for the Vikings are West Virginian Carey Bailey, ex-Marine star Bill Connolly, All-Conference guard Bennie Richard and speedy, high scoring Mack Calvin.

Bailey has scored 440 points and pulled down 362 rebounds in 25 games while guards Connolly and Calvin have 405 and 400 points respectively.

City College of San Francisco is presently ranked second in the California junior college basketball ratings, one percentage point behind first place defending state champion Riverside. Long Beach is third.

CHARLIE PARKS LEADS THE WAY. Rams' leading scorer catches Golden Gate Conference's highest scoring team, Merritt, flat-footed as he hefts the ball for two. Parks led scoring for the night with 26 and took over Ram high-scoring honors from Willie Wise. San Francisco clinched the 1966 Golden Gate Conference championship in this 79-67 victory over the Thunderbirds. —Guardsman photo by Barry Stevenson.

Wilson, Parks Lead Rams Over Lowly Owls, 93-62

By Bill Pates

City College of San Francisco's 1966 Golden Gate champions blasted lowly Foothill 93-62 to close out the first perfect conference season in the college's basketball history.

With this 14-0 season, San Francisco picks up its third conference title in the four year history of the league as well as boosting the college's record in the conference to 48-9.

This rather easy victory was the club's nineteenth in a row, to give them a 28- 2 won-loss record for the year, the best in the nation in the win column.

Any premonitions Foothill might have had regarding an upset of the Rams were quickly dispelled when San Francisco went ahead to stay 16-10 with six minutes gone in the first half. The Owls never get closer through the rest of the period as the Rams ran away to a 19 point lead at 45-26 with :49 left.

Foothill jumped to an early 6-2 lead but a long set shot by Batmale tied it at 6-6 and the two clubs traded baskets until Coach Sid Phelan's club finally pulled ahead, 12-10.

Forward Ed Wilson and Chuck Parks colaborated on getting control of the boards and Parks jumpers from the top of the key along with Wilson's hard fought follow shots were instrumentable in giving the club their lead.

The Owls got most of their points from outside as Wise and the others closed off the inside while Willie Jones and Batmale did their best to harass the Owls' Chuck Deegan and Paul Ramos among others.

City College came out and scored six quick points opening the second half to lead 52-29 and Coach Phelan substituted freely after that. Bill Berger, Fred Owens, Isaac Neal, John Pezzolo and Larry Gray saw a good deal of action.

Things got sloppy late in the game but the club still managed to forge ahead and achieve their biggest lead of the night, 89-55 in the last few minutes.

Wilson, in his best all-around effort led all scorers with 27, followed by Parks with 18, Wise 15, Batmale 9, Jones 8 and Pezzolo 7.

CCSF, 68 — CHABOT, 61

With Gene Williams' offensive and defensive ability providing the difference, City College picked up its third win, their second in overtime, 68-61, over Chabot Gladiators. Paul Batmale's 15-foot corner with 40 seconds in regulation time tied it at 59-59. It would have been an easy win for the Rams had they not missed 18 of 28 charity shots.

CCSF, 68 — CONTRA COSTA, 56

Willie Wise's 13 point first half burst and William's defensive work on Gary Lloyd gave City College a 37-32 halftime lead from where the Rams coasted to an easy 68-56 victory, vaulting them into undisputed first place.

CCSF, 68 — MERRITT, 45

Turning in his second great defensive night of the season, Gene Williams held league scoring leader Billy Robinson to but 9 points as four of his teammates hit in double figures with Willie Wise leading all scorers with 19.

CCSF, 81 — DIABLO VALLEY, 61

After giving Diablo an early 3-0 lead, Sid Phelan's eagers hit the Vikings with a devastating press that gave them a 36-26 half time lead. The Rams hit eight of their first eleven shots in the second period and the reserves cleaned up when the Rams' lead reached 57-35. Williams blocked 13 shots while Charlie Parks turned in his best effort so far with 19 points.

CCSF, 74, — FOOTHILL, 56

City College had little trouble with the Owls as the San Franciscans leaped to a quick 10-1 lead and were ahead, 37-20, at the half. Foothill cut it to 58-49 with the reserves in but fell back when the starters returned. The win was the Rams' seventh straight and gave them a two-game lead.

CCSF, 87 — SAN JOSE, 68

In his best effort of the conference season, 6-4 forward Charlie Parks hit for 28 points to spark the Rams to their eighth straight win, a 87-68 win over San Jose City College. The club hit on 16 of the first 24 shots to lead 40-24. The Jags were able to make but 3 of their first 20 shots because of the rugged defensive work of the team.

CCSF, 68 — COLLEGE OF SAN MATEO, 65

In their most spine-chilling victory since the opening of conference action, City College hit 24 of 30 foul shots, five by Gene Williams in the last 45 seconds, to win their ninth straight, 68-65, over San Mateo. Parks hit for 27 points with Wise following with 16.

In an unusual expression of optimism, Coach Sid Phelan admitted that with a three-game lead with five games to go, "I think we can make it now."

CCSF, 109 — CHABOT, 74

City College exploded with an unexpected offensive barrage that brought them the tenth straight conference win and tied the Rams' all-time scoring record in a 109-74 conquest of Chabot. Parks led the scoring with 23 points. Leading 50-23 at the halfway mark, the Rams achieved their greatest lead of 41 points with 55 seconds left at 109-68 but were unable to break the record.

CCSF, 79 — CONTRA COSTA, 69

Reserve center Bill Berger was at the right place at the right time, as he sank two free throws with 8 seconds left to break a 69-69 tie and give City College its eleventh win of the conference season. Parks hit for 23 again with four teammates also in double figures.

It was a costly win for San Francisco which lost defensive ace Gene Williams for the duration of the season with a knee injury obtained in a defensive maneuver.

CCSF, 79 — MERRITT, 67

With the pressure on due to the loss of Williams, Sid Phelan's cagers came through to wrap up the 1966 Golden Gate Conference Basketball Championship with a 79-67 win over Merritt College. With Wise playing the pivot, and Ed Wilson holding dangerous Billy Robinson to eight points, the Rams hit 31 of 36 from the line for the win. Parks led with 26 followed by Wilson with 18, Wise with 17, 11 from the line, Jones with 15.

CCSF, 62 — DIABLO VALLEY, 50

Unable to build up a substantial lead in the second half, the Rams pulled away in the final minutes by hitting crucial charities at the line,to pick up their 13th straight conference win, a 62-50 victory over last place Diablo Valley. Parks led the scoring for the sixth straight contest with 20, with Wise and Wilson chipping in 13 and 13 respectively.

Spikers Face First Challenge In Golden Gate Relay Meet

The 1966 City College track team, boasting a large crop of lettermen, will get a good indication of the season's prospects when they compete in the Golden Gate Conference Relays, Saturday at the College of San Mateo.

Coach Lou Vasquez believes that the team should be one of the top three in the conference. The two teams that will give the Rams the most trouble will be defending champion San Mateo, and Foothill.

According to Vasquez, the Rams will be exceptionally strong in the sprints. They also should hold their own in the hurdles and distance races. However, the team is considerably weak in the field events. "We have a few good men in each field event, but we just don't have enough depth," Vasquez said.

He mentioned some of the bright spots in the shot put and discus are Tony Tuitele and Lew Duckworth. These two finished one and two respectively in the shot put in last year's high school All-City meet.

In the broadjump, Carson English, and Milt Frank should help out, but the coach believes this is the Rams' weakest event.

In the triple jump, Vasquez thinks that Dwight Tucker is capable of breaking the college record. Tucker, also the top high jumper in the conference, took second place in this event last year with a mark of 6-8.

The sprints should be the Rams' brightest spot. Returning will be veterans Bob Prince, Chris Davis, Chris Ransom, Sonny Johnson and Lee Benton. These five will compete in the record-breaking 440 relay and mile relay. Prince, Ransom, Davis and Johnson will be in the 440. Benton will take Johnson's place in the mile.

There are five cross country lettermen, George Ferguson, Bill Long, John O'Looney, Alex Vosher and Hoy Henderson. Henderson was just discharged from the Army, and is expected to help the team immensely.

Vasquez reported some promising newcomers. They are sprinters O. J. Simpson, Adam Banks, Ralph Baris, Bill Noble and Allen Nassau.

Net Coach Unsure Of Coming Season With Only One Vet

City College's tennis coach, Roy Diederichsen, is looking to the 1966 Golden Gate Conference race with some degree of uncertainty. His feelings of unsureness stem from the fact that this year the Ram net squad has only one returning star.

This veteran is George Ponitkoff, currently the top man among City College netters. The former Washington High star is rated as one of the favorites in the San Francisco tournament and was a semifinalists in last year's state tournament.

Freshman Greg Shephard is the number two man on the team. Diederichsen feels that Shephard will give the club a definite boost as he was undefeated in three years of high school competition while he played at Lowell.

Third spot is occupied by first-year player Bob Kypta, and right behind him is another newcomer, Dave Brewer. The fifth position is held by Quincy Lay while the sixth man is Pete Kleshoff.

In a battle for the remaining positions are Jim Moore, Bud Heffernan and Bill Leong. Coach Diederichsen expects the Rams to be one of the top three teams in the conference this year but he is quick to point out that competition in the conference is going to be extremely tough this year.

Defending state champ Foothill is again the team to beat. The Owls are led by Geof Kerber, who was a member of the 1965 state doubles champ team. Following Kerber is Dale MacGowan, who sat out the '65 season although he was a conference semi-finalist in 1964. Rounding out Foothill's top three is Barry Rapozo, another second-year player.

Also expected to be tough is Diablo Valley College, led by Tony Bardsley, another semifinalist in last year's state tournament, and College of San Mateo, which features Tom Dellontoni, a transfer student from the University of California, where he played on the freshman team.

Free Lance Swim Squad Hopes To Slate 15 Meets

Improvement is the word for the 1966 swimming team. Ten members are reported on the squad, as compared to only three when team competition was abandoned in 1965.

Coach Roy Burkhead reported that the Ram swimmers will not have any dual meets with the Golden Gate Conference. As a result they will have to free lance their schedule with many Bay Area colleges.

The Ram mentor says he has a complete team but has had trouble finding a pool to practice in. "We have a complete team, but now all we have to do is find water to swim in," Burkhead commented.

Topping the list of swimmers is high school record-holder Bob Martin. Martin swims all strokes; the freestyle, back stroke, breast stroke, and the butterfly. Other members are John O'Connor, who is a freestyle man, and Bill Pasquinelli, who does the back stroke. Fred Adams is also a freestyler.

Former St. Ignatius swimmer, Bruno Van Rign, specialized in the breast stroke. Barry Schlesinger is another freestyle man. Steve Haskel, who just left the service, does the freestyle and butterfly. Rich Zimmerman will be specializing in the breast stroke.

The diving duties will be put on the shoulders of Mike Kelly, formerly of Sacred Heart.

AMS Intra Petitions Due Friday

Students interested in competing in organized basketball are invited to join the college's intramural program, sponsored by the Associated Men Students.

Percy Jones, AMS president, announced today that there will be a reformation of three leagues, the Independent, Fraternity and Club, with petitions for each team due in the Associated Student office by Friday.

Ultimate winners of the respective leagues will participate in a Sports Night fete for the intramural championship.

Action will resume this semester shortly after the petition deadline. The number of teams will dictate how soon, Jones said.

Baseballers Show Power, But Hurlers Lack Consistency

After the first two practice games, one a 9-2 win over Laney College and the other a 7-8 loss to College of Marin, Ram baseball Coach Ernie Domecus stated that the Ram team seemed to be blowing "hot and cold" so far his year.

Among the reasons for the team's hot and cold spell could be the 27 players, including seven high school All-City players, who are fighting it out for the nine positions on the team.

Spirits were high on the team after the 9-2 win over Laney College in the first practice game, but then Greg Sinclair, a relief pitching star from last year's team, got bombed out by Marin after only five innings.

Nich Eterovich replaced Sinclair in the sixth inning and pitched a four inning no-hitter. Despite this four inning shutout by Eterovich, and a valiant comeback by the Rams from an 8-4 deficit, the Rams fell one run short in the ninth and lost the game.

Some of the promising new additions to the team's roster this year are Tom Callan, All-City '64-'65; Paul Glambra, '63-64; Frank Grimaud, '64; Ken Hall, '64; Steve Howder, '65; Bill Kirkpatrick, '65; Ed Sickinger, '64; and Murray Jacobs, from the JV's last year.

The team starts the season against Foothill here next Tuesday, March 8 at Balboa Park on Ocean avenue.

Look Editor To Discuss Revolution In Education

By Giuseppe Greco

George Leonard, a distinguished senior editor of Look Magazine, will speak on the topic, The Coming Revolution In Higher Education, during College Hour tomorrow in the theater.

According to Edward Taylor, faculty member in charge of the Student-Faculty lecture series, when Leonard is not occupied with his journalistic duties, he prepares studies on American education.

A qualified speaker on the higher education topic, Leonard as a senior editor of Look, has covered many important assignments and written many articles.

Three of his articles on education won the Education Writers Education Award and School Bell Award for three successive years. Two of his recent articles, Why Johnny Can't Write and Revolution In Education, have been reprinted in Reader's Digest and European magazines.

Leonard has written many essays about the American family, social problems, race problems and foreign affairs.

Leonard is also coauthor of a book, The Decline Of The American Male, and author of a novel, Shoulder The Sky.

A native of Georgia, Leonard was graduated from the University of North Carolina and joined Look Magazine in 1953. He has been the west coast editorial manager since April, 1962, and San Francisco editor for the same magazine.

During World War II, Leonard joined the Air Force as a flying combat pilot and carried out 22 missions while operating in the South Pacific. In Korea he was an Air Force intelligence officer and a magazine editor.

Former G'man Chief In Vietnam As Newsman

David Kleinberg, City College Graduate, and former Editor In Chief of The Guardsman, left for Vietnam February 14 as one of a unit of five Army Combat Correspondents.

Kleinberg, who was Editor of The Guardsman in Fall, 1962, was touring Israel when he was drafted.

Despite this, he said, he managed to return to the United States in time to be trained at Fort Harrison, Indiana, as an army information officer.

Kleinberg said that this is the first time since World War II that the Army has used Combat Correspondents to run the information units.

The units, usually two to five men, include photographers, make tape recordings and work with civillan correspondents.

During his stay at City College, Kleinberg was not only Editor In Chief, but held virtually every editorial position on The Guardsman staff at one time or another except that of News Editor.

Kleinberg proved his ability in the field of journalism not only by his participation with The Guardsman staff, but also by holding a job in the sports department of the San Francisco Chronicle.

In January, 1963, he was awarded a $500 scholarship by the Late Watch, an organization of veteran San Francisco newspapermen.

Four Students Receive Scottish Rite Honors

Winners of the Scottish Rite scholarships were named late in January by Dean Mary Golding, chairman of the college scholarship committee.

They are Marilyn Boynton, Merritt Barnes, Peter D'Angelo and Jobst Singer.

The California Scottish Rite Foundation provides $175 scholarships to four students of City College.

The recipient of such an award is expected to be a worthy and able student intending to obtain the bachelor's degree following graduation from City College.

Old SF Is Theme For Photo Exhibit

Old San Francisco is the theme of an exhibit now on display in the gallery near faculty offices in Cloud Hall, placed there by the photography department.

The documentary photographs are divided into two groups: San Francisco in the 1930s a collection by Emmett Smith, photography instructor here, and San Francisco in the 1950s, the work of photography students.

Included are photographs of subjects which no longer exist in the city, such as ferry boats which used to go to Berkeley and the horse-drawn buggy.

There are also such photographs of men fishing off municipal pier, old folks at Union Square, the fun House, and people downtown. All are everyday scenes set in an older setting, Smith said.

'Fire Science' Program Due

New Course To Be Similar To Criminology

A program in fire science will be added to the curriculum at City College starting in the Fall semester of 1966, Louis F. Batmale, coordinator of Technical-Terminal Education, reported last week.

The new curriculum has been added as the result of a study made at the request of San Francisco Fire Chief William F. Murray. Murray's request was in the form of possibility of inaugurating a two-year program which would prepare students for a career in fire control.

About 50 students are expected to enroll in the program in its first semester of existence.

The study was conducted by an advisory committee which included Murray, City College administrators Louis G. Conlan, president, Harry Buttimer, dean of instruction, Batmale, and 10 city and state officials.

At a luncheon where the new program was described, Mayor John F. Shelley commented, "It is vital that this sort of program be started." He further stated that he thought it would enable more members of minority groups to qualify as San Francisco firemen.

The fire science course of study at City College will include training in the principal fields of fire science technology and instruction in general education, Batmale said.

There will be 12 courses offered in the fire science program.

They will include an introduction to fire science, instruction in the use of fire apparatus equipment, fundamentals of fire protection, rescue practices, codes and ordinances related to fire control, physical science of fire technology — a two-semester course — fire hydraulics and building construction for fire protection.

The course of study is designed so that students may satisfy the requirements for graduation from the college and is similar to the semiprofessional program offered here in criminology.

"It should be noted," Batmale said, "that City College is something of a pioneer in semiprofessional programs of this sort among the community colleges."

The college's criminology program, which was established in 1946, has served Bay Area communities as a training ground for prospective law enforcement officers, as well as in-service training for men actively engaged in the field.

In the 20 years since the inception of the college's criminology program, more than 2000 students have found employment in law enforcement agencies. One-half of the members of the Daly City and Pacifica police forces are graduates of the City College criminology curriculum.

Local Man, Woman Of-Year Selected

Jim Soletti, Associated Student president, and Dolores Talpt, president of Alpha Gamma Sigma, were selected to represent the college this Saturday in Northern California competition as candidates for the Bank of America Man-and-Woman-of-the-Year awards.

Competition is at the Cabana Hotel in Palo Alto.

The nominees, chosen for their outstanding activity, service and academic records, will be appraised by a panel of judges on the merits of these records.

By being selected for Woman-of-the-Year consideration, Miss Talpt has added another distinction to an already long list of achievements.

In addition to being president of the Omega chapter of Alpha Gamma Sigma, which she and her fellow members have raised to a high level of service to the college and which will host the State Honor Society convention this April, she is a member of the President's Cabinet, acting as High School Liaison officer, has produced an outstanding academic showing and is president of the California scholastic society.

Soletti's nomination bears an equally impressive service and academic record.

Besides fulfilling his duties as AS President, Soletti has served City College as Publicity Chairman, Freshman Class President, Sophomore Councilman and chairman of the constitution committee which prepared a revised Associated Student constitution late last semester.

Approval of the revised constitution is pending.

He is also a member of the scholastic honor society and served as a workshop leader at the California Junior College Student Government Association's semiannual convention in Sacramento last year.

Dean Mary Golding, Student Government adviser Jim Wyatt and faculty members Laurine Bergin and Wallace E. Wells composed the selection panel.

Council Finances Basketball Team's Trip To Bakersfield

By Jeff Kraus

Student Council last Wednesday voted to allocate $1677 to the basketball team and the pep band for their trip to Bakersfield for the State Basketball Championships.

Tom Csekey, chairman of the supplementary budget appropriations committee, reported that his committee decided to recommend allocation of $1077 to the basketball team for the trip. This was passed by council, 13-0-0.

Csekey also recommended to council that an allocation of $600 be made to the pep band to accompany the team to Bakersfield.

This brought Jerry Dresner to his feet in disapproval. Dresner, former Reform On Campus candidate for Student Council, stated that he felt that the expenditure was a waste of money, because the pep band wouldn't help the team that much, nor would they make any great impression on the southern college.

A vote was called for, and the motion to allocate the funds was passed by council, 12-0-2.

Council also selected the three delegates to attend the annual state conference in San Diego March 31. Ernie Woodcock, Chris Scales and Csekey were selected, with Helen Ferentinos as the alternate.

The recommendations committee reported that a survey questionnairr is being drafted concerning campus dress and Statler wing.

The survey will question current styles of dress, the possibility of having Statler wing open until 5 instead of 3 p.m., and other matters pertaining to campus affairs. No date was given as to when the survey will be completed.

Council gave its approval to the Frosh Class officers by a 14-0-1 vote. Frosh Class President Ernie Woodcock asked for the approval.

The dance, the Frosh Premiere Show and Dance, was held on February 25 in Smith Hall. Another activity is being planned for the near future, but nothing is definite as of yet, President Woodcock reported.

In another resolution, Student Council commended the work and extended "good wishes" to Louis Wurdinger, chief campus custodian. Wurdinger retired February 28, after 20 years with the college.

Find-Your-Double Program Orients Foreign Students

The Find-Your-Double-On-Campus program, sponsored by the International Relations Club and the Red Cross, is still underway, Wallace E. Wells, co-sponsor of IRC, said today.

So far 34 American students and 18 foreign students have signed the IBM questionnaires to meet their double, Robert Simpkins, president of IRC said, but, he emphasized, it is still too early to tell the results.

Simpkins again stressed, "this is not a dating game and should not be confused with Operation Match. It is instead a way of making friends with foreign-born students preferably of ones own sex."

Since this idea is sponsored by a member of the Council of Organizations, it is hoped members of other groups in the COO will take an interest in this unique idea, Simpkins said.

Find-Your-Double is based on the same idea as Big Brothers and Big Sisters and considered important for the orientation of foreign students. "The American student is doing a real service because these newcomers come to us lonely, shy, and friendless and they can find a friend in understanding America," commented Wells.

This semester's IRC officers are Simpkins, president, Jaime Perez, vice president, and Lizzy Brown, secretary. All three are pushing this and other IRC activities.

The American Red Cross is sponsoring this program because of its interest in furthering understanding around the world.

Nostalgia Parade

By Greg Frazier

TURN ON THE TV, pick up a magazine, stroll down to the local botique and return with us to the thrilling days of yesteryear. Witness the Nostalgia Parade pass romantically before the public eye.

Batman (Holy bottlecaps, Batman, you're super!) The Original Old Radio Game (who had the power to cloud men's minds?) What's Playing At The Movies? (Charlie Chan's chauffeur was named after what American city?) Tiffany lamps ($49.95 at the Big E.)

P. S. (Don Sturdy and the 30,000 Series Books); Camp (Thomas E. Dewey buttons); High Camp (Thomas E. Dewey), What Ever Happened To? (What ever happened to fox fur pieces with fox faces and fox paws that ladies wore around their necks?) Wayne Manor ($2 Cover, No Minimum) Granny gowns, Theatre Five, Neo-Victorian Art, Old Comic Books . . .

The Media, always ready to grab a Good Thing, has picked it up and passed it on to Mr. & Mrs. America and all the ships at sea. It has arrived. But why?

Why all the enthusiasm for remnants of things past? TV aside, genuine trivia is a rarity in these cybernated, hydrogenated times. The adventures of Batman are infinitely more condusive to peace of mind than the adventures of the VC. And memories are made of this sort of stuff. Sweet memories of mommies and daddies, penny candy, orange crate coasters and Captain Midnight. In other words, Youth can be bought, and enjoyed, at reasonable prices.

Today's Nostalgia Parade emerged immediately before, during, or after WW II; a time of Purpose, Patriotism and Clearly Defined Goals. (What ever happened to Fireside Chats?) Long lines of eager young men waited impatiently outside recruiting offices. For the very young, Hitler, Tojo and Mussolini were faces you threw rings at on the Merry-go-round.

Imagination played a great role in those days. Voices on the radio could conjure up gangsters, ghouls and Flash Gordon if you were a boy; princes, proms and Corliss Archer if you were a girl.

With a little imagination a couple of kids could take a cork, some tape and an old broom handle and have a great game of stickball. (What ever happened to stickball?)

A smart fellow like Freud could do a profound treatise on the role of the Super-Hero in the Nostalgia Parade. (Incidentally, don't take any of TV's Super-Heroes seriously until they come out with a nonanimated version of Plastic Man!)

Adults can now read comic books "in the interest of research." In their youth, many adults could do this only under the covers of a large geography book.

Nostalgia is good news; it's something you have that's uniquely your own, that makes you feel good all over, something they can't take away from you.

Soon the Nostalgia Parade will pass into the mists of memory. Of course, there's always tomorrow!

Brand X Anybody?

By Rich Heintz

IT ALL began about three months back. They were a quiet family, like so many in America, who were generally satisfied with their life as it was until something happened which shook their security.

A woman ventured into the family's neighborhood one day, in search of volunteers to participate in a survey, testing a new brand of cereal on the market, but known to the taste-testers as "Brand X."

The woman had stated clearly that there was no obligation involved, but the mother in this family, she who had answered the door, realized that there was indeed an obligation involved; an obligation which she owed her countrymen.

Her family had often discussed how important surveys were, Surveys were necessary to tell the American public which politicians they liked, necessary to help decide which toothpaste was best, imperative in deciding which TV shows were popular.

They too realized the weight of the matter and proceeded to carry on a rigid appraisal of the cereal, taking pains to eliminate any prejudice.

They ate the cereal in separate rooms and at different times of day. They ate the cereal with sugar and they ate it without. They ate it with milk or straight. And never, when together, did they allow themselves to discuss the "case." It was to be an unbiased jury making this decision.

After a month their verdict was in—the cereal was without doubt one of the most "terrific they had ever tasted. They gave this information to the ever-so friendly woman who was nice enough to let them participate.

But then something happened.

No longer were they positive about politicians that the surveys supported. No longer could they be a confident one-toothpaste family. And no longer were arguments over television settled by a ratings sheet. They had undertaken the task with patriotism, but now they felt treasonous.

What had killed their enthusiasm?

It seems that a few months after the survey, while a member of the family was cleaning out a cupboard, he came across a long overlooked item.

Stuffed in a corner was a half-full box of that "terrific" new Brand X cereal.

Undefined Duties Put Intra Program In State Of Confusion

WITH THE intramural basketball season about to begin, The Guardsman expresses its appreciation to all those involved in the program. But The Guardsman would hate to see it marred by carelessness.

Supposedly, one of the primary functions of the AMS office is to regulate the intramural basketball games such as keeping "official" records and providing scorekeepers for all of the games. The AMS president is given the power to appoint an assistant to help him with these obligations.

Confusion often sets in when both officers fail to clearly define where each of their responsibilities lies in the operation of the intramural program. Such confusion was the launching pad to a complicated state of misunderstanding and a mass mix-up concerning last semester's program.

One recent AMS officer rocketed off this launching pad of confusion into a position whereby the office of the AMS was a laughing stock at the end of the semester. Not only that, six basketball teams were left in a league not knowing where they stood.

Only the first-place undefeated squads knew their true records. The other team won-lost marks were fouled-up because of inadequate record keeping and reversing of protested games that had been previously won, through errors in faulty scoring by AMS officials.

Not only this, because of the incorrect standings, which were discovered by a Guardsman reporter, there was a coin-flipping ceremony which was to decide who would participate in the scheduled playoffs. A few hours before the playoff game was to begin, it was noticed that the wrong team was in the playoffs, and the team that really should have been playing had an inaccurate won-lost record in the standings. AMS was notified, and the correct teams got their chance in a by-then meaningless playoff.

Because of the mixup, there was no longer time to finish the schedule of the playoff round-robin which was overwhelmingly unfair to some teams.

If a candidate is going to run for the AMS spot in the elections, he should accept the responsibilities of the office and not pass the buck to an "appointive" assistant or ignore his obligations to those participating in the intramural program who voted him into the office in the first place.

This is all in the past, but it has been repeated much too often in recent years. All we can say is that we honestly hope and are confident that such a situation does not happen again.

City College Aids With Dimes

REMEMBER WHEN the March of Dimes during the early 1950s went on an all-out war against poliomyelitis—more commonly known as polio?

And can you recall that during those times many of the grammar schools gave kids March of Dimes cards with slots—for a great many ten-cent pieces—that often took a great effort to fill.

At that time the number of people, especially young people and infants, stricken with the crippling disease appeared to be so great that many of us believed that the March of Dimes would always be fighting polio. But we were wrong because those dimes helped find a vacine—yet even today it is hard to disassociate the word polio from the March of Dimes.

As in 1950, there are those who believe that we will be fighting this one foe—a primary enemy of the March of Dimes—for a long time to come.

But as long as there are good people, like the students in City College who gave more than a total of $300 for the fourth year in a row to the Phi Beta Delta-sponsored Mile of Dimes drive, who believe in the optimism of the March of Dimes, that institution is soon going to have to look for another disease to counter-attack.

Influenza Adds Diversity To Class Absentee Excuses

By Connie Skipitares

Students suffering from headcold's misery, nagging cough spasms, distress in the lower tract, and four days loss of class work, have probably contracted what is commonly referred to by physicians as Haemophilus Influenzae, or translated into laymen's terms: Type A, Asian Flu.

Haemophilus Influenzae, so named for the miscroscopic virus which carries the disease, has been blamed for the recent shock the California schools have received from the great proportion of absenteeism left in its wake.

City College proved to be no exception to the raging epidemic as it reported a 25 per cent decrease in attendance for the past two weeks because of Influenza.

The college's attendance office devotes approximately six hours each day to the purpose of clearing excused absenses. Within a period of one hour, 100 flu cases were reported out of 125 illness excuses received by the attendance office.

A not-too-close runner-up to the flu was the "common cold," currently the second most popular illness, but a usual off-season first-placer. Ranking third was the "sore throat," with a close competitor, the draft reclassification, clinching fourth place.

To add a little abstract taste for contrast, among the "excuses" were a few scattered "food-poisonings," "deaths-in-the family," and one "slashing of the wrists."

Among the 364 instructors at the college, a reported 10 per cent was stricken by the influenza bug in one week alone, as compared to the usual three per cent absent.

Aloha's Program

By B.T.

THE STATE of Hawaii merits the name, The Aloha State.

Aloha's deepest meaning is friendship, and the friendly people of this paradise are demonstrating their Aloha for the people of South Vietnam by a campaign called Operation Helping Hand.

Major General Fred C. Weyland, commander of the 25th "Tropic Lightning" Infantry Division is insuring that the Vietnamese people will receive each item. Some will be hand carried by troops going there, but most of these will be shipped out.

The Army, National Guard and a local trucking firm are aiding in pick-ups. Barges from neighboring islands have already brought over 50 tons of goods to Honolulu. Busy women's organizations, veterans' wives, and other volunteering groups are busily sorting out items.

Collection points included every firehouse, school and supermarket. Blind children arrived at school with their donations of buttons and soap. Men, women and children have already donated tons of soap, tooth brushes, toothpaste, books, tools, clothing, medical supplies, towels, mosquito nets, surgical scissors, screening material, treadle-type sewing machines, gardening implements, canned goods, flashlights, mirrors, clocks, crutches, tropical garden seeds and National Geographic Magazines.

It was reported that villagers in Cuchi, Vietnam, were all smiles when these gifts of Aloha arrived from Hawaii.

OUTCRY: Send donations of soap and stuff to Operation Helping Hand, A.P.O., U.S. Forces, 96225.

WORKING PART-TIME and studying full-time can become quite a weary life. By 8 p. m. March 16, 17, 18, and 19, students can use a few laughs. For free.

See The Thurber Carnival here at the theater.

Two 12' revolving stages are being designed by Paul Crowley and Victor Vaio, and will be used in this presentation. Even the revolving stages, a first attempt at this college, will be worth seeing.

The show promises more than a few chuckles. James Thurber's humor is being projected by Blanche Richardson, Lana Tershy, Diane Nichols, Phyllis Melman, Jack Ellis, Mike Cascio, Al Melodia, Mike Bottero and Mel Beechman.

Anne Chrichton serves as stage manager. James Haran is director.

Cine-Art

Brazil's Cangaceiro

By Albert Hilliard Hughes

ALTHOUGH Brazil has been producing films almost as long as other countries, it has failed to compete in the U.S. film market because of the intense realism of most of its films. Since 1954 such films as the Oscar-winning Black Orpheus and Cangaceiro have been imported.

The latter will be shown tomorrow night in the theater. Free tickets are available in the drama department with admission by ticket only.

Cangaceiro, originally released in 1954, has received less recognition. In conception it is akin to our American Western film, and in its intense portrayal of familiar types, it is somewhat superior in execution.

Lima Barreto, the director, is equal to many of the better known directors here and abroad. He infuses his film with a primitive savagery which is almost poetically beautiful.

His depiction of the bandits and their cruel, brutal lives is seldom encountered in a comparable movie in the U.S. Added to this is the remarkable and exciting cinematography, which creates some of the most startlingly realistic scenes ever put on film.

The orginal story and screenplay are by the director and, briefly, is the tale of a bandit who lives by force and necessity.

One day on a raid he kidnaps the local school-teacher. Alberto Rushel, another of the bandits comes to her aid, which creates trouble.

Brazilian acting tends toward naturalism, and there is a noticeable lack of pretentiousness by the whole cast. It is partly this natural acting style which was instrumental in bringing Brazilian films to the attention of U.S. film goers and critics. Cangaceiro is all the more rewarding for this reason.

In its review of the film, The New York Post said, "The life of the bandits is portrayed with murderous realism . . . well worth the attention of all who seek fresh experience in the movies."

Meanderings

By Peter Dorn

FEBRUARY '66 will probably be remembered for its flu and nude parties; that is, if anybody will care to remember February '66 at all.

Perhaps someone may be wondering about the juxtaposition of the nude party to the flu; after all, the flu is generally defined as a complicated cold, and what better way is there to catch a cold than to sit around all night without any clothes?

Of course it is ridiculous to conclude, and perhaps even libelous, that anyone who may have been afflicted with the flu last month has been attending nude parties, but the thought may give some readers grounds for a good mental laugh.

It's interesting to note that the idea of a nude party, which is rumored to be the new Bay Area fad, appears to convey a humorous note. Nine out of ten students, at the mention of the nude party, reacted with a big grin (the tenth being an exchange student unfamiliar with some of the American words.)

What it is that's so funny about a bunch of people sitting around without any clothes on is open for speculation. Nobody laughs at nudist camps whose supporters claim to be receiving all the benefits of the sun and fresh air at 100 per cent intake efficiency. Yet a nude party, equipped with an infrared lamp and open windows, still gets a big laugh. People are funny.

All points considered, the nude party seems to be an uncomfortable event. Some people are naturally shy, and such a party would appear to hamper these people all the more.

And for those people who still smoke, despite the warnings on the packages, where would they carry their cigarettes and matches?

(There was a funny about a doctor who said that living in smoggy Los Angeles was equivalent to smoking two packages of cigarettes a day, to which a wit replied that perhaps some appropriate label should be posted at the city limits reading: Living here may be hazardous to your health.)

At any party someone usually gets a hole burned in an expensive sport jacket, but at the nude party, what? And the slightest draft could cause a bad sacroilliac, a condition that is difficult to explain even under normal circumstances.

It's a touchy subject, this.

Thurber Carnival Scheduled To Open Next Wednesday

By Margarita Botelho

The drama department production of The Thurber Carnival opens a four-night run on next Wednesday, March 16, in the college theater.

James Haran, director of the play, said curtain time is 8 p.m.

Based on the short stories, anecdotes, and cartoon captions of James Thurber, foremost American humorist, this hilarious comedy includes some of his funniest creations, such as The Secret Life of Walter Mitty, Unicorn in the Garden and The Pet Parade.

"In Thurber Carnival we are also featuring something unusual for our productions: a four-piece combo composed of city college students," Haran stated. The members of the combo are Bruce Felter on the drums, Al Perez on the vibraharp, Warner Brant on the bass and Bill Swartz on the guitar.

There is also another unusual feature. The dual-revolving stage will be used for rapid change of scenery.

The cast includes veteran actresses Phyllis Melmon, Lana Tershy, and Blanche Richardson who are joined by veteran actors Mike Cascio and Jack Ellis. New faces on the city college stage include Al Melodia, Mike Bottero, Mel Beechman, Diane Nichols.

The original New York production in 1960 featured Thurber playing himself for a time. Other stars included Tom Ewell, Paul Ford and Alice Ghostley. The touring company that reached San Francisco included Arthur Treacher, King Donovan and Imogene Coca. Don Elliot, one of the most versatile jazz men, composed the music.

A special Thurber setting has been designed by instructor Paul Crowley. Others involved in the production are Anne Crichton, stage manager; Art Samuels, music consultant, and Toni Johns, costumes and props.

Friday Deadline For Miss America Beauty Contest

It is not impossible to "hit the jackpot on the same machine."

So it isn't impossible for more than one Miss America winner to come from this college. Application forms, available at the Associated Student office, Bungalow 6, will be accepted through Saturday by the sponsors, the San Francisco Junior Chamber of Commerce.

Contestants will participate in the Miss San Francisco contest first. The winner will emerge as Miss California, and will then be on her way to the big national competition for Miss America at Atlantic City, New Jersey.

Entrants must be residents of this city for at least the past six months. However, his rule may be waived for those attending a college or university here.

Only single contestants can qualify. Entrants must be high school graduates, not less than 18 years old, no more than 28 years old by September 5, 1966.

Of course, the girls who aspire to winning a beauty contest must at least have the characteristics of a beautiful, talented, intelligent woman, according to published standards of the pageants.

Lee Ann Meriwether, Miss America 1955, was the first national winner from City College. She was a drama student who carried 20 units and managed to maintain an "A" average.

Miss Meriwether was sponsored by a fraternity. Students in the photography laboratory took pictures of her, and Frank R. Denevi, who is now owner of a million-dollar photography business in San Lorenzo, took the winning photos of Lee.

Lee is now Mrs. Frank Aletter and an active member of drama groups and is often seen on television. She has two children.

Alon Yu, entries chairman, 375 Mission street, phone 781-4211, extension 2138, has any further details of this pageant if needed. —B. T.

More AS Card Sales Expected

About 2700 Associated Student cards have been sold on campus, Wayne Wilson, chairman of cards sale and member of the Council Of Organizations, reported last Wednesday.

"We started with 3500 cards this spring because there are not too many new students. Nevertheless, our target is to sell all of them, which would mean 1500 more cards sold than any previous spring semester," Wilson said.

Because of the many opportunities and facilities offered by the association, Wilson believes in the possibility of a full scale sale.

"Benefits offered cardholders include free admission to athletic events, dances and plays, and store discounts and free parking," Wilson said.

The Associated Students have already earned $13,500 from the cards sale, and Wilson hopes the total sum will be $17,500.

Levinson Describes Israeli Life At IRC C-Hour Lecture

By Susan Volk

"Israel is not very religious."

With that statement, Steve Levinson, English instructor here, dispelled a common misconception, in his lecture sponsored by the International Relations Club last Thursday.

Levinson, who spent two and a half years in Israel, also set the audience straight on other aspects of the country.

"The language is not Yiddish; it's Hebrew," he said. "It is not always hot; the climate varies much as it does in California, and although two-thirds of Israel is desert, most of the population lives in the North which is very green."

Levinson spent his first six months in Israel in an ulpan, a school where immigrants are taught the Hebrew language and culture.

He then moved to a kibbutz, an independent communal settlement in which members share the work and the proceeds. The kibbutz works on the Marxian principle that everyone gives according to his abilities and receives according to his needs.

At the kibbutz, he found life very different from what he had known in America. Important personal decisions were made for members by the community as a whole. Equality was stressed. Even the teachers and leaders took turns at menial labor.

Babies are placed in a "baby house" as soon as they return from the hospital, and kibbutz women take turns tending them.

Although the babies are fed by their mothers at the baby house, they are only brought home for a few hours a day.

This brought gasps from the audience, but Levinson explained that even so, family ties are very strong. The hours the families are together are usually devoted entirely to the children. The parents are home from work and they are free, as they have no laundry to do, and no meals to prepare. These functions are communal.

Kibbutz schools are very informal, he declared. The teacher is called by his first name, and wears shorts to class in warm weather. Because work is holy in Israel, school is sometimes cancelled if the students are needed to harvest crops.

Semiannual ISC Tea To Start Rushing Season

The sorority rushing season will officially get under way this Sunday with its first semiannual affair, a formal tea for all registrants, hosted jointly by Theta Tau and Phi Beta Rho.

Purpose of the tea, and the numerous other rushing activities which follow, a spokesman said, is to give new coeds an opportunity to become acquainted not only with the sorority members, but with all phases of the sorority in general.

There is still time to obtain applications for registering to participate in rushing as registration will close Friday, according to Inter-Sorority Council President Doreen Berkson.

Because the tea is formal, Dean Mary Golding advised each rushee to wear heels, a hat, gloves and a dressy suit or dress.

In charge of the tea will be Miss Berkson, president of Theta Tau; Bonnie Desmond, president of Phi Beta Pho; Elizabeth Reilly, sponsor of Theta Tau and Elaine Rossi, sponsor of Phi Beta Pho.

Prerequisites for eligibility include a minimum scholastic standing of a 2.0 grade average and evidence of a 12 unit class program.

Registration for rushing started on March 7 and will continue through Friday. Those interested are expected to signup in S-150 between 8:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m. Registration is set at $1. Standard fees for joining a sorority are $10 for initiation and $5 a semester for membership dues.

Coming events on the rushing calendar will include the traditional "firesides" and the coffee preference hours, at which time the prospective pledges will be given the opportunity to express their prefenences. Later in the semester, new members will be honored at a dance.

DOREEN BERKSON, president of Theta Tau, and Bonnie Desmond, Beta Rho, are cohostesses for the ISC tea.

Phi Beta Delta Amasses $315 For March Of Dimes

Phi Beta Delta collected $315 in its Mile Of Dimes Rally February 24, according to fraternity President Jim Abern. The money, collected entirely on campus, was given to the March of Dimes to help in the continuing struggle against birth defects.

All 30 members of the fraternity participated in the drive. They had planned to have the rally all day, but stopped at noon because of bad weather and class schedules.

Disc jockey Bill Gordon of KSFO radio, and Byron and Howard, a comedy-folk song group from the Purple Onion, supplied entertainment for the rally during College Hour on that day.

Phi Beta Delta has conducted this drive during the spring semester of each year since 1952. The largest sum ever collected was last year when $324 was given to the charity.

Vice President Pete San Filippo, rally chairman, reported that full cooperation was given by both students and members of the faculty except for one instance. A student, when asked to contribute, replied he would rather give to the Viet Cong.

IFC Blood Drive Hopes To Break Previous Record

City College's 10th annual Blood Drive will be held on Thursday and Friday, April 14 and 15, Dean Ralph Hillsman announced today.

Sponsored by the Inter-Fraternity Council in conjunction with the Irwin Memorial Blood Bank of San Francisco, the goal is to break the current record of 421 pints contributed in 1959, said James Wyatt, student activities adviser, who with Hillsman is coordinating the drive. Last year's donation was 410 pints.

Students, alumni, faculty and employees of the college, 21 years of age and older—18 with parental consent—will be asked to donate.

"Everyone who contributes makes himself, his family, and friends potential recipients of blood for the next year," Wyatt said in explaining that a donor makes himself and his immediate family eligible for unlimited amounts of blood for the ensuing 12 months.

Anyone else can receive up to eight pints during that time.

Wyatt added that anyone who attempted to donate, but was turned away for various reasons determined by the Irwin Memorial Blood Bank is still eligible for all benefits as listed.

Forum Magazine Deadline April 11

Forum Magazine, a 31-year-old campus literary publication not to be confused with newly organized Contemporary Affairs Forum, Drama Forum or Campus Forum, is now accepting contributions of time and material in C-331A for the Spring 1966 issue to be published May 31.

Catherine Connolly, faculty adviser, announced today that positions of editor and editorial assistants are open.

Deadline for literary contributions is April 11.

Miss Connolly invited students interested in writing or reading literary works to visit C-331A. Such students may either join the organization for a possible one unit of credit or as an activity.

Bell Telephone Tests New Robot Recruiter

A robot recruiter which utilizes electric power instead of man powcr to recruit new workers, was installed on campus by Pacific Telephone, and the college placement center, February 28.

The machine's program consists of a series of slides of former City College students who describe the jobs they do for Pacific Telephone, and the essential requirements and qualifications for each.

The machine, which had its debut on this campus, is a pilot study on the feasibility of using this type of recruiting technique. It will then go on to other two-year college campuses.

Letters to the Editor

Ram's Horn

● Reg's Unsung Heroes

Editor, The Guardsman:

The Guardsman editorial (March 2), Less Confusion, Thanks To AWS, was indeed a deserved one for the Campus Police and the Associated Women Students.

I would like, however, to call your attention to some other worthy and unsung hero-groups who contributed to a more efficient registration.

Members of Alpha Phi Omega manned the close-out desk and provided runners for keeping the TV program up to date on closed classes. They also monitored the end of the line, checking for registration identification cards and signatures and assisted students through registration who were unable to do so for various reasons.

Inter-Fraternity Council members manned three check stations during the three-day registration period.

Student government officials manned information desks for new students, sold Associated Student cards, and distributed essential printed material.

Ralph Hillsman,
Dean of Men

● Poor Loser

Editor, The Guardsman:

The beginning of last semester I congratulated The Guardsman on the fine job they were doing. The last issue of last semester was simply terrible. Since The Guardsman did not make the playoffs in the AMS Basketball League, it decided to give AMS Sportsnite bad coverage. Pictures had been taken and they were going to accompany a front-page story. Since The Guardsman didn't make the playoffs, they gave AMS a little section on the fourth page. It was the worst coverage of a news event I have ever seen . . . I wish you the best of luck on bringing the standards of the paper up to what they used to be . . . Please publish in the next issue.

Stan Angel
Past AMS president

Club Notes: High Attendance Figures Speed COO Action

By Bill Fritz

WITH the attendance figures above normal for the first few twice-weekly meetings of the Council Of Organizations, it appears that the COO may be able to avoid costly delays in its decision making.

Chairman Paul Shuttleworth reports that he has had a quorum present at every meeting so far this semester. A quorum consists of 50 per cent plus one of the total council membership of 38 and is necessary before a final ballot may be taken on issues and decisions.

Last Wednesday the Drama Forum held elections of Spring semester officers. Chosen for the executive positions were: Gale Bradley, president; Joseph Michael Cascle, vice president, and Cheryl Willis, secretary.

Club members agreed upon a need for dramatic material, preferable plays and skits written by students. Anyone wishing to have his works performed is invited to submit material to club adviser Walter Krumm in C-332C.

The Campus Forum will continue with its weekly discussions of campus problems every Tuesday during College Hour in A-309. Club chairman Fred Stewart emphasizes that all students are invited to discuss problems pertinent to the college.

Horticulture students are busy preparing their exhibits for the Spring Flower Show to be held in Oakland, April 22 to May 1. This year, in the absence of a specific theme, students are free to create their own floral designs. Hopes are high for maintaining the prize-winning tradtion set by previous classes.

On April 22 and 23, the Omega Chapter of Alpha Gamma Sigma will host the California State Scholastic Honor Society's annual convention at the Fairmont Hotel.

Just a reminder to all interested women students that only three days remain, March 9, 10 and 11, in which to registered as prospective members for either of the two sororities on campus. Theta Tau and Phi Beta Rho.

Vikes First Step In State Tourney

Loss Of Williams Places Rams In Role Of Underdog

By William G. Fates, Sports Editor

City College of San Francisco's Golden Gate Conference Basketball Champions will meet Metropolitan Conference Champion, Long Beach City College, in the first round of the 15th Annual California Junior College Basketball Championship Tournament at Bakersfield College. Game time is 9 p.m. tomorrow.

San Francisco will be going into the fray minus rebounding and defensive standout 6-5 center Gene Williams, and thus must be considered somewhat of an underdog.

With his great leaping ability and long reach, Williams was grabbing rebounds and blocking shots at will all year. He blocked 13 shots alone in one conference contest won by the Rams over Diablo Valley, 81-61.

In the early part of the conference schedule, after San Francisco had pulled out two overtime wins and had come from way behind to win another, Coaeh Sid Phelan commented, "If it hadn't been for Gene, we wouldn't have won a game."

Since the inception of the state tournament 15 years ago, San Francisco has participated seven times and been eliminated in the first round only twice, in 1959 and 1960, coming off playoff wins for the Big Eight Conference title.

1962, City College's last year in the Big Eight conference was the year of years for the Rams.

A team, which must truly be labeled a "cinderella" club in all respects, won the conference title with a 13-1 record and sauntered into the state tournament anything but a favorite and stole the state championship right out from under everyone by battering Citrus College, 73-58.

This performance was followed by a third place finish in '63 and a sixth place finish in '64.

From all indications, Sid Phelan's unbeaten conference champions are going to come up against their sternest competition of the year in the Long Beach Vikings.

They are the only team to beat defending champion Riverside and could have been ranked number one in the state had they not stumbled over the Bakersfield Renegades.

The Vikes compiled a 17-0 preseason record and have been in the top three in the state ranking since the season started in December. They like to score and have been averaging about 95 points a game with three starters with better than 400 points apiece.

Long Beach is led by freshman forward Carey Bailey of West Virginia with 440 points and 362 rebounds for an average of 17.6 and 14.5 respectively in 25 games.

Right behind him in ability is ex-Marine star guard 24-year-old Bill Connolly with 405 points, and frosh guard Mack Calvin with 400. Likewise adding to the attack is All-Conference guard Bernie Richard and boardman Harry Williams. It's going to be tough.

Undefeated League Champs

Ram Netter Takes First In Nor-Cal Singles Division

Greg Shephard became the first City College tennis player to win the singles title of the Northern California Intercollegiate Championships. Shephard and the Ram net squad were competing in the frosh-JV division of the tournament.

In overall competition, Ram netters finished second to the Stanford frosh team which had 21 team points.

One facet of Shephard's victory which was especially sweet was the fact that the finals in the singles division of the frosh-JV tournament was a showdown between two City College players. Shephard bested teammate George Ponitkoff, 6-2, 6-2.

In the doubles competition, Shephard and Ponitkoff were downed by Charles Alloo and Dale Wong of the Stanford frosh, 6-2, 6-2.

However, for all his team's good fortune, Coaeh Roy Diederichsen is still worried. "We must develop the bottom of our ladder," he explained, "we're lacking in depth."

In the Golden Gate Conference, Diederichsen still favors Foothill to cop the crown, "because of their great depth." He now rates the Rams second, about even with Diablo Valley, and feels that College of San Mateo "has an outside chance."

San Francisco was second in the conference last year and tied Foothill for the NorCal title in the post-season tournament.

Minimum Practice Schedule Hurts Mermen In Debut

Despite having a limited amount of practice before their first meet, the City College swimmers put on a respectable showing as they were beaten, 34-59, by Saeramento City College, February 25, at the winners' pool.

Roy Burkhead, swim coaeh, was pleased with the performance his team put on. He said, "Our men showed very good promise under the circumstances."

The Rams went into the meet without a diver, and it cost them about 10 points, but they took a surprising first place in the medley relay. That team was composed of John O'Connor, Bill Pasquinelli, Bruno Van Rygn and Fred Adams. "If we keep at a steady pace, we could surprise a few teams in the conference," Burkhead commented.

The Rams met the powerful Olympic Club, Mareh 1, at the Olympic Club. Burkhead pointed out that the Olympic Club has about 30 men on the squad.

"We were just meeting them for a good workout, and a good place to swim," he said.

Linksmen Five Surmount Test In 'Fine Style'

Golf Coach Grover Klemmer is a happy man these days as the 1966 golf team sports five linksmen who, in Klemmer's opinion, have come through a stiff test in fine syle.

The test came in the form of a match against the Olympic Club's junior and intermediate team. In that match City College had four men with sub-80 scores and a fifth man in with an 80.

Mike Butler had the most impressive round of anyone as he shot a 69 at the Olympic Club's difficult Lake Course. After Butler came Ron O'Conner at 72, Tom O'Kane with a 75, Gary Miolocq with a 79, and Doug Nelson at 80. In regard to these five, Klemmer said, "any man who has a good round at Olympic Club is capable of playing good golf anywhere."

Coach Klemmer is also pleased with his back-up men. "We have good reserves," he told The Guardsman. His first ten men are O'Connor, O'Kane, Butler, Miolocq, Nelson, Gerald Dorn, Pat Dobrinski, Steve Beck, Tim Haley and Tom Sullivan.

The Rams have had only one other match which was against Hamilton Air Force Base. In Klemmer's words, "We defeated them soundly."

Lapham President Of Block Society

Jerd Lapham was elected president of the Block SF Society reeently, but coach Arthur "Dutch" Elston sponsor of the society, said that other officers are yet to be chosen.

The society held its organizational meeting yesterday and two representatives from each sport were present. It was also decided that the spring Block SF banquet will be held on Tuesday, May 31.

Elston further stated, "We are striving to get more activity, more participation by the members."

Tracksters Not Quick Enough To Avoid Influenza

The City College track team, following suit with most other athletic teams in the Bay Area, has been touched by the flu bug. This misfortune not only hurt them against Modesto, but also somewhat in the Conference Relays.

Lou Vasquez, coach of the squad, reported that most of his sprinters and hurdlers have been out of classes with illness. Most notable of the men out were relayman and top hurdler, Sonny Johnson; also three relay men, Chris Davis, Bob Prince, and Chris Ransom. Ransom reportedly may be out longer with a pulled muscle. Other hurdler Don Jordan was sick prior to the Conference Relays.

The Rams meet conference favorite Foothill Friday in the first conference dual meet of the season. According to Vasquez, the Owls are the team to beat.

"They placed the first five men in the conference cross country finals," Vasquez said, adding, "they have the fourth best decathlon man in the world in Russ Hodge."

Hodge enters ten events and is reportedly good in all of them, especially in the shot put and the discuss. Vasquez pointed out that Hodge could "possibly beat some of the weaker teams in the conference single handed."

Since this is the first dual meet of the season, it is considered of utmost importance, since the championship is decided on the dual meets.

Independent Loop Addition Boosts Intramural Action

Intramural basketball action is expected to receive a booster shot of stiff competition this semester with the addition of a new team to the Independent League roster.

The Soul Plus squad has added its jazz type name to the list of teams competing in the Associated Men Students sponsored activity and is expected to be a cog in the spokes of the Negro Students Association, last semester's champions.

Captained by AMS President Ron Appell, the Soul Plus will jive with such players as Mike Taylor, All-Conference football, 1965, and Eural Smothers, All-Conferenee football in 1965.

In an attempt to clarify the confusion which set in last semester concerning which varsity players could play, Jack Gaddy ruled that "those who have lettered in varsity basketball may not compete in intramural basketball."

Also, any team using players not on its official petition will automatically forfeit the game.

Schedules are pending team signups.

Coach Phelan Sets Tradition Of Wins

By William Fates

SINCE THE ARRIVAL of one J. Sid Phelan more than a decade ago, it has become tradition that City College will either win or be a strong contender for the conference basketball championship each and every year.

During his 11 years as coach, Phelan has never had a losing season, although one of his clubs came close with a 16-12 record in 1961, but finished second in conference play with a 10-4 won-loss record.

City College has finished first seven times under the auspices of the former Washington High coach as well as coming in second best three times and third once, the lowest any team has finished since 1955.

By far the most celebrated years under Coach Phelan were the golden years between 1962 and 1964, when the Rams won three straight conference titles in the old Big 8 Conference and newly formed Golden Gate Conference and topped it off by winning the California Junior College State Basketball Championship in 1962. In the two years following, they finished third and sixth while compiling an overall 73-15 record for the three year period.

San Franeisco's 1966 Golden Gate Conference Basketball Champs' 28-2 record has brought Phelan's City College game totals to 244-66, which gives him a .787 winning percentage and an average season of 22.6 wins and losses.

To say that City College of San Francisco is dominating the Golden Gate Conference basketball title is putting it mildly. San Francisco has won three of the conference's four championships and compiled a 48-9 league record, five of which were lost last season.

The Rams lost four contests last season by a total of eight points and with a few turns of events could be batting a thousand in the infant Golden Gate Conference.

There are those who will cry of disbanding and disallowing any City College participation in this conference but remember San Francisco suffered through 13 long years (1936-49) between basketball titles.

Besides, all of the title races for the last decade have been right down to the wire with the exception of this year, when the Rams won by four.

This indestructable ability to win didn't just dawn on Coach Phelan when he arrived at City College.

In 1952 when he was at Washington High his 110,120,130 and varsity basketball teams all won Academic Athletic Association titles in their divisions. The varsity made it all the way to the finals of the Tournament of Champions in Berkeley before losing to McClymonds.

• • •

OUT OF THE PAST: On March 3, 1949, City College defeated the Placer Junior College Spartans, 52-46, on the way to the college's second cage title in the old Northern California Junior College Conference and a 30-2 season, a college record.

The Rams were on the road at the time, and they must have set some kind of a record, for scoring. At the end of the first quarter, it was City College 4-2 over the Placer Spartans. Even more interesting is that the entire four points were scored by one long forgotten George McLaughlin, in a great individual effort. With the score tied at 2-all, McLaughlin stole a rebound from three battling Spartans and tipped it in for the lead with but a few seconds left.

Had it not been for this outstanding courageous effort by McLaughlin, with no regard for his own personal safety, the Rams could very well have been on the short end of a 2-0 score and that's got to be some kind of a record too.

Local Nine Ends Preseason With Four Victories

Despite rain and darkness City College baseballers managed to win three of their last four practice games, thanks to the strong pitching of Nick Etcovich and Bill Kirkpatrick and the powerhouse hitting of Tom Callan and Paul Giambra.

Napa defeated the powerful City College nine, 6-7, in a rain-shortened game on February 25 at Balboa Park, but then City College turned around and evened up the scales by beating Stanford JVs, 4-1, in a darkness shortened game on February 28.

Although the City College team was outhit by the Stanford JVs, 7 hits to 4, little Tom Callan drove in three runs and scored once himself to help turn back the Stanford tide.

San Francisco stayed in the winner's circle on March 1 as they edged Santa Rosa, 4-3, on Paul Giambra's three-run homer in the first inning and Bill Kirkpatrick's strong pitching throughout the game.

Even though Kirkpatrick pitched well and was credited with the win, the game was not over by all means when Greg Sinclair relieved him in the sixth inning with the score, 4-2, in favor of San Francisco.

Former All-City shortstops Paul Giambra and Tommy Callen continued to provide San Francisco with the necessary offensive power as the Rams closed out their preseason schedule with a 3-2 come-from-behind effort against the Cal JayVees March 4 in Berkeley. Callen and Giambra each smashed single-run homers while Hugh Miller and Greg Sinclair held the Bears to two runs on four hits.

The Rams meet San Jose tomorrow in the second conference contest.

AWS Awards Jack Gaddy With Gold Plaque

For outstanding service to both the college and the world of sports, Athletic Director Jack Gaddy was recently presented with a gold plaque by the Associated Men Students.

Gaddy has been an instructor at the college for 31 years. During this time he has been instrumental in establishing several organizations.

According to last semester's AMS Vice President Ron Appel, Gaddy was a chief figure in the formation of the Golden Gate Conference, Block SF Society, and AMS itself.

Campus Theater To Present Production In Four-Night Run

The Thurber Carnival, a comedy based on episodes from James Thurber's works, opens a four-night run tonight in the college theater. Curtain time is 8 p.m., James Haran, director of the play, announced.

The cast includes Phyllis Melmon, Lana Tershy, Blanche. Richardson, Mike Cascio, Jack Ellis, Al Melodia, Mike Bottero, Mel Beechman and Diane Nichols.

Thurber's humor is directed toward American mores and is "very witty, satirical and pointed," Anne Chrichton, stage manager, commented.

Beginning and ending each episode are a line from one of the actors and a musical interlude. The music is provided by a four-piece combo composed of Bruce Feltor on the drums, Al Perez on the vibraharp, Warner Brant on the bass and Bill Swartz on the guitar.

The combo will be playing on a platform under a Thurberesque canopy, Miss Crichton said.

A special Thurber setting has been designed by instructor Paul Crowley. "The scenery is in a cut-off form and quite fragmatic," Miss Crichton stated.

"This will be a very complex show," Haran commented. The dual revolving stage to be used in this production is a difficult piece of machinery to work with. It requires precise timing and cooperation of the stage crew, actors, and everyone involved.

College Gallery Displays European Photo Exhibit

By Bill Fritz

An Old World's Past and a New World's Future could possibly be the theme of a photography exhibit currently on display in the gallery near the faculty offices in Cloud Hall.

The display, part of the collection of Marilyn Levin, an attractive, 24-year-old native San Franciscan and cadet-teacher here, is comprised of some 40 color candids of children and senior citizens in Europe and the Mediterranean area.

Miss Levin, who was graduated with honors at University of California, Berkeley, with her degree in comparative literature and who earned her master's in French at San Francisco State College, spent her junior year studying French in Bordeaux, France.

During that year she toured Europe, Russia and the Near East, photographing children and their Old World elders. Although previously inexperienced in photography, she has produced an interesting photographic exhibit.

A cadet-teacher last year at SF State College, Miss Levin is presently aiding French instructor John Stafford in second semester French and is student-teaching French at Galileo high school.

Enrollment Figures Show Men In Lead

Final enrollment figures this semester reached a total of 10,137, according to Mary Jane Learnard, registrar. Of this figure, 6024 are men and 4113 are women.

These figures, when broken down reveal that for day classes 5775 were returnees, 70 were readmitted and 1409 were new students; extended day classes figures are 686 returnees, 58 readmitted and 1508 new. Of the day students, 4831 are men and 3054 are women; of the evening students, 1193 are men and 1059 are women.

City College is growing, and with the women outnumbered by the men by a margin of 1911, it does seem to be a man's world.

Education Revolutionary Advocates Breaking From Negative Patterns

By Susan Volk

Man has been on a "bad trip for the past 25,000 years," Look Magazine's senior editor George Leonard said in his speech, The Coming Revolution In Higher Education, made here last Thursday.

Leonard, who calls himself "a real revolutionary, although I don't look like one," lashed out against present testing systems, class lectures and the subject matter taught in schools today.

"Assigning a lesson and then giving a test on it is not teaching," Leonard declared. "Heavy testing is a cop-out."

He doesn't blame the teachers, for "it's hard to break a pattern of negative reinforcement that has been going on for 25,000 years."

Instead of classroom lectures, he advocates discussions in which new ideas are shared. More important than memorizing facts is learning nonverbal humanism, Leonard believes.

"One way to alert the public to this needed revolution in education would be to organize a system to boycott final examinations. The students should do it politely," he said; "they should attend the class and then write an essay on why examinations shouldn't be given.

"However," Leonard added, "I don't think it will come to that. A new system should be programmed by subject matter specialists. When model projects are set up and they work, we will be on the way."

One such model project is Lichfield Park, a planned community being set up 18 miles outside of Phoenix, Arizona.

Families who move there can expect their children to attend classes such as creativity training, and sound exploration.

"The important thing is not learning but forgetting," Leonard stated. Today's students have so many perceonceptions, they can't grasp abstract conecpts. Four, five and six-year-olds understand the theory of relativity better than college students because they have no preconceived barriers, he said.

Personnel Shortage Creates Increase In Job Opportunities

Because of personnel shortages, recruiters from hotels, summer camps, airlines, railroads, restaurants, steamship lines and recreation centers are depending on the college placement center for qualified workers for summer employment, Joseph Amori, placement director, said.

Amori blamed the personnel shortage on the war in Vietnam and stated, "Recruitment teams come and go. I haven't seen anything like this since the Korean war."

A wide variety of summer jobs can be found in many different geographical areas. Jobs in resorts and summer camps for children are available in California, Oregon, Wyoming, Nevada and Idaho. Most jobs, Amori said, call for specific skills in the culinary arts, recreation, arts and crafts, aquatics, travel and accounting.

Entry workers without previous work experience will be considered for jobs provided they demonstrate positive work attitudes, excellent scholarship, and can produce letters of recommendation.

Employers will test applicants on verbal ability, quantitative reasoning and vocational interests.

Eighteen years of age has been set by nearly all employee groups as the minimum age for employment, with 21 for jobs where gambling and liquor are present or for jobs involving heavy responsibility.

Amori claimed, however, that employers will take the older student first, so that the younger students will get what's left.

Amori announced that all starting wages have been increased by approximately five per cent. Jobs calling for skills such as the culinary arts pay as much as $22 per day, while jobs in camps as counselors pay $10 per day with room and board included as part of the wages.

Soletti Named President Of Fall State Convention

Jim Soletti, Associated Student president, was elected last week by a delegation of four two-year colleges to preside over the Fall California Junior College Student Government Association statewide convention.

The statewide convention which will be held on the City College campus next semester, December 1 to 3 will be hosted by this college as well as Menlo, San Mateo, and Foothill colleges. Seventy-eight colleges will participate.

In the special CJCSGA election, which ran close to four and half hours, Soletti, who was victorious in the fifth ballot of voting, received tough competition from Chance Porter, AS president of Foothill.

Dave Ackerman, the third candidate running, and council member of the College of San Mateo government body, was eliminated in the first round in voting.

The delegation which chose Soletti was made up of two representatives from each of the following colleges: San Mateo, Foothill, Menlo and San Francisco.

Prior to the election of Soletti, the workshops at the Area Six Conference passed some "revolutionary" resolutions.

The Presidents' workshop voted to modify the present system of numerical evaluation to allow for plus and minus in the grading system. This would be used on the final records.

Since it was observed that the activities calendar at City College of San Francisco was a great sueeess, it was recommended that other colleges adopt the idea.

The conference held at Monterey Peninsula College, began at 8:30 a.m., and adjourned at 4:30 p.m.

Gold In Their Teeth

By Greg Frazier

Americans have more gold in their teeth than Europeans, according to Catherine Geissler, Bachelor of Dental Surgery and dental assisting instructor here.

Dr. Geissler, a new faculty member last semester, is well qualified to comment on teeth and Europeans. She was born in Edinburgh, Scotland, and has traveled extensively throughout Europe.

"My title of Bachelor of Dental Surgery is a European one," she explained. "In America a dental student must first receive a masters and then go on to a college of dentistry. In Europe one simply goes for five years to one college and receives dental credentials."

After attending Edinburgh University, Dr. Geissler received a scholarship from the French government for a year's study at the University of Paris and various Parisian hospitals.

"It was a fascinating experience," Dr. Geissler related. Edinburgh is rather provincial and out-of-the-way, but in Paris I met people from all over the world. And from there I was able to see much of western Europe."

She was particularly impressed with the rampant poverty she encountered in Spain and Portugal. "One doesn't see the terrible poverty along the Spanish coast because it's built up to impress the tourists. It's inland, where most of the farmers live, that the poverty is so great."

Dr. Geissler expressed her surprise that there aren't more women dentists in the United States. "There are many more women dentists abroad," she explained. "I guess girls marry younger here.

"Dental assisting is an excellent career for a girl, however. There is a great demand for dental assisting all over the world. It is most important for a dentist to have a good, reliable assistant. In Britain a dentist must train his own assistant, so American girls have a distinct advantage in this particular phase of dentistry."

In addition to teaching here at the college, Dr. Geissler is also a student. She is presently auditing a course in Russian. She speaks French, a little German and Spanish and, of course, English.

North Beach Group Entertains At Rally

Freddy and The Stone Souls, a group appearing at L'Action Club on San Francisco's North Beach, will highlight tomorrow's scheduled rally in honor of City College's basketball team, Arthur Sammuels, band instructor, announced today.

The championship cagers will be presented in the first part of the rally to be followed by the entertainment group.

The rally, to be held at the Ram if weather prevails, is being sponsored by the Rally Committee to bring recognition to the first team in Golden Gate Conference history to go through its season undefeated and untied.

14 Finalists To Compete In Best Dressed Contest

Selection from 24 semifinalists of 14 finalist in last week's competition completed the final phase of tryouts for City College's Best-Dressed Coed on campus.

Nancy Blythe, Joyce Byrd, Anita Davis, Barbara Huntington, Susi Jackson, Magda Jacobs, Diane Korens, Jennie Lam, Anita Marquez, Sheridan Parker, Charlotta Piazza, Joan Shaw, Pat Shea, and Marian Wolbertus are the finalists, with Jeannette Ferrari and Carolyn Tung serving as alternates.

According to Brenda Jung, president of the Associated Women Students, the Best-Dressed Coed will be selected from this group of coeds at the AWS Fashion Show and Tea on March 24, where the 14 finalists will model fashions from H. Leibes.

Easter Carousel will be the theme of the fashions coordinated for the show by, committee chairman Martha Romero.

Winner of the campus contest will be eligible for Glamour Magazine's search for the ten best-dressed coeds in America.

Cahill Inspects Campus Police Soon

Chief Thomas Cahill of the San Francisco Police Department will inspect the campus and the criminology department here next Tuesday, Mareh 22.

Lawrenee Lawson, head of the criminology department, said today that one of the reasons for the visit from Cahill is so that he (Cahill) may be present when the International Footprinters Association of San Francisco, Chapter No. 1, awards its two annual scholarships to two criminology majors.

The scholarships are $250 each.

Bob Tietjen, chief of the campus police is one of the winners, and the other winner is Jo Parnell, freshman at City College. Tietjen will be graduating in June and both have a 3.0 grade point average.

Pat Dunn is also receiving a pistol team trophy for outstanding marksmanship.

Rally Highlights IFC Blood Drive

An April 14 College Hour rally will highlight the Inter-Fraternity Council's Tenth Annual Blood Drive to be held April 14 and 15, James Wyatt, student activities adviser, revealed today.

"The best available talent is being sought to head this year's rally," Wyatt said. In the past, City College has been treated to such talented performers as Joan Rivers, and The Harlequins, who appeared last spring for the rally, and Roger Miller, whose appearance in memory of the late Nat King Cole benefitted the American Cancer Society.

This year's rally, sponsored by all six campus fraternities, has been sponsored by the IFC since 1962. Prior to this the drive had been sponsored by one fraternity, now defunct Tau Chi Sigma.

Cologne Of Vantage

Vets On Campus

By Greg Frazier

THE DEMANDS on today's students are ever increasing. Students must compete with the progress of the most intricate and complex society the planet has ever seen. If the City College classes are any indication, competition among students is rough.

Just as competition in the world of scratching for a living is fierce, so is scholastic competition a serious and rugged business.

In the next year, 251,000 veterans will be receiving education and training allowances in any given month. These men will be playing for keeps.

Most of them will be older men, that is, older than the average student; many will be in their late 20's, some in their 30's. They have tasted the drudgery of the work-a-day world. They know what screaming kids are. They have more bills than any other group in the country.

They have spent half of their waking day chained to great machines, in grey factories; they have bent over dull papers in dull offices.

But these men don't want to be dull people. Ask one of them what he wishes for, and besides the down payment for a house, he answers, "an education." He's starting late, so he won't have a minute to waste. He'll be in one helluva hurry.

Many teachers will testify to the fact that older students are more serious than younger students. And why not? They've already been 18, 19 and 20, and their interests have shifted to survival and other serious subjects. These men have competed on the battleground of hard living, and for many of them, education will be a snap.

Thank the Lord, Congress and President Johnson that these veterans "in times of need" have been recognized and been given their rightful share of the Great Society's benefits. Give them an education and they will benefit the Great Society.

MORE LANDMARKS: Those two characters who look vaguely important in the courtyard aren't Homer and Jethro, as one Entering Freshman insisted, but Edison and Da Vinci. (Edison's the one with the pretty blue eyes.) They are there simply because they are Edison and Da Vinci.

STILL MORE LANDMARKS: By far the most beautiful, alluring and provocative creature on campus is auburn-haired, brown-eyed, golden-skinned, 36-22-36 (No names please) V.D. She may be seen oscillating across the courtyard with the wind whispering in her hair, her cheeks on fire, MWF at 10.

Stanley Mudde is the Campus Adonis, but unfortunately he rarely shows himself.

PHILOSOPHY: The college motto, appearing above the main entrance for all to ponder, profoundly declares "The Truth Shall Make You Free." A moot statement. Can not a man know, in truth, that he is a slave?

Actually, this is only a partial quotation. ("And you shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free." John 8:23).

57 Varieties

Nuclear Adventure

By Rich Heintz

UNITED STATES nuclear "power" was demonstrated recently over the small and now famous town of Palomares, Spain, when a B-52 bomber crashed in mid-flight with an air tanker while attempting to refuel.

The valid arguments now questioning how long the United States can stretch their luck and continue to prevent nuclear explosions in such accidents will have to remain unanswered arguments as long as the U.S. is obliged to fly nuclear missions. No matter how safely endowed, as the complexity of a system rises, chance of failure also rises.

But noteworthy sidelights to this accident occurred in Palomares where the officials handling the situation had to anticipate and avoid producing any wide-spread fear among the public.

When the bomber crashed, it left deposits of Plutonium in the Palomares tomato fields, causing contamination of the soil and plants which will last for 24,000 years. It was obvious that the only answer was to remove the soil from the area, but where does one put a tomato field full of radio-active soil?

Many suggestions were offered. At first it was thought that the soil could be dumped into the sea, but this was rejected since any nuclear wastes washing up on a shore would cause mass fear in the public creating the need for a mass advertising campaign to convince them that the beaches would be safe.

It was also suggested that the soil could be buried and covered with blacktop. This idea has to be rejected since it would create a monument to the accident. (Eventually the soil will be shipped to the U.S. to be deposited in nuclear waste piles.)

Even a common cold became a headache.

This cold was perhaps the most vivid example of the fear which the officials had to avoid. The official in charge of the operation, Wright Langham, nuclear expert, caught a cold when he returned to Washington briefly, causing a tight security screen so that no information about Langham leaked out, in order that the public would not misconstrue his illness as radiation sickness.

Such incidents demonstrate the true "power" of nuclear weapons, their power over man's emotions.

AS Statler Recommendations Interesting But Impractical

TWO WEEKS AGO the Associated Student government recommendations committee reported drafting of a survey investigating the possibility of keeping Statler wing open until 5 instead of 3 p.m.

The survey itself is worth merit, and its sole purpose, which is to find a place for the students who are still here during these late afternoon hours, if achieved, would be greatly appreciated.

We do not wish to scoff the survey. On the contrary, we heartily support the effort and the intention its originators have put forth.

However, the trouble would be more than it is worth for the extra two hours because of complications that would arise concerning civil service workers (mainly wages and rearrangements of working schedules), and the hotel and restaurant department students themselves.

Without a doubt, the recommendations committee has already discovered these difficulties as well as many more.

But there could be an alternative. Until 1962, students in City College had a "student union" in a building known as the "Shack."

Because of unfortunate circumstances, a few individuals took unwarranted advantage of this privilege—which gave the administration no choice but to dissolve the lounge without hesitation.

The incident which prompted the immediate closure of the "Shack" occurred some four years ago. Yet, even though there has obviously been a big turn-over in students since then, the college body is feeling the penalty dealt out for an offense committed by others.

Perhaps the possibility of reoccupying the old "Shack" on a temporary basis might be worth looking into. The building is now being used as a storeroom. It is small, but the inflow of students could be regulated by admitting only those with AS cards.

A reestablishment of the union could alleviate the congestion in the Science Hall doorways and the basement. It would also give students a place to go who just want to relax and talk instead of going to the library or the cafeteria.

Within a year or two the Ramporium is expected to move into a new on-the-campus building which is presently in the planning stages. When the book store does move, the present quarters might be turned over to the student leaders where they might be closer to the hub of the campus life and activities than in their official quarters in the second building soon to go into the construction stage.

A student union then might occupy bungalow 5 and 6. The walls and rooms could be then eliminated—on a voluntary basis with the students themselves who really want a union doing the work. Perhaps a few vending machines could be installed—and maybe a jukebox?

And there would be no reason why the student lounge could not stay open until the beginning of City College's evening classes.

The first step, however, is the reestablishment of the "Shack" into a temporary student union—with the only question being whether it is feasible.

• Allocations Protest

Editor, The Guardsman:

Having just perused the budget published in your March 2 issue, I notice allocations in the area of $12,000 for "sports" activities. I object to the idea of spending that amount of money to enable the scrub athletes of the acne generation to play games . . . badly.

This seems to be a classic example of the physical education major's mentality, and the unfortunate effect this causes in American higher education(?) The disproportionate number of physical education majors in any administration (what else can you do when you're too old to do pushups?), and the invariably vocal coaching minority guarantee glorification of the body (what else have they?) to the ultimate degradation of any attempts at academic or cultural excellence. Coaches father figuring for another generation of beer swilling, spectator sportsmen with all the taste and instincts of a pig . . . and I object.

Lest any of the local athletic supporters suspect my motives, let me say that I participated in all three major "sports" and spent five years in the infantry, and will match my biceps and knowledge of personal hygiene with any of you (or do you do other things?) I just don't think pathetic athletics, and "sportsmanship" performed and encouraged by a vocal minority of nincompoops is worth $12,000. Do you?

• Election Coverage

Editor, The Guardsman:

. . . I know that Jim Soletti has the college's best interests at heart, yet I also feel that he is moving in the wrong direction for the good of the college.

On page 1 (in the March 2 issue), "Student Council 'reminds' the Guardsman of Elections," the Student Council makes it mandatory for The Guardsman to report on all elections. This is supposedly because people do not want to vote for people whom they know nothing about . . .

If the AS President and his council have the right to make the printing of election material mandatory, what else can they make our paper do? Since when has a select few had the right and the power to tell the American press what it should and should not print? Never in the history of the American peoples has this taken place. True, there are certain barriers which the press cannot go past, yet we have never told them what to print; are we going to start now? . . .

Love Is Blind

By B.T.

THIS MAY BE the Year of the Horse, but the rabbits still have got it made.

The furry little creatures have furnished some proof that love is blind, and that they are really not to be blamed for their population explosion. After all, they need glasses!

According to a recent news release from the school of optometry at U.C., Berkeley, this is so. Experiments "show a definite need for all rabbits to wear glasses."

Furthermore, whenever a rabbit's eye sends a message to its brain, a scientist at Cal can "intercept" this message. See for yourself. On March 19, there will be an open house for interested students of optometry.

MANY STUDENTS HERE have gone into optometry, and Cal's school of optometry seems to be the choice for aspiring optometrists. Ray Squeri, a successful optometrist in this city, is one.

Squeri attended this college in 1946, transferred to Cal, and was graduated there in 1951, then received his master's degree in optometry in 1952. He went into business for himself, and is now proprietor of a busy practise.

"Ben Casey," a nickname tacked on to him by many of his patients, is usually met with a laugh, because Squeri is tall and muscular like the tee-vee personality.

"There is a good future in optometry in a world that is becoming very eye conscious. Now man works more with his brains, and this means a greater demand on the eyes," said Squeri.

He started his business soon after graduation. "I originally started out as a chemistry major, but most of the classes were closed, so I was forced into physics, and that's what started it," Squeri explained, adding,

"I'm satisfied. I'm not burning the world up. I think it's most important to practise independently. No time clocks."

Cine-Art

'Shakes' Vs Movies

By Albert Hilliard Hughes

SHAKESPEARE has for many years been considered anathema on the screen, yet, at least 23 of his plays have been adapted into movies, beginning as far back as 1899, when Sir Herbert Beerbohm-Tree appeared in a brief scene from his stage revival of King John.

For the Paris Exposition of 1900, Mme. Sarah Bernhardt took the title role in the Duelling Scene from Hamlet, Act V. Richard Burton's recent film marked the 29th attempt to film the play. Among these versions have been parodies and such modernizations as The Rest Is Silence and Ophelia.

Unlikely Hamlets were Buster Keaton in a scene in Day Dreams, 1922, and Jack Benny in the anti-Nazi comedy, To Be Or Not To Be, 1942.

The Taming Of The Shrew, The Comedy Of Errors and Romeo And Juliet were adapted into stage musicals later filmed as Kiss Me, Kate; The Boys From Syracuse and West Side Story, respectively. The oddest Juliet on record was when Mickey Rooney did a brief skit from the Balcony Scene in The Adventures Of Huckleberry Finn, 1940.

Last year Orson Welles adapted King Henry IV, Parts 1 and 2, Richard II and The Merry Wives Of Windsor into Chimes At Midnight, with himself as Falstaff.

Laurence Olivier starred in 1965 in a special filming of his stage production of Othello, currently showing at the Stage Door Theatre.

Three extreme examples of "borrowing" are the gangsterization, Joe Macbeth, and MGM's sci-fi thriller, Forbidden Planet, an uncredited adaptation of The Tempest. In the Western film, there are bits of the plot and some of the characters from Othello.

Richard III has even been used as the basis for two "horror" epics, both entitled Tower Of London.

To date, excluding the many TV versions of the plays, here and in England, there have been approximately 145 known serious versions of Shakespeare's plays on the screen. This does not include the many parodies, satires, burlesques and excerpted bits.

Meanderings

By Peter Dorn

FORTUNATELY those education analysts have eased off that speed-reading kick. Most people in this generation of studentry had probably come into contact with speed reading in their junior high school years.

For those students who might have missed out on the fun, speed-reading was a theory that anyone could learn to read faster if he were properly indoctrinated to do so, and so he was.

He, poor child, was strapped down to a chair in front of a machine that scanned the pages of a book and hid from sight all that was behind it. The idea was to keep reading ahead of the scanner, which he, at first, earnestly tried to do.

THE TEMPO SPEEDS . . .

But they kept speeding up the tempo of the scanner, and he squirmed in his chair and squinted his eyes and began reading sentences, then paragraphs, and then pages, in an attempt to outdistance the scanner.

Now he was reading faster, but did he comprehend the material? They tested him, and all they got out of him were the words "giddiap go."

Johnny Jones, the academic Hercules of the class, fared better, however. He read faster than anyone else, and without squirming in the chair at that. They said he also understood the text. After his coerced purusal of Lassie, they questioned him about the text.

They asked him what the book was about, to which he replied, "A dog." They were so proud of him.

THE HOMEMADE MACHINE . . .

Then they left with their electric reading machine, much to the relief of all the students, all except Jones, that is. He was really interested in this speed-reading, and he practiced it on a homemade machine. Sometimes he went to the playground, later in the evening, and slid down the slide, reading one page of a book on each trip down the chute. Then he'd sit on a swing and read a page between every to and fro motion of the swing.

At a recent alumni party, one of Jones' classmates said that John was now working with Don Garlits, the champion drag-racer.

As Garlits' dragster roared down the one-quarter mile strip at 200 miles per hour, Jones, strapped to the front of the vehicle, read one volume of the Encyclopedia Britannica that was enclosed in a lead box 100 yards away from the shut-off area.

Spring Reruns Of Close-Up Series Set For Tuesdays

City College Close-Up, a series designed to tell students about the various types of career preparation available at City College, is being reshown on tape this semester during Tuesday College Hours at C-245.

Sylvia R. Leff, who produced the program for City College in cooperation with KPIX-TV in 1964, stated in an interview recently, "More than 150 Bay Area industry leaders, faculty members, working graduates and students participated in this series."

Mrs. Leff also stated that each show is divided into three parts.

First is a brief discussion period conducted by the moderator with guest business leaders and other professional people discussing job opportunities, personal qualifications and the values of a two-year college education.

Second is an explanation by faculty members and students of the content and requirements of the various courses and the particular aptitudes that a student should have for success in the courses.

Finally is a period where working graduates discuss all of the requirements they needed to gain employment and what college preparation they needed most in their professional roles.

Close-Up will cover the photography department on Tuesday, March 22 during its fourth show.

Those departments already covered include criminology, real estate and merchandising, and advertising art.

In future programs the series will cover architecture, building and contracting; electronics, electrical and mechanical engineering, and secretarial, accounting and insurance programs.

Koswar Discusses China's Influence In African States

By Giuseppe Greco

Unorothodox and unsophisticated propaganda professed by the Chinese in Africa was the topic sponsored by the International Relation Club last Thursday.

Mohammad Koswar, a student here from Iran, introduced the audience to the topic with some historical background.

The Chinese people looked to Communism as the only means of support for a government which would have purpose and power after World War II, when Chang Kai Chek, last leader in support of Democracy, was ousted.

"Traditions and Confucious's ideas support the regime," Koswar said.

The first Chinese appearance in Africa was at the Conference of the African states in 1955 with Sukarno, Nehru and Chu En Lai present. China's only attempt was to establish cultural relations which were initiated in 1950.

By 1962 the Chinese had ten organizations concerned solely with African affairs.

"China," Kosfar said, "has been good at propaganda ever since, using such unorothodox methods in relations, as no money and military aid. Apparently, this is very effective in dealing with the natives."

Chinese propaganda is organized. To spread it by radio among such unhomogeneous people, the China News Agency has its announcements in 53 anguages and its programs are "always very clear, entertaining and instructive."

Even though Russians are more patient in their propaganda, their method of professing Marxism and Leninism is too technical and theoretical for Africa.

Perhaps the Chinese are impatient, Koswar said, but their attempt to minimize theory revealed it to be effective.

Terrorists are present in Africa. They have been trained in China to fortify villages, to blow up railroads, and do commando jobs.

Morals for China do not exist, Koswar emphasized, and therefore she can do everything for her practical interests without reproach because as a nation she is not recognized by the United Nations.

Explaining what Communism means in Africa, he declared, "In Europe, proletarians always have gained something by revolutions, but in Africa, Communism is not the same because Africa's heritage is different and people forget their past to look only forward, to the future.

"Africanism is probably the new concept, and the Chinese do not like it," he added.

African States emphasize economy. Koswar emphasized that politics, literature and philosophy have little meaning to African people because they are transistory and subject to continuous changes, therefore are not real.

Esponda Wins Top Fencing Trophy

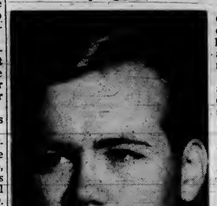
City College fencer Gerald Esponda became the first two-year college participant in the history of the event to win the individual championship Laura Trophy in the 18th Annual Western Intercollegiate Fencing Conference Championships held at U.C.L.A. March 4-5.

Last year Esponda finished fourth in the championship matches and was acknowledged as the fourth best fencer of all colleges west of the Rocky Mountains.

Because of the close competition there was a fence-off for first place between seven men: Esponda; Don Klein, U.C.; Mike Small, U.C.; Bill Avery, San Fernando Valley State; Bob Crawford, U.C.L.A., and Don Hausam and Bob Motz of the Air Force.

Washington Students Get Technology Briefing

Pretechnology students from Washington High School visited their future City College classrooms yesterday.



The 11th graders met with technology engineering instructors and were given an idea of what they can expect to learn here.

The pretechnology program, in operation at Washington and Galileo High Schools in San Francisco, and at 13 other high schools in the Bay Area, prepares students for a two-year college curriculum in technology engineering.

Woodcock Asks Study Of Frosh Class Elections

"More Work, less talk, should be the Freshman Class motto," Ernie Woodcock, class president, said today.

Woodcock has set up a class project. It is to find out what purpose class officers serve and whether they are useful or just figureheads. Woodcock believes they are figureheads when it comes to campus government and he wishes to extend their powers.

"MORE WORK, less talk," Frosh Class President Ernie Woodcock says.

As it now stands only the Frosh Class President is elected; the other officers are appointed. Woodcock believes that all officers should be elected at the first Frosh Class Council meeting.

"The Freshman Class is the most active and most important class on campus," Woodcock said, "and we should have more say in campus policies."

Woodcock gave an alternative to the appointment of officers when he suggested that freshmen should elect a chairman who has all the powers of class president and do away with the president.

Usually the class sponsors the first rally of the semester, but this spring, with a heavy calendar of events, the first rally was sponsored by Phi Beta Delta for the March of Dimes." The Frosh Rally is now scheduled for April 12 during Pledge Week, Woodcock explained.

With the help of freshmen, Woodcock predicted that this class "will be the best in this college's 30 years of existence.

"These goals are not petty nor small but will be something for future classes," he said, adding, "the Frosh Class has 14 officers who work with me not under me."

At present there are plans to have class meetings on alternate Tuesdays. Woodcock urged all freshmen to attend. "If you are unable to make the meeting, leave suggestions with class officers. Every student has the right to participate and to know what the class is doing."

Letters to the Editor

In the article on page 1, about the council making it mandatory for the press to print about the elections, it is stated or at least inferred that the student body does not want to vote for candidates they know little or nothing about. In the article on page 2, it states that the circulation of our paper has been cut by 900 copies.

If this is so, doesn't this mean that 900 people will not know about the qualifications of the candidates that want a hand in our government? I certainly feel that it does.

Isn't this clashing of articles rather inconsistent on the part of council and the people who make out our budget? With decreased circulation, won't fewer people know about the qualifications of people running for a seat in our government?

. . . I feel that the paper is well written and informative. I also feel that the subtle humor involved in writing helps to relieve some of the everyday tensions that everyone goes through while trying to achieve the good grades that are a must to stay in our competitive college. The Guardsman also helps the morale of the student body in having a few articles of what may appear to be useless material, but in all actuality might prove to be of great interest and enlightment to someone who knew nothing about the subject before.

To conclude, I would like to extend my congratulations to the staff of The Guardsman on a job well done and I hope they will continue to keep up the good work.

Soph Class Plans Ball, King And Queen Competition

Plans for the annual Sophomore Ball and the King and Queen contest for the ball were disclosed in a recent interview with Bruce Fisher, Sophomore Class president.

The Terrace Room of the Fairmont Hotel will be the scene of this year's ball on May 20, Fisher said. Maury Wolohan and his orchestra will play at the dance along with singing performers Helene and Paul Sommers.

The contest for King and Queen of the ball is the chief source of income for the scholarships given annually by the class. Last Year $707 was collected.

Competing couples collect pennies starting approximately two weeks before the ball with the pair collecting the most money for the fund crowned King and Queen of the ball and receiving appropriate prizes.

Petitions to enter the contest can be obtained in Bungalow 5, Fisher indicated, with the only rule governing the race being that at least one in each couple be a sophomore.

Club Notes: Fraternities Change Pledging

By Bill Fritz

ALTHOUGH the thought of up-coming midterm exams may leave most students a little down and out, the many and diversified campus club activities offer reasonable substitutes for studying.

Within the Council of Organizations, further studies are being made into improving the efficiency of the college bank, and a committee has been named to study the problem of borrowed registration and associated student cards being used at college dances and activities.

Also, the Forum Magazine was taken off the COO roster following a ruling that it was a class and not a club; and two campus organizations, the Merchandising Club and Negro Students Association, have been placed on the inactive list because of lack of interest and particiption.

Alpha Sigma Delta fraternity has decided to pledge for the entire semester instead of just at the beginning, Student Government Adviser James Wyatt reported. The organization will follow in the footsteps of Phi Beta Delta in eliminating any remnant of "hazing" from Pledge Week.

The fraternity realizes there is a decreasing number of men interested in joining social clubs and hopes to alleviate the problem in this way.

Inter-Fraternity Council is also aware of the problem and has formed a committee to take the matter under consideration. Chairman Jim Ahern announced that the committee will review procedures for rushing, the traditional smoker and pledging in general.

The Pick and Hammer Club has been invited by the Gem and Mineral Society of Berkeley to display its fine lawsonite exhibit at the society's annual World Of Gems presentation at the Hotel Claremont in Berkeley on March 19 and 20.

The Filipino-American Club will hold a meeting tomorrow during College Hour in C-220. All interested students are invited to attend. Also, the club is sponsoring two afternoon Filipino folk dance classes at 4 p.m. today and next Wednesday in B-6 and will hold an afternoon of bowling at Castle Lanes from 4:15 to 6 p.m. Friday.

The Drama Forum has become a branch of the National Drama Fraternity and will now be known as Delta Psi Omega.

The advantage of this change is that it will allow students to operate independently of the drama department. Productions will be written, directed and performed by the members of the club under the guidance of Walter Krumm.

The Contemporary Affairs Forum will hold a planning meeting tomorrow during College Hour in A-314.

Chairman Dave Davis reminds all that the group is open to topic suggestions from both students and faculty. Some of the proposed topics are humane abortion, Southeast Asia, drug laws, Delano grape strike, ghetto problem, the draft and voting requirements.

In a recent election, members of The Dental Assisting Society chose Ella Mae Bernhard to fill the presidential vacancy created by the sudden departure for Honolulu by former president Deanna Chee. Other elected officers are Sarah Hardy, vice president; Glenna Chase, secretary, and Ruth Riddle, treasurer.

Vice President Hardy reports that the first social event of the semester will be a picnic at Sigmund Stern Grove, March 27, noon to 4 p.m.

Council Requests Student-Faculty 'Informal Hour'

By Jeff Kraus

Student Council, after much debate and discussion, passed a recommendation last week that council "request the Student-Faculty Relations Committee to undertake the task of establishing an informal hour in which students can meet and discuss various aspects and problems of education, or subject matter with faculty members."

It further recommended "that if agreed upon by the committee, this program be put into effect next semester." The recommendation, made by Councilwoman Helen Ferentinos, was finally passed, 9-3-2.

RESOLVED . . .

Miss Ferentinos first introduced the bill as a resolution, but many council members didn't feel that it was a resolution.

Councilman Ron Appel moved to amend the bill by changing the "re solved" to "recommended" and making it a recommendation instead of a resolution. This amended bill was passed by council.

Council also denied a request made by graphic arts, for $400 for the extra costs of the spring activities calendar.

Janet Hinterman, Finance Chairman, explained that a mixup between the graphic arts department and the Public Relations class had made the extra cost. She also pointed out that since the money had already been spent, it would come out of the student budget whether it was passed or not. Council felt that it shouldn't be forced to allocate the money.

Council also heard a recommendation from Appel concerning council's support of campus activities. Appel suggested that for students to want to participate in activities they must be shown a good example, so he suggested that council make an effort to attend at least five student functions each semester. This was passed by council, 7-6-2.

MORE MONEY

Council heard two requests for allocations, from the Forensics Club and the Concert and Lecture Series, respectively.

The Forensics Club needed a registration fee of $400 to attend a Model United Nations meeting to be held in San Francisco. There was a motion to refer this to the supplementary appropriations committee, but council adjourned for lack of a quorom before this could be voted upon.

The request from the Concert and Lecture Series for $200 was for services of a booking agent who, it was believed, would assure speakers, entertainers and other top quality groups that might otherwise be unavailable to the campus. This was referred to the supplementary appropriations committee for further study.

Council meetings were marked by many heated arguments and frequent disturbances from the spectators.

Both meetings were adjourned for lack of a quorum, because council members left to attend classes. Because of lengthy arguments and constant interruptions, both meetings ran over the time limit.

Rams Second In Statewide Tourney

By Frank Cooney

BAKERSFIELD—Still smarting from the 91-61 shellacking they received from the sky-scraping Riverside squad in the State Championship Bakersfield Basketball Tournament here on Saturday, Coach Phelan's giant killing quintet may take some time to realize that they actually fared well in placing second among California two-year colleges.

As a matter of fact, superlatives should not be lacking in the least when it comes to describing the City College of San Francisco's Rams' showing in last weekend's all-important state championship tournament.

Living up to their season-long record as number two in the state, City College marred fourth ranked Imperial Valley's perfect record, 78-75.

The only team to conquer mighty Riverside this season was Long Beach City College. San Francisco beat Long Beach, 86-81.

In that initial game against Long Beach, Charlie Parks of the Rams led all scorers and was well on the way to placing himself on the All-Tournament team.

So until the Rams met the towering torrid Riverside All-Tourney threesome of Larry Bunce (7 feet tall), Steve Barver (6-5), and Fred Smith (6-5), San Francisco was making a good showing on the part of Northern California.

Through the first two Ram clashes a record setting pace was being established. In the first tilt against Long Beach, Parks tanked his season high of 30 points—going nine for nine in the first half—to spark City College to a 60 per cent showing from the floor.

In that game Willie Jones chipped in 24 markers to eclipse his former personal season one game high by nine points.

Against Imperial Valley the Rams raeked up a 50 per cent shooting average to set their pace at 55 per cent, 3 per cent better than Riverside's former record.

But the big sore still remains. Riverside was simply unbeatable in the tournament, and City College's 30-point deficit was the best any squad did against the defending state champions.

Coach Phelan, undoubtably the best coach in the Golden Gate Conference and one of the best in the nation, estimated Riverside's destructability as the best of any two-year college eage team he has ever run up against.

The loss of Gene Williams, the Rams' chief shot blocker and top rebounder until his injury late in conference play, cannot be ignored in calculating what City College's possibilities might have been.

Had Williams been around to stave off a few points here and collect a couple of points and rebounds there, the story might have been one of pure triumph.

But second guessing never did win a championship.

In the final ill-fated game, much to the amazement of all concerned, the Rams kept the score even in the rebounding department at 35 apiece.

Slacking off after setting the hot two-game pace in field goals, the San Franciscans just could not connect against red-hot Riverside (67 per cent). The Rams averaged only 37 per cent in the finale.

This, coupled by the fact that the seven-foot tall Brunce rallied for 30 points, led to the Rams' downfall.

Throughout the tournament the two most consistently tough San Francisco competitors were Ed Wilson and Willie Wise.

In the semi-finals, the Rams had to go into overtime to edge Imperial Valley, who survived the Tourney tiffs with a 27-1 count, by a three-point margin.

With regulation time leaving the fray knotted at 65 apiece, Parks locked it up in the overtime with two jumpers that ran the tally to 75-69.

Against Long Beach in the initial battle, the Vikings, seeking revenge for an embarassing football experience in a certain Prune Bowl slaughter, came as close as 73-71 in the closing minutes. John Pezzolo, replacing Paul Batmale, who fouled out, hooped five consecutive free throws to put the binders on the Vikings once more.

AMS Intramurals Start First Round Games This Week

First round action in the Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural basketball leagues got underway last night and will continue starting at 7:15 o'clock tonight in the gymnasiums.

These are the first in a series of weekly games to be held each Tuesday and Wednesday nights to determine who will compete in the Sports Night fete to be held May 23.

Percy Jones, AMS president, announced last week that since the fraternities have failed to turn in a sufficient number of petitions, the establishment of a Fraternity League is in doubt.

If no other fraternities join the intramural activities, then the Epsiloners will compete in the Independent League which has signed four teams for this semester's competition.

Heading the list of Independents is last year's runner-up in the Sports Night championship, the Irish. As the luck of the Irish wouldn't have, the Independent champs had the misfortune of playing against the undefeated Negro Students Association in that finale, losing, 55-53.

Two new teams and one returnee round out the Independent League roster. Of these the Soul Plus threatens to be the toughest competition for the defending champs.

The Soul Plus will be composed of several letermen, including Mike Taylor, All-Conference football player in 1965, and Eural Smothers, honorable mention in 1965 little All-America football polls.

The Point Shavers are also joining the Independent League.

In the Club League only one change is slated.

The criminology department's entry in the Club League has previously been Lawson's 10. This semester the criminologists will be titled Foley's Flashers.

Other Club League teams are the Newman Club, Filipino Americans, Guardsman and champion NSA.

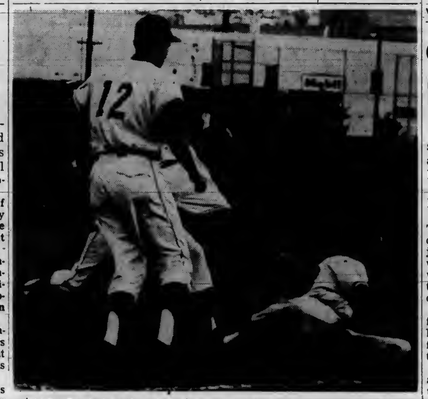
Swim Club Sinks Vallejo, 40-36

The fast-improving City College swim team came through with a victory against Vallejo City College, 40-36, March 3, at Vallejo.



Coach Roy Burkhead was "overwhelmed" over the progress the Ram swimmers have been making. "We are only working out at a minimum, and the progress we are making is fantastic," he commented. Burkhead did not want to "single out" any one person, as he called it a team victory.

The 100 freestyle was won by the Rams' John O'Connor. O'Connor also won the 50-yard freestyle, and the 200-yard breaststroke.

Burkhead was also pleased at the performance turned in by Bob Martin.

Martin took the 100-yard medley and the 200-yard butterfly, he also participated in the four-man relay.

In the 200 freestyle, Fred Adams came in first. Adams also swam a fine 500 freestyle, while taking second. Bill Pasquinella won the 200 back stroke, and he teamed up with Bob Haskel, Martin and Adams to win the four-man relay.

SAFE? Foothill player wins race to first base in fourth inning of Rams' initial 1966 league contest. SF second baseman Paul Giambra chased the fleeing Owl after receiving toss from pitcher Greg Sinclair. This turned out to be a delayed double steal as Foothill second baseman Rich Bladt romped home from third for the first and only needed score of the game. First baseman Rich Grimaud watched the fateful play.

SF Toppled In League Opener As Foothill Hurler Fans 13

City College's baseball team had a rough go of it in its Golden Gate Conference opener March 8 when Foothill pocketed a two-hit, 4-0, victory.

Rated high in preseason ratings, the Rams just could not get an offense going against Owl lefty Mike Noonan who whiffed 13 and walked four.

San Francisco starting hurler, Greg Sinclair, was tagged with the loss but pitched well enough to get a win most games. Four unearned runs never do help the plight of a pitcher.

Three Ram errors were picked up, one each by Jerry Bosch, Ed Sickenger and Bob Farmer. Each error led to at least one Foothill run.

Sickenger's error came in the fourth inning when with no score yet registered for either squad and a hit batsman on first he tracked down a high twisting foul popup behind third base. He caught the ball and wheeled around and threw from his hip over first baseman Frank Grimaud's outstretched glove. The runner went to third.

Rich Bladt, the Owl runner who went to third, scored on a delayed double steal attempt.

Righthelder Bosch made the most costly miscue of the clash when he dropped a third-out fly in the fifth inning and two runs crossed the plate. On that same play Farmer, Ram catcher, threw to third to try and catch the only remaining runner off base. The throw went past Sickenger and Bladt got credit for a three-run homer on two errors.

In defense of Siekenger's one costly error, the team-concious little third sacker turned in the best defensive effort of any fielder on the day making several stops behind the bag and throwing perfect pegs to first.

Sinclair's loss came to him in spite of an eight-inning, four-hit performance. He gave up only two bases on balls.

Jim Griffin came in in the ninth for the Rams and allowed only one hit.

Thunderbirds Test SF In Diamond Duel Tomorrow

With four games behind them, two of them against preseason favorites San Jose and Foothill, City College's baseballers look toward tomorrow's contest with Merritt which sports a 1-2 record. The Rams' record now stands at 2-1.

Coach Ernie Domecus recently explained that he is very pleased with his pitching, an area in which he feared he would have trouble this year. He was especially high on hurlers Greg Sinclair, Hugh Miller, Bill Kirkpatrick and Nick Eterovich.

Domecus also expressed pleasure over the play of shortstop Tommy Callen and second baseman Paul Giambra, both of whom are former All-City infielders. Callen, formerly of Sacred Heart, and Giambra, formerly of Galileo, have given the Rams a fine double-play combination.

Despite the club's weak defensive showing in the season opener against Foothill (three errors), Domecus feels that his team's strong point will be "defense, I hope." The coach is worried most about the club's lack of hitting.

When quizzed about reports that the Rams were the favorite in the Golden Gate Conference this year, Domecus explained that the reports were probably put out by San Jose and Foothill, "to put the pressure on us."

Conference Relays Victory Big Start For Track Team

City College's championship-seeking track team started the new season in a big way with an easy win over Modesto Junior College and a most important victory in the Golden Gate Conference Relays, held at the College of San Mateo on March 5.

San Francisco rolled up 84 points to Modesto's 51 despite having key sprinters out with various injuries.

Veterans Lee Benton and Dwight Tucker did extremely well against Modesto. Tucker took firsts in the high jump, broad jump and triple jump while Benton won the 220 and 440 as well as participating in the winning of the 440 relay, which set a meet record of 42.9.

Vasquez was pleased with the performances of rookies O. J. Simpson, Ralph Barsi and Adam Banks who ran first, second and fourth in the 100 with times of 9.9, 10.1 and 10.3 respectively.

The distance runners nearly swept all the races they entered with wins in the 880, mile, mile relay and two-mile races. George Ferguson set a meet record of 4:18.3 in the mile while the mile relay was run in 3:34.6 by the team of Hyde, Ferguson, Henderson and Cuadra. City College swept the 880 and 2-mile events with first place times of 2:01.0 by Cuadra in the 880 and 10:14.3 by Bill Long in the two miler.

In the Golden Gate Conference Relays the sprinters provided the big punch as the Rams registered 60 points to second-place San Jose's 49.

Coach Lou Vasquez commented that the meet would definitely work in the Rams' favor. "We are strong in all relay races and the meet came out favorably for us," he said.

Vasquez was blessed with the return of Prince and Davis as the quartet of Simpson, Davis, Benton and Prince swept the 440 and 880-yard relays, in outstanding early times of 41.8 and 1:28.1.

City College's distance runners continued their fine performances thus far with a timing of 10:19.4 in the distance medley relay.

On Saturday, March 19, the Rams will meet the Merritt College T-Birds. Judging from their showing in the relays, they should win easily.

Golfers Clobber Comets, 40-0

Golf Coach Grover Klemmer is hoping that tomorrow's match with Contra Costa will be a repeat of the Rams' previous encounter with the Comets. In that first match, played at the Richmond Golf course, the San Franciscans clobbered the men from across the Bay, 40-0.

Medalist in the Contra Costa match was Tom O'Kane, who came in with a one-under-par 71. Other City College players with sub-80 rounds were Gary Mialocq with a 75 and Ron O'Conner who came in at 78.

Klemmer has been pleased with the play of all the players as they have all had exceptionally good scores. However, he is quick to point out that some of the golfers have been somewhat inconsistent and this, Klemmer explained, could be a major factor as the season progresses.

Klemmer further stated that he expects to get the greatest competition from Diablo Valley, perennially tough San Mateo, and Merritt—which was tied with the Rams for last year's conference title.

Tennis Team Faces Tough Test Friday Against Foothill

The Golden Gate Conference tennis championship could conceivably be decided this Friday when City Colleges' netters face top-seeded Foothill at Golden Gate Park. So so believes Coach Roy Diederichsen.

"The thing that makes Foothill so tough is their great depth," Diederichsen explained. "Although their number one man isn't that good, their number five man is just as good as the number one man."

However, the coach is quick to point out that Foothill and City College could lose matches after their match with one another, but he still feels that a vital step toward the title will be taken when the Owl-Ram match is completed.

Diederichsen's greatest worry throughout the season and especially against Foothill will be the Rams' lack of depth. He explained recently, "I can see wins in the first three spots, but after that I just don't know."

Part of his worry stems from the fact that the Rams were being defeated by the University of California freshman team when the match was called on account of rain.

He has been pleased, however, with the outstanding play of freshman Greg Shephard. The former Triple-A singles champ has supplanted George Ponitkoff as the Rams' number one man.

Diederichsen further stated that three men, Dave Brewer, Quincy Lay and Bob Zypta could change positions in the team ladder at any time. Said Diederichsen, "I want that made very clear."

The Guardsman

Official Publication of the Associated Students of City College of San Francisco

VOLUME 62 SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA—WEDNESDAY, MARCH 23, 1966 NUMBER 4

Council Criticizes 'G' News Coverage Policy

By Jeff Kraus

Student Council last week charged that The Guardsman and its adviser "have asserted their independence" and passed a "recommendation" advising that the paper and adviser reconsider their position on coverage. The final vote was 8-7-0.

The recommendation text is as follows:

"WRERE AS: The Guardsman staff and advisor have asserted their independence in print and at two publications board meetings.

"WHERE AS: The Guardsman is entirely paid for by the Associated Students. ($4703.65.)

"WHERE AS: The Guardsman is the "official publication of the Associated Students."

"WHERE AS: Student Council is elected to be "the legislative body of the Associated Students, who shall be responsible for and shall have the final authority in the supervision of the affairs, policies, properties, and conduct of this association."

"THEREFORE, BE IT RECOMMENDED: The Guardsman staff and advisor seriously re-examine their responsibility and attitude toward the Associated Students and Student Council."

The original recommendation had a clause which said "or be prepared to face the consequences of the irresponsibility thus far displayed." This was amended by council, who felt that it was too much of a threat to be included in a recommendation.

AS President Jim Soletti drafted the bill, but he had AS Vice President Helen Buntros present it to council. Later on, however, he relinquished his chair to Miss Buntros so that he could speak in favor of the bill.

Guardsman Editor-In-Chief Mike Smith was present to speak for the paper. He stated the paper's editorial position and refuted several statements made by Soletti.

It was very clear that council itself was split over the issue, as several members spoke both pro and con on the issue. After almost 45 minutes of debate, the vote was called for and the recommendation was passed.

Coulteil also heard a request for allocation of money from the Forensics Club. The club asked for money to be able to attend the Model United Nations Convention to be held in San Francisco.

The motion had been referred to the supplementary appropriations committee, which okayed the request. It came before council for approval and was passed, 15-0-0.

Councilman Joe Parnell introduced a bill recommending that council support fully the Ugly Man On Campus contest, sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega. This passed, 15-0-0. Alpha Phi Omega is a campus men's service fraternity.

Fedoroff And Ohy Receive B Of A Business Awards

By Ed Flowers

Natalie Fedoroff and Maki Ohy were presented with Bank of America Business Awards last Thursday evening at a dinner at the Hilton Hotel. Mrs. Fedoroff received the secretarial award and Miss Ohy the accounting award.

Both students received $200 and a certificate.

Each year these awards are given by Bank of America to two students majoring in business or business administration for the Accounting Award and clerical or secretarial work for the Secretarial Award.

Winners are selected on the basis of high scholastics achievement and participation in campus activities. Graduate students only are eligible.

A committee consisting of members of the faculty was selected to choose amongst the students with the highest qualifications. The committee included Dean Mary Golding, Anka Ohman, Edward Larson, James McConnell, Harry Frustuek and George Stewart.

McConnell was sponsor for the secretarial winner, Mrs. Fedoroff and Frustuck for the accounting winner, Miss Ohy.

According to Dean Golding both men and women students can apply for the awards, but that only women seem to receive them because there aren't enough men with good accounting records.

Tuesday Deadline For Next Fall Budget Requests

Deadline for organizations to turn in requests to the Finance Committee for next fall's budget appropriations is next Tuesday.

Janet Hinterman, Finance Chairman, and her assistant, Linda Castro, were appointed by Jim Soletti, Associated Student president, to help in appropriating some $40,000 to the 36 different budgeted organizations.

Miss Hinterman hopes that the budget hearings will start by April 1. "These are usually scheduled on a Friday at noon," she added. The reason for budget hearings is to look closely at the organization's estimate for funds.

When asked if there might be any specific problems anticipated Miss Hinterman sighed and said, "I think that the only problem that we'll really have is that the organizations will ask for more money than we have!"

Campus Forum Head Calls Council's Action Censorship

By Arturo Rodriguez, News Editor

Once again The Guardsman came under the "spotlight" of student discussion as the Council Of Organizations focused its sights on the recent legislation passed by Student Council which recommended that "The Guardsman staff and advisor seriously re-examine their responsibility and attitude toward the Associated Students and Student Council."

After Chairman Paul Shuttleworth explained that any action taken by COO would not directly affect past legislation formed in the Student Council, and that only a "condemnation" of such legislation would be possible, debate began.

STEWART OPENS DEBATE

Fred Stewart, president of Campus Forum, submitted to the 27 members present that he felt action taken by Student Council on March 16 was in effect "a censoring of The Guardsman."

Stewart made it clear that he had many complaints against The Guardsman, which were now coming out in Campus Forum discussions.

"I don't care if it is paid for by the Associated Students as this might lead to Student Council telling other AS budgeted organizations what to do," Stewart emphasized.

After this statement, Stewart pointed to the Student-Faculty Lecture Series as an example of what he meant. He felt that Student Council might carry this legislation so far as to telling the Series what speakers to present.

At this point he was interrupted by Ernie Woodcock, Freshman Class president, for a point of information which stated that Student Council did in fact have the right to tell the Student-Faculty Lecture Series who may speak, and had done so in the past.

In rebuttal, Jim Soletti, author of the controversial legislation, presented his views. He felt action by COO on Student Council legislation had never taken place before, and was most unusual.

"The basic issue in this legislation," said Soletti, "is whether Student Council has the right to tell budget organizations how to spend the money they receive."

FREEDOM OF PRESS

"Whenever this has come up," Soletti emphasized, "people have brought up the idea of 'Freedom of the Press' but this is not the issue here. We are not going to tell The Guardsman what to print, and how to print it; we do not plan to go up and copy read Guardsman copy."

The issue, he felt, was not a lone one concerning The Guardsman but one concerning all organizations on campus who are budgeted by the AS. "If The Guardsman is budgeted by the Associated Students, and Newman Club is also a member of the Associated Students, then Newman Club deserves coverage in The Guardsman.

"Thus, if Newman Club felt they did not get enough coverage in the paper then they can come to Student Council and demand coverage," said Soletti.

Soletti also made it clear to the meeting that he felt this matter was closed so that COO could get back to its "own business."

Artist Series Features Renaissance Octet

The Renaissance Octet will perform during College Hour on Thursday, March 31, in the college theater. This is the second concert in this semester's Artist Series.

While specializing in the production of vocal ensemble music of the Renaissance, the Octet's repetoire embraces music from the 15th century to the present.

Cuddy Guilty Of Trespassing, Refusal To Disperse

By Arturo Rodriguez

City College philosophy student Ronald Cuddy was found guilty of trespassing and of refusing to disperse in a jury trial in front of Judge Lawrence Mana's Municipal Court March 17.

The verdict, reached after an hour and three-quarters of deliberation, brought to an end a case which had its roots in the 1965 Free Speech Movement.

It was in the Spring 1965 semester that Cuddy formed Action on Campus, an organization dedicated to furthering free speech action at City College.

After being denied the right to hold a rally on campus on March 14, 1965, he proceeded to hold the rally without permission. For this action Cuddy was suspended from classes for 10 days.

On March 17, 1965, Cuddy entered the City College campus, with full knowledge of his suspension, and was immediately taken into custody by Dean of Men Ralph Hillsman in a citizen's arrest.

"I consider this a legal victory rather than a defeat. Since now, the door is open for a continuation of the flight up the legal ladder which could widen the scope of the entire case," stated Cuddy upon his return to classes and studies March 18.

The case is under the supervision of the American Civil Liberties Union, an organization known for its defense of individual rights under the constitution.

Cuddy, an Air Force veteran, is presently in his third semester at City College.

AWS Fashion Show Short On Vitamin C

The AWS fashion show-tea tomorrow is going to be short on Vitamin C.

The refreshment menu discloses the fact that there will be 800 paper cups (four ounce) available and only 30 gallons of orange juice, which means there are 480 four-ounce shots to go around; hence 320 paper cups will have to be satisfied with coffee or tea.

A total of 2600 cookies of various types should be adequate, even if the anticipated attendance of 1000 guests show. Coffee users will have to share two pounds of sugar and a quart of cream with the tea toters.

See Page 3 for further details.

Althea's Mission

CITY COLLEGE STUDENT Joan Baron learns to negotiate smoothly a steep flight of stairs while training with her first guide dog, German Shepherd Althea, at Guide Dogs for the Blind, Inc., in San Rafael.

German Shepherd Aids Student To Continue College Education

By Susan Volk

A new coed on campus this semester is Althea, a German shepherd Guide Dog whose mission is to aid student Joan Baron.

Having completed the training course at Guide Dogs for the Blind in San Rafael, Miss Baron is back in classes, in her third semester here.

"I know my way around the campus and we have no problems in getting to class," said the former president of the Student California Teachers Association.

Miss Baron, who is working toward a master's degree in psychology, maintains a very hectic schedule despite total blindness which began six months ago with a deterioration of the retina.

Her ambition is to be a high school guidance counselor, and she is getting some practical experience in that area now. She gives counseling aid and advice to approximately 25 teen-age girls at the San Francisco YWCA on Saturdays.

"Music is very important to me," Miss Baron said. A trained coloratura soprano with various singing assignments to fulfill, she is also trained in playing piano, organ and clarinet and has taught herself to play the guitar. She gives piano lessons in her home.

Right now Miss Baron is excited about a new project she is involved in. "I'm doing the interior decorating in our new house," she said, and my roommate is doing the exterior."

After learning basic commands and harness technique at Guide dogs for the Blind, Joan and Althea practiced in the quiet residential districts of San Rafael, progressing to busier areas and finally to San Francisco, where they crossed Chinatown's confusing streets and the eight lanes of Van Ness avenue.

Contrary to common belief, the Guide Dog does not "lead" its master in the sense of making the decisions. The blind person must learn to orient himself, know the direction in which he wants to go, and give the proper command to the dog.

Dogs are color blind and so do not know when the traffic light changes. It is up to the master to listen for the flow of traffic and know when it is safe to cross. The dog will disobey a command, however, if a car turns in front of them, or if an obstacle is in the way. In this case the master ascertains the situation and then gives a corrected command.

"Smith Hall is the most difficult building on campus for us to get around in," said the pretty coed. "Althea is distracted by all the noisc and confusion.

"In the crowded hallways," she added, "it is important for other students not to distract Althea while we are working. Althea is friendly, however, and if they like, they may pet her while she is relaxing."

Miss Baron has been active in the effort to gain better facilities for blind students here, where there are relatively few visually handicapped persons as compared to State College.

With the help of Raymond Early of the English department, she is campaigning for recording equipment and transcribers, and a tape library and a study room where these aids would be available.

Space Age U

By Greg Frazier

A FRESH approach to education is needed. Education has traditionally provided man with formal knowledge. In the universities of civilized history, academic education has flourished, and perpetuated formal knowledge.

What is lacking in the Space Age is not formal knowledge, but the ability to play our roles. Formal knowledge can teach a man the abilities necessary to become a Bureaucrat. But how does a Bureaucrat act? What is expected of him socially? How many parties should he give this year? If a man is going to devote his life to Bureaucracy, these are strategic questions.

Let's look at some prospective courses for Space Age U.

Social Ammenities Courses. The future Bureaucrat will want to know how to hold a vague business conversation, as well as how to confuse, doubletalk, bewilder, bedevil and lose records. Courses would be offered in Wit, Sophistication, Universal Tipping Scale, Great Little Restaurants That Nobody Else Knows About, Dating Customs, and so on.

The Bureaucrat-Bon-vivant can partake of the most superb cuisine after taking the How To Avoid Getting Ulcers Course. He will walk fearlessly into any restaurant and order from Tortellini to Truites a la Bourbonnaise. He will learn of heavy and light Bordeaux and feathered and furred game. Knowledge of how to toss together a French "75" of an Irish Velvet is absolute.

Space Age U. would also offer stimulating courses in Sexology to all interested. The prospective curriculum is boundless and offers much variety. We won't elaborate here, however.

Courses for Catty Women, emphasizing instant recall of such feminine quips as "Betsy darling! You look so nice! Why, I hardly recognized you!" And what sane person would venture out into the Space Age without taking the How To Open Containers Course, or a course in How to Read A College Manual.

A How To Win Thousands At Roulette Course, or a Would You Believe How To Lose Thousands At Roulette Course? A make Yourself Irresistible And Have Men At Your Feet Course.

Beatnik courses (How To Live On One Haiku A Day). Protest courses (How To Make A Stunning Protest Sign). Fool Proof Dieting courses, a course in Pedantry for college professors, logical courses for politicians, Courses in Oneupmanship for Pyramid Climbers and college professors.

Courses in How To Write A College Manual, a course in the history of the Mudde Dynasty from Rollo the First to Stanley the Last, and last, but not least, courses in How To Put People On.

World leaders would be nurtured in Space Age Universities. We would build a platform, propose a candidate, someone staunch, like – James Bond!

'Til the millenium tho', it's Psych, Soc, Engl . . .

Living Inspiration

By Rich Heintz

INSPIRATION, in a college with 30 to 70 students in a class, comes little and far between, causing a person to feel that a correspondence course could suffice for a college, if college were only book learning.

But occassionally inspiration does make an appearance, restoring some faith in the "higher learning" system.

Such an exception occurred a few weeks back, when Harvey Meyers, a book store employee in Berkeley, gave a guest lecture in an English 1B class. Meyers is 26 years old, is married and has three children, studied philosophy at St. John's College in Annapolis, later received his BA and MA at Cal Berkeley (where he was a teaching assistant), and also taught pre-freshman Negroes in the South, where he found them to be "all nice kids with some difficulty in reading."

Meyers has a good sense of humor, seen in his viewpoint on teaching, which he feels "one shouldn't do too much of." Concerning all the talk today of educational methods, he says it's "Much ado about Nothing."

He is now making movie shorts and plans to "probably" teach in the future.

His lecture that morning was concerned with Shakespeare's Henry IV, part I. But this is where Meyers' similarity to most teachers ends.

It may not appear to be much, but what Meyers did that morning was to keep a room full of hungry, eager students (eager to get to the cafe) interested in what can sometimes be a most uninteresting topic – Shakespeare.

Meyers was able to hold the interest of his audience because he himself was obviously interested, (as shown in his varied background). He knew his subject to the extend that he never consulted notes during the lecture.

He never gave the appearances of being smug in his knowledge, always intently listening to questions, coming down to the students' level. He was able to evoke discussion from part of the class which did not usually speak.

Harvey Meyers was an inspiring teacher because he is still a student – as any good teacher must be.

Cosmopolitan Flavor Favored In News-Reporting By Some; Guardsman Gets Complaints

THERE ARE THOSE persons in this college who have shown a strong feeling of discontent with this newspaper. They have put forth the question of policy more avidly this semester than any other group has done in quite some time. The dissent is complex, and it is diverse.

A good newspaper must not only conform to the ideas of right and justice, but it also must meet the high standards the public has established for it – and the public is the minority as well as the majority.

The newspaper also has the obligation to safeguard these very principles. It has the obligation to criticize any one faction that may attempt to gain control of the newspaper in any way or any manner – regardless of how slight. It has an obligation to the campus as a whole.

COMPLAINTS SMALL IN NUMBER

The Guardsman is supported by the students of the college. It is their clubs and organizations that the paper publicizes. It is the rallies, activities, and the general functions and announcements that go on the pages of The Guardsman. Apparently the general student association is satisfied with this format because the complaints against it have been small in number.

It is in the area of the "campus-rut cry" that The Guardsman has been hit the hardest. The advocates of the "campus-rut cry" are dissatisfied with the present format of the publication. It is their opinion that too much space is devoted to college functions and that the paper becomes tiresome, or that it has fallen into a "rut" obsessed with publishing strictly campus news.

Verbal requests have been made that the paper "open-up" and mix world and national affairs with the emotions of the students in this college. Although the columnists can write on any subject they want, there is still the demand that The Guardsman turn away from its "community type" paper in favor of the metropolitan touch. It has been said that quite a few students are partial to the anti-campus news cry.

CONCRETE SIGNS OF INTEREST MINOR

But what puzzles us now is that if such a big demand for greater space devoted to international and national discussion on the pages of The Guardsman (other than by the columnists), why haven't we seen any greater signs of this interest? When our columnists, some of whom have very strong opinions and have expressed them – particularly last semester – wrote on the international scene, they received very few letters-to-the-editor commenting on the opinion.

Another thing we would like to know is why there was only a handful of students listening to the John Birch Society speaker, Robert Newell, when he was on campus a few weeks ago. And where was this great mass of international and national students of history when another campus visitor, George Leonard, senior editor of Look Magazine, spoke on the Coming Revolution In Higher Education?

PATTERN SAME LAST SEMESTER

This same pattern was true last semester when the campus speakers numbered among them Alan Cranston, and Laughlin Waters, candidate for California governor at the time.

It would have been interesting if these speakers had drawn large crowds; and it would have been stimulating if the students who want more controversial news to go into The Guardsman had written letters commenting on the speeches. In the past two years, The Guardsman has received only one letter remarking on an on-campus speech.

DEMANDS CONSTANT – BACKING SMALL

But the question of the paper's policy goes on. The demands are constant – but the action backing it tends to be small. The free speech platform is one example of this.

As it is obviously known, The Guardsman carries no advertising. This paper did advertise until 1950. It stopped doing so because it proved to be impracticable economically and newswise for a weekly.

If it is economically possible to carry advertising without losing a proportionate amount (or more) of news space – the paper will again take ads.

One alternative that could expand the paper thus giving room for both campus and off-campus news could be the enactment of a mandatory Associated Student card law for all. This would give more funds not only to The Guardsman but to the clubs, organizations and the varsity teams as well. However, such a program would be unfair in that it would be forcing many students – who attend the college because it is tuition free – to buy something they may have no need for; and this reason in itself is good enough.

A few years from now it may be the opinion of The Guardsman that AS cards should be made mandatory; that then will be the policy of the paper. It may change and it may not. It's all a matter of circumstances.

Poorboy's Menu

By B.T.

THAT WAR ON POVERTY is not new to some students here. A high percentage of students are employed outside, and a few actually wage an endless war against Time and Money. They really appreciate higher education and actually do without food at times.

Whether they prefer to eat but one meal per day, or are rare intellectuals who are indifferent to nutriment because they prefer to literally "devour" their textbooks, or are just plain stingy, is their business.

In reality, only a few students here can afford to support themselves in grande style and accomplish the requirements for college education.

Many choose to earn their degree first, then look forward to the day when they can consume a gourmet's menu.

For the self-supporting student who is half-starved and between invitations to dinner, Outpost lists a number of cookbooks that promise a world of fantasy:

The public library has available stacks of cookbooks with titles that would torment the best English instructor and amateur semanticist:

Tried Temptations, Old And New; The Mistress Cookbook; Love And Dishes; Love And Knishes; Delights For Ladies; Physiology Of Taste; Eggs I Have Known; Look Before You Cook; Going Wild In The Kitchen; Rail, Hail And Baked Beans; Honorable Hibachi; Experience With Foods; Hunger And History; The Congressional Cookbook; The Hay System Cookery Book and Kitchen Essays.

A unique cookbook, The Chinese-Kosher Cookbook, by Ruth and Bob Grossman, takes the reader to Chinatown in a Jewish rickshaw. It is funny.

Such tasty recipes as Egg Roll Hah Dah Sah, Stuffed Mushrooms Mah Zel Tuv, Helzel Hong Kong, Matzoh Brei Foo Young, Spinach Mish Ah Gahs and Fish Neh Bish, oi vey, are given with numerous footnotes such as "Mah Zel Tuv: what they told Columbus when he got back to Spain."

"You're Wanting Maybe the Real Thing?" the last chapter, explains where to purchase ingredients.

Cine-Art

A Patch Of Blue

By Albert Hilliard Hughes

ELIZABETH HARTMAN, former coed at Carnegie Institute of Technology, makes her first screen appearance in MGM'S A Patch Of Blue, which opens tomorrow at Cinema 21.

According to Eddie Lawrence of MGM Studios, at a Press Conference held at the Fairmont Hotel Friday afternoon, March 4, Miss Hartman was born 21 years ago in Youngstown, Ohio. After a year at Carnegie Tech she joined a small stock company in Cleveland, prior to going to Hollywood, where she was tested for the role of Selina in Guy Green's A Patch Of Blue. She has a younger brother, now a student at Miami University in Pittsburgh, and an older sister.

A Patch Of Blue co-stars Miss Hartman with "Oscar" winners Sidney Poitier and Shelley Winters. Miss Hartman's success in the film has won her an "Oscar" nomination as well as a featured role in the new film, The Group. But the picture belongs entirely to Miss Hartman who, if given suitable roles, can become one of the most popular new stars in Hollywood.

Prior to Hollywood she had a brief experience in the New York theater, in a play which closed in Boston. While in the play a Warner Brothers talent scout spotted her and she was brought to Hollywood and given the glamour treatment before she was signed by Green.

Besides Miss Hartman's "Oscar" nomination, others are Shelley Winters, best music score and best art direction.

Speaking further of the film, Lawrence called it "A picture with a happy tear." It is worth two hours of anyone's time. Sentimental, but never mawkish, it is based upon the novel, Be Ready With Bells And Drums, by Elizabeth Kata.

According to a prepared publicity release, Miss Hartman is quoted as saying, "Only a year ago I was in Cleveland with the Kenley Players painting scenery and making $35 every two weeks!"

From $35 to an "Oscar nominee is quite a success story for a former coed who didn't finish college, but it is that one chance in a thousand.

Meanderings

By Peter Dorn

THERE'S ONLY one way for this country to end this Vietnam business with a minimum of cost in lives and capital.

The solution would not only be economical but would also let all parties concerned out of the dilemma with all the honor and face that they might have had when they came into it.

The solution is, of course, that the United States buy Vietnam.

It should be apparent to everybody that the present course of action can only result in atrophy, and it isn't going to get anybody any place.

Now there are many rumors going about as to the cost of this war in terms of dollars only, as this proposition is strictly of a financial nature. Some say one million a day, others say more and others less.

Everybody will agree, however, that this project is expensive; just look at the new automobile, the trademark of American life. Not five months after excise taxes are dropped from new autos are new taxes tagged onto them to help finance the "war."

All that this proposal suggests is that all available funds for the war be put to use as a down payment on vietnam, with the balance to be paid off in monthly installments. After all, just how much could Vietnam cost anyway?

With the country as a U.S. territory, a territory police force would have complete powers in enforcing the law in the name of peace, and it would do so without a lot of falderal. Politics would be eliminated because the territory's marshal would be appointed rather than elected; hence he would not have to worry about this or that group back home.

It's good ol' American horse sense not to pour water down a well or to send good money after bad.

If a man has a 1949 model car that is falling apart, he doesn't spend hundreds and hundreds of dollars on it in order to keep it running. He goes out and spends that money on a new car; right? And although he's paying for depreciation and all kinds of insurance, at least he has something tangible for his money; right?

Same difference.

So, when our leaders get the 413 billion for the Asian project, perhaps they ought to hold off giving it to the munitions and aircraft manufacturers and go see a good realtor instead.

Club Notes: Alpha Phi Omega Sponsors UMOC

By Bill Fritz

THE FIRST midterm exams of a previously relaxed semester are here, and their effect is plainly visible in the declining activity of campus clubs and organizations. But there is one consoling thought.

UMOC is coming.

Alpha Pi Omega fraternity is sponsoring its annual Ugly Man on Campus contest during the week of April 25-29. The proceeds from this contest go toward student activities scholarships which will be awarded to deserving men and women students on campus. Clubs and organizations are encouraged to sponsor candidates for the contest. For information, contact Scott Scales on Thursday during College Hour in S-255.

The Collegiate Christian Fellowship will sponsor an exposition on a portion of the Book of Romans next Tuesday, March 29, in C-104 during College Hour.

Delta Psi Omega, the drama fraternity, will put on its first production, Crawling Arnold, by Jules Feiffer, tomorrow during College Hour in the theater. Crawling Arnold replaces the cancelled Brass Butterfly.

The Filipino-American Club will hold another Filipino folk dance class today at 4 p.m. in B-6 and will continue with its afternoons of bowling each Friday at 4:15 p.m. at Castle Lanes.

The Business Club meets each Tuesday in S-209 during College Hour. Hoping to attract new members, the club has lined up some interesting guest speakers and films, with two main events, a fashion shop and an alumni night.

Alpha Phi Epsilon has scheduled a dance this Friday night in Smith Hall from 9-12 p.m. Music will be by the V.I.P.'s.

AWS Presents Easter Carousel

Best-Dressed Winner To Be Named At Show

Light springy fashion will be modeled by the 14 finalists in the Best-Dressed Coed Contest at tomorrow's Associated Women Student Fashion Show and Tea, Easter Carousel.

Smith Hall's doors will open at 3 p.m. for the show.

Approximately 1000 school coeds are expected to attend the semi-annual AWS Fashion Show and Tea with fashions furnished by H. Leibes' of San Francisco. Mrs. Charles Preston, fashion coordinator for the H. Leibes' store, will be commentator.

Brenda Jung, president of the AWS, will open the program with the traditional welcoming address. Featured in the show will be the selection of the Best-Dressed Coed.

It is customary that the winner of the contest be awarded a plaque and a pin, and each of the remaining finalists certificates of recognition.

This semester's award will be presented by Irene Mensing of the library staff; however, the coed selected as its recipient will not received the actual plaque until the Awards and Recognition Party.

The following models will highlight the affair: Nancy Blythe, Joyce Byrd, Anita Davis, Barbara Huntington, Susi Jackson, Magda Jacobs, Diane Korens, Jennie Lam, Anita Marquez, Sheridan Parker, Charlotte Piazza, Joan Shaw, Pat Shea and Marian Wolbertus.

Sixty coeds will act as hostesses for the show, according to Hospitality Chairman Joyce Byrd, who took charge of the recruiting.

Entertainment will be presented in a medley of songs performed by Lana Tershy, and background music for the entire show will be provided by accordianist Marie Manini.

Thurber—'Best Comedy, Credit To Cast And Crew'

By Alfred Hilliard Hughes

"Laugh and the world laughs with you; cry and you" spoil good beer. No spoiled beers were reported after the curtain rang down on last week's production of A Thurber Carnival.

Based on stories, fables, drawings and miscellaneous writings by one of America's greatest humorists, James Thurber, the play was a delightful, laugh-filled grab-bag of barbed wit and bruising satire. Man and woman, under Thurber's microscope, are stripped of their masks and revealed as the funny creatures they are in reality.

Word Dance, which opened the show, is a cocktail party in progress.

At cocktail parties one never really hears conversations, only snatches of isolated verbal tidbits. In the play, these tidbits become ribald little exposes and set the mood for the evening's entertainment.

Such familiar pieces as Unicorn In The Garden, The Little Girl And The Wolf, The MacBeth Murder Mystery and The Secret Life Of Walter Mitty (shortened) gave fullness and depth to the overall fun. In between these were less familiar.

The near-excellent cast of new and veteran City College performers, under James Haran's direction, managed to pull off a difficult production. In a show of this type, technical virtuosity as well as acting ability is a must.

With the exception of a few minor technical problems, corrected after opening night, and some faltering timing in a couple of episodes, the overall production went very smoothly.

Being a demanding play, it is to the credit of the cast and crew that A Thurber Carnival proved to be one of the best comedy productions presented at City College.

Not to be overlooked was the excellent musical combo of four very talented young musicians whose accompaniment was an integral part of the show. They livened the pace and added just that extra touch needed to keep the play rollicking along so merrily.

A special nod must go to Paul Crowley and his crew for their reproduction backdrops of Thurber drawings which pointed up strongly the vitriolic satire which was served the audience.

Tryouts for Blood Wedding are slated for tomorrow and Friday.

Large Rookie Enrollment Bolsters Campus Constables

An increase in the number of men joining the Campus Police this semester was noted last week when 20 rookies neared the end of their training period.

It marks the largest new enrollment in one semester of men in the Campus Police force to date.

Lawrence Lawson, head of the Campus Police and the criminology department, said the usual enrollment in the force ran between 12 or 13 in preceding semesters.

Lawson added that in addition to the forty men students in his department he has five women students. The five coeds are working as clerks in the Campus Police office.

The Campus Police are not without problems too. Morning traffic to the campus between 7 and 8:30 a.m. on Phelan and Judson avenues is usually congested and a problem for the officers to keep moving.

There has been a temporary drop from 22 officers last semester to 11 officers this semester. This is a result of the members of students graduating last semester. This semester new officers will be sworn in after the usual six week training period.

Bob Tiesjen, chief of Campus Police, stated that he feels "jaywalkers" are an increasing problem to him and his officers. Other problems for the officers are out-of-stall parking in student lots and students parking in the grass area in B lot behind Statler wing.

More serious problems were the four or five incidences of auto tampering and the several incidences of drag racing on campus.

Roger Dickson, lieutenant of Campus Police added that there is a group of students who, when in Statler wing, do not obey the rules of this area. The aisles are frequently being blocked and tables are not being cleaned up after being used.

The aisle-blocking is not only hazardous but it is against the city fire ordinance, he emphasized.

The Campus Police department started here 26 years ago, with a total of 12 men. The enrollment has grown ever since.

Student Response To Honor Society Up 200 Per Cent

Alpha Gamma Sigma, scholastic honor society, received an unexpected response from students eligible this semester with a membership increase over last fall of 200 per cent.

"Last semester about 90 students signed up for the society while now about 200 have given their names," Wallace Wells, sponsor of AGS, said. "During the spring, 293 students were eligible but the society had only 55 members with a card."

According to Dolores Talp, president of the honor society, during registration 12 members were posted in strategic points outside Cloud Hall in order to speak to students.

"The increase in membership," she said, "is due to the cooperation of officers and members who have been working as a team on behalf of the society."

In a later interview, Wells said that the constitution of AGS needs new changes.

He cited one section, explaining "the paragraph needs to be changed because it is liable to be misunderstood. A life member of the California Scholarship Federation cannot have all the privileges granted regular members."

The scholastic society will host the annual state convention April 22 and 23 at the Fairmont Hotel. The main topic will be a new constitution and government problems of AGS.

Blood Drive Begins April 14

By Jim Vargas

It is not every day that City College or a member of its "family" earns the recognition of San Francisco and the State of California.

But every spring for the last 10 years an average of 400 members in this family have managed to make California and the City a little prouder of the college. The source of this pride is in the thousands of pints of blood donated during the annual Blood Drive sponsored by the Inter-Fraternity Council.

In his last year in office, Mayor George Christopher both commended the college and officially proclaimed the days of the drive "Blood Days" in San Francisco.

State Senator J. Eugene McAteer, supported by the state assemblymen of San Francisco, submitted a resolution which was later passed by the California legislature commending City College and the IFC. In addition to this, each participating fraternity was awarded a plaque for its efforts.

It may be very probable that some of the facts listed by Dean Ralph Hillsman recently about the drive were significant in prompting the official recognition extended by these governing bodies.

One is that no other college in the area or Pacific Coast has been able to match City College's effort in the past five years.

Another is that no other college blood drive provides such generous provisions for its use. Besides potentially unlimited supplies of the blood being made available to participating students, faculty, civil service employees, alumni and their families, and up to eight pints to anyone else of their choosing, the yearly balance of each fund is contributed to Veterans' Hospitals and to the San Francisco Disaster Fund.

It has been estimated by the Irwin Memorial Bank that $100,000 worth of blood has been donated in the first nine years of the drive.

The hope of Irwin Memorial, Dean Hillsman, Student Activities Adviser James Wyatt, and the IFC is that on April 14 and 15 much more blood will be given.

● Soletti Protests

Editor, The Guardsman:

I feel that the records should be set straight. 1. Editorial comments belong on the editorial page. 2. The resolution which requested The Guardsman to "devote a portion of an issue to the general Associated Student election was neither "irresponsible" or a "threat."

The Publications Board agreed that better election coverage would benefit the entire campus. This resolution was discussed at Student Council on two occasions, and at said Publications Board. The Guardsman had every opportunity to bring up their reasons for considering this resolution as "irresponsible" but not a word was said. In fact, The Guardsman was in support of the idea.

This piece of legislation is not a threat, it is a fact. 4. The Guardsman's editorial claimed that "at no time did council consult the organizations requesting budgets with the wish to re-evaluate their demands," and The Guardsman's statement in a column on the front page which read "this action (a 5.7% overall cut) was in contrast to past councils who had reviewed request cuts directly with submitting organizations" are false.

Last semester's council reviewed each budget three times and the "slash across-the-board" was made only after council was satisfied that every item was cut to the "bare bones." The "slash across-the-board" has been used frequently in the past when the budget request exceeded the available funds.

I feel there were other items in this edition which contributed to the overall theme of a slap at student government. The Guardsman reaction stems, not from a concern with the subject that the disputed resolution deals with, but the right of Student Council to do it. The staff of The Guardsman seems to have forgotten its purpose. It is the official publication of the Associated Students of City College of San Francisco. They are not an independent newspaper. If they are a newspaper let them seek advertising and become independent. If they are a class, let the Board of Education pay for the publication. If they continue to receive $4703.65 and continue to be the "official publication of the Associated Students," they should be responsible to the Associated Students.

I would never dictate editorial policy, but I will see that the Associated Students have something to say about what is in their paper. If The Guardsman is unable to fulfill its responsibility to this campus and the Associated Students, it is my responsibility to see the situation corrected.

I believe a public retraction of the false and slanderous statements which were made, is in order. I also would like to publicly go on record as stating that I am willing to debate Mike Smith, Editor; and Miss Nourse, Adviser; or any other member of the Guardsman staff who claims he can substantiate the accusations directly made or inferred in The Guardsman Vol. 62 No. 1.

Respectively yours,
Jim Soletti, President,
Associated Students

The National Marbles Tournament, inaugurated in 1924, is held annually with contestants sponsored by daily newspapers.

Local Trackmen Romp Over Strong Foothill Squad

The City College track team got over its biggest hurdle of the season when it clobbered co-favorite Foothill College, 89-47, March 11 at Foothill.

This was a big win for the Rams, and it was led by Dwight Tucker. The former footballer copped three firsts and went home with two records. He high jumped 6-9 for a record, and in the triple jump he leaped 47-9½ for another record. He also had time to capture the broad jump with a jump of 22-2.

Coach Lou Vasquez had praise for all his men, and said "This was no one-man show, every man was as big a help as the next." The key to the Rams' success was their domination of the sprints and hurdles.

Sonny Johnson was the only man to win more than two events. He broke his own 330-yard intermediate hurdle record, and also won the 120 high hurdles.

O. J. Simpson, Bob Prince and Lee Benton won the 100, 220, and 440-yard races, respectively. Foothill did not place a man in any of the three races, Adam Banks, Chris Davis and Correll Smith turned in fine performances.

Simpson, Benton, Prince and Davis teamed up to break the college record in the 880-yard relay. Don Jordan also gave Johnson some stiff competition in the hurdles.

The big surprise of the day was the Rams' good showing in the distance races. Foothill is the conference champ in Cross Country and were highly favored to sweep the distance races.

George Ferguson broke the college mile record with a time of 4:15.5. Also Rich Guadra, Roy Henderson and Sky Hyde finished the 880 in order. Foothill's only win of the track events, was the sweep of the two-mile run.

Except for Tucker, the field events were a disaster as Foothill swept the shot put, discus and had the top two in the pole vault. Carson English placed in both the broad jump and the high jump, while Roy Skinner took a third in the pole vault.

Vasquez believes that if all of his members stay healthy, the team can go all the way. "We have the best quality we have eyer had, but if we are hit with injuries, we will be in trouble," he said.

The Rams will meet Chabot Friday, and will be in the favorite's role.

Sac City Whips SF Swimmers

The fast-improving City College swim team lost a close meet to the City College of Sacramento, 40-45, at the winners' pool March 15.

Once again the Rams were without a diver and it cost them valuable points. Also hampering the Rams' chances for a victory was the absence of John O'Connor, who was unable to compete because of the flu.

Roy Burkhead, coach of the team, was pleased with the performance of Bill Pasquinelli, who broke the Sacramento pool record in the 200 backstroke.

Also turning in good performances were Bruno Van Rign, Bob Martin and Fred Adams. Martin took a first in the 100 freestyle and was the main cog in the winning medley relay.

Van Rign who has been out with a leg injury came back to help the team in the relay. Adams came very close to defeating one of the area's top men in the 400 breaststroke.

Cup Awarded To First Place Volleyball Squad

A first-place pottery cup was awarded to the City College volleyball team during Sports Day, February 26, at College of San Mateo.

San Mateo won first place in bowling.

January 15 at the Hartnell meeting, which was for women only, City College took fourth place in basketball among 10 other colleges.

Edna Pope, Recreation Association sponsor, told of the next Sports Day, which will be held Saturday at Cabrilla College in Santa Cruz. Meets in bowling, volleyball, tennis, badminton, swimming, folk dancing and square dancing will be held.

Parks Marks

ALL TOURNEY IN EVERY TOURNEY. Charlie Parks shows how to get elected to all-star teams in three basketball tournaments. Once at Modesto and twice in Bakersfield, Parks was chosen one of the top five in competition. At the Junior College State Championships, Parks had his best offensive surge collecting 61 points in three games. The leading Ram scorer finished sixth in Golden Gate Conference tallies with 234 points, just edging out Willie Wise (225) for Ram honors.
IT WAS IN THE GAME pictured that Parks surpassed Wise by getting 26 ponts to lead San Francisco to a 79-67 victory over Oakland Merritt College. The win clinched the 1966 conference crown for City College. The Rams went on to register the first undefeated season in the history of the Golden Gate Conference. —Guardsman photo by Barry Stevenson

Domecus Nine Tries To Escape Never-Land

By William Pates

IT HAS BEEN pretty much a case of never as far as a baseball championship for City College is concerned.

The college has yet to produce a "winning" team although they have come close, what with a second place finish in 1962. For the most part, however, the San Franciscans have spent the best part of the season wallowing around in the second division.

Surprisingly enough, some fine baseball players have been drafted and signed by the professionals off City College teams although none of them have broken into the majors as yet. Then of course, there's the chance that none of them ever will.

This year Coach Ernie Domecus enters the conference race with a club he has described as "hot and cold."

He's got talent, what with a large contingent of incoming All-City team members, and some outstanding veterans. Among the freshmen are All-City shortstops Paul Giambra and Tommy Callen; pitchers Bill Kirkpatrick and Dennis Duzdevich; pitcher-first baseman Frank Grimaud; outfielders Maris Pantels, Kenny Hall and catcher-outfielder Steve Howder to name just a few.

Shortstops Giambra and Callen have been outstanding acquisitions, what with their continual success at the plate. In six preseason contests, they were instrumental in the college's four victories.

Against the Stanford JV's, Callen batted in three runs to give the team a 4-1 margin and along with Giambra homered in a 3-2 win over Cal's JV's. Giambra smashed a three-run home run in the first inning against Santa Rosa in a tight 4-3 victory.

San Francisco has two pitchers with no hitters to their credit in Lincoln's Bill Kirkpatrick and veteran Greg Sinclair.

Kirkpatrick's came in an AAA semi-pro contest in which he faced only 29 men. He struck out 22, and walked one, then picked him off at first, retired two on outfield fly balls and fielded four grounder for the other outs. Sinclair's took place in the 1964 Academic Athletic Association championship game against Sacred Heart won by Galileo, 6-2.

Inconsistency is the club's greatest hindrance. The Rams have been able to bail out their pitchers on several occasions, but the combination of poor hitting, fielding and pitching is more than they can expect to take and hope to survive.

CITY COLLEGE'S championship basketball team did about as well as can be expected under the circumstances in the state championship tournament in Bakersfield two weeks ago.

Coach Sid Phelan's Club continued the college's domination over Long Beach City College with an 86-81 victory in the first round in which the Rams out-rebounded the Vikings, 49-29.

They tied San Francisco's all-time winning record of 30 games by knocking off undefeated Imperial Valley, 78-75, in overtime after "blowing" a ten point lead.

Even with Gene Williams, there probably would have been no change in the outcome of the Riverside affair. When the opposition hits on 67 per cent of their shots and you can score on but 37 per cent of your shots there isn't much that can be said.

Riverside just had a fantastic shooting night while the Rams had a poor one after having scored no better than 50 per cent in the two preliminaries.

SPORTS ILLUSTRATED continued its policy of bringing disaster down upon all those who have the misfortune to grace the magazine's cover. No sooner had the Kentucky Baron Adolph Rupp been plastered across its dismal front than his Wildcats were thrust from the pedestal of the unbeaten by the Tennessee Vols, 69-62.

Netters Win Over Thunderbirds, 6-1

City College's tennis squad went on about its winning ways with a 6-1 victory over the Merritt College Thunderbirds March 11.

Turning in winning performances were Greg Shephard, who remains undefeated, George Pontikoff, Pete Klestoff and Bob Kypta. Also victorious were both Ram doubles teams. The only City College netter to come out a loser was Quincy Lay.

There has been quite a bit of shuffling in the Ram ladder recently. Shephard has replaced Pontikoff as the number one man, while Kypta has fallen from third spot to fifth as he was defeated in two ladder matches, first by Lay, who is now number three, and then by Klestoff who has taken over the number four position.

SF Routs Chabot, Contra Costa; Loses To Merritt

By Randy Koenig

City College's baseball team scored two victories in the past week but then succumbed to the Merritt College Thunderbirds behind the two-hit pitching of Dennis Easter.

The Rams triumphed over Contra Costa, 10-0, and then romped to a 9-4 verdict over Chabot. If it's necessary to pick out a single star in the Contra Costa slugfest, it would have to be Greg Sinclair.

The lanky San Francisco hurler not only pitched nine innings of four-hit, eight-strikeout ball, but he aided himself at the plate with three hits in five trips to the plate, two of them long triples.

In the second inning, Sinclair found himself in a no-outs, bases loaded situation. Greg got one Contra Costan to pop out to the infield, then gave up a long fly to right field which was hauled in by Pantels.

Upon making the catch, Pantels threw to catcher Steve Howder, who put the tag on the runner who had tagged up and was attempting to score from third.

Also contributing to the Rams' heavy offensive attack against the Comets were first baseman Frank Grimaud and second baseman Al Pasion, both of whom had three hits.

Against Chabot, Ed Sickinger provided all the batting punch that was really necessary for the Rams' 9-4 triumph over the Gladiators. Ed had a perfect day at the plate as he went three-for-three and drove in five runs, one more than the entire Chabot team could muster up.

If the City College club had any illusions of grandiuer after these two decisive victories, the Merritt squad got rid of them in a hurry. The Thunderbirds bunched six of their nine hits to chalk up a 3-1 win over San Francisco.

The T-Birds were first to get on the board. In the second inning, leftfielder Skip Ulrich got to first on Ed Sickinger's error; he then went to second on Dave Water's infield single, advanced to third on an infield out by Wiley Wright and scored on a single by the winning pitcher, Easter.

The Rams came right back in their half of the second, as Frank Grimaud walked, moved to second on a walk to Sickinger, moved to third on Carli's fielder's choice and came in to score as one half of a double steal.

The Birds tallied again in the sixth on a single by first baseman Bob Payne, a walk to third baseman Chuck Winton, and a single by Ulrich which scored Payne.

Merritt concluded all scoring for the game in the eighth inning when right-fielder Booker Dikes singled and then came in to score on a Payne's triple. Payne was the Oakland club's leading hitter for the afternoon as he banged out three safeties in four trips.

Easter went the whole route for Merritt, walking five and striking out five and walking three to pick up credit for the win, while Greg Sinclair was ticketed with the loss.

Intramurals Off To Slow Start In Basketball Action

Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural basketball action cranked into low gear last week as the unavailability of the women's gymnasium rendered half of first-day action without a court.

Timing of first-round action was a main factor in catching a majority of teams unaware of time and place of their games.

Schedules were distributed March 14, and they revealed that games were to be played the very next day. Therefore, Tuesday's competition was held to a lone league game.

Most players did not even realize their team was scheduled do play.

In light of this fact, Jack Gaddy, athletic director, said that teams which did not show up for first round action will be rescheduled and will not lose by forfeit.

One more fact was brought to light with the release of the intramural schedule. There will be only two leagues, not three as previously reported to The Guardsman by Percy Jones, AMS president.

Last semester's consolidation of the Independent and Fraternity Leagues will continue in the Spring 1966 schedule.

Acquisition of record books which list game results was impossible. Therefore, only the results of one "pseudo-basketball" game is available as of this writing.

Newman Club Whips 86, Guardsman 29. G'man Latourneau got 20.

With four Vikings hitting in double figures, the fourunits were in the game only until the opening tipoff.

Tonight in the men's gymnasium the Celtics will meet the newly organized Point Shavers at 7 o'clock. The Irish team duels Alpha Phi Epsilon at 8 p.m.

In the Women's gymnasium, the undefeated Negro Athletic Association will play The Guardsman, and the Soul Plus plays Alpha Sigma Delta.

Golf Squad Wins Conference Game Against San Jose

Coming off a decisive conference victory against San Jose and a close nonconference defeat by powerful University of San Francisco, golf coach Klemmer recently expressed his opinion about this year's golf squad.

"This year we have as strong a team as I've seen here at the college," he said.

And if anyone should know, it is Klemmer, who has seen many fine golf teams in his years at the college. His remarks came in the wake of a 32½-2½ Golden Gate Conference triumph over San Jose City College.

The most impressive aspect of this decisive victory was the faet that all five of the Ram golfers shot sub-80 scores against the Jaguars. Gary Mialocq was low with a 74, then came Ron O'Connor at 75, Doug Nelson at 76, Mike Butler at 77, and Tom O'Kane with a 78.

Two days after the San Jose match the Rams met up with the USF linksmen in a practice match and fell before the older and more experienced Dons by a score of 14½-12½. In the USF match Mialocq, O'Connor, Nelson and Gerald Dorn all had broken 80.

Because of his rapidly-improving play, Nelson has moved up to take over the number five position.

Klemmer explained his overall outlook of the coming season by stating, "Our five are strong; on any given day they are all capable of shooting par golf. Our big problem is going to be hitting a good round when we need it."

The good round Klemmer mentioned could very well be necessary this Friday when the Rams face College of San Mateo at Sharp's Park. The Bulldogs are rated as this year's team to beat in the conference as their first two men, Joe Ward and Glenn Pollex, are returning from last year.

The Rams face San Mateo again on Tuesday at the Peninsula Country Club. This should be an even tougher test than the Friday match, since the Bulldogs will be on their own course.

Tenth Annual Blood Drive To Start On April 14

By Jim Vargas

Final plans for the college's 10th annual Blood Drive are now being formulated, according to James C. Wyatt, student activities adviser.

The Irwin Memorial Blood Bank's mobile unit will be temporarily installed in C-248 and 249 on April 14 and 15 from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. Donors should come as early as possible to avoid an afternoon rush, Wyatt said.

The procedure begins with a complete medical history report by every potential contributor. Then, a preliminary test is administered to determine his physical acceptability. The actual blood "draw" only takes from 5 to 15 minutes.

After this simple process and a rest period, orange juice and cookies will be available.

The Inter-Fraternity Council, sponsors of the drive for the fifth consecutive year, are planning a car parade and rally.

The rally is scheduled for 11 a.m. on Thursday, April 14, in the men's gymnasium with "the best talent available" appearing.

Alpha Kappa Rho is the fraternity in charge of the rally which has seen many of show business's big names in the past.

Possibilities of a car parade are presently being negotiated with the San Francisco Police Department.

The drive, which has received commendations from both the City of San Francisco and the State of California, will again see competition among the six fraternities and the various organizations on campus.

Awards will be given to the organizations that enlist the greatest number of contributors and to that fraternity in the IFC that has the largest percentage of members donate.

All students willing to undergo the painless 45-minute procedure on either of these days will make "themselves, their families, and friends potential receipients of blood during the next year," Wyatt commented.

The donor and his family may receive unlimited quantities of blood during the year. However, up to eight pints can be transferred from the donor's account for a friend on the condition that all rights to blood thereafter be forfeited.

Besides pointing to the fact that City College leads all other colleges on the Pacific Coast in blood donations, Wyatt said:

"The main thing that can be said about this is that this project has been continuous every year. You hear about Cal and Stanford donating blood to send to Vietnam. Well, that's one thing. We've done this consistently every Spring for the past 10 years."

He also expressed hopes that this year's donation would surpass the record set in 1962 of 410 pints. Last year's donation was 380.

Eligibility requirements are that the donor be a student, alumnus, civil service employee, or faculty member of the college.

He must also be 21 years of age or 18 with parental consent. Permission slips can be obtained in Bungalow 5.

'Ugly Man Contest' Set For Week Of April 25-29

Brittanica World Language Dictionary defines "ugly" as something that is "displeasing, revolting, ill-looking or unsightly."

For any young man on campus who feels he fits this description, the annual Ugly Man Contest, sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega, will be held during the week of April 25 to 29.

The deadline for entries is tomorrow.

Anyone on campus who feels he is repulsive enough to enter the contest may do so by submitting his name, address, phone number and two five-by-seven photographs of himself to the Associated Student office.

Contestants will be sponsored by a club or organization on campus, the winner tentatively will be announced on April 29 and prizes will be awarded.

Only members of Alpha Phi Omega are barred from the contest.

Applications For Selective Service Test Due In April

Students subject to the draft who wish to continue college work were advised yesterday by college administrators to take the Selective Service college qualification test, prepared by the Selective Service System, in order to provide the local draft boards with their qualifications.

Applications for the test must be postmarked no later than Saturday, April 23, 1966.

Eligible to take this test are those students not under 18 years of age but selective service registrants who hope to obtain deferment as college students. They must not have previously taken the test, a service brochure states.

Thomas Nesbitt, director of testing here, said, "It is important that students find out by themselves at the local draft board whether they must take the selective service test.

"Generally," he continued, "the board does not ask high-standing students to take it, but at the same time it sometimes requires students with low grade-point averages to take the test in order to obtain better evidence of their standing."

The test will be given on Saturdays, May 14 and 21, and on Friday, June 3, throughout the country. The examination centers for the city of San Francisco will be City College, State College and the University of San Francisco.

Nesbitt advised those who want to apply to take the test, to obtain a bulletin, an application card (SSS form 100), a ticket of admission (SSS form 107) and an envelope. These are obtainable in S-142, Mondays through Fridays.

Guardsman Columnist Guest Panelist On KCBS

Albert Hilllard Hughes, City College drama major and Guardsman columnist, appeared as a motion picture authority on Rolfe Peterson's program Expertize, on radio station KCBS, March 21.

The radio audience called in questions concerning motion pictures in an attempt to stump the expert. A prize is given to the caller if his question is not answered correctly. Hughes successfully answered most of the questions pertaining to films of the 1930's and 1940's.

Renaissance Octet

MEMBERS OF THE Renaissance Octet which will present a concert tomorrow during College Hour are (l. to r.): Kenneth Small, Conrad Knipfel, George Baker, Elizabeth Hinther, Martha Vlahos, Marina Fenner and Eleanor Cohen. The director is Robert Gartler.

Artist Series Presents Vocal Concert Tomorrow

The Renaissance Octet, a musical group specializing in the production of vocal ensemble music of the Renaissance, will present a concert tomorrow during College Hour in the Campus theater.

The Renaissance Octet will sing 15th and 16th century music from the English, Spanish, Italian and French-Netherlands schools, including compositions by Josquin Des Prez, Palestrina, Jacob Handl, Ludwig Senfl, Claude Le Jene, Jacques Arcadelt and Thomas Tallis.

The 20th century will be represented in the concert by the first performance of Hear My Cry, by the Bay Area composer Jules Langert.

The singers in the Octet are George Baker, Elizabeth Hinther, Conrad Knipfel, Marina Fenner, Kenneth Small, Eleanor Cohen and Martha Vlahos. Assisting in the performance will be flutist Ben Borson and cellist Thorel Fenner, City College music instructor.

Under the direction of Robert Gartler, considered uniquely qualified in his training and experience as conductor, composer and musicologist, the group has won critical acclaim for its ability to observe and cross the lines of style, language and idiom to present a clear and vibrant realization of the music of the Renaissance.

The Artist Series will also present the Morrison Quartet during College Hour on April 14. Under the direction of Ferenc Molnar, the Morrison Quartet is a group of music students at San Francisco State College.

G'man Staff Deserts Post For Easter Break; Last Class-Dropping Day Nears

Easter vacation, according to the official college catalog, will begin on April 4 and terminate April 8. The Guardsman staff, being a typical American fun-loving group, intends to utilize this vacation just as much as any other student, if not more so.

The G-staff cannot, therefore, be expected to produce an issue of The Guardsman for April 13 and it does not, moreover, intend to do any such thing.

There will be issues of The G at their usual distribution points on the morn of Wednesday, April 20.

Mention should be made of April 13, which is the last day to drop a class honorably; after this date it's grin and bear it all the way.

Eight Delegates Leave Tomorrow For Convention

City College will be represented by eight delegates at the state conference of the California Junior College Student Government Association convening tomorrow in San Diego, James C. Wyatt, student activities adviser, said today.

The Southern California city's El Cortez Hotel is the site of the conference with all run through Saturday.

Associated Student President Jim Soletti will head the "extremely strong" delegation from the college, Wyatt indicated.

Other delegates are Tom Cloney, state information chairman of the CJCSGA, an office permanently awarded to City College, Helen Bundros, AS vice president, Tom Csekey, Chris Scales, Ernie Woodcock, Helen Ferentinos, and Wyatt, who goes as an adviser to the delegation.

He stated that Soletti is attending the conference in two capacities. Besides leading the group he is President-elect of the CJCSGA for the Fall, 1966 convention and is scheduled to be sworn in at the meeting.

City College will be host of the state convention centered at the Hilton Hotel next semester.

"The association, consisting of the 78 two-year colleges in the state, designs the meeting to give all participating institutions a chance to present their viewpoints and those of the colleges in their area, in matters affecting the general interest of the association or its members," Wyatt said.

There are eight areas in the association. City College is in Area Six along with College of San Mateo, Menlo, Foothill, West Valley, San Jose, Gavilan, Cabrillo and Monterey Peninsula Colleges.

Departments Join Forces To Show Relation Of Art, Science

Plans for an exhibition of how "nature inspires both scientists and artists," presented through the cooperation of the students and faculty of several City College departments, were announced today by science instructor Jules Fraden.

The purpose of the exhibition, running from April 11 through 15, is to show the connection between artists and scientists by demonstrating the tremendous capacity creative man has for synthesizing the arts and sciences in the creation of beauty.

Fraden stated that today's educational facilities are nearing a crisis where each and every department of an institution will "consider itself totally separate from the others." The coming exhibition seeks to stimulate an open-mindedness through communication of ideas between various facets of education, he said.

The exhibit will be organized around a dictum of Gyorgy Kepes, painter and professor of visual design at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, which accents ". . . symmetry, balance, rhythmic sequence as they express characteristics of natural phenomena; the connectiveness of nature—the order, the logic, the living process. Here science and art can meet on common ground. . ."

The exhibit will start on April 11 with a display consisting of microphotographs, photographs, paintings and sketches which will be posted in the lobby of the college theater throughout the week.

On Tuesday, April 12, the drama department will present Karel Capek's satirical play, The Insect Comedy. Actors in the play are currently studying in biology classes. This will be followed by a modern dance symposium depicting Growth and Development.

Fraden noted that cooperation between students and faculty has been the key in the effort to make this exhibition a most successful science art fair at City College. Among the departments participating are drama, art, biology, chemistry, photography, physics, ceramics, physical education and horticulture.

An important phase of the project, Fraden said, is the planned lectures to be presented throughout the college campus during the week of the exhibit. These lectures, with their respective topics, will be announced later.

New Scholarships Top Awards List This Semester

Although two types of scholarships have already been awarded this semester, those being the hotel and restaurant and Scottish Rite scholarships, there are still 24 different types of scholarships available, including two entirely new offerings.

Mary Golding, dean of women at City College, stated that the scholarships are awarded on three primary bases, scholarship, need and citizenship.

She also stated that all applications for the scholarships must be obtained from her and returned to S-150 no later than Monday, April 11.

Among the remaining scholarships to be awarded this semester are the Academy of Art, one award; Alpha Phi Omega, two awards; Flossita Badger Memorial Scholarship in music; eight Dental-Laboratory Technology awards; Fred F. Fitzgerald Memorial Scholarship in criminology.

Others include several A. J. Cloud Memorial Scholarships, Class of 1965, Chinese Students Club and two Denman Scholarships for women graduates of San Francisco Public High Schools.

New additions to the long list this semester are the Chinese Optimist Club Scholarships and five Executive Secretaries Scholarships.

Alumni Members Make Honors' List At UC, Berkeley

Four alumni members of City College of San Francisco, Barbara Geverty, Constantine Slobadchikof, Charles Jurst and Klaus Barber, made the Dean's Honor List at the University of California, Berkeley, last semester.

Three of the winners, Geverty, Slobadchikof and Jurst, have made the Honors List twice before while at UC. It was the first time for Barber to be named to the Honors List at the University.

Geverty was graduated from City College in Fal, 1964, and transferred to the school of business administration at UC. She is a native of Cleveland, Ohio.

Jurst, the only native of California out of the group, was also graduated from the college in Fall, 1964, and he also transferred into the business administration program at UC.

Slobadchikof, a native of China, is majoring in agriculture at Cal. He graduated from this college in the spring of 1964.

Barber, the first-time winner, is majoring in forestry at U.C. He was born in Ausburg, Germany.

Students are chosen for the Honors List on the basis of scholastic merit each year at the university.

Committee OK's Foultz Award

Provisions of the Frederick Ward Foultz Memorial Scholarship, to be awarded for the first time this semester, were laid down last week at a meeting of the college's scholarship committee.

The contributions, collected in a memorial fund in honor of the English department instructor here who died last November, enabled the committee to set up the award for the next three years.

According to a spokesman for the committee, the yearly award of $150 will be based exclusively on academic ability instead of financial need.

The Frederick Ward Foultz Scholarship is not limited to any particular academic interest, and is therefore open to students displaying academic excellence in any field, the spokesman said.

Interested students are expected to file scholarship applications with Dean of Women Mary Golding before the April 11 deadline.

An Easter Story

By Greg Frazier

ONCE UPON A TIME there was this Easter Bunny, who, while making his rounds one Easter morning, happened to stumble into a rickety old Victorian pad in San Francisco's Haight-Ashbury district.

From the minute he entered the stained glass door, he knew something was strange about the place. The entire reception hall was one huge fresco depicting the world enveloped in a gigantic mushroom cloud. The place smelled strange too; like burning hay.

From down the hall came the strains of a guitar. Clutching his basket of eggs tightly, he advanced in the direction of the sound and arrived at a sliding door, which he opened and entered.

The room was completely bare of furniture, except for a few pillows scattered about the floor, and a soap box, around which a large group of people was gathered. Behind the soap box was a large painting of Sproul Hall and numerous protest signs.

"Hey, Mister Tumbourine Man, where are all the young men going . . .? wailed the troubador from atop the soap box.

E. Bunny was approached by a tall, stately looking man, dressed in red robes, with a peaked hat and a gold and jeweled crucifix hanging around his neck.

"You must leave immediately," said the man.

"Why?" asked E. Bunny.

"Because you're not in keeping with the divine spirit of Easter," answered the ecclesiastic, pompously. "Besides, you're a scene stealer."

"Have an egg," said E. Bunny, producing a bright purple one, at which the ecclesiastic jumped back as if being offered a smolding piece of brimstone.

"Weird," thought E. Bunny, passing on to the group around the soap box. The guitar player had been replaced by a young man with a shaggy jacket and a great shock of uncombed hair.

"Clark Curr will be ousted!" shouted the man, waving his arms wildly.

"Yes, ousted, ousted!" echoed the crowd.

Suddenly a girl reached out from the group and shoved the man off the soap box.

"I am a Communist!" she screamed. "I will always be a Communist! My ancestors were Communists!"

"Yes, Communist, Communist!" echoed the crowd.

At this point a fancy set, mustachioed gentleman pushed the girl off the box, and mounting it, exclaimed: "We shall overcome!"

"Yes, overcome, overcome!" echoed the crowd.

A girl with long black hair, carrying a guitar, shoved her way through the crowd and swinging the instrument, knocked the speaker off the box.

"We must have nonviolence," she pleaded. "Let's all go down to Monterey . . . I have a school . . . I can teach you principles . . ."

"Yes, principles, principles!" echoed the crowd, turning in a mass and stampeding out the door, carrying E. Bunny along in its wake.

He hasn't been seen since.

Positive Thoughts

By Rich Heintz

THE POWER of positive thinking may be more powerful than most people realize.

* * *

Positive Thought No. 1.—If the United States and France can do it, so can Russia and China.

In last Wednesday's Examiner, there was an interesting report concerning Red China and Russia.

The report, made by the "Hearst Task Force," stated the belief that a rift between Russia and China was "inevitable."

They pointed out that Russia had taken over millions of acres which once belonged to China before the Chinese Revolution. Another difficulty was the 4000 miles of open border between the two countries.

Ideologically, the task force also said, the Russians are willing to live in a nuclear world while the Chinese feel they can do better if they could exist in their own world.

* * *

Positive Thought No. 2—Knowing that our boys are over there, and that their guys are over here, we can't lose.

Also in the report, Hearst indicated that "he expects an allied victory in Vietnam and reasonably soon."

Now it's all right to make depressing statements about things which people don't know too much about, but when someone makes statements about Vietnam which everyone knows about, there is cause to question the validity of the prediction, since everyone knows that we'll win in Vietnam long before "reason" enters the picture.

* * *

Positive Thought No. 3—Thinking positive about something long enough can make a person begin to believe it.

Perhaps some people feel that Doctor Norman Vincent Peale had no intention of using his weapon of positive thinking in such a devastating way (translation—it don't work that way).

But on page one in the same paper in which the Hearst task force made its prediction, there was a vivid example of the potent force which positive thinking has.

In a banner headline, which said "Great Quake Hits China," the positive results were seen, since the Task Force's prediction had taken place almost at the same time as predicted. (Don't let the propaganda released by the Chinese fool you; the quakes in northern China simply revealed the upheaval between China and Russia.)

Excellent Blood Drive Record Campus Target—After Easter

AFTER EASTER VACATION, on Thursday and Friday, April 14 and 15, participation in City College's tenth annual Blood Drive, sponsored by the Inter-Fraternity Council, will once more be the important campus goal.

Donations of blood, one pint of the 12 you have, will be appreciated and accepted by the San Francisco Irwin Memorial Blood Bank for those who really need it — and that need may be a matter of life for some human being.

As it is obviously known, blood is something that can't be manufactured on a production line; nor can it be stored for a distant future. There is only one source — this life-giving fluid must come from the individual who is willing to take the time to visit the donation center on campus. The body will replace the "given" pint rather quickly.

Each City College donor will be eligible for unlimited withdrawal from the Irwin Memorial Blood Bank, as will members of the donors' family, for one year.

No other college or university in the San Francisco area or the Pacific Coast has matched City College's overwhelming effort in the past five years.

Naturally, the Blood Drive is open to all registered students, faculty, civil service employees and alumni of this institution. The Inter-Fraternity Council-sponsored drive has received special commendation from the City and County of San Francisco through the mayor's office and from the State of California through the office of the Governor.

It is easy to let these two days, the 14th and 15th of April, slip by and not make an effort or time to give. And it may be easier to go to Smith Hall or to the library during a "break."

A donation will mean only a very temporary loss of a pint of blood and only a few minutes from a whole life-time. But this little bit will be something of value to another human being — who very well may be dependent on such blood donations to enable his life span to continue.

As always, there is that one year when we reached the summit of success. Although the response to the past Blood Drives has been very fine, City College has not quite succeeded, in the past three years, to top the record of 410 pints of blood that were given in April 1962.

It would be a great gift to that many more people if the record were broken during this post-Easter Blood Drive week.

Pick And Hammer's Display

Geologists' Find Shouldn't Be There

Almost everyone knows that the dome on top of Science Hall is not the cubicle from which Stanley Mudde, the campus bell-ringer, chimes the hour.

It is, in fact, the planetarium in which interested students advance their knowledge of the heavens.

However, located inconspicuously, and somewhat appropriately, in the basement of this building is the Pick and Hammer Society. Being literally more down to earth than the astronomers on the fourth floor, members of the society are amateur and potentially professional geologists.

Recently, these students represented City College at the Berkeley Gem and Mineral Society exhibit in Oakland's Claremont Hotel.

The major attraction of the City College display was a rare mineral originally discovered on the Tiburon Peninsula by F. L. Ransum, of the University of California in 1889. Ransum named his discovery after Andrew Lawson.

Lawsonite is a purplish, blue-white mineral found in the United States only in California. Since Ransum's discovery at Reed's Station, other deposits have been found throughout the world.

Along with this mineral, the society displayed other rarities its members have found; among them is a metamorphic rock called eclogite.

Explained by Robert Kaar, adviser to the society, to be a mineral that has undergone change due to extremely high temperatures, he indicated that although it may not be a rarity in itself, it is such in the area where it was found. It was quarried in the same area as Lawsonite, but for some reason it occurrence there is unexplainable.

As Maren Tielman, Pick and Hammer Society member, said, "It (eclogite) just shouldn't be there."

But it is.

Pidgeon English

By B.T.

HEADLINES ARE LIKE BILLS: Each one demands that it be paid.—"As why hard, auwe. Sometimes when you been da kine erry-ting at once, easy foa come pupule. So when dis kine time, moa bettah stay go write about baek home, no?"

Translated from Hawaiian Pidgeon English, the lead paragraph says a mouthful. This is not intended as literary catharsis for the nostalgic traveler, for paradise is only five jet hours away, cash or charge. What follows may be enlightening for the hopeful Easter week vacationer.

ROOTS RUN DEEP

Pidgeon English is an amalgam of English and Hawaiian, spoken with animation and naivete, only becoming to those who know it well. For years this unique tongue has been The Big Problem for local educators. They are obsessed with finding a solution for curing the children of its usage. But the roots are very, very deep.

Everyone, from the distinguished millionaire to the immigrant laborer, knows how to speak Pidgeon. Pidgeon English is a highly communicable disease, a bond between islanders. Well-educated mainlanders speak Pidgeon, making the problem more vexing, because the language is tolerated on mass communication media.

In fact, more than one out-of-town disc jockey, television personality, writer or travel agent has earned a living in Hawaii by applying Pidgeon English. And why not? It reaches the people.

APPEAL TO PEACE CORPS

Educators watched the Peace Corps Training Center in Hilo, Hawaii, literally "grind out" hundreds of proficient language volunteers. It was surmised that the organization had some very effective secrets that enabled students to learn languages quickly.

So they appealed to the Peace Corps to help map out a language program for the elementary school level. A Federal grant was obtained, and the experiment was chosen, and the program is working! Students are able to speak English as well as their mainland brethren!

The Peace Corps furnished the secret. Peaceful coexistence: Acceptance of Pidgeon English and of teaching English as a second language. And it works!

Da Peace Corps is real akamai.

Soviet Gift To US

By Albert Hilliard Hughes

TOMORROW NIGHT'S MOVIE in the theatre will be the prize-winning Soviet drama, Ballad Of A Soldier. It will be shown starting at 8 p.m.

One of a number of films in the U.S-Soviet cultural exchange program instituted a few years ago, Ballad Of A Soldier is a poignant and appealing story of a young soldier during WW II who gets a few days' leave to visit his mother once more before going back to the front for active duty.

He encounters many adventures before arriving at his mother's farm, but his most rewarding and exciting adventure occurs when he meets the young and attractive Shura.

Their adventures together form the main chorus of the Ballad Of A Soldier.

It is one of the few war stories from the Soviet filmmakers which never propagandizes for propaganda's sake.

It is truly one of the finest films of its genre from the Soviet to be released in the U.S.

Groucho Marx as the dean of a college?

Yes it is true, and it happens in Horsefeathers, the comedy hit of 1932, to be shown Thursday evening, April 14, in the theater in Arts Hall at 8 p.m.

There is Groucho, with bushy eyebrows and painted moustache as the improbably professor, Wolsteif; there is Chico, in pointed cap, speaking with an unbelievable Italian accent, and possessed of hilarious pianistic talent; there is Harpo, the harp-playing, child-like, woman-chasing mute; and there is Zeppo (who left the act in 1933 to become an actor's agent) as straight man and romantic interest.

Seeing the Marx Brothers in action produces an effect which can perhaps be likened to sitting, sans clothing, in an agitated pile of goose—no! Horsefeathers!

Karen Carlson Is Editor Of 'Helm'

To be awarded a scholarship to the University of the Seven Seas and then be appointed Editor of the university newspaper, is something that would probably delight and flutter, to say the lease, the heart of any undergraduate on campus.

Such a blessing came to Karen Carlson, last semester's staff editor of The Guardsman, who sailed February 10 from Los Angeles to such ports of call as Tahiti, Australia, India and points in the Middle East, and Europe aboard the M.S. Seven Seas after being granted a scholarship to what is virtually a floating university, a part of Chapman College in Southern California.

It is made up of 40 instructors, 275 crew members, and this semester carries 400 students. Courses are transferable and while en route the itinerary includes free time as well as mandatory field trips to various ports.

However, it has not all been a pleasure cruise as one might imagine. In a Helm editorial, Miss Carlson says that the first 18 days of the voyage were "difficult." She commented in the editorial that although being extremely educational, attending classes aboard ship can bring about hardships.

Meanderings

By Peter Dorn

OBVIOUSLY, the flying saucers have come to America to see if the people living here are for real.

After the saucer-people check out Michigan, where, it is rumored, the secret laboratory is located that puts the stripes into dental paste, they will undoubtedly head for California.

Although the alien vehicles have managed to maneuver through space, they will experience great difficulty in landing in that great city to the south because of the smog, and will bypass said city and come to San Francisco.

The main point of interest in the San Francisco area will be the freeways, as far as these technologically minded aliens are concerned.

It would seem to them a waste of matter and time for 10,000 cars to pass each other, some starting south and going north and others starting from the north and heading south, twice a day and five days a week.

It would appear to them that whatever destination or stimulus compels these people to this daily pilgrimage should be transposed, relocated. The attraction of the north should be moved to the south, and vice-versa.

It is this type of thought that makes earth people fear and instinctively hate any alien.

But what the aliens should know is that the government of this same city is planning some sort (as yet unidentified) of freeway that will run through the town and dump even more cars into that 5 o'clock bottle-neck known as the James Llck.

This may be enough to foree another attempt at landing in LA on the part of the saucer-people.

This itinerary explains why the flying saucers have never been seen anywhere past Michigan or California. The fact is that they can stand just so much and then they go home, and they don't come back until another five or ten earth years have come to pass.

There is no cause for alarm on the part of the earth people as far as an invasion of saucer-men is concerned, as the feeling is that there is really nothing here that they want.

Student Council Rules On Three Finance Requests

By Jeff Kraus

Three requests for money from campus organizations were heard by council members last week at Student Council meetings.

The first request, made by the Recreation Association, asked for $175 to enable the modern dance class to obtain the appearance of Betty Jones, nationally famous modern danee instructor.

Miss Jones, together with her partner, would present one dance demonstration and a lecture. Only about 75 to 100 students would be able to take advantage of this performanee, however, and counell members felt that not enough students would benefit from the expenditure. The request was not granted, 2-10-1.

The second request, from the Concert and Lecture Series, was for $200.

The money was to be used to hire a booking agent for the college. This request had previously been referred to the supplementary appropriations committee, who recommended that the request be denied because of dwindling funds in the supplementary budget.

It came before counell, who felt that the expenditure would benefit many students on campus, and the money was allocated, 9-1-3.

The third request was from the Associated Men Students. Percy Jones, AMS president, requested funds for a dance sponsored by AMS. Counell supported the event by approving Jones' request by a 12-0-1 vote.

A resolution by Councilwoman Sheridan Parker asked that a copy of the cafeteria hours be distributed at the Meet-Your-Councilman table in Statler wing. An amendment to this resolution asked that the schedule be obtained from John Dunn, cafeteria faculty manager, and that a poster be prepared. The resolution was passed, 7-3-2.

A resolution by Councilman Joe Parnell, recommending that a person be hired to clear the tables in Statler wing, was withdrawn after it was learned that someone had already been hired for this purpose.

Roger Miller Star Of Frosh C-Hour Rally

By Steven Hara

Roger "King of the Road" Miller, ever-popular folk singer, returns for his second appearance at the college to head the entertainment at the Frosh Class Rally scheduled for College Hour Thursday, April 21.

Miller, who appeared on campus last March, drew one of the largest College Hour audiences on record. He had an estimated audience of more than 3000 students.

He appeared in support of the United Cancer Fund and drew in over $200 in donations. His appearance, for the most part, was unannounced, for he made a whistle-stop for the Cancer Fund while on tour.

This time, however, his arrival is known quite well in advance, and speculation by the Frosh Class President Ernie Woodcock shows that the estimated crowd at the rally should number from 5000-up.

"Although for the most part, the Frosh Rally has been relegated to the role of welcoming and familiarizing freshmen with their officers and their plans, this semester's rally will, obviously, be open to the whole college—and with good reason," Woodcock said.

The rally will be held during Pledge Week and canisters, specially marked, will be placed throughout the campus to collect money for the United Bay Area Cancer Fund.

The Dovermen may also be present at the rally, Woodcock said.

Magda Jacobs Wins AWS Best-Dressed Coed Competition

Brown-eyed brunette Magda Jacobs calmly pivoted, then literally walked away with the title of Best-Dressed Coed on campus for Spring, 1966, at the fashion show sponsored by the Associated Women Students last Thursday.

The five-foot, four-inch coed was selected from a field of 60 participants on the basis of grooming, walking, poise, smile and overall appearance.

Miss Jacobs was presented with the traditional Glamour pin by library staff member Irene Mensing and will receive a trophy as recipient of the award at the Awards and Recognition Party in May.

As a result of her winning the title, Miss Jacobs became eligible for Glamour Magazine's Contest in search of the ten best-dressed coeds from 300 campuses across the nation.

The winner of the nationwide contest will be announeed at the end of April.

Former homecoming queen at the college and a finalist in last year's Miss San Francisco Contest, Miss Jacobs is hoping to be among the ten finalists whom Glamour Magazine will fly to New York for an all-expense paid week of glamour and excitement.

After this semester, Miss Jacobs plans to transfer to San Francisco State College where she will change her present legal secretarial major to study Russian.

Stanford Prof AGS Keynote Speaker

Dr. Arthur L. Schawlow will be keynote speaker at the Alpha Gamma Sigma annual Spring State Conference, to be held at the Fairmont Hotel on April 23.

Wallace Wells, AGS faculty adviser, stated that it is a "real privilege getting Schawlow because of his popularity."

Dr. Schawlow, professor of physics at Stanford University, is co-inventor of a device called the laser. It is an amplifier that makes is possible to use light in the same way as radio, radar or television waves.

It frees optics of many of its former limitations, making possible light beams one million times as pure, as intense and as easy to focus.

Uses may range from a ground based device to recharge an orbiting satellite's batteries, to a flashlight-like radar to guide the blind. The latter is under development now.

Delegates from 70 Alpha Gamma Sigma chapters are expected at the conference.

Moonglow

THE MOON MAY BE ARTIFICIAL but the rest of Cosme Castanieto's photo, part of his current exhibit, is just as real as the way it happened, movin' west.

One-Man Photo Show Of 'Woman' Ends Tomorrow

Throughout history woman has been the subject of many and varied studies, and City College student and Guardsman photographer Cosme Castanieto offers another study for consideration here.

His current photo exhibit, now on display in the college theater, presents Woman in many of her phases. Highlighting the display is an emphasis on the Fashionable Side of Coeds.

In three semesters at City College, Castanieto has collected more than 1000 different shots of campus beauties. The display includes 50 of these plus a number of abstracts.

"I have never had any trouble persuading any girl to have her picture taken. I find most girls like to be flattered, and having their pictures taken flatters them," Castanieto stated.

Costanieto hopes to break into the world of fashion photography and this exhibit could provide the first step. Each photograph is the result of approximately two weeks of work.

"First I take shots of prospective subjects with or without their permission. I then study each of these candids after looking for those who might provide the key creative work. I then contact these few in order to arrange for their posing. I do not pay subjects for posing, they receive the prints free," Castanieto related.

Not all photos on display are posed. Castanieto has included some unusual creative shots. His abstract pictures, as well as those featuring image reflection, are highlights of his exhibit, which will be on display through tomorrow.

Retail Floristry Department To Hold Open House

An Open House, sponsored by the retail floristry department, will be held on Friday, April 22, as a climax to this semester's activities, Maryhope Jacks, retail floristry instruetor, said.

The theme for this year's open house is Parties And Table Settings. Thirteen window displays, designed by the advanced floristry students, will be on display at this time in the horticulture building, Mrs. Jacks emphasized.

Those students taking part will be competing for three awards. They will be judged by florists, display men and alumni. Students of the floristry center will also demonstrate floral techniques during the one-day affair.

Mrs. Jacks issued an open invitation to "everyone who enjoys the beauty of flowers and floral arrangements to attend the Open House."

Recently, the floristry class traveled to Lafayette for a demonstration in resin glass work and last week paid a visit to the Small Business Management Office, at 450 Golden Gate Avenue, to sit in on a conference.

Last weekend the future florists took part in a flower show which was held in the Hall of Flowers, Golden Gate Park.

Today and tomorrow the advanced students will engage themselves in public relations and visit San Francisco Public High Schools to demonstrate floral arrangements.

With the culmination of the high school visits, Mrs. Jacks explained, the students will turn their attention toward the April 22 Open House.

Forum Magazine In Need Of Prose As Deadline Nears

Contribution deadline for Forum Magazine has been set for Monday, April 11, and "the publication is sorely in need of humor, short stores or good essays," Catherine Connolly, faculty adviser for the student literary magazine, explained recently.

To date about 40 manuscripts have been turned in to the Forum office, C-331A. Most of these are serious poetry; however, Miss Connolly stated that poetry is not the exclusive purpose of the magazine. She further remarked that she would welcome good satirical and prose works.

Miss Connolly also urged students interested in joining the Forum staff in the capacity of readers, publicists or advertising solicitors, to visit the Forum office as soon as possible.

It is the job of the readers to assist the editor, yet to be chosen, in sorting through the submitted manuscripts and decide which ones are suitable for publication.

Students can receive one unit of eredit for their participation.

Election Rules May See End To Party Support

Election rules for the forthcoming semester have been set up by the Election Committee, but so far they have not been passed by Student Council, Martin Watten, chairman of the Election Committee, announced recently.

Under the proposed regulations, political parties will exist but with a limited status compared to that of last semester. The parties and campus organizations may back a candidate but they will not be allowed to aid them by putting up money, Watten emphasized.

During the last campaign the organizations and the parties held conventions to select candidates but under the newly proposed regulations, there will be no conventions and no expenditures by the sponsoring groups.

The proposals are still being debated as to amendments but, Watten said, it is hoped the proposals will pass as originally worded.

Watten announced that his committee is hoping for more voting machines to aid in tabulating results. The campus now has only two machines and with so many students voting, many have to cast ballots in a ballot box which leads to confusion, lost ballots, and double checking which takes time, he said.

Petitions for offices may be obtained from April 13 to April 20 in Bungalow 5. Upon receiving the petition the candidate will be advised to secure the signatures of his counselor, a Dean, and 15 students.

Petitions are due April 22 in the registrar's office, S-121.

Campaigns will be conducted starting May 9 to May 19. On May 17 there will be an election assembly either in Statler wing or at the Ram. Elections will take place May 18 and 19, Watten expained.

The requirements for candidate qualification remain the same, Watten said, and Alpha Phi Omega, the service fraternity, and council members will once again aid in elections.

Trimester System, Coffee Hour Discussed

The Student-Faculty Relations Committee last week discussed the plausibility for a trimester system and a student-faculty coffee hour here

A trimester system would divide an academic year into three terms. Each term would be composed of 14 weeks each, shortening the summer vacation to one month.

A coffee hour would be set up at 7 and 11 a.m. and after 3 p.m. in Statler wing so that students and instructors could meet informally. This is much needed because of the "increasing impersonalization of I.B.M."

Club Notes: Broadcasters Host Russ 'The Moose' Tomorrow

By Bill Fritz

WITH THOSE ego-shattering midterms past and a much-needed "nine-day weekend" just ahead, there has been a slight upswing in campus activities.

Russ "The Moose" Syracuse of KNBR will be the guest speaker during College Hour tomorrow at the Broadcasters meeting in A-145. All are invited to attend for the leeture and question period. Further details are broadcast mornings between 8 and 10 in Smith Hall over radio station KCSF.

The International Relations Club will sponsor, on Tuesday, April 12, a panel discussion on the problems of Africa and the African countries. Those interested in participating in the discussion should consult club adviser Wallace Wells in S-155.

Other club activities for the month of April will include a talk and slides on India, a look at Japan and, if some Turks and Greeks would like to get together, there will be a debate on the problems of Cyprus.

Yell leader signups for next year will continue through this Friday in Bungalow 5. Interested students should consult Joe Hayward for further information.

The Filipino-American Club will conduct Filipino folk dance classes every Monday and Wednesday at 4 p.m. in Bungalow 6. All those interested are invited to attend. The club will hold a general meeting tomorrow at 11:30 a.m. in C-220 and will sponsor another afternoon of bowling this Friday at 4:15 p.m. at Castle Lanes.

UMOC is coming.

Song girl tryouts will be held on May 9 and 11 for the selection of five coeds for the Fall and Spring semesters of '66-67. Any interested candidates are expected to start now preparing an original routine for the final judging.

One last reminder—the deadline for literary contributions to Forum Magazine is Monday, April 11. Materia may be submitted in C-331A up to that date.

The Campus Forum asks students to air their complaints and join in the weekly discussions of campus problems every Tuesday during College Hour in A-309.

The mid-May Spring Festival sponsored by Council Of Organizations, will be here soon. Booth petitions are now available in Bungalow 5. Location preference is granted on a first-come, first-served basis, so clubs should start now on plans for this annual affair. Clubs seeking new ideas and ways of cutting booth construction costs should contact either Fred Reisinger or Lou Harris.

Don't shed blood unnecessarily over Easter vacation. Save it for City College's 10th annual Blood Drive on Thursday and Friday, April 14 and 15.

Three Rams All-League

Conference Coaches Elect Parks, Williams, Wise

By G. Frank Cooney

City College of San Francisco's 1966 Golden Gate Conference basketball champions dominated the All-Conference selections in the same manner in which they dominated the league this season by placing three starters on the five-man first club All-Conference team released by Golden Gate Commissioner Dr. Louis F. Batmale recently.

Six-foot-five Charlie Parks, team scoring leader with 234 points in 14 conference games, Willie Wise and Gene Williams were the three Rams selected by league coaches for the mythical squad.

Parks, elected to both Bakersfield All-Tourney teams and the Modesto All-Star squad, was captain of the Rams second-best in California two-year squad in 1966.

Wise, perhaps the most versatile player on the team, was a City College leader in rebounding and for scoring honors gave way only to Parks late in the season.

It was the loss of Williams, Ram shot-blocking ace, that crippled San Francisco in its bid for California's Junior College Championship.

Trounced by Riverside, 91-61, in the deciding game, Williams shot-blocking agility might have stemmed a bit of Riverside's offensive surge.

Player - of - the - Year is conference leader Bill Robinson of Merritt, who tallied 325 points. Rounding out the top five is San Jose's Paz Rocha, who finished second in scoring with 306.

Noticeably missing from any mention at all in the selections is San Francisco's Ed Wilson. The 6-5 guard was a two-way threat through the entire season.

When Williams was injured, it was Wilson who was called on to stave off league-leading Robinson in a game against Oakland. Wilson filled the bill perfectly as he held 31-point-a-game Robinson to a scrawny eight points.

Wilson wound up number eleven in conference scoring, an average of nearly 14 points a game. The 6-4 forward had the highest single game of any Ram in conference competition with 28 points.

Rating second team selections were Owney Williams, San Mateo; Don Lyons, Contra Costa; Hal Dohling, Chabot; Breck McLaren, San Mateo and Vince Clemons of Contra Costa.

Looking to 1967?

Not only is there a strong possibility that freshmen Wise and Williams will return but also frosh playmaker Paul Batmale, who received his share of seasoning this year by appearing in 13 conference tilts, will be back.

Also returning in 1967 is the greatest team asset of any team in the conference.

Coach Sid Phelan.

Undoubtedly the best coach in the league and one of the best in the nation, Phelan's record speaks for itself.

In 11 years he has compiled an overall tally of 246 wins and 77 losses. Conference-wise the record stands at 128 wins and 26 losses.

In the same 11 years, Phelan has etched out seven league championships, three second place finishes and one third.

His success, as one City College coach put it, "is due to the fact that Phelan is one of the few who knows how to adapt the ability of his players into the workings of a highly organized team."

Although Ram basketball personnel has always been good, this is not necessarily the main factor in City College's many victories.

Merritt and Contra Costa constantly come up with superb team members, but seem to lack the workings of a comparably superb team.

Although it is consistently Ram team members who make the All-Conference teams, it is Coach Phelan who is the All-Conference leader.

Diederichsen's Net Squad Succumbs To Powerful Owls

City College's tennis team recently succumbed to what Coach Roy Diederichsen feared was the inevitable. The Ram netters fell before Foothill's powerful and deep tennis squad, 4-3.

Greg Shephard, the Rams' freshman sensation, remained undefeated as the former Lowell High star turned back the Owls' Geoff Kerber, 6–1, 6–2. George Ponitkoff, the college's number two man, whipped Foothill's Dale McGowan, 6–2, 6–2.

Unfortunately for the Rams, the roof fell in on the next three City College netters. Quincy Lay fell before Kleshill's Svedeman, 6–3, 6–0; Pete Klestoff was bounced by Barry Raposo, 6–1, 6–0, and Bob Kypta came out on the short end of the stick against a young man named Herdman, 6–2, 6–2.

The San Francisco doubles team of Shephard and Ponitkoff came from behind to beat Foothill's number one team, 4–6, 6–0, 6–4. The doubles team of Lay and Kypta was beaten by Foothill's number two doubles team, 6–3, 6–1.

One of the members of the Owls' doubles team, a fellow wearing a large cap covering his eyes, resembled basketball coach Sid Phelan, as Dean Ralph Hillsman pointed out.

Diederichsen was tremendously impressed by the Foothill squad. "They have an extremely well-balanced team," he commented after the match.

Mixup In Schedule Puts Damper On Intramural Action

Experiencing a second week of the most sluggish action in at least three semesters, Intramural Basketball competition was held to a minimum last week through a mixup in scheduling.

The defending champion Negro Student Association, for example, showed up twice last week to play nary a game.

This most recent interruption came about as a result of the women's gymnasium not being available for Intramural use. An archery class was being conducted.

The same problem hampered first-round action two weeks ago.

According to one team captain, "At least the captains of teams could have been notified so that everyone would not have wasted his time coming."

Mike Smith, captain of one of the teams which came and did not play, revealed that Associated Men Student President Percy Jones should have phone numbers of team leaders since there is a spot on the AMS sign-up list for them. Smith added that several of his players made special arrangements to attend the scheduled clash.

The NSA was scheduled in a Tuesday tilt to play the Filipino-American Club. When the Tamerans did not show up, NSA was awarded a forfeit.

In the time slot that should have featured the NSA-Tameran game, The Guardsman five played the Freshman 20.

With the Frosh rotating three squads and at one point substituting one of their players for an injured journalist, the Freshmen came out on the long end of a 36-to-12 count.

Tonight's proposed schedule has the women's gymnasium housing an early battle between Point Shavers and Alpha Sigma Delta with an 8 o'clock war to be waged between the Filipino-Americans and the Newman Club Vikings.

Jersey Joe Walcot knocked out Phil Johnson on June 22, 1936; 14 years later he knocked out Johnson's son, Harold.

Simpson Sprints Tracksters Past T-Birds, 97-39

O. J. Simpson turned in his all-time bests in the 100-yard dash, and the 220-yard run, to help City College wallop Merritt College, 97-39, March 19 at the California State College of Hayward track.

The win was the second straight in the conference, and the Rams were sparked by Simpson, Sonny Johnson, and Dwight Tucker, each of whom took two firsts. Simpson ran a 9.6 in the 100, an impressive 21.9 in the 220, and anchored the winning 440-yard relay.

Tucker was edged in the high jump on fewer misses, but came back to win the long jump and triple jump. Johnson was the victor in the 330-yard intermediate hurdles and copped the 120-high hurdles.

Lou Vasquez, coach of the team pointed out that Merritt was not too strong a team, and that there wasn't much competition. "However, we got good performances from our sprinters, and our field events came out surprisingly well," Vasquez said.

In the field events, the Rams' Roy Skinner took a first in the pole vault, and the Rams placed a second and a third in the shot put and the discus.

"If we keep getting the most out of every man on the team we should be tough to beat," Vasquez commented.

Rich Cuadra of the Rams and Bill Long placed first in the 880 and two-mile, respectively. George Ferguson, who recently broke the college record for the mile, is currently out with a leg injury. Vasquez is still optimistic about the team's chances despite injuries. Chris Ransom was also out of the Merritt meet because of an injury.

The spikers meet Diablo Valley Friday on the Rams' home track. After their upset victory over San Mateo, Coach Vasquez feels the Vikings should not be taken for granted as they will prove to be a "suprisingly strong team."

Swimmers Hurt Again; Two Men Drop From Squad

With one meet left before the conference relays on April 22 and 23, Coach Roy Burkhead's swimmers are still in there hustling.

They met San Jose yesterday, and on April 13 they will meet Merritt to tune up for the relays.

The team may be heading for trouble, however, since their only diver, Mike Kelley, is no longer available and another man quit to shorten the squad to eight men.

Burkhead is still optimistic about how the team will shape up. "With a lot of hard work, I think we can be in there fighting when the relays come around," he said. Still the biggest problem for the Rams is getting a pool to practice in.

One-ders Beat Eagle Faculty

The KYA radio One-ders outlasted the Washington High faculty, 71-61, at the college gymnasium, March 21. The game, benefits of which go to the Washington athletic fund, drew between 1500 and 2000 cheering spectators.

It was a rather sloppy game with both teams very cold from the outside. As a result Washington was in front 29-28 at the half. In the second half Don Delbon and Don Carlson found the range from the outside and shot KYA into a 10-point lead that they never relinquished.

High point men for the One-ders were Delbon with 25 points and Johnny Holliday and Chuck Becker with 16 each.

High point men for Washington were Dick Sovde with 22 points and Ram Coach Sid Phelan, formerly at Washington, and Alex Anathopolis with six points each.

The Hard Way

REALLY WORTH IT?—Merritt College baserunner wonders as he scores the hard way in City College's 3-1 loss to the Thunderbirds. Ram backstop Steve Howder had the plate blocked off from the runner, but the Oaklander still managed to get a hand on the plate to score one of the Thunderbirds' three runs. The hapless T-Bird appears to be having second thoughts (or sensations of agony) as he comes to an abrupt halt against the solid former All-City catcher's shin guards.

Sinclair Starts Slow But Still 2-Hits San Mateo, 5-1

By Randy Koernig

Sparked by clutch hitting by little Al Paison and lanky Greg Sinclair's two-hit pitching, City College's baseball team registered a 5-1 victory over the College of San Mateo Bulldogs at Balboa Park.

At the onset of the game it appeared as though Sinclair might not be around for the finish as he had to work extremely long and hard to most of the San Mateans he faced in the first four innings.

He repeatedly found himself facing hitters with a three-and-two count only to have the batter foul off the next three or four pitches.

Another aspect which looked as though it might be a determining factor in the outcome of the contest was the fact that the Bulldogs were able to lift many long flies into the outfield. Although most of these flies resulted in outs, they were ominous sights, nonetheless.

It was by way of long hits to the outfield that the peninsula club got its only run. In the second, one CSM batsman managed to loft a fly to left field where the diminutive Paison had trouble finding it, sun and wind conditions being what they were in left. Al got a glove on the ball but he couldn't get the ball back to the infield before the man who hit it had made his way into third base standing up.

The next man up put the ball in almost the same place in left but this time Paison was ready. Still, Al was not able to prevent the runner from tagging up and coming in to score San Mateo's lone run.

The San Franciscans were able to tie the game up at one-all in the third inning but Sinclair still didn't look that sharp, even so he was still around in the bottom of the fourth when the Rams exploded for three big runs in an inning that was highlighted by a triple by Paison after he had already singled in the third.

Apparently a fairly comfortable lead was all Sinclair was looking for as the Bulldogs were unable to touch him from the fifth inning on.

The San Franciscans gave Sinclair an extra run to work with in the sixth but the three-run outburst in the fourth was apparently all that Greg needed.

The contest almost erupted into a donneybrook in the fifth inning when one unidentified San Matean hit a ground ball off to the left of the mound and was thrown out by Sinclair on a close play.

The near-melee came about when the batter stuck an elbow into first baseman Frank Grimaud after being thrown out. This unsportsmanlike act managed to put Grimaud on his back in a big hurry and managed to have the first base umpire eject the Bulldog from the game even faster.

The Bulldogs' coach put up a brief protest but to no avail. The arbiter's mind was not to be changed and the player was promptly dismissed from the playing field.

Duffers Maul San Jose, Enter Easter Tourney

City College's golf team kept on about its winning ways as it rolled over San Jose City College by a 23 to 4 margin March 18.

Number one man, Ron O'Connor, had the best round of the match as he shot a one-under par 71 at the Almaden Golf Course.

Trailing O'Connor were Tom O'Kane at 76, Doug Nelson at 77, Gary Miaiocq at 79, and Mike Butler who came in at 80.

During the one-week break for Easter, the Ram linksmen will travel to Fresno for the Far Western Intercollegiate Easter Golf Tournament. The Rams finished tenth in the tournament last year.

Following the Far Western Tournament, the Rams face Diablo Valley in back-to-back matches on April 11 and 15. The Vikings are billed as another of the teams to beat in the conference this year.

On the following Monday and Friday after the second match against Diablo Valley, the Rams will take on Merritt in a home and home affair.

At press time, the Rams had yet to face yesterday powerful College of San Mateo in a second match. However, of the club's then pending encounter with the Bulldogs, Coach Grover Klemmer said, "The match could very well decide who will win the Golden Gate Conference title.

Someone Out There Doesn't Like Ye Editor

By Peter Dorn

SOMEBODY doesn't like the Editor In Chief. Last week he found another crank note with one of those souvenir-from-New Mexico, genuine Indian tomahawks attached to it.

The theme of the note was that a good hatchet man needs a good axe, in brief.

The editor used to get a lot of anonymous crank notes from Emanon, which is, cunningly enough, No Name spelled backwards. These notes were generally funnier than the hatchet note and proved to be a great source of amusement not only to the editor but to the entire staff.

But after a while Emanon stopped producing, and the staff went back to reading Art Hoppe.

For a while the journalism adviser was accused of directing G'man policy and slanting news, then the blame was shifted to some individual reporters, then it went back again, in the form of crank notes, to the old fall guy, the editor.

The accusations were the usual generalities; some said there wasn't enough "student" news in the paper, and others said more "outside" topics should be brought in, and others said blah and made unpleasant noises by putting their tongues between their lips and blowing.

Some columnists were called ambiguous, and other columnists were called other names, but there was really never enough said to or about them to make a good four-line paragraph.

The Sports Editor has been left pretty much alone. Sports reporting has never been accused of slanting or sensationalism, and the Sports Editor is wondering if perhaps he hasn't done something wrong.

The Managing Editor has gotten off scot-free. Never have there been any remarks made about him; probably because no one can figure out just what exactly it is that he does, but he does smoke more than anyone else on the staff, if that means anything.

The Guardsman prints letters-to-the editor and saves the original copies forever and ever, but anonymous crank notes cannot, unfortunately, be printed and they are usually scrapped the same day that they are received unless they are unusually funny.

The hatchet will be kept for 30 days, after which it will become the property of the Editor In Chief.

Squaw Valley Skiers Snowbound Over Easter

Some people break a leg to miss classes and others get the flu, but one coed got snowbound!

Student Nancy Sheldon went to Squaw Valley for Easter and was unable to return to classes on Monday because of a storm which closed Donner Summit Sunday night. Many persons, including her parents, were forced to turn back less than 30 miles from the valley.

Among others in the Tahoe area was Arthur Gershman, former Associated Men Student president, now living in Squaw Valley.

Gershman, a ski patrolman, is recovering from a broken leg.

Vets May Revive Club Next Tuesday

The Veterans Club will hold its first meeting during College Hour next Tuesday after two years of inactivity, Lou Harris, chairman of the Veterans Club revival committee, announced today.

The club became inactive because of lack of members.

The meeting will be held in B-6.

The purpose of the club is to increase the social life of veterans. Exservicemen have a difficult time gaining new friends on campus, Harris said.

Combat experience is not necessary for membership, emphasized Harris, an Army veteran himself. Reservists with six months active duty are eligible for honorary membership.

Science-Art Fair Program Held Over

By Bea Takeuchi

For the first time in the history of this college, a Science and Arts Fair was organized and produced in the theater lobby and in A-101 last week.

Students and instructors from almost every department here participated, and the overwhelming response means that the fair will be held over until the end of April.

Most of the displays are on exhibit in the lobby of the theater, and are appropriately enhanced by that huge masterpiece by Diego Rivera, late Mexican artist, depicting Pan-American unity.

"This show emphasizes the breaking down of barriers between the arts and sciences. I got the idea from a meeting I attended at Cal, and almost everybody here worked hard to contribute to the fair.

"It has turned out so well that I really don't know what to say, except that this all reveals the hard way — creating and work. The easy way is through LSD," Jules Fraden, originator of the fair, and head of the life science department, declared enthusiastically.

Only a color-blind person cannot fully appreciate the painstaking labor, imagination and sensitivity that clearly shines through each project. Each one convinces the viewer that there really is a link between the arts and sciences.

It is often repeated that the most important feature about college is the tremendous interchange of ideas amongst the largest group of intellectuals placed together at one time.

This show is tangible proof that some of the most creative and brilliant students are being taught right here, and are undoubtedly the "success stories of tomorrow."

Whether a students has taken Zoo 10, and knows that "a molecule resembles a ladder, with rungs made of pairs of purine and pyrimidine bases," he will see the whole operation. There is a multiple color choice section allocated with a painting of DNA, Deoxyribonucleic Acid, and another on the utilization of animal camouflage.

A science major must create, just as an arts major must tinker with his wayout ideas of form and dimension, and a drama major must project.

One of the projects is a tall, umbrella-like structure with curved ribs which streteh out over some of the most beautiful pieces of pottery. At the end of each rib is an enlarged color photograph.

A closer look at these photographs, of course, reminds the Zoo 10 student of something familiar. Of course! They are but enlarged photos of cells, flukes and other miero-organisms, that somehow looked different under that microscope.

There is a kaleidoscope that is reminiscent of a butter churn, dimensional creations, colored movies, a television program, stuffed birds and a stuffed squirrel, prints and explanations of impressionistic paintings, switches, gears, wheels, pottery and tension structure.

The television program, entitled The Illusion Cast, is presented each quarter hour. It depicts a woman expressing emotion displayed through ballet-like movement of her body.

An explanation, taped, of the Diego Rivera mural, is run continuously and describes the mural's figures.

One manually operated color wheel reveals what Batman looks like when spun at different revolutions.

The insect Comedy is projected by the drama department, and the dance department's contribution is a colorful, figure-some version of Development and Change.

There is a thing named the "Biniarz Omelet," a unique ceramic room divider, a ceramic garden fence made out of many pounds of clay, and other unusual combinations of science and art, that can only be collectively described as "eye-openers."

Nature has always inspired both the scientist and artist, and the viewers of this first attempt to show the relation between both might well start the little gears grinding in their own minds.

Roger Miller Returns To Campus

ROGER MILLER RETURNS to the college campus after a year of recording a few more hits such as Husbands And Wives, and England Swings. Miller has also won six Grammy awards since he last appeared here in March 1965.

King Of The Road In Rally Encore For Cancer Drive

By Steven Hara

Roger Miller, folk singer and winner of more "Grammy" recording awards than any other singer, will appear here tomorrow during College Hour at the Frosh Class Rally in behalf of the Bay Area Cancer Fund.

An expected crowd of 5000 students will gather at the Ram to hear Miller sing — it is promised — all of his hit songs. When he was here last spring, he drew what was judged to be one of the largest audiences in College Hour history. It was estimated that some 3000 students heard him.

This is also the second time Miller is appearing here for the Cancer Fund. Last year he helped to raise more than $200 in donations and it is hoped the fund will be greater this year.

Cancer remains a top killer in the United States although in recent years methods have been devised to treat cases of it if found early enough.

Frosh Class President Ernie Woodcock, commenting on the celebrity, said, "Roger Miller was extremely impressed with the response he received when he appeared last March. In his correspondence with us, he said he was trying to find the time in his schedule to appear here again and this April will mark the first time in the year since his first appearance that he has been able to do so.

"When Miller heard that the Frosh Class was working with the Cancer Fund, he was more than glad to help us because he has been actively interested in the organization's work ever since the death of his friend, singer Nat "King" Cole. He's taking time off from his show at the Fairmont, where he's appearing through April 27.

The Dovermen, an off-campus rock and roll singing group which has played such places as Broadway, has also volunteered its services to the rally. The group is reputed to have its own distinctive sounds as well as being able to "imitate any other musical group well."

The Frosh Rally, usually a formal welcome of freshmen to the campus and often "cut and dry" as a result, is an attempt to help a worthy cause and unlike most drives of this nature, it offers something immediately in return to the donor, Woodcock said.

Specially marked canisters have been placed throughout the campus this week to collect money for the fund, donations will be collected during the rally.

Woodcock commented, "We would like to see everyone give something to this drive—why, if everyone would give just a dime, we'd have over $1000, and how many of us could see and hear Roger Miller perform anywhere else for just a dime?"

"It's the intention of our class to make this coming rally a fun and purposeful one," Woodcock continued, "and I certainly hope we can have the full coöperation of the students in seeing that this drive is a successful one."

In the event of inclement weather, Woodcock said the rally would be held in the men's gymnasium.

Candidate Petitions For AS May Elections Due Friday

Students planning to run for an Associated Student office for next semester must pick up their petitions in Bungalow 5 today and file them, complete, in the registrar's office no later than 1 p.m. Friday, according to Martin Watten, Election Commissioner.

Requirements for candidates for AS President include at least 42 but not more than 60 units completed with an overall grade point average of 2.3.

Associated Men and Women Student Presidential Candidates must have completed at least 30 but not more than 60 units with a grade point average of 2.2.

Sophomore Class President qualifications require completion of at least 28 but not more than 60 units with a grade point average of 2.0.

Freshman Class Presidential candidates must have completed at least 14 but not more than 27.5 units with a grade point average of 2.0.

The petitions have been available since April 13 for those planning to run for office. After receiving petitions the candidates must get the signatures of 15 Associated Student members, the signature of the candidate's counselor, and a verification from the bank that he has paid his campaign fee.

A statement of 150 words for presidential candidates (50 words for all other candidates), for publication in The Guardsman, must accompany the petition when turned into the registrar, Watten emphasized.

The rules for the nearing election were approved as written except for a few minor additions pertaining to a political party's role, Watten commented.

Presidential candidates' expenditures shall not exceed $50 and all other candidates may not spend more than $25 toward their campaign.

Campaigns will start May 9, and Watten warned that any candidate who campaigns before this time will be disqualified.

AGS Holds April State Convention

Alpha Gamma Sigma, scholastic honor society on campus, will host a Statewide convention this weekend at the Fairmont Hotel, according to Wallace Wells, sponsor of AGS.

The main topics of the convention will be the adoption of a new constitution, finance, scholarship and the philosophy of the AGS throughout the state.

Honor societies in gradeless colleges will also be a topic at the convention.

Wells stated that half of the colleges with AGS chapters have confirmed their participation in the convention. There is a total of 211 delegates so far.

Speakers at the convention will include Dr. Lloyd Luckmann, coordinator of instruction at the college; Herb Draphkin, president of the AGS executive board, and Mark Seymour, president of the AGS member association.

Dr. Luckmann will host the delegation and introduce the speakers.

The first meeting of the delegation will be held Friday.

Officers of AGS this semester are Dolores Talpt, president; Joe Parnell, vice president; Craig Johnson, secretary; Luther Neih, treasurer; Helen Ferentinos, recording secretary; Seymour, parliamentarian; and William Richardson, cosponsor of the organization.

Pie Throwing Privilege Of UMOC Winner

The annual Spring Festival sponsored by the Council Of Organizations will be held Friday, May 13, from 7:30 p.m. to midnight in Smith Hall and Statler wing, according to James C. Wyatt, director of student activities.

The festival will include booths sponsored by each organization on campus. Some will offer food, while others will conduct games of skill, providing prizes for the winners.

At about 10:30 p.m. the dance band will begin to play music for dancing. Participation there will cost three 10-cent tickets.

The entrance fee will be 25 cents, while participation at each booth will cost 10 cents. Each organization will keep the money earned.

The festival had been a traditon on campus for several years, but it was suspended during 1963 and 1964. According to Wyatt, the festival of 1965 revived the tradition successfully.

A big event this month is the Ugly Man On Campus contest sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega fraternity. Each organization on campus sponsors a man for the title, dresses him to be as "ugly" as possible and sends him around the campus collecting money later to be turned into a scholarship fund.

At the Ugly Man On Campus rally, to be held on April 28 during college hour, each candidate is "auctioned off." The person who offers the highest bid gets the privilege of throwing a pie in the candidate's face.

The man who is "sold" for the highest bid is named Ugly Man On Campus.

All students are eligible to enter the contest, but organizational support is encouraged. Contestants are expected to file their name, address, and a five-by-seven photograph in Bungalow 6 by the end of this week.

Solutionless War

By Greg Frazier

IT WILL BE interesting to read the judgment of history concerning the Vietnam Fiasco. We use the word "fiasco" because any attempt to fight a fore n war on both a military and political front seems doomed to ignominious failure.

The U.S. is riding a tiger, and "he who rides the tiger finds it difficult to dismount."

While the military front trudges along through mountains and delta, meticulously searching and destroying; while whole platoons are being bogged down by one 98-pound Viet Cong with a Russian rifle; while the B-52's rain destruction over North Vietnam; while our mines are being mined, back in the city all hell is breaking loose.

Recent riotous demonstrations by the public and members of the South Vietnamese Army demanding immediate popular elections to select a civilian government threatened to topple Premier Ky and Chief of State Nguyen Van Thieu and pitch the war-torn country into a civil war.

Anti-American feeling is at an explosive height. Mobs have erupted in Da Nang, Hue and in Saigon itself, and Ky has threatened to use force to squash the demonstrations.

And meanwhile the whole world blinks once or twice, shakes its head, and leans forward expectantly to see what the U.S. will do. And what will the U.S. do?

The situation seems militarily impossible and politically ridiculous.

At home there is escalating resentment against U.S. "involvement" in Vietnam, both in the private and public sector. The public feels uninformed, confused. They react against the unknown. And as the casualty lists grow, so grows public resentment.

The Hawks and Doves stand defiantly on opposite sides of the fence, suspiciously eyeing one another, flinging verbal spears back and forth. Confusion reigns supreme.

Young men are being given 30 days to get their affairs in order. "Make Love Not War" signs are multiplying as fast as Vietnamese complications. The mumblings on the nation's campuses are growing louder as the draft rolls grow longer. But America, as a nation, has always been reluctant to go to war.

Who knows what the U.S. will do next? Who knows what thoughts lurk in the hearts of those who shape American foreign policy? Johnson and Company have inherited a monster. They are in business up to the world's neck and we can only pray that they be inspired in their momentous decisions.

The multitudes of perspectives on Vietnam refuse to come into focus; the scene is a vague blur of political intrigue in the finest cloak and dagger tradition. Solution? Who's got the solution?

It will be interesting to read the judgment of history.

Who's Responsible?

By Rich Heintz

THEY WERE TALKING about a thin, wiry man who had just passed them on the street. He lived in their neighborhood and was a half-wit.

"Too bad about that guy," the first man said. "He doesn't seem to realize what's happening in our world."

"Yeah, he sure isn't living a responsible life like the rest of us."

(In the last San Francisco election, about 61 per cent of the registered voters went to the polls; 134,192 registered voters were unaware of their responsibility.)

"But I bet if he'd met the right person," the first man continued, "he could have gotten married. He does look pretty normal."

"Well he may look like us, but I doubt if he could have stayed married for long or raised decent kids either," argued the second.

(During the last fiscal year, July '64 to July '65, the number of divorces granted in San Francisco – among the general public – totaled 2174, while the juvenile delinquency rate increased from '63-'64 to '64-'65 by four and a half per cent.)

"You know, the way that poor guy is now," the first man said as he watched the half-wit enter a house, "he's a bad influence on kids."

After thinking a little, the second man said, "Yeah, I guess you're right. A person has got to keep their image up in front of kids, otherwise they get the wrong impression and lose all respect for adults. Maybe he should be put away someplace where he can't ruin the respect the kids have for us now."

(The last fiscal year showed that in the city, 1145 average adults were prosecuted for "intemperance of the use of drugs." A very "respectable" rate.)

"Perhaps the worst thing is the way that people just push him around," the first man noted.

"I know what you mean. I remember when a couple of weeks some kids pushed him around and he didn't even realize what was happening. He didn't even try to stop them."

(A couple of weeks ago, the San Francisco Board of Supervisors turned away two proposed freeway routes for the city, thereby losing any immediate federal aid for freeways in San Francisco. The move cost the San Francisco taxpayer approximately $280 million.)

"Well you can't blame the poor guy; without brains you couldn't expect him to be as aware and responsible as us."

"Maybe. But something should be done."

Draft Deferment Test At Least An Attempt Toward 'Fairness'

THIS SATURDAY, April 23, will be the latest date for which applications for any of the three (May 14, 21, and June 3) Selective Service student deferment examinations may be postmarked.

Local draft boards will use the results of the tests along with the student's grade-point average to determine his standings with the board. Failure of the test will not necessarily mean immediate induction into the service. The only reason for the test, according to the Selective Service, is to give the local draft boards better evidence of a student's standings along with his grades.

MARRIAGE, WAGES WON'T HELP

The Selective Service is attempting to deal with the college students squarely. But there is a war raging in Southeast Asia, and the United States needs manpower there and elsewhere.

While some college students may tend to think they are being dealt with so unfairly, they are actually being favored.

If a man is not in college, he is given no consideration. Even if he gets married now, he still has to face the prospect of the draft.

Often the suggestion is made that the draft should be dissolved, and higher wages be offered for those men who wish to make a career in the military. This is ridiculous. If the draft were ended, the enlistments would fall off greatly, regardless of wages.

Even if the wages did not attract a great number of men, Robert S. McNamara, Defense Secretary, has said, "If the pay were to be raised to anything approximating a point where it would attract a sufficient number of men, I suspect it would add about four billion dollars a year to the military budget."

SHOULD BE MANDATORY FOR ALL

Then if it is unwise to end the draft, and the present system is considered inferior by many, there is only one final choice — make the draft mandatory for every man. That way it won't be unfair because all men will be in the "same boat."

A program could be set up whereby upon graduation from high school or from college, each man, regardless of his physical condition or his beliefs, automatically goes into the service.

If he should be physically unfit, then he could work in one of the military or civilian hospitals or in some other line of non-physical duty. A conscientious objector could also work as a medic, ward-helper, or an office clerk, or fill some other non-combat position. The "tour of duty" could be perhaps two years — with no exceptions, unless it is obviously apparent that a person could not serve in any capacity.

If this doesn't end the cries of unfairness, nothing will. The draft board is trying to show some "fairness" by offering the test, although the test may not be the best way — it is an attempt.

A PATRIOTIC DUTY

Five years before George Washington became President of the United States, he said, "It may be laid down as a primary position, and the basis of our system, that every citizen who enjoys the protection of free government owes . . . his personal services to the defense of it."

Needless to say, everyone who goes into the service, by volunteering or through the draft, gives his personal service to the defense of his country. Not many people like to do this, but it is just something that has to be done.

● California Politics

Editor, The Guardsman:

Concerning Wednesday's editorial (March 23, "Cosmopolitan Flavor Favored In News-Reporting By Some; Guardsman Gets Complaints"), I have a few comments and suggestions . . .

It covers campus activities, which it should cover, and few topics outside that.

My suggestion is to extend the coverage of the material. . . . The campus newspaper should cover, for one thing, California politics. This topic affects those students who are 21 already and will affect those who will presently be 21 and eligible to vote . . .

You ask where the mass of the interested students is. Well they are hidden — hidden either behind the wall of their own little worlds or hidden in the group that have just accepted the fact that the newspaper is crummy and turn elsewhere for their information.

● Down In The Valley

Editor, The Guardsman:

. . . In the past I have noticed that news coverage has been limited to topics that directly pertain to campus activities; this is an important function of a college newspaper. To assume, however, that it is the only function is to perpetuate the myth that college rests on an "ivory pedestal" apart and separate from some unknown outside world, which exists off campus: One needs only to observe student concern about draft status, student involvement in civil rights, and student involvement in political movements to see the absurdity of this myth.

Education, if it is anything, is something which deals with the relationships that are inherent in that unknown world off campus. The acquisition of education (the alledged purpose of college attendance) takes place within the physical structure of the college campus but is distinct from college activities. Certainly one function of a college newspaper should be to concern itself with those relationships which are the subject matter of education . . .

Happiness Key

By B.T.

HAPPINESS IS A SPECIAL KEY for most students, young and old. This particular key unlocks the secret part of their psyches and permits them admittance to an exclusive American geisha house downtown.

The same key is a badge of prestige – a symbol of distinction among men, and distrust among women. The bunny, small and simple, is recognized immediately and linked synonymously with the Playboy Clubs.

Mark Milano, hotel and restaurant major here, proudly displays his own key and lighter whenever asked about his place of employment. Only a few semesters ago, Milano was a diligent part-time lab assistant in the ceramics department.

He worked hard at cleaning pottery wheels and at mixing wet, reclaimed clay. His reward was meagre – a few bucks, dusty hair, oozy hands, and stained clothing. But he retained his sense of humor, and remained a conscientious helper.

Today Milano admits that he is rewarded generously, both financially and emotionally. He is a butler at night, at the Playboy Club downtown. He isn't a butler for the beautiful bunnies. He assists them.

He is described as a "cross between a Maitre 'd and a public relations man," and envied by many less fortunate working students who do less interesting jobs, in a pinch, or after classes.

Some Star Gazing

By Albert Hilliard Hughes

THE ENTERTAINER, starring Laurence Olivier in the title role, will be tomorrow night's film in the theater at 8 p.m.

Based on the play by John Osborne and directed by Tony Richardson, it is the story of a once top stage comic whose career has hit the skid.

This role, although dramatic, is a departure for Olivier whose fame rests mainly with his roles in Shakespeare and his two most memorable roles in Rebecca and Wuthering Heights.

Martin Rackin, producer of the remake of Stagecoach, was in town recently to publicize the film.

Originally, Stagecoach was made by John Ford in 1939 and helped establish John Wayne as a star. It won two "Oscars," one for Best Music Score, and the other given to Thomas Mitchel as Best Supporting Actor, a role which Bing Crosby will recreate in Rackin's new version.

Defending his production, Rackin stated that "had John Ford made the picture right the first time he would not have had to remake it." This seems a questionable reason; for many years now Ford's original production has been acclaimed one of the all-time great motion pictures and has earned deserved status as a definite film classic.

Whatever Rackin's reasons, it will be interesting to see if his version will stand comparison with Ford'. It will be released in June in San Francisco.

During Easter Week, Claudia Martin, daughter of Dean Martin, came to town to plug her second film, The Ghost In The Invisible Bikini.

Miss Martin belied the tales that the child of a famous personality is a snob. She is a young woman of great charm, and was most appreciative of her chance to work with such famous pros as Boris Karloff, Basil Rathbone, Francis X. Bushman and Patsy Kelly.

Her future plans include becoming a recording artist for Reprise Records.

Council Okays Requests For Supplementary Funds

By Jeff Kraus

Coming back to a full slate of business after the Easter vacation, Student Council last week heard and granted two requests for supplementary funds from campus organizations.

The first request, made by the A Capella Choir, was for $995. The cost would be for the lunches and dinners for the group in the May Festival. Council asked for the request to be divided into sections and be voted upon separately. All three parts of the request were passed, and the money was given to the group.

The second request was from Alpha Gamma Sigma. The scholastic honor society requested $150 to pay for lunches for 30 delegates to its convention here this weekend. This was immediately passed by council, 12-1-2.

James Wyatt, student government adviser, reported to council that there were about 30 coats belonging to the Associated Students that were not being used, and he suggested that something be done with them.

Councilwoman Janis Goldberg moved that the coats be given to Goodwill Industries. Councilman Fred Stewart amended this to read, "equally divided between St. Vincent de Paul, Goodwill and Salvation Army." The amended version of the motion was passed, 10-2-3.

Council also voted to reactivate the Negro Students Association.

Paul Shuttleworth, Council Of Organizations chairman, informed council that COO had reactivated NSA and he asked that council do the same. Council cooperated by also passing this motion, 14-0-1.

Councilman Tom Csekey suggested that more bulletin boards be put up so that the students might be better informed. Associated Student President Jim Soleiti reported that a bulletin board was being considered for Cloud Hall. He said an architect is considering the possibility of a permanent board.

Soleiti also reported on the State Convention that was held in San Diego. "Many discussions" were held at the convention and "some good ideas were brought up," he said, explaining what went on at the convention for the benefit of the council members who were unable to attend.

Council suspended the order of the day to hear a proposal presented by Lawrence Tazore, forum chairman.

After Lazore was through, council again returned to the order of the day. The order of the day had been suspended so that Lazore could speak, because he was not making a motion and could not speak before council otherwise.

Counell also voted to adopt the second part of the election rules. Councilman Steve Ahern proposed an amendment that would limit the expenditure by single candidates to $25, but the amendment was not passed. The original rules were passed by council, 11-0-3.

Campus Forum Hears G'man Board Proposals

By Arturo Rodriguez

Culminating the Campus Forum's six-week study of The Guardsman and its policies, a proposal was introduced April 12 for the establishment of a five-member Guardsman policy board through which students and faculty might get action on many of the issues brought before the forum for discussion.

After hearing Coordinator of Instruction Lloyd Luckmann approve the proposal, Fred Stewart, acting forum chairman, turned the floor over to Lawrence Lazore, forum member.

Lazore, who has been the main force behind the proposed board, proceeded to explain its structure. The board would be composed of five members, each with equal power. These members would be The Guardsman Adviser, a Student Counell representative, a Faculty Academic Senate appointee, the Coordinator of Instruction and a student-at-large to be elected.

Although the exact power of the proposed board was not explicitly outlined, Lazore expressed the opinion that it might easily have enough power to act on any of the main topics brought out in the forum.

Among these would be included the responsibility of the paper to the college community, the delineation of authority between the Student Council, the paper, and the policy board, publishing costs, contributions by non-staff members other than Letters-To-The-Editor, some form of quality control, and other topics such as possible expansion and advertising.

"The editor of the paper would still retain his full powers as the Editor, having complete right to comment editorially," Lazore stated, adding,

"The board would not take any of the powers away from the Editor of The Guardsman. He would still retain full power as editor, including that of criticizing the board."

The idea received a mild setback April 14 at a Student Council meeting.

At that time, council suspended parliamentary procedure to allow Lazore, who is not a council member, to introduce his idea. The project received a mild reception, to say the least.

There was not one comment made on the project. No questions were asked. According to Lazore, "The silence was eloquent."

Blood Donations Still Accepted

"Actually, there is only a throbbing around the needle as the nurse described. You can't feel the blood leaving the arm."

These were the words of student Lupe Martinez, a five-time donor, at the Inter-Fraternity Council's City College Blood Drive.

Martinez, like several hundred other students, underwent the painless 45-minute procedure last week. But anyone who still wishes to contribute to the college blood account and derive the same benefits as those who gave last Thursday and Friday may still do so, Dean Ralph O. Hillsman indicated.

Donations are accepted at the Irwin Memorial Blood Bank, 270 Masonic avenue.

Competition between the fraternities and organizations on campus ended at 3 p.m. last Friday.

Awards will be given to the organizations which enlist the greatest number of contributions and to that fraternity with the largest percentage of donations.

The total amount of blood donated was not available at presstime, but will appear with results of competition in next week's Guardsman.

IFC Pledge Week Ends With Dance In Smith Hall

Inter-Fraternity Council is sponsoring the End Of Pledge Week dance, 9 p.m. to 12 midnight Friday in Smith Hall, according to Ernie Woodcock, rushing chairman of IFC.

The entertainment will be provided by The Dovermen, a local group. Admission will be $2 per couple.

The dance is the climax of a week in which 60 pledges have been run through initiations by the six fraternities on campus: Beta Tau, Alpha Kappa Rho, Alpha Phi Epsilon, Alpha Phi Omega, Alpha Sigma Delta, and Phi Beta Delta.

Monday morning of this week, the initiation opened with an orientation program, given to the pledges of the various fraternities, by Woodcock and James Wyatt, faculty adviser to IFC.

During yesterday's College Hour, the pledges participated in "pledge games" in which the pledges competed against themselves in such events as track races, pie-eating, egg-tossing, and an 880 relay.

Throughout the week the pledges are in Statler wing from 7 to 11 a.m. The pledges, according to the varying practices of the different fraternities, are required to obey the instructions of the members of the fraternities throughout the week.

IFC, other than these activities, also sponsors service projects such as March of Dimes rally, Cancer rally and the Blood Drive.

The UFO Saga: An Appeal To The Imagination Of Terrestrials

By John Janigian

A flurry of Unidentified Flying Object sighting have once again been reported from around the world.

It all started about a month ago in Michigan when 40 persons, including 12 policemen, swore they saw a group of UFO's overhead and all 40 witnessed one land in a swampy area.

Most observers were too far away to see more than lights, but a farmer and his son ventured to within 500 yards of the large object. They described it as cigar-shaped, with a small dome on top, much the same as most previous UFO sightings from around the world.

News reporters who called the nearby Selfridge Air Force Base were referred to the Detroit Air Defense sector in Battle Creek. In Battle Creek, the public information officer didn't answer his phone, and the commanding officer was nowhere to be found.

After some pushing, and continued sightings across the country, the Air Force came out with an official report as to what was causing the rash of reports. It was merely luminous swamp gases – swamp gasses from Michigan to the Rocky Mountains?

With this unsatisfactory report private groups have hired competent persons to investigate the sightings.

UFO sightings are being received almost everyday. A woman photographing Pike's Peak captured an unusual glowing object nearby. A photographer in Perth, Australia, while taking pictures of the city, witnessed and photographed another glowing object.

The most recent sighting was over Great Britain when a plane-load of people all witnessed a UFO out their windows. Many passengers took pictures of the object.

First reported sightings of the UFOs were made during the time of the Greek Empire when an unusual object was seen in the sky.

Since then sightings have been recorded in different parts of the world by frightened people.

About the turn of the century, a large cigar-shaped object was reported right over San Francisco, and it seems the style of UFOs hasn't changed since then.

The Air Force has taken an interest in reported sightings only since 1947 when a pilot flying over Washington State reported a group of fast-moving objects near his place. This report set off the first epidemic of UFO sightings.

Many sightings can be explained by planes, weather balloons, and other things continually filling the sky. But out of the 10,000 sightings made in the United States the Air Force has failed to give an explanation for about 700 sightings.

With all this in mind, surely, many persons believe that there is intelligent life on other planets, maybe far more intelligent than our own. With such intelligence it is no wonder these beings have been deciding on whether to land on the earth for the past two thousand years.

If they're unarmed, they had better continue to fly around up there for another thousand years; maybe then it will be safe.

Supersonic Transport Topic Of C-Hour Lecture

Dr. Karl Ruppenthal of Stanford University will address the City College student body on the topic, Supersonic Transport: Plane Of The Future.

The talk is the third of the Student-Faculty Lecture Series, and is scheduled during College Hour next Tuesday.

Ruppenthal, who lectures at the Stanford Graduate School of Business, is also Director of the Transportation Management Program, as well as being a Senior Pilot for Trans-World Airlines. He is also the author of several books.

The lecture, correlating with the current Science Art Fair, is expected to give an "interesting glimpse" of the future in air transportation. Tentatively it is scheduled for A-133.

The first multi-engined aircraft was built and flown by Igor Ivan Sikorsky while still living in his native Russia.

Campus Police Uniforms Increase AS Expenditures

By Herb Dirion

The 20 new men enrolling in the Campus Police force this semester are costing student government "hundreds" for new uniforms.

The Campus Police department has just realized the figures that the student government will have to pay for outfitting the new rookies. In addition, the individual costs for each new man entering the Campus Police force was disclosed this week.

The student government is spending more than $2400.00 this semester for the new officers, which is an increase of nearly 50 per cent over prior years because of the large increase of men enrolling in the Campus Police.

Each new man to the force has personal expenditures of nearly $50 for his uniform, but the student government is taking the brunt of the costs. It is customary that the student government pays for the majority of the cost of outfitting the new rookie in his policeman garb.

The new men have to buy for themselves such items as shoes, light blue shirts, belts, ties, cap covers, key chain holder and a badge case. Cost–nearly $50.

The student government buys for the new men such items as hand cuffs, service baton, slacks, jacket, hat and dark blue shirts. Cost: more than $2400.

The minimum age requirement for new men to join the force is 19. The new man must be fingerprinted and the fingerprints are sent to (C.I.I.) California Criminal Investigation and Identification Committee, also the F.B.I. and the San Francisco Police Department.

The prints are then checked against the official records for any prior offences. If any prior offences show up in a man's past, these are put on what is called in police jargon, a "rap sheet."

Depending on the seriousness of the offense, the man is either qualified or disqualified for a position with the Campus Police force or other law enforcement agency.

The eligible man must also be a U.S. citizen, a San Francisco resident and have a C grade point average. Last is an oral interview with Lawrence Lawson, head of the Campus Police and the criminology department, and then the new man is ready to be sworn in.

The new men sworn in this semester are Richard Booisco, William Bonar, Sherman Bowen, Vincent Brown, Joseph Buschiazzo, Daniel Cady, Michael Conway, William Delaney, Leo Dunn, Marion Jackson, Perey Jones, Cameron Kuhls, Leroy Lavatai, Michael Loo, Michael Melucas, Joe Parnell, John Scanlan, Samuel Smith, William Sommers and Jeff Weiner.

Lathrop Dance Group Appears In C-Hour Concert

The last presentation in this semester's Artist Series will be the performance of the Welland Dance Company during College Hour tomorrow in the campus theater.

The Welland Lathrop Dance Group has been reorganized after an absence of several years during which time Lathrop served as Professor of modern dance in the creative arts division of San Francisco State College.

This company performed throughout the United States with distinction, as indicated when their annual concert at the Curran Theater was always greeted by local newspaper critics with respect and acclaim.

The members of the company are Lathrop, Gordon Keller, Tom Borek, Fred Sausville, Judy Kennedy, Judy Page, Helen Jackson and Sherry Ingram.

In tomorrow's concert, the company will present Dance of Adolescence, by Stockhausen; Do Not Go Gentle Into That Good Night, by Villa-Lobos, and The Enchantment Of Alonso Quixano, by Laurence Clarke which is concerned with the Don Quixote theme.

On May 12 the college's band and orchestra will present a concert, and on May 19 there will be a choral.

Horticulturalists To Take Part In Garden Exhibit

The Ornamental Horticulture Society will take part in the tenth annual California Spring Garden Show which opens to the public Saturday at the Oakland Exposition Building, Chuck Purcell, president of the society, announced today.

Approximately 20 members of the society are working together in this yearly show. This year's theme is Symphony Of Flowers.

The Horticulture Society's plot will be entitled, A Seaside Setting, with a beach house covering the back of the exhibit. The plot will also contain "wind-swept pines, exotic bamboo, colorful rhododendrons, and a battered boat borrowed from the depths of Stow Lake," Purcell declared.

Entrants compete for money and prizes. The money won by the Horticulture Society will go into their treasury, which is already, because of its prizes, the wealthiest on campus.

On May 1, the final day of the show, all flowers on display will be put on sale to the public.

"The garden show is considered the best in the west and is really worth seeing," Purcell said. Last year the college competed closely with the University of California and walked away with most of the prizes.

Purcell and Jon Huftinger, vice president of the society, have invited the public to attend the show located next to the Frank Youel Field in Oakland.

The society will also host an open house here this weekend, April 22-24, to which the public is invited.

City College Edges Chabot, 2-1, To Hold First Place

By Randy Koernig

City College's front-running baseball team kept its one-game margin over second place Foothill as the Rams' Greg Sinclair bested the Chabot Gladiators, 2-1, to pick up his fourth win of the campaign.

Second baseman Paul Giambra was the hitting star in the low scoring affair.

The former All City star from Galileo slammed two singles, scored one of the Rams' runs, and also broke out of a batting slump which had been hampering him recently.

Giambra's two hits in three trips to the plate were all important, as the San Franciscans managed only five hits in the contest. Also hitting for the City College squad were shortstop Tom Callen; centerfielder Barry Carli, and Sinclair.

The narrow win was a necessity for San Francisco as Foothill easily handled Merritt, trimming the Thunderbirds, 7-2.

Two days prior to the Chabot tilt, the Rams, apparently falling into something of a habit, edged Contra Costa's Comets, again by a 2-1 verdict. In that one, however, the Rams got their runs in spectacluar style.

Catcher Steve Howder continued to pound the ball as he crashed a resounding home run in the first inning to put City College out in front, 1-0.

Then in the second inning rightfielder Gerry Bosch banged a triple and then scored what turned out to be the winning run on a sacrifice fly.

Pitcher Bill Kirkpatrick, who has been invincible in Golden Gate Conference play thus far, went the whole route against the Comets to pick his fifth victory against no defeats.

Prior to the Easter break the Rams moved into first place with wins over Foothill and San Jose City College.

Hurler Bill Kirkpatrick ran his record to 4-0 as he bested Foothill's oftused lefthander, Mike Noonan, as Steve Howder led a 5-3 resurgent victory. The currently torrid-hitting backstop headed the San Francisco attack as he crashed a solo homer and a bags-full triple to drive in four of the Rams' five runs.

This triumph gave City College a first-place tie with the Owls.

Two days after the Foothill ball game, the Rams used shortstop Tom Callan's four RBI's on a double and a single. The win, coupled with a Foothill loss, vaulted the San Franciscans into sole possession of first place.

Best In Nation

DWIGHT TUCKER, OFFENSIVE-DEFENSIVE END and track jump event specialist, is currently the holder of the top United States Junior College Track and Field Mark in the high jump for 1966 with a 6-10½ effort. Tucker has finished first in the high jump, triple jump and long jump in nearly every conference meet this season. He holds the conference best mark for 1966 in the triple jump at 48-3½ and has set a new league high jump record with his best mark this year.

Technicality Robs NSA Of First-Round Intra Victories

By G. Frank Cooney

It looks as though the Negro Students Association, reigning champions of the Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural basketball competition, is off to another perfect season since it is on top of Club League standings . . . if one were to invert the standings.

The NSA, having lost all five games in first round action because of a move by Student Council which made the club illegal as an on-campus organization, will still get another chance to pick off this semester's championship, according to AMS President Percy Jones.

Jones revealed last week that this semester's playoffs will consist of a semifinal between first and second leaders in each league and then a final game between the winners.

This means that even though the highly touted NSA squad did not win a single tilt in first round action, it may still have a crack at the championship by bettering the record in the second round.

While complete results of first round action is still pending the playing of rescheduled games, Jones was able to release the winners.

In the Club League the Newman Club copped top honors with a flawless five win and no loss count. Tied for runners-up laurels at 2-2 is the criminology department and the Filipino-Americans.

The Frosh Class finished fourth at 2-3 while The Guardsman played the role of caboose at 1-3. The NSA, of course, cannot be considered a part of the Club League.

The Fraternity-Independent League also boasts of an undefeated squad in the Irish who have won four games. At second are the Celtics and the Point Shavers with an even 2-2 tally. Disappointingly in fifth spot at 1-3 is the Soul Plus, while Alpha Phi Epsilon, the only fraternity competing, waltzed to the half-way mark at 0-4.

Gael Alumni To Honor Bill Fischer

William G. "Bill" Fischer, an All-American guard on the Slip Madigan teams of 1929-1932, will be honored at the annual Gael sports night at the Colombo Club in Oakland on Thursday, April 28.

A native of San Francisco, Fischer came to Saint Mary's in 1928. Baseball was his chief athletic interest, but he made his mark most impressively as a guard on football teams with Gael a guard on Gael football teams.

After graduation in 1932, Fischer served as an assistant to Madigan for two years, then coached Commerce high baseball teams from 1936-1946. In 1946 he went to City College where he was baseball coach for ten years. During those years he founded the San Francisco Coaches Association.

Tennis Team Downed

If you happen to be one of those people who thinks he has problems the world should know about, just don't bother tennis Coach Roy Diederichsen. He has enough problems as it is.

His problems stem from the fact that the college's tennis team has lost three matches at press time, most humiliating of these being a 6-1 debacle at the hands of San Jose City College just before the Easter break.

This one hurt more than the others because it was the first time that Ram netters have been downed by San Jose.

Another painful aspect of the San Jose match was the absence of number one man Greg Shephard who was suffering from an eye infection at the time. Because of this, all the other City College players had to move up one notch for the contest. The results were disastrous.

The only San Francisco victor was George Ponitkoff who is now ill—at least at press time.

Diederichsen recently described the situation, "This is the worst season I've had since coming to City College. We've lost three matches already and the last time I can remember having even two losses this early in the season was back in the '50s. From now on if we win a match it's going to be considered an upset."

And you think you've got troubles! ! !

O. J., Tucker Set Records; Undefeated Track Team Goes For First Conference Title

By John LeTourneau

The City College track team took over undisputed conference first place by walloping previously undefeated Contra Costa, 83-53 on April 12. The Rams also defeated Chabot, and Diablo Valley without much problem, but were edged by the California freshmen, 69-66 in a non-league meet.

In all three conference meets the Rams were led by footballers O. J. Simpson and Dwight Tucker. Simpson won the 100-yard dash and the 220-yard run in all three meets.

Tucker won the high jump, long jump and triple jump against Cal and Diablo Valley; and against Chabot he set a meet record in the high jump, also taking the triple jump.

Lou Vasquez, coach of the team, was a little disappointed in the team's mile relay in the last few meets. "They haven't come into good form yet, and the loss of that race to Cal cost us the meet," Vasquez commented.

Against Cal the Rams took nine of 16 first places, but through lack of depth lost the meet. Vasquez pointed out that Cal has a strong team, and that should injuries hit the team in the conference relays, the Rams are in trouble.

Right now on the injured list is Chris Ransom and George Ferguson. Also not up to par is Bob Prince who still has not recovered from the flu.

Vasquez thinks Ransom will be out for the remainder of the season with a pulled muscle, but the coach will gladly greet Ferguson back this week.

Another weak point is the weight events, and they could cost the team valuable points in the conference meet. However, Vasquez is pleased with the performances of hurdlers Sonny Johnson and Don Jordan, and the running of freshman Adam Banks.

Against Contra Costa the Rams got record performances from Simpson and Tucker.

Simpson broke the conference record in the 100-yard dash and tied the national Junior College record at 9.5. Tucker broke the conference high jump at 6-9½, tops in two-year colleges this year. (He jumped 6-10½ against San Jose.)

The Comets were undefeated before meeting the Rams, who turned in their top performance of the year. Simpson and Tucker were the only ones to win more than one event, and it was the team as a whole that turned the tables against the Comets.

Vasquez pointed out that it was the team's depth that was the difference. "We got our top performances from all our members instead of just a few," he added.

Friday the Rams conclude the dual meet season against San Mateo. Next week the Rams tune up for the conference relays, when they enter the Northern California relays. The Northern Cal has no bearing on the title or individual performances. The conference trials start Wednesday, May 4, at Chabot.

Delbon-Led KYA Defeats All-Stars In Finale, 82-77

Behind the clutch shooting of dashing Don Delbon, charming Chuck Becker and Baron Johnny Holiday, the KYA Radio Oneders put on a great third quarter rally to come from 20 points back and close out the year with an 82-77 win over the San Francisco Merionette All-Stars before 1,500 spectators in the City College Gym last Friday night.

The victory for the Oneders ninth in a row, gives them a 34-8 record.

Led by the likes of Beth's Pal, Margo's Sire and Elaine's Kin, the All-Stars jumped ahead, 15-6, before player-coach Holiday brought in the "real wonders" Delbon, Becker and 6-7 Breck MacLaren of the College of San Mateo, who forged the Oneders back to within five at 25-20.

Somehow, the Oneders were outscored throughout the rest of the way and were down 44-26 at the half.

Charges of loafing in the first half by the Oneders were voiced by a number of spectators as they seemed to be an entirely different team in the second half. However, Holiday and Delbon had been taking shot after shot in the first half and they just weren't going in the bucket.

In the third period Delbon's rainbow jumpers went in and Becker hit as the Oneders ran off 20 straight points with Marty Goldrod providing the tying basket and Holiday the go ahead points, 46-44, with 5:16 left.

Menlo College star Stu Watterson led the Merionettes on a comeback but the Oneders reached their high point, 73-60 midway in the final period.

MacLaren, who has a tendency to look like a ballet dancer romping through a cow pasture, locked it up for KYA with a 3 point play for a 77-67 lead as the Merionettes scored on three steals in the final moments to close the gap.

Cincinnati First, Giants Fourth, Says 'G' Writer

By Randy Koernig

It's that time of year, so the Sports Editor of The Guardsman asked this writer to pick a tentative finish for the National League, San Francisco being an NL city.

Cincinnati will win the pennant on the strength of pitching, solid hitting and good defense. Former Oriole Milt Pappas could win 20 and Jim Maloney will be tough.

Tab the Dodgers second, but they could cop it all. They did it last year and could hustle to another pennant.

Atlanta's awesome power, good pitching and defense make them a good bet for third.

Pick the Giants fourth. Their power is not to be denied but defense is shaky and Shaw and Marichal need some help on the mound.

Pick Pittsburgh fifth but don't be surprised if they finish higher. They are solid in all departments and could go all the way.

The Phillies, league doormats but five years ago, are improved but are no no better than sixth place.

Trading away three-fourths of the infield has to hurt the Cardinals. The pitchers can't do it all. They'll run no better than seventh.

The Mets should escape the cellar this year. Their kids are growing up and the infield has the look of experience.

Chicago has Ron Santo, Billy Williams, and the Cubs look good on paper, but that's all. Ninth for the Hub City team.

Houston's plight is best summed up in two words: too young.

Golfers Fourth At Fresno Tournament

Something which can probably best be described as "equal improvement" has been upsetting the City College golf team's apple (or golf) cart in conference play recently. However, the Easter tournament at Fresno, in which the team participated, was another matter.

"In conference matches, this year's club is shooting at least 10 strokes better than any previous team," Coach Grover Klemmer declared recently, "but the other teams in our conference have been improving at the same rate." That's "equal improvement."

However, at Fresno, the Rams finished fourth among 30 two-year colleges entered in the tournament. In the championship flight, Ron O'Connor was fourth among 140 golfers. His score for the four-day event was 301, 18 strokes back of the winner.

Coed Volleyball Team Takes Cabrillo Meet

City College's coeducational volleyball team took first place during Sportsday held at Cabrillo College, March 26, according to a report from Crystal Jang, president of the Recreation Association.

Other City College teams taking part in the Sportsday were the badminton, tennis, swimming, bowling, folk dancing and square-dancing teams.

Out of the eight two-year colleges participating, Cabrillo totaled the most points. Since Cabrillo was presenting the trophy which would go to the college with the highest number of points, the trophy was presented to the college that came in second place, which was Hartnell.

Improved Swimmers Lose, 52-35

The City College swimmers, minus a diver and carrying only eight men, put up somewhat of a good showing against San Jose City College, although they were defeated, 52-35.

Coach Roy Burkhead was extremely pleased with the team's performance. He said that San Jose was a fairly tough team. "We swam well against them, and I think we are improving greatly," Burkhead said.

The Rams took the medley relay that was composed of Bob Martin, John O'Connor, Bruno Van Rign and Bill Pasquinelli. The quartet also took the free-style relay with Fred Adams taking Van Rign's place, but had to be disqualified because of an infraction.

Martin won the 200 medley, and also took a second in the 200 butterfly. Adams came in second in the 200 free-style and the 500 freestyle.

Art Replaces Manual Labor In America

By Peter Dorn

THERE WAS a movie on campus that was shown to just about every history, sociology and humanities classes in the college. The film, Edge Of Abundance, or something like that, was a Canadian glance at contemporary American life.

The film chuckles at the poor Americans who are part of an economic system that forces them to buy new cars and houses and ear-lobe ointments, and it forcasts widespread unemployment as automation replaces American labor.

The film ends with statements from various somebodies who are speculating as to how the poor, rich Americans are going to spend their time as machines perform their labors.

It is the opinion of many other somebodies that Americans, once devoid of manual labor, might turn their energies toward the humanities, such as art, music, philosophy, and the growing of long hair and beards.

But even in the humanities there is going to be, eventually, the problem of surplus. As millions of busy, happy, productive citizens crank out millions of pictures, essays, musical scores, bits of sculpture, and who know what else, it is going to be up to the government to unload all this—er, artwork.

Much of the national product could be plowed under ground deep in Texas, and still more could be burned or dropped into the sea. And the remainder could be sent to less fortunate lands where the natives are still performing their own manual labor and have no time to "just create."

Again there will be the problem of distribution. No one could afford to buy the U.S. product; and the U.S. couldn't just give it away because it would hurt those foreigners who were still trying to sell that stuff of their own.

And there will always be some underprivileged land which, upon receiving some of the U.S. product through a sneaky grant, would say that the only reason the Americans are giving them all this stuff is because they are so oversurplused that they are embarrassed by it.

Of course if that country didn't get any statues, pictures and essays, it would point to the Americans and say, "Look, they bury millions of tons of oil paintings while our people don't even have any water colors."

And while all this is going on there will be beatnicks down in North Beach who will be performing manual labor like loading crates on the back of a truck, and on weekends the people from the Sunset will go down and point at them and laugh and wonder.

Blood Wedding Opens Rehearsal

Blood Wedding, the drama department's next production, is curently in rehearsal. This Spanish tragedy, written by Federico Garcia Lorca, is considered the most complex play ever to be staged at City College.

The play in its poetic form presents a problem of interpretation for the actors.

Walter Krumm, director, has cited many technical problems that he is confronted with, namely, the speed required in making seven complete scene changes on a small stage with different lighting schemes for each one.

The lighting sets the mood, necessitating the use of all the lights which is a first in the college theater productions.

Another first will be the utilization of the entire stage to facilitate the complete scene changes. Krumm says that the women's physical education class will furnish dancers for some of the scenes.

The role of Leonardo will be played by Kamron Wowser, a newcomer to the college drama scene. He will be supported by veteran actress Phyllis Melmon in the role of the bride.

Paul Crowley, the technical director who has designed the sets, is also collaborating on the visual effects. His group is working overtime trying to construct the elaborate sets in time for the opening.

Production will be "a real team effort" and a "treat to the audience" when presented, Krumm said.

UMOC Festivities Highlight C-Hour Agenda Tomorrow

By Steven Hara

The Ugly Man On Campus rally will be held tomorrow and all the pie-throwers on campus are expected to gather like flies around the Ram to enjoy the fun.

The rally is the highlight of the UMOC campaign where all the candidates are lined up and hit with pies which have previously been auctioned.

The campaign went into full swing at the beginning of this week when participating clubs on campus submitted the name and picture of their "ugliest" members.

The candidate, chosen by his organization, then campaigns to be chosen the UMOC. He goes about it by enticing people to put money in his specially marked bottle on campus. The money he receives has the going rate of one penny-one vote.

At the rally tomorrow, pies will be auctioned, and the highest bidder has the privilege of throwing the pie in the face of his favorite UMOC. The candidate in turn receives both the pie and the cost of the pie in votes.

On Friday, the money collected will be counted and the winning candidate will be announced, according to Marty Watten, coordinator of the contest.

The winning organization will receive a trophy with the UMOC mascot on the front.

Ugly Man On Campus is the annual brainstorm of the Alpha Phi Omega service fraternity. The purpose of the whole campaign, Watten said, is to raise money for the Student Activities Scholarship.

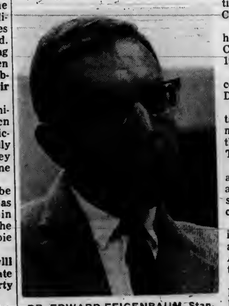
The scholarship is under the jurisdiction of the Deans and is usually a grant of not more than $100 each to a man and a woman student. The number of these scholarships varies with the amount collected.

As an added bonus, the drama department has volunteered its services to costume and make-up all the candidates to insure that each looks his "Sunday worst" at the rally.

Watten listed the following clubs and candidates campaigning now:

Horticulture Society, Barry Cohen; Newman Club, Doug Biancalana, and Ram Ski Club, Fred Freerks. Beta Tau, Dental Assisting Society and Alpha Phi Omega were still in the process of selecting "their ugly man," at publication time.

Watten was optimistic about the contest and emphasized that the deadline for it was still open. He hoped more entries would appear before the deadline.



The rally will prove to be, if nothing else; the messiest of the semester since any UMOC hopeful can be hit by any pie, the stakes for getting hit will be high.

"Buy a pie," Watten stated; "it will probably be the only time this year you'll see a guy beg for a pie in the eye."

Feigenbaum To Discuss Computers And Thought

Computers And Thought will be the main topic to be discussed by Dr. Edward Feigenbaum, associate professor of Computer Science at Stanford University, when he speaks during College Hour tomorrow in the theater, as part of the Student-Faculty lecture series.

Feigenbaum, whose Ph.D. degree is in Industrial Administration, is also director of the Stanford Computation Center since 1965.

DR. EDWARD FEIGENBAUM, Stanford professor who will speak here in tomorrow's College Hour Student-Faculty lecture series.

Born in 1936, Fiegenbaum obtained his B.S. in electrical engineering at Carnegie Institute of Technology in 1956.

A year later he was in California as consultant for the Computer Science Department of the RAND Corporation.

In 1959 Fiegenbaum was able to obtain his doctorate degree from Carnegie Institute of Technology with the thesis, An Information Processing Theory Of Verbal Learning.

Author of numerous articles in scholarly journals, in 1959 Feigenbaum was awarded a Fulbright Research Scholarship in recognition of his outstanding capacities.

Moreover, in that same year he was in the Soviet Union where he toured and lectured, invited by the USSR Academy of Sciences, which repeated the invitation in 1964.

The academic career of Feigenbaum is very remarkable. From 1960 to 1962 he was at the University of California at Berkeley as a research appointee and assistant professor. In 1963 he was nominated associate professor.

In 1965 he joined the Stanford faculty. Coeditor with Julian Feldman of Computer And Thought, a book concerning artificial intelligence and computer simulation, Feigenbaum has been principally devoted to research such as "information processes in verbal learning," and "information processing techniques for computer simulation of cognitive processes."

Feigenbaum is a member of the American Psychological Association, the Association for Computing Machinery, and the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Opinion Survey Held Here By UC

Two hundred students here are participating in a survey which is being conducted at 10 two-year colleges in California, by the University of California in Berkeley.

The survey is being conducted by Dr. Leonard Marascuilo, of the department of education. According to Dr. Marascuilo, the main purpose of the surveys to determine what two-year college students thing about the aims and goals of California's colleges and universities.

All students in the sample are being asked to indicate their opinions on topics such as the personal value of a college education, the main functions of the two-year colleges, four-year colleges and the University of California.

Students are also asked the desirability and meaning of student demonstrations on college campuses.

With this information, Dr. Marascuilo hopes to produce a set of opinions that will reflect the educational needs and desires of two-year college students.

Other colleges participating in the survey are American River Junior College, Contra Costa Junior College, College of Marin, El Camino Junior College and Fullerton College.

AWS Turnabout Dance Off Due To Budget Cut

The traditional Associated Women Student Turnabout Dance, scheduled for Friday at Forest Hill Lodge, will not be held this year due in part to Student Council's 5 per cent cut of the AWS budget.

According to information gathered at a recent AWS board meeting, the organization was given the alternative of using the college's Statler wing for the affair; however, members voted down the proposal unanimously.

Associated Women Student President Brenda Jung stated hopefully that she would like to see it made possible for the dance to be held every leap year, "since leap year connotes the perfect time for a turnabout dance."

Forensics Club Attends Model UN Meeting

The college's Forensics Club will participate in the Model United Nations, sponsored by Stanford University, which will gather colleges and universities from all nine western states today through Saturday at the Hilton Hotel.

Charles Stern, chairman of the Forensics Club, disclosed that the college will represent Spain in the assembly. There will be numerous committees in the model U.N. meeting, and the college will occupy spots in at least seven of the committees.

Manuel Difuntorum is one of the members of the second committee on Economic and Financial Problems. Other Forensics Club members and their respective committees are Sharon Villa, Social and Cultural Problems; Phillip Parker, Trade and Development; Diana Smith, Legal; Terrance Faulkner, Political Security; Rich Christensen, Trusteship, and Maurine Ness will be on a committee yet to be named.

This sixteenth Western States convention of the U.N. will hold meetings, practice principles, draw resolutions, and work as does the United Nations in regular conferences, so that students can better understand the U.N. Another stated purpose of this convention is to make students more fully aware of the work that is carried on in the organization.

During the conference the delegates will follow voting records, the charter, and will enact rules in situations similar to those the U.N. encounters in the specific cases that have occurred in the past.

The Model U.N. was created in 1950 and since then it has grown considerably.

The City College Forensics Club was founded last semester, when Stern wrote to the secretary of the Stanford Forensics Club, which was preparing its host roll for this sixteenth convention, asking to participate.

This semester the sponsor has selected 15 members out of 45 to represent the college.

Twenty-six other students here, members of the Associated Women Student executive board and Inter-Sorority council, will be pages at the Model U.N.'s five sessions.

Carol Carruba, Ellen Wong and Eugenia Wong will work from 7 to 11 o'clock tonight.

Thursday's daytime pages will be on duty from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. They are Joan Arndt, Gladys Doyle, Janis Goldberg, Anna Marie Karsant, Anita Lattimer, Carol Nally, Diane Power, Judy Saisi, Carolyn Williams and Karen Wong.

Thursday night pages are Marsha Fong and Joileen Hector, from 7 to 11 p.m.

Friday from 8:30 to 11:30 a.m. Denise Brown, Joy Green, Gwen Humphrey and Bevelyn Moss will be standing by.

The final session, 1:30 to 5:30 p.m. Friday, will be manned by Judy Barling, Dorene Berkson, Nadia Dughman, Nancy Guerassio, Karen Lee, Susanna Nasser and Andrea Signorello.

Stork Beckons; Roger Miller Cuts Big Rally

By Viggo Petersen

Roger Miller, who was scheduled to appear here last week during College Hour, was unable to perform his scheduled concert because of unavoidable circumstances.

According to Ernie Woodcock, Freshman Class president, the sponsoring organization, Miller's wife had a baby the night before last week's rally. In order to be with his wife, Miller left San Francisco after his performance at the Fairmont Hotel last Wednesday night.

It was hoped that Miller could appear for at least a few minutes during the rally. However, to further complicate matters, Miller was suddenly scheduled for an impromptu interview with a nationwide magazine upon his arrival at San Francisco International Airport from Los Angeles.

Miller, by not being able to appear, disappointed a crowd of approximately 6000 students gathered at the Ram to witness his performance. It is believed that this was the largest crowd ever to gather at a College Hour rally.

However, the rally came off as a success. Though disappointed at not seeing Roger Miller, the students who gathered at the Ram were entertained by The Dovermen, a local group which has appeared on Broadway.

Jim Wyatt, student government adviser, complimented the students for appreciating the rally entertainment.

The performance drew the usual dancing crowd who showed their approval of the rally by jerking their frustrations away under the warm midday sun. One of the highlights of the rally was the gyrations of an energetic dancer whose multiple maneuvers drew approval from the crowd.

The crowd was entertained by such popular numbers as California Dreamin', Secret Agent, and Monday, Monday.

Called in as a hurried replacement for Roger Miller, John Bartholomew Tucker, who has an afternoon television show on KPIX, appeared for the purpose of delivering a skit as a substitute for the absent Miller.

It is uncertain how long Tucker was originally scheduled to perform, but from all indications the condition of the public address system, which was barely audible, did not encourage Tucker to continue his performance. He appeared only for a few minutes.

The Dovermen continued to finish off the day's entertainment with such popular songs as Satisfaction, Gloria, and Genny Take A Ride.

Blood Drive Sets Record As 417 Pints Are Drawn

News of a record-breaking donation of 417 pints of blood by City College was released Thursday by a highly elated Dean Ralph O. Hillsman.

The old record for the college's Blood Drive was a total of 410 pints set four years ago in 1962.

Ninety-eight pints were given in the name of Beta Tau, which were enough to take first place in competition among fraternal organizations on campus.

Following are the standings of the next six organizations: Alpha Sigma Delta, 49 pints; faculty, 33 pints; Alpha Phi Omega, 27 pints; Newman Club, 17; Block SF, 15, and Civil Service Staff, 14.

Hillsman emphasized that City College has given more blood than any other college, pointing out that Irwin Memorial Blood Bank's efforts at San Francisco State College two weeks ago produced "miserable" results. "Only 89 pints were processed."

The supervisor of the Irwin unit who came to the college said, "It is always a pleasure to come to City College. We can always count on the college to come through."

Many segments of the college were involved in addition to the Inter-Fraternity Council, sponsor of the drive, the Dean emphasized.

"Student nurses participated in the actual administration and care; the photography department assisted in recording the event pictorially. The hotel and restaurant division donated coffee and refreshments, and the public relations class, The Guardsman, and the Broadcasting Club aided in promoting the project," he said.

A Popshop Story

By Greg Frazier

A SERENDIPITY is a person having the ability to make great discoveries, such as finding an authentic early American rocking chair while browsing through the local Goodwill store.

The Serendipity store, on Pine, is one of many popular stores where great discoveries can be made, although perhaps not so accidentally. Some others include Sea Wall, three Takahashi stores, the Musee Mecanique in Tiburon, Marin's Wild West Shop and Roaring Camp Merchantile on Oakland's Bret Hart Boardwalk, to name a few.

These charming and colorful stores can't properly be called gift shops, department stores or curio shops, so for lack of a better term we hereby christen them "Popshops."

The Popshop features queer and fantastical quiddities, chosen for their camp appeal, nostaglia value, faggy colors and aesthetic worth.

Gazing into the window of Takahashi's Main Street store is like gazing into an off-beat kaleidoscope. A barrage of baby blue, olive green and lemon yellow bombards the eyeballs, as well as a Revolutionary War sign urging patriots to stand erect. A second sign, done in red, white and blue, chauvinistically assures you that your BankAmericard is welcome here.

Inside, once your eye is adjusted to the constant play of color, is a huge grab bag of weird and whimsical oddities.

His and Her Aggression and Hostility Dart Boards invite you to "throw a barb and relax." Men can fire away at, among other things, Alimony; while women can vent their wrath upon Late Alimony.

Toot Your Own Horn Novelty Kits enable the common man to Go Down In History and Never Be Forgotten and Toss His Own Ticker-tape Parade. There are apothecary jars, Mashiko ware, reproductions of Victorian children's books like The Adventures Of Tom Plumb done as greeting cards.

There are Mod glasses, diverse and sundry baubles and beads, and the inevitable Peanuts, Beethoven and Batman sweatshirts. You can even buy a Tiffany lamp, some signed by Tiffany of New York, for prices ranging from $155 to $1000.

But by far the best buy is the old-fashioned candy sticks, still 5 cents, with a multitude of flavors from Anise to Wintergreen.

Some of the Popshops feature their own particular brand of camp. The Musee Mecanique has a rare collection of penny arcade machines, some dating to the 18th Century.

But most of the items can be bought anywhere. It is the manner in which they are displayed which makes the Popshop such a unique browsing experience. Takahashi started as an Oriental imports house and gradually took on its campy personality.

Next Week: A look at some San Francisco manufacturers of camp.

He's Perfect, But...

By Rich Heintz

HE WAS PERFECT.

His parents made sure that he would be. They remembered the hardships they went through in their childhood and they were going to make sure that their son didn't go through similar traumatic experiences.

First, immediately after their wedding, they went to the Planned Parenthood Association and decided that he would be an only child, so that they could spend all their time with him and raise him properly.

They incorporated what they had learned in college about child raising and development as soon as the baby was born. They were very careful not to touch him on either side of his body without touching both sides simultaneously, enabling him to develop his dominant side without bias. Nor did they stifle his curiosity, even though he started a couple of fires in the kitchen. They remembered about the Fruedian theory which supports the use of sex symbols in early childhood and made sure that their child led a normal sex life—for a two-year-old anyway.

When he entered school he had a thorough health examination and it was found that he had to wear glasses. On the basis that he wouldn't have to wear glasses the rest of his life, they decided to give him a pair. Otherwise, the doctor happily told them that their son was a "perfectly normal average boy," but they ignored the insult.

And through high school and college the master plan for their son worked well. He succeeded in everything. He was a football player, straight A student, in perfect health, and good looking. His parents felt that he was near perfect. Except for one thing.

No one could stand him.

His parents had planned everything perfectly but during his process of growing up he became more than independent—he became self-sufficient. He was doomed to live his life as a flat character.

It was his one tragic flaw. Everyone wanted to like him. He was the hit of the social world; he dressed impeccably and when he smiled, his pearly teeth and good breath were a joy to behold. He was a hit, that is, until they got to know him.

Girls he dated couldn't stand him since he only talked about one thing—himself. Other guys couldn't stand him since he was always in such a good mood that it nauseated them. He never complained, only smiled.

But his parents were happy; after all, they did succeed.

Law Day Meaningless If Police Are Victims Of Citizen Apathy

FOR THE SOVIET UNION, this coming Sunday, May 1, will be a May Day when the Soviets show the strength of their nation through their manpower and military might. But in the United States, the occasion is the Ninth Annual Law Day, USA. It is supposed to be a day when we observe the purpose and the theme of the law because we are a nation, not only of men, but of laws.

But the nation has a problem. There exists a declining respect for the law. The problem of juvenile delinquency is growing at a rapid rate. Public officials and businessmen are involved in scandals and graft, and too many more appear to be flouting legal authority.

Organized crime, as well as unorganized crime, is growing larger with each passing year. Petty thievery and vandalism continue as if they were a completely normal function of our society.

DISRESPECT FOR LAW LEADS TO EXTREMES

This disrespect for the law resulted in the death of 45 police officers last year who were murdered in the line of duty trying to uphold the law—protecting the citizen, including the ones who often distrust or hate them. This same disrespect for the law was the cause of death of two Vallejo law officers who attempted to give a "common" traffic citation to a violator last month.

In 1965, 18,000 lawmen were assaulted. These assaults still continue. For example, last April 12, a small group held a rally, near the Cal campus, protesting the U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War. During the rally, President Lyndon Johnson and the American Serviceman were hanged in effigy. Then this group of 2000 anti-war demonstrators turned into an unruly mob who battled the police. They are supposed to be non-violent, but yet they fought peace officers and the law itself.

Peaceable civil disobedience is guaranteed by the Constitution, but when that disobedience is willfully carried to the extent of violating a law, then it is never right. No American can obey only the "good laws" and disobey the "bad ones."

Almost one hundred years ago, Abe Lincoln commented, "... Let every man remember that to violate the law is to trample on the blood of his father and to tear the charter of his own children's liberty."

THE AFFLUENT SOCIETY

Ninety-nine years since those words were spoken, the indifference to and rebellion against the law has not ceased. It is not confined just to those who have been deprived of their rights or their active participation in the richness of America's wealthy economy; the same unruly havoc has marred the affluent groups, the college set, and the elite of our economic and social societies.

It is ever so present, this disregard of the law, among bigots who wrap themselves in bedsheets and make their own laws and punish the "violators" for "breaking" them, as well as among individuals who insist that the right to freedom of speech includes the parading of fourletter words. And the violence in Watts last summer came dangerously close to anarchy, if it already wasn't anarchy.

There is no reason to resent the law. It is not a tyrant over the people. The court decisions upholding the "right to demonstrate" without punishment for disorderly conduct, and the decisions allowing convicted criminals to go free on some technicality should prove that the rules are not overbearing.

POOR CITIZENS OUTNUMBER BAD COPS

While there are some bad police officers, and it would be naive to admit differently, there are also poor citizens. However, the bad cops are few in number, and they do not outnumber the law-abiding citizen, but the lawbreakers overwhelmingly outnumber the police forces of the country. The citizen who distrusts police officers and refuses to cooperate with them, not only makes the policeman's job tougher, but also indirectly makes the streets all the more dangerous for himself.

A person who stands behind a drawn shade or looks the other way when a crime is being committed, in tolerating that violence and by toleration of some crime, encourages a great deal more crime.

The law is a big responsibility for the police officer, the congressman and the citizen. And there is no reason why the three cannot uphold the law together in one common bond. That is what May 1 —Law Day USA—is all about.

Parking Problems Stem From Lack Of Cooperation—Anderson

By Viggo Petersen

"The reason some students may find parking difficult is possibly due to their own failure to cooperate with parking regulations."

So says Dr. Oscar E. Anderson, coordinator of educational management at City College.

Dr. Anderson pointed out that one reason a student may find parking frustrating is simply because he fails to buy an Associated Student card which would entitle him to receive a permit to park on campus.

In discussing reservoir parking, Dr. Anderson said:

"I have yet to see the reservoir filled to capacity. Some students just don't look hard enough for a parking place."

Also, according to figures on file at Campus Police headquarters, reservoir accommodations total approximately 1000 automobiles. Officials stated that on an average day, during an average semester, only three-fourths of the stalls are filled.

Regarding the policy of the Campus Police, Dr. Anderson said:

"The laws are strict and they are rigidly enforced. They are enforced so as to protect faculty parking areas and to instill discipline within students so that various parking regulations can be enforced."

However, Dr. Anderson said he believes there is no serious dissention between Campus Police and students.

Student Parents

By B.T.

SOMETIMES the most organized and conscientious homemaker-student must admit that college is really one long lesson in time management.

No other group of students is more for abolishing the grading system in colleges than student parents. Some of these student parents already are employed in more exacting work which already requires the knowledge of the basic features necessary in passing the course.

One mother of teenagers earns extra money as an income tax clerk. For years she has been a dependable person in this field, and is still called upon to untangle complicated tax problems. She received a D in a math course. How's that for a blow to the ego?

Another mother of four, the sole support of her family, has for years worked in local hospitals. She wants to become a nurse, so despite overwhelming odds—low grades, sick kids, unpaid bills—she clings tenaciously to college and her night job in a local bank.

Such ambition is commendable, but the IBM machine is oblivious to these problems, and only a few instructors can be sympathetic.

A few mothers can afford household help so that they can attend a few classes here. However the little anxieties of raising children and of housekeeping do not escape them either.

One mother of seven returned home one day and became alarmed because one of her brood was missing. He was the "family baker," an old man of 12, who became overly enthusiastic with his quick-mix cake. Several fingers were mangled in the electric mixer! He was rushed to the hospital by a neighbor. Now, how's that for a calm day-before-midterm exams?

Whatever the problems of the student mother, she is still motivated by the fact that she can also compete in college, and work toward a field that she is really interested in, and be a better person for it.

For those who cannot understand the mystery of why mothers go to college, the answer may be in Philip Wylie's Generation of Vipers, or in Bob Hope's quip, "to be able to support the government in the manner in which it is accustomed."

Movies For Saints?

By Albert Hilliard Hughes

ARTHUR MILLER'S A View From The Bridge, in a film version directed by Sidney Lumet, will be tomorrow night's film at the theater, to be shown at 8 p.m.

Starring Raf Vallone, it is a harsh and powerful study of people swept up in a maelstrom of forbidden love—that of a dock-worker who falls in love with his niece and brings tragedy to himself and his family.

This is the type of adult film which many moralists of late have been taking exception to.

In a Sunday, April 17, news release in the San Francisco Examiner-Chronicle, Leslie H. Whitten quotes Senator John O. Pastore (Dem.-R.I.), chairman of the Senate Communications Subcommittee, as saying, "How long can we riffle through the files of the studios for decent pictures before we hit the bottom of the barrel? Will the industry retreat from its public responsibility—and descend from the 'Ten Commandments' to 'Divorce Italian Style' or 'Never On Sunday'?"

Does the Senator mean to imply that the movie industry was created for the sole purpose of dispensing only religious ideas and Christian morality? Motion pictures were not created by nor for any religious organization, which prompts the question—since when does a Christian have the right to dictate to others what they shall or shall not see?

In our democracy each individual has the right of free choice. But when one man stands up and says that such and such a film is not fit to see, that man is attempting to foist his own prejudices and morals on others.

Someone very wise once said that "evil is in the eye of the beholder." If anyone sees Divorce Italian Style and Never On Sunday as lewd and obscene, then that person needs to examine his own mind.

Let he who dislikes such films stay away from them, but allow the rest of us to decide for ourselves what motion pictures we wish to see.

Audience's Rude Participation Product Of Beatle's Influence

By Bill Fritz

When the house lights go down on a concert today, reports Time magazine, it is often the audience that strikes up the overture. It is a kind of barnyard symphonette.

The Hummer and the Time Beater serve as the rhythm section.

The Cellophane Crinkler and the Program Rattler handle the solos.

In the percussion section, the principal performers are the Bracelet Jangler and the Premature Clapper.

Special effects are contributed by the Knuckle Cracker and the Watch Winder.

The Coughers' Chorale is directed by Dry-Throated, Red-Nosed Hacker, whose feebiest lead always gets a resounding antiphonal response.

The entire performance is choreographed by Fidgeter, produced and upstaged by the notorious team of Late-comer and Early-leaver.

To teach the latecomers a lesson, Leopold Stokowski once had his musicians wander idly off-and-on stage while playing a Mozart symphony. Another time he turned to the audience and conducted the coughers: "All right, cough!" he commanded. "I want a rhythmic cough! Make it louder!"

Classical guitarist Andres Segovia once stopped a performance in Chicago, whipped out a handkerchief, and wheezed along with the audience.

Jasoha Heifetz prefers the withering glare or, if things get too bad, departure.

The late Sir Thomas Beecham was even less subtle, once whirled on the podium and roared, "Shut up, you fools!"

As for the dreaded cellophane crinkler, critics recommend that mute fruit —something nice and quiet like bananas—should be sold at intermissions instead of candy.

Conductor Eugene Ormandy, who has been jolted from his sleep by a radiator whistling off-key, recently requested that women check their dangly bracelets before entering the concert hall. It would not be so bad, reports New York Times Music Critic Harold Schonberg, if "all bracelets weren't differently pitched."

Schonberg is also bugged by serious types who lug music scores to the performance. They turn their pages in unison and sound "like a bunch of locusts going through a wheat field."

To separate himself from such extraneous noises, one Manhattan concert goer cups two programs to his ears.

The audience-participation show, suggests Metropolitan Opera Director Rudolf Bing, is the result of "a general deterioration of manners everywhere, spurred by the Beatles and similar creatures." He should know, Met audiences often seemed better suited for Ringo than Rossini.

Lazore's 'G' Policy Board Proposed To Student Council

By Jeff Kraus

Student Council again heard from Lawrence Lazore, Campus Forum chairman, concerning the formation of a "Guardsman Policy Board" during its last meeting.

Lazore again outlined the proposed bill before council and this time there was a lengthy discussion by council. But since there was nobody present from The Guardsman, it was decided to table discussion until The Guardsman could be represented.

Council Of Organizations Chairman Paul Shuttleworth asked council to consider buying a plant and sending a card to Lucile Meredith of the speech department.

Miss Meredith, an instructor at the college for 20 years, had met with an accident and is now in the hospital recovering. Shuttleworth requested council to allocate $10 for the plant and card.

Since Shuttleworth himself could not make the request, Councilwoman Judy Stewart made the motion. Council quickly passed the request unanimously.

Councilman Ron Appel reported to council on the Associated Men Student dance held April 15. He said that because of the lack of attendance the dance was a flop and he wished to thank those persons who did attend.

Student Council went on record in congratulating and thanking the six fraternities that sponsored and participated in the recent Blood Drive. Also council thanked the students who donated blood. The six fraternities are Alpha Sigma Delta, Beta Tau, Alpha Phi Omega, Alph Kappa Rho, Phi Beta Delta and Alpha Phi Epsilon.

Campus Police Cop Top Honors In National Shootoff

Campus Police pistol team walked away with honors and the trophy in a national tournament held earlier this month in the San Francisco Presidio.

On April 2 at the Presidio the Campus Police pistol team, representing one of the many Northern California sections of pistol team clubs won a beautiful trophy for outstanding marksmanship shooting.

In addition to the team trophy won at the Presidio this month, each member of the team was awarded individual gold-plated trays, inscribed with the team's name and the place and year of the national meet.

Last month the pistol team took part in a meet in Richmond, California, at the Richmond Rod and Gun Club. The team won six awards for master marksmanship at that event.

On April 3 the team shot at the San Francisco Police Department Range and won still another trophy for master marksmanship shooting.

It is customary that the team competes in open matches with other groups throughout the Bay Area. Rating for the team depends on how the team shoots on the whole.

This semester the first team members are Harold Banks, Bob Tietjen, Pat Dunn and Dwain Miles.

The second team members are Pete Bitela, James Yribarren, Daniel Cady and Robert Hunniecutt.

Reduced Student Rate At Symphony Concert

Tickets for the May 2 performance of Japan's foremost orchestra, the NKH Symphony, at the San Francisco Opera House are being made available to students here at a special rate of $1.50 per ticket.

The program for the evening is a varied one, including Brahm's Symphony No. 1 and a violin concerto by the Japanese composer, Y. Toyama. The performance will be one night only.

Tickets are on sale at the student finance office in Smith Hall. Deadline for purchases is tomorrow, April 28.

H&R To Host Big Cal-Northern Fete

After two years of intensive training, the students of the hotel and restaurant department will see their efforts rewarded at a dinner they will prepare and serve next Wednesday in Smith Hall.

The gala California-Northern dinner, supervised by the students themselves, will serve the purpose of introducing the graduates to the members of the California Northern Hotel Association and American Hotel and Motel Association, as well as to members of other hotel-industry fields, guests of the evening.

About 1000 persons from all over the country are expected to attend.

Many of the top names of the industry are expected to attend, among them Mrs. A. Statler, Morgan Smith, Ben Swig, Dan London and Willard Abel.

The program will include the dinner and presentation of about $8000 worth of awards to be given to H&R students.

Fair Exhibit

This picture is part of the Art-Science Fair that is now exhibited in Arts Hall; it was taken in A-101, in which room there are all kinds of stuffed birds, a skull of a steer such as any of those seen lying around the desert in those good old Bob Steele movies, and there are also pictures of what might be called modern art hanging around on the walls.

Art-Science Fair Will Close Successful Showing On Friday

By John Lee

The Art-Science Fair entitled The Creative Man — Artist And Scientist, originally scheduled for the week of April 11 through 15 and held over throughout the entire month will close Friday.

Although the fair's title leads the viewer to believe that it is an exhibit meant only for the scientifically or artistically inclined, it is an interesting blend of the colors and shapes which appear frequently in both Nature and the art-work of man.

Notable among the many interesting and exciting exhibits is an oil painting of Deoxyribonucleic Acid (DNA) by George Stewart which, when combined with the many different biological photographs of James Runner and Charles Lamp and the four exhibits of Kinetic Sculpture by Merle Weidman gives the viewer a direct interpretation of the meaning of the theme of the fair.

Accompanying the Kinetic Sculptures are many other works of clay, including a Garden Wall by Jerry Arena and a Garden Divider by Roy Walker and many other works attempting to duplicate nature with the eyes of an artist.

The exhibits continue into another field after leading the viewer on a short excursion through the world of clay. A multitude of lead and steel sculpture and tensions structures explode on the scene with a freakness of design that could only be described as a combination of man and nature at their finest hour.

During the fair in the college theater, a television film entitled The Illusion Cast, depicts a young woman expressing human emotions with swan-like grace while a weird, sometimes almost shocking metallic music adds an artistic touch to the rest of the surrounding exhibits.

The total effect of the fair, including the sculptures and other exhibits which are shown in A-101 and the exhibits in the college theater coupled with the theater's provocative mural by Diego Rivera, leaves the viewer with the feeling of having taken a short excursion into a world of unconcealed human emotions teamed with natural colors and natural order.

Science-Art Fair Stimulates The Artistic Mind

Sculptured terra cotta, redwood frames, inspiration and three weeks of hard work, including Easter Vacation for Roy Walker, ceramic art instructor, all add up to a very stimulating and successful Science-Art Fair that is being held over to the end of this month in the theater lobby.

By mixing some terra cotta and glazing it a couple of times, by building some redwood frames and adding some inspiration it seems that it is possible to come up with the ingredients for a Biniarz Omelet.

A Biniarz Omelet is a unique ceramic-room divider and a ceramic garden fence, each made out of nearly 75 pounds of clay, acrylic paints and redwood framing.

Annette Diez and her committee made the unusual room divider in three weeks of hard, but enjoyable work. The divider is in a redwood frame holding three strings of terra cotta circles and cylinders with a glaze pattern that was fired twice in the mighty kilns of the ceramic workshop. The idea of the divider was borrowed from geometric circles and cylinders.

The ceramic garden divider is in the oven now and is cooking away. The chief cooks are Bob Biniarz, responsible for executing the five terra cotta sculptured tiles with flower motif, Paul Crowley, instructor, responsible for the acrylic painting, and Jerry Arena, instructor, responsible for sawing the frame.

The most stimulating aspect of this science and art fair," stated Walker, "was the working together, the intercommunication, the collective thinking and cooperation of students, and the probing of new ideas.

Unofficial Open House This Week

"Because we want the public to see City College as it really is," Oscar E. Anderson, coordinator of educational management explained last week that there will be no special displays or programs, but that parents, friends and other interested people may attend classes, roam the campus, eat in the cafeteria and live the typical City College life during Public School week which ends Friday, April 29.

Students are encouraged to take visitors to see the science and art exhibits in the theater lobby, and A-101.

Business Education Day, although not a part of the Public School Week, occurs tomorrow, and City College will host 35 key business persons of the Bay Area, who will be treated to a combination of films, talks and tours by campus people.

Louis G. Conlan, president of the college, will give an address, and a film will be shown descriptive of the college story.

Sylvia Leff, faculty member, will show a film and describe the work accomplished between the "prospective college student, and the college counselor."

Everybody Wins, Nobody Loses In The X-Ray Game

Never volunteer for anything is still a good philosophy, but the dental technology class at the college is making an offer for some volunteers in a program where everybody wins, nobody loses.

The dental class is going to take dental X-rays and it needs some volunteer subjects with photogenic molars. The subjects will receive their reward in the form of free dental X-rays.

Any student who seriously considers this modeling position has but to leave his or her name, address, phone number, and period of availability in the box of room S-222. X-rays will be taken on Wednesdays, 8 to 10 a.m. and 11 to 1 p.m., according to Dr. Catherine Geissler, dental lab instructor.

State Convention Adopts 12 Of 36 Resolutions

Twelve of a total of 36 resolutions proposed were adopted at the Spring convention of the California Junior College Student Government Association which met before Easter vacation in San Diego.

Among the resolutions passed was one calling for observance on the part of faculties and administrations of student government recommendations in order that the state two-year colleges be removed from the jurisdiction of the secondary school boards and a separate two-year college board be established.

The delegates also decided that the two-year colleges should operate on the quarter system, and that local school authorities have control of political organizations seeking support on the college campuses.

Other resolutions passed included one which calls for academic credit to be given for student government work, and one asking for an increase in state financial aid for two-year colleges.

Student government work here has long been a part of the academic curriculum.

The delegates also decided that all two-year colleges should put out an activities calendar at the beginning of each semester. Such a publication is already in existence at City College.

One of the other issues decided by the delegates was that each college should be allowed to adopt its own policy concerning mandatory student fees. The issue of student-faculty forums was also left up to each individual college.

Club Notes: CAF Hosts Vietnam Task Force Here

THIS COMING WEEK, highlighted by few campus activities, will provide little in the way of diversion from the rigors of college life.

However, in keeping with the modern trend of concern over United States policy in Southeast Asia, the Contemporary Affairs Forum will present a "Vietnam Briefing" program, tomorrow, during College Hour in A-314.

The briefing will be conducted by Professor Marshall Windmiller and the San Francisco State College Vietnam Task Force. The Task Force, a credited seminar in the International Relations curriculum at State and not a political group, keeps its finger on the pulse of developments in Vietnam. Thus, the briefing will be up-to-date. All students, and instructors in particular, are invited to attend.

Campus organizations interested in participating in the Council of Organizations' Spring Festival, being held on Friday, May 13, are urged to file their booth petitions in Bungalow 5 by May 6.

Where Are You Going? is the title of a Christian Science lecture being held next Tuesday, May 3, during College Hour in A-209.

The guest speaker will be Elbert R. Slaughter, C.S., who is currently on a tour of the continent as a member of the Board of Lectureship of the First Church of Christ Scientist.

Song Girl practices started yesterday. Check the times and days as posted in Bungalow 5. Everyone is invited to watch the tryouts, May 11 and 13 at 3 p.m. in Smith Hall. Make plans to come early and get a good seat.

Gary Standiford, director of the Fleishacker Recreational Center for the Handicapped, lectured and presented a film about the center's work at yesterday's Associated Women Student College Hour meeting in S-205.

Standiford entertained questions from his audience immediately following the lecture and film, where he described, through illustration, the work the Recreational Center has thus far accomplished in behalf of handicapped victims.

Baseball Team Edges Out T-Birds, 5-2; Vikings, 5-4; Merritt Protests Game

City College edged into the last round of Golden Gate Conference action after finding more than warm climates to perspire over when the Rams crawled through two 12-inning victories, downing Merritt, 5-2, and shading Diablo Valley, 5-4.

The win over the Vikings, coupled with a San Mateo win over Foothill, gave San Francisco a two game lead going into Thursday's game with the tough cosecond-place Bulldogs.

Tomorrow the Rams will take on early season favorite San Jose City College at Sundberg diamond, starting at 3 p.m.

Pitching was the key in San Francisco's two victories, with both Greg Sinclair and Bill Kirkpatrick turning in respectable 12-inning stints.

Sinclair, a righthander with an earned run average of 1.10, allowed four runs on eight hits while whiffing nine and walking five in his extra-frame tilt against Diablo Valley.

Ram mound ace Bill Kirkpatrick put win number six in the bag and left his earned run average at a fantastic 0.67.

The little righthander gave up only six hits and one earned run while striking out ten and walking four in the Rams' win over Merritt.

The T-Birds, who played the last couple of innings under protest, led, 2-0, going into the ninth inning. But an error and two singles sent the contest into extra innings.

In the 12th inning Ed Sickinger, Ram third baseman, and Maris Pantels made it to first on errors. After Pantels pushed Sickinger to third, Joe Szanders hit into a fielder's choice, scoring Sickinger with the winning run.

The protest occurred in the 11th inning when, with the bases loaded, a Merritt baserunnex attempted to steal home. The batter did not move and the runner slid in, apparently safe, when Steve Howder dropped the ball at the plate. But ali was not what it seemed.

After due deliberation, say 20 minutes of not-so-mild bickering, the umpire called the man out . . . but which man? Evidently, Merritt misunderstood and sent up the same batter, who promptly struck out. The scorebook now has the same batter making two consecutive outs.

Against Diablo Valley, Frank Grimaud singled in Howder in the 12th with the margin of victory.

Bulldogs Nip Ram Baseball Streak With 15-4 Clobber

San Mateo — With their ears still ringing from the resounding crack of San Mateo's bats, City College's weary league-leading baseball team crept aboard the homebound bus trying to obliterate the 15-4 Holocaust from memory here Thursday.

The Ram loss put the Bulldogs in sole possession of second place.

The whole nightmare, which ended the Rams' eight-game winning streak and cut their Golden Gate Conference lead to a single game, came right off the bat—so to speak—when Ram mound ace Bill Kirkpatrick was walloped for eight earned runs.

Going into the clash with a phenonenal 0.67 ERA, the little righthanded hurler yielded nine hits and ten runs before he was relieved in th sixth inning.

This was his first loss against six victories.

But the loss seemed very overdue anyway, the massacre cannot really be completely credited to the Mateans.

In each of their last six games the Rams had something knocked out of them, what with five of the six being decided by one run and the other game going into 12 innings.

Yet the Bulldogs' awesome power was nothing to "pshaw" at. In all, they rapped 14 hits and collected 13 earned runs to riddle a quintet of pitchers.

The Rams will gather the pieces together for the beginning of last round action this week which began yesterday with a tilt against Foothill.—G.F.C.

Golf Team Whips Diablo Valley, 33-2

Coach Grover Klemmer's golf squad avenged one of its most humiliating defeats, a 24½-10½ setback at the hands of Diablo Valley, as the Rams clubbed Diablo Valley in one of City College's satisfying triumphs of the year, 33-2.

Doug Nelson led the linksmen with an even-par 72. He was followed by Ron O'Connor and Gary Mialocq, both of whom shot 73s. They were followed by Mike Butler with a 74 and Tom O'Kane who came in with a 75.

Of the scores, Klemmer stated, "These are as fine scores as I've seen by any two-year college or four-year college, for that matter."

Klemmer was also pleased to report that his two top golfers, O'Connor and O'Kane, have been approached about possible scholarship offers from major colleges. O'Connor has heard from Brigham Young University and the University of San Francisco and O'Kane has also been contacted by USF.

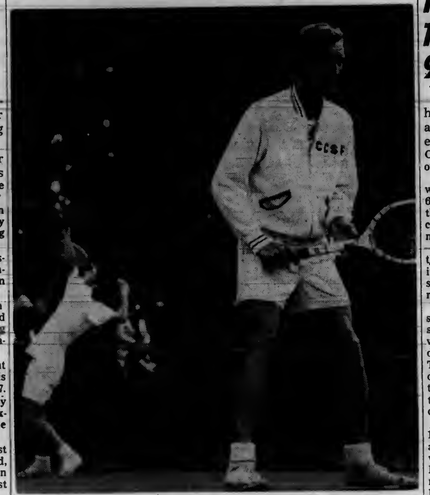
AMS-Sponsored Intramural Play Will Continue

The Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural tournament opened the second round of action in both men's and women's gymnasiums last week.

On April 13 there were four games scheduled but only Foley's Flashes went home with a victory, as they defeated The Guardsman by forfeit.

The three other games were all double forfeits and will be rescheduled. The games to be played again will be the Negro Students Association vs. the Frosh Class, who will play the Soul Plus, and the Irish vs. Alpha Sigma Delta.

On April 19 the Celtics closed the gap on the Fraternity-Independent League-leading Irish as they defeated them, 54-43. In the second game the Soul Plus ran over the Point Shavers, 85-38. The Soul Plus, sporting former football players, had just too much depth and height for the Shavers.



The NSA, who previously lost five games by forfeit, lost another game by forfeit, this time losing to Foley's Flashes when they used an illegal man.

In Wednesday night's action the hot battle for the Independent-Fraternity League lead, the second-place Celtics lost a key game by forfeit to the Soul Plus. The first-place Irish were scheduled to play Alpha Sigma Delta but it was not played because of a double forfeit.

The two other games saw Club League leader Newman Club pick up another victory by defeating The Guardsman by forfeit. In the only game played, the Filipino-American crushed the Frosh Class, 60-25.

In tonight's action the second-place Celtics play the Point Shavers. The second game is between leader Irish vs. Alpha Phi Epsilon. Also the Soul Plus tip-off against Alpha Sigma Delta. In the final game the NSA is scheduled to play The Guardsman.

This sparkling duo has been defeated only once in Golden Gate Conference play this year. As a singles performer, Shephard has been undefeated in both conference and practice matches this year. Greg Shephard Unbeaten In League Singles; Netters Win

City College's tennis team got back to its winning ways as it registered a 7-0 triumph over Diablo Valley. "It was the best our team has looked all year," Coach Roy Diederichsen remarked.

Diederichsen was especially pleased with the performances of Bob Kypta, Quincy Lay and newcomer Jim Moore. The Ram coach explained, "Kypta, Lay and Moore looked good. They really played up to their capacity."

It should be noted that the team was playing without the services of number two man George Pontikoff who was ill at the time of the match.

Greg Shephard remained undefeated in conference play as he whipped the Vikings' Mike Gilmore, 6-2, 6-2. In the second match, Kypta was victorious over Murfay Freeman, by the score of 6-1, 6-2. Lay won his match, 6-4, 7-5, while Pete Klestoff was extended to three sets before coming up a winner, 4-6, 6-0, 6-3.

Moore also had to go six sets, 4-6, 6-0, 6-4. In the doubles matches, Shephard and Kypta downed Gilmore and Freeman, 6-4, 7-5, while Lay and Moore tripped Diablo's number two doubles team, 6-3, 6-2.

The Rams' next match will be against Contra Costa this Friday.

Russell In Bad Spot As New Celt Coach

By William Pates

IN WHAT has been described as an unprecedented decision, National Basketball Association all-pro center Bill Russell was named player-coach of the defending champion Boston Celtics last week to replace the retiring "Red" Auerbach starting next season.

The decision was precedent-setting because Russell happens to be a Negro and because he had previously voiced a distaste for the coaching game or at least presented a certain reluctance toward entering coaching.

But Russell says he wants to do it, knows he can do it and wants to win a championship next year. Now here's the rub.

Without a doubt, fans, players and all the rest will expect too much of this novice-coach in his initial year. He will be expected to succeed (in Boston this means a NBA championship) or prove himself because one, he "is" Bill Russell, two—he has replaced "Red" Auerbach, three—he is not "Red" Auerbach and four—because he is a Negro, the first in a coaching job.

Over the last few years the Celtics have survived the loss of such greats as Bill Sharman, Frank Ramsey, Bob Cousy and Tom Heinsohn because they had Russell and a strong bench.

Next year is going to be different. As the third player-coach in the NBA, Russell should be hard put to come up with a championship club in 1967, for the Celtics are no longer quite as great as the Celtics of "yesteryear."

Boston has the oldest starters in the league, what with all but "Satch" Sanders being over 30. And at that two of them are retiring this year.

KC Jones is leaving to coach at Brandeis University and Willie Nauls is retiring because "all the fun has gone out of it for me."

So who is left? Sam Jones at guard, "Satch" Sanders at forward and a part-time center in Bill Russell who won't be able to play as well while coaching at the same time.

Also the Celts will lose part of their solid bench in the Chicago Bull expansion draft, probably Woody Saulsberry, Don Nelson or Ron Bonham.

John Havlicek and Larry Siegfried will probably move up to starting spots and 7-0 Mel Counts will be substituting at both center and forward.

The only problem is there will be no real strong reserve on that bench.

As it stands now, the college draft and the expansion picks could mean a lot to Russell in the rejuvenation of the Celtics.

Otherwise, he could be a very convenient scapegoat.

Swimmers End Dual Meet Season, 41-45

The City College swim team closed out its dual meet season by bowing to Merritt College, 45-41, April 13 at Merritt.

Leading the way for the Rams was Bob Martin, who took a first in both the individual medley and the 220-yard butterfly.

Other Ram winners were Fred Adams, 200-yard freestyle; Bruno Van Rign, 200-yard breaststroke, and Bill Pasquinell in the 200-yard backstroke.

Tucker Ups Two Track Marks In 90-46 Ram Rout

Dwight Tucker broke two of his own records in the high jump and the triple jump, as the Rams easily defeated San Jose City College, 90-46, April 15 on the Rams' oval.

Most impressive of Tucker's records was the high jump where he cleared 6-10½ to increase his national best in that department this year. He also increased his conference triple jump mark when he jumped 48-3½.

—Lou Vasquez, coach of the team, said that good performances were turned in by the whole team. "San Jose has some good men, but our depth was too much for them," he said.

The Ram cindermen were in good shape except George Ferguson, who is still out with an injured foot. Even without Ferguson, the team swept the distance races except for the mile. Turning in good performances in the distances were Hoy Henderson who took the 880, Fred Forsberg who won the two mile, and Al Stefanovich who came in second in the mile.

In the sprints O. J. Simpson took the 100-yard dash followed by Adam Banks and Bob Prince. In the 220, Simpson was edged by San Jose's Lee Evans. Evans, the national two-year college record holder in the 440, edged the Rams' Lee Benton by .2 of a second.

The hurdles were swept by Sonny Johnson who was followed by Don Jordan. Also turning in fine performances were Scott Heyman, who took the long jump with a leap of 23-0 to edge teammate Tucker, and Roy Skinner who tied for first in the pole vault at 10-8.

The Rams go down to Fresno Saturday to compete in the Northern California Junior College relays. Vasquez said this does not have any bearing on the way the championship will be determined since it has all two-year colleges in the area competing.

Fractured Thumb— O. J. Simpson Lost For Month At Least

By G. Frank Cooney

City College has lost the services of All-American Junior College halfback and rising track sprinting star O. J. Simpson for at least a month.

After pounding his way through burly linemen and earning a berth in the nation's top 11 in the tough sport of football, Simpson succumbed to a pitfall in the supposedly non-contact sport of basketball and broke his left thumb.

The fracture was considered so serious that doctors at San Francisco General Hospital made it clear that if Simpson were to run in even a single track meet before clearance is given then surgery might be the price he would pay.

This means that the Ram's fastest sprinter will be out of action during the peak of track season and may miss the most important meets of the year. There is even a possibility that he will not compete in track again this year.

If such is the case then one might face the fact that City College has, what with strong speculation of a USC transfer in the winds, seen the last of O. J. Simpson — competition-wise.

The untimely accident will definitely exempt the Golden Gate Conference's athlete of the Year (1965) from the Northern California Relays to be held April 30. The May 4th Golden Gate Trials are also out of the question thus automatically ousting him from the conference's final meet on May 7.

A glimmer of hope remains concerning the day of May 14, the date of the West Coast Relays. Likewise, Simpson is also hopeful that he can be in shape for the Northern California Meet at Foothill on May 24.

The 6-foot, 1-inch, 195-pound graduate from Galileo High School in San Francisco, boasts a 9.5 second 100-yard dash (slightly wind aided) and a 220-yard clocking of 21.9. The 100-yard timing is a school record and a tie for the conference standard.

Athletic Director Jack Gaddy could not have been more perfectly prophetic when, during an intramural basketball game early this year, he surmised, "O. J. may be good on the gridiron, but he doesn't look very graceful on a basketball court . . . he is going to hurt himself out there some day."

Campaigning Begins May 9 With 30 Candidates In Race

With campaigning set to begin next Monday, a total of 30 prospective office seekers are in the running for Associated Student positions, Election Commissioner Marty Watten announced Friday. The elections are to be held on May 18 and 19. Only two offices are noncontested.

The two Associated Student candidates for President are Ernie Woodcock and Bruce Fisher. Woodcock is currently Frosh President and Fisher is Soph President.

Vice Presidential candidates are Chris Scales, Sheridan Parker and Percy Jones.

The candidates for Associated Men Student President and Associated Women Student President are unopposed. They are Jerd Lapham and Diane Lattimer, respectively.

Candidates for Soph President are Helen Ferentinos and Joe Parnell.

Candidates for Frosh President are Chris Loo and Wayne Wilson.

There are 11 sophomore candidates for Student Council—Janice Goodrick, Katie Shypertt, Judy Barling, Ron Appel, Roland McIntyre, George Fonti, Rich Heintz, Don Kalfafian, Mike Nygren, Fred Reisinger and John Rhoten. Seven are to be elected.

Eight freshman candidates are running for Student Council. They are Celeste Stracener, Nancy Luscia, Lynne Pozza, Craig Noonan, Ron Lent, Pat Fiuren, Ken Jones and Steve Howder.

It was hoped by the Election Commission earlier this semester that all voting would be done with voting machines. But it was disclosed that because of the upcoming city elections all machines are in service. Therefore all voting will be done with ballots, James Wyatt, student activities adviser, said.

The Election Rally is scheduled for May 12 at the Ram.

Sex Sells All Though Some Still Wonder

By Peter Dorn

ONE would think that Americans, of all people, would know all about sex.

Sex makes these United States work. It sells everything and anything, on television, billboards, any place. It serves as a catalyst in business transactions and politics.

CAN JAYNE ACT?

The people make goddesses in the worship of it. Is Jayne Mansfield wealthy because of her ability to act; is Carol Doda really a prima donna?

Americans are surrounded by it.

And yet on an obscure page in one of those downtown newspapers, an article revealed that a book describing research in human sexual response has been sold out within one week.

The book, published by a company that specializes in texts for the medical profession, is now undergoing a second printing and is being requested by general-interest bookstores.

So it seems that the American, at least the one in the particular cosmopolitan area, although he is surrounded with sex every day, has got to buy a book about it. Hmmmm.

But why does he have to buy a book about it? It's in 95 per cent of all the books ever published for the general public. Every motion picture smacks of it, although Walt Disney is still holding out.

AIRPLANES ARE REAL

However, the sex all around the American is in a kinetic form. Perhaps the poor fellow really doesn't know what it's all about. He's like the fellow who lives close to the airport. He sees airplanes every day, and he knows for a fact that they are real and that they work.

But he can't fly one himself.

SOME COLUMNISTS get compliments in the Ram's Horn, such as Greg Frazier and, better still, other columnists get money—like Albert Hilliard Hughes.

Hughes sold a story to the Montana Historical Society Quarterly entitled Outlaw With A Halo, which is a saga about the movie lives of Jesse James. Other columnists keep plugging away.

Foreign Students See Sacramento

Foreign students who have not yet had a chance to see Sacramento and the Capitol, will be enabled to do so tomorrow—for free.

Thanks to the initiative of the Rotary Club International Service committee of which Nagel T. Miner is the head, the bus trip and tour is offered every year.

Students from numerous colleges in the Bay Area are invited. Naturally the quota for each college is limited; City College will have no more than five students participating.

Because the trip is scheduled for a week day, and because in the past students have often been unable to arrange to miss classes, this year the college administration has granted the participants an official excuse from classes.

As guests of the Rotary Club, the students will visit the historic Sutter's Fort, the Indian Exhibit and, as a climax, the State Capitol itself.

The Sacramento-bound bus will leave San Francisco State College administration building at 8 a.m.

UMOC Festivities Cancelled For Lack Of Enthusiasm

By Viggo Petersen

For the second week in a row the main attraction of the College Hour rally was cancelled. But last week it was not only the main attraction, but the whole rally that was done away with.

Two weeks ago a scheduled appearance of Roger Miller was cancelled.

Last week, however, the less aesthetic appearance of the "ugly man on campus" was cancelled because, according to James Wyatt, student government adviser, "65 per cent of the members of the various fraternities entered in the contest had found their grades falling below a 2.0 average.

"With midterms coming up," Wyatt went on to explain, "it was finally decided to drop the whole thing."

He also said that "lack of enthusiasm" within the fraternities for the contest resulted in its cancellation.

Wyatt said that the sponsor of last week's cancelled rally, Alpha Phi Omega, has attempted to sponsor the Ugly Man On Campus contest for the last couple of years, but "last minute complications" have always managed to cancel plans.

As a result of this, Wyatt continued, Alpha Phi Omega might not sponsor any more UMOC contests in the future. He said that next year Beta Tau and the Inter-Fraternity Council may merge or separately sponsor such a contest.

Marty Watten, Alpha Phi Omega spokesman, presented a statement before the Council Of Organizations apologizing for the uncoordinated programming of the fraternity.

Cancellation of the rally also cancelled the efforts of the drama department which had volunteered its services to make up and costume the candidates of the contest.

AWS Hosts New Faculty Women

Twelve additions to the City College faculty, four full-fledged instructors and eight "cadets," all women, will be honored at a sandwich luncheon sponsored by members of the Associated Women Student executive board Friday.

The informal buffet, originated last semester for the purpose of becoming better acquainted with the new faculty members, will this semester be held in the retail floristry department of the Horticulture Center between 11 a.m. and 12:30 p.m., Dean of Women Mary Golding announced.

Guests of honor will include instructors Joy Allen, biology; Eleanor Faher, psychology; Elizabeth Riley, history; Carolyn Lytle, business; and cadets Marilyn Levin, French; Susan Phillips, Diane Borden and Theresa Moore, English; Tillie Smith, geology; Lenore Pator, business and G. Gould, health.

Feigenbaum Defines Computer's Potential

By Giuseppe Greco

Computers, frontier area of scientific research, and human behavior were discussed by Stanford Professor Edward Feigenbaum, in the college theater last week before a capacity audience.

Feigenbaum opened his lecture by introducing the audience to the idea that computers are generally used in numerical calculation, and that the unit of information is the "bip." The information is generally a collection of symbols.

"It is possible to give any kind of meaning to symbols, either as numbers or representation of the decimal system," Feigenbaum said.

"However" he added, "the capabilities of computers are extended to other fields which differentiate completely from exact sciences such as calculation."

Feigenbaum described arbitrary representation by defining computers. "Computers," he said, "are a general symbol manipulation processing, the result of complex reasoning skills."

To expose the idea of an highly combinatorial concept better, Feigenbaum cited chess as an illustration.

"Back in the '50s, a chess expert wrote an article in which he stated that computers, with their fast memories, would become world champions.

"Even though today's machines are considerably faster, they have not yet beaten a chess master," he said.

Feigenbaum explained that for the machine to win, it would be necessary that it consider all the alternatives and consequences before making a move.

"A computer," Feigenbaum said, "has to define any problem posed for the solution of the game. A rational mind would make the moves without considering the consequences of it; it cannot be the same for a computer.

"From an initial board position, a machine takes care of all the possible avenues which lead to a solution. In this way the total number of alternatives would be of ten elevated to the hundredth power, and today's computers cannot do it yet."

To make a machine play chess, in a way closer to human behavior in thought, the search space has to be cut.

Feigenbaum said that by making four half-moves, it is possible to cut the alternatives to be calculated to 300,000 and even lower if seven moves for each position are generated; in this way there would be time to make the best choice.

Speaking of the simulation of decision-making behavior in computers, Feigenbaum used as an example an experiment which occurred in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania.

Researchers studied the behavior of a banker, an expert in the investment field, and then taped the data in a computer's memory. After obtaining four portfolios which the banker had worked on, the researchers submitted them to the computer for processing.

In comparing the executive's decisions with those of the machine, the researchers noted that there were no differences except for electric utilities — in which the banker had some interests.

Sororities Will Present Pledges At ISC Cotillion

Theta Tau and Phi Beta Rho will jointly present their new pledges at the traditional Inter-Sorority Council Spring Cotillion, to be held in Smith Hall from 9 p.m. to midnight Friday, ISC President Doreen Berkson announced last week.

The formal affair, given each semester in honor of the new sorority pledges, is the ISC's "biggest affair," according to Miss Berkson, who also asserted that couples wishing to attend are required to purchase a $1.50 bid for admission at the office of the Dean of Women.

Maury Wollohan will be on hand to provide music and entertainment for the semiannual event.

Highlighting the ball will be the introduction of the eight pledging coeds who will each receive a small diploma, ribbon-tied in the colors of her sorority. Parents of the coeds will also be honored, along with the introduction of sponsors Elizabeth Riley of Theta Tau, Eileen Rossi of Phi Beta Rho, and faculty members Francesco Nardi and Terry Kilpatrick.

The coeds will then be escorted to a "position of honor" by their dates for the evening as they complete the final phase of the 'presents' ritual.

Tradition has it that the pledges wear gowns of the same color as their respective sororities.

Theta Tau pledges will wear either white or red gowns, while Phi Beta Rho has a selection of any pastel color. Both sororities expect their pledges to wear white gloves and tiara in addition to the traditional garb.

Miss Berkson, who is also president of Theta Tau, will introduce the new pledges of her sorority. They are Kathleen Mullin, Kathleen McCartney, Angela Noe, Linda Ann Unger, Annette Verschlieser and Bernice Macias.

Phi Beta Rho pledges will be introduced by sorority president Bonnie Desmond. They are Sherry Kenny and Colleen Williams.

Recruitment Day Here On May 11

Representatives from 50 leading firms in the Bay Area will be on campus next Wednesday, May 11, to recruit students in the eleventh annual engineering-business graduate recruitment day, according to Joseph A. Amori, director of placemcnt here.

Two hundred graduates from the 25 career training programs here will be interviewed during the day by the employers.

Amori emphasized that the demand this year for trained graduates surpasses that of any previous year, and many of the graduates will be able to chose from many job offers.

The heaviest demands exist in the fields of engineering, chemistry, secretarial, accounting, sales, general clerical, retailing and merchandising, office machines, insurance and finance.

Among the employer groups which will be represented are Boeing, Sperry Rand, the Atomic Energy Research Center, Lockheed, Space and Missiles, the FBI, Joseph Magnin, Roos/Atkins, and many others.

Featured this year at the traditional 8 a.m. breakfast, will be Cyril Magnin, president of the Joseph Magnin Company.

Concert For Sunnyside

By Margarita Botelho

The City College Concert Band performed for the youngsters of Sunnyside Elementary School during the band's morning practice hour last week.

"We've been playing for the neighborhood elementary schools for years, and the children really enjoy it," commented Meyer Cahn, band director.

Sunnyside is a school of 500 children located several blocks from the campus. "This concert also served as a warm-up for the band for the concert in the college theater on May 12," Cahn said.

An instructor at the elementary school said that the children really enjoy and appreciate the opportunity to listen to good music. Several youth symphonies perform for the children several times a year.

"It is good experience for the children," the instructor commented. "The conductors usually explain and tell stories about the different types of music and musical instruments. It's very educational, and the children enjoy it tremendously."

The Concert Band played short selections from 16th and 18th century music and also music from other countries, such as Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia. Before each selection, Cahn explained its origin and talked about its historic background.

The children were well behaved and very attentive, and Cahn said he hopes the band will have an opportunity to perform for elementary schools in the future.

Pop Explosion

By Greg Frazier

OVER one hundred years ago, Walt Whitman wrote of the America's "welcome of novelty." The present Pop explosion, a uniquely American phenomenon which this year is estimated to produce 50 million dollars worth of Batman products alone, is overwhelming proof that Whitman's observation is just as valid today as it was then, if not more so.

Much of this Pop/Trivia is created and manufactured right here in San Francisco. Raydonn Designs, Inc., manufactures Batman sweatshirts as well as a host of other Pop items. One of San Francisco's lesser known tailors, Raydonn also makes custom made sweatshirts for all occasions.

Toot-Your-Own-Horn Products Co. is another local concern which manufactures greetings and good times in kits "for richly deserving people." One such jolly item is a "Toss Your Own Ticker-Tape Parade Kit." This kit contains a piece of authentic Schwabacher & Co. ticker-tape, confetti, a "Yea Me!" pennant, heartwarming congratulatory speech, key to the city and a manual of instructions.

CORNELL'S CLASSMATES

Toot-Your-Own-Horn is owned by Mal Whyte and Jules Bacal- a couple of talented young fellows who were classmates at Cornell. Whyte, artist, writer, printer and proprietor of Toot, recently coauthored The Original Old Radio Game with two other San Franciscans, Ed Callahan and former City College student Bill Shilling.

He is presently awaiting the debut of his new book, The Original Old Comic Book Game, which he coauthored with John Stanley, associate editor of the Chronicle.

Bacal commutes between San Francisco and New York where he is an ad-man for Benton & Bowles. He is the creator of the Post cereal cartoon characters Sugar Bear, Linus The Lionhearted, etc.

The dollar book, or "non-book" as it is known in the trade, has also earned a place of prestige in the Pop explosion. The term "non-book" is, unfortunately, practically nondefinable. In the words of one nonbook author, "a non-book is a book written by a non-writer for a non-reader." What?

Pisani Press is San Francisco's non-book publisher and they are always looking for fresh material.

FOR LOVE OF CAMP

Some of their titles include Ping, Klan-Destined, Cooking For Love: Or How To Make It without Hardly Even Trying, and The Funny Men, a series of campy portraits of the old Kings of Comedy.

A title of particular interest to the college student is What's Your Major? a collection of college stereotypes such as Malcolm Lushing, III, whose greatest achievement in college was that he consumed more beer than any of his classmates. You can't miss this one, the cover looks like a college Blue Book.

Ah, yes! "America is a land of wonders . . . the idea of novelty is there indissolubly connected with the idea of"—or all things—"amelioration."!

IT IS NICE to have understanding administrators at a college.

That's the way it appears to be at Stanford University, where last week the administration repealed prohibition in resident houses on campus.

The ruling becomes effective May 10.

Naturally, one still has to be 21 years old to partake in the festivities, the age when he becomes "responsible."

While the students down on the Farm are probably jubilant over the ruling, there are some hazards to the repeal of the law, if one looks very closely.

One bad point is that faculty teas, and any other type of teas will probably dwindle. Perhaps one of the biggest reactions to the repeal of the law will be the drop in attendance at Monday morning public speaking classes.

But the Stanford officials probably realized how the benefits outweigh the disadvantages.

For one thing it would improve study habits among older students, since everyone knows that a person learns better when he's relaxed. It would also tend to improve teacher-student relations, since repeal of prohibition would also apply to the faculty on campus.

Motivation would perhaps be the outstanding benefit obtained from a repeal of the law. It would probably help many decide a major field of study—chemistry. Chemistry would be their choice since many people for the first time would realize the need for an effective cure for hangovers.

Psychologically, repeal of the law would also have many good effects. In this age of complexes and neuroses, it would help eliminate guilt complexes among those students who had previously violated prohibition.

The seliers of the liquor would be relieved in the knowledge that they would no longer have to contribute to the delinquency of an adult. Guilt feelings among the buyers of the liquor would be eliminated since they wouldn't have to keep all that medicine on hand, or so they called it when the dean visited.

These were the probable reasons that Stanford repealed the law, but one wonders if some other reason wasn't behind their decision, especially when one official said that "the act was not enforceable in practice." In other words, it appears that what the administration feels about drinking doesn't matter anyway.

It is nice to have understanding administrators—administrators who understand when they're licked.

Negro College Appeals For Books To Combat Inferiority

LAST MONTH, in the San Francisco Examiner, Carl T. Rowan commented in his column that the Negro in the U.S. "still gets an inferior education in virtually every community."

Almost 80 years ago, one of Booker T. Washington's biggest dreams was to "get the Negro race as a whole to make itself so valuable and so necessary to the community in which it lives that it will not merely be tolerated, like a poor relation, but rather welcomed and sought after." One of the ways Washington planned to do this was through education.

Following the freedom of the slaves in the 1860s Washington urged the new free people to develop skills of the mind as well as the hands.

Many of the free people took Washington's advice and established schools and colleges. One college, the Paul Quinn College of Waco, Texas, was established in 1872, eight years after the slaves were granted their freedom. The founders, former slaves, of the college were determined to preserve their freedom and prepare themselves and their children for the future to come in the field of education. Many of the founders of Paul Quinn were unable to read or write.

But what does this Texas college have to do with Rowan's comment? First of all it is a Negro college—but not by choice. It is open to white students, but they have not yet attended the college. The college is supported by the African Methodist Episcopal Church (its programs stress the teachings of Christ and not denominational doctrines).

The "inferiority" Rowan mentioned in his column lies in Paul Quinn's library. This 84-year-old institution was finally able to build a new library with a capacity to hold 50,000 books. But at the beginning of the Spring 1966 semester, the library had only 14,000 books to put on its shelves and nothing more.

An appeal was made to many colleges and it was asked that if there are college students who "use their books and then don't want to keep some of them, but really can't get what they are worth in selling them back to the book stores, perhaps many of these students would like the idea of giving such books to the library at Paul Quinn.

If there are such students, books may be shipped Express collect to: Mrs. Dolores Harris, Librarian, Paul Quinn College, Waco, Texas, 76704.

Master Clock Fails To Guarantee Promptness

By Steven Hara

In the obscure, dilapidated shacks near the women's gymnasium works the man who knows all about converting campus clocks to Daylight Savings Time.

Ed Hiltman, the head electrician and hero of all bored, sleepy and unprepared students on campus, services—besides all the other electrical facilities—every clock on campus.

Hiltman, friendly and quite tolerant of a reporter's ignorance of electronics, explained his seemingly monumental task.

"There's a master clock in the basement of Science Hall which controls every other slave clock on campus. With the main power source this clock sends impulses to the others and controls both their time and speed.

"When we get orders from Downtown to advance the units to DST, we turn on the automatic advancing mechanism and ten minutes later the job's over."

Elaborating, Hiltman explained that the automatic advance is a feature of the master unit which speeds up the timekeeping gears six times. This means for every one actual minute that passes, six are recorded.

There are many problems which occur often in the time system that sometimes never meet the student's eyes. One of these is a power failure.

Hiltman related that on the first sign of any weakening of power the clocks and buzzers go on auxiliary power. The batters which supply this power have an unrecharged life of 80 minutes. If a failure lasts longer than this, it becomes touch and go; but for the most part the failures have such a short duration that they are rarely notices by those uninformed.

A problem encountered by many students is the inaccuracy of the clocks.

Hiltman says that there is little to worry about here until the clock actually runs down. Minor fluctuations in slave unit motor efficiency may cause fluctuations of up to five minutes no matter how accurate the master may be.

Planning ahead—and not having faith —is the only insurance policy which guarantees an on-schedule arrival in class.

● Frazier 'Excellent'

Editor, The Guardsman:

May I take this means to contribute a few words of admiration in the interest of Greg Frazier for the commentary entitled Solutionless War, (Coigne of Vantage column) carried in the issue of April 20th under his byline.

Without delving into the specific observations of Mr. Frazier, it is particularly desired to accord the very highest praise to his writing ability, literary style and general originality of exposition.

Although the instructional field of the undersigned is, on the surface at least, rather far removed from English/Communications, he harbors a continuing awareness (together with a majority of his colleagues) of the cavalier manner in which our native language is often given written (and oral) expression by otherwise competent students.

It is, therefore, refreshing indeed when the eye is enabled to devour art in word form penned at the hand of one of our very own!

In the humble opinion of this reader, Mr. Frazier has written on a level of excellence directly comparable to that of any nationally circulated correspondent, subject orientation or political persuasion to the contrary notwithstanding!

Peace For Mom

By B.T.

MOTHER'S DAY is Sunday. On this day, a cease-fire in all world conflicts would be the greatest tribute to mothers.

Would you believe it, but Mao Tse had or has a Mother. It's hard to visualize, but he was once a dirty little kid who popped off firecrackers in his pajamas, and was beaten with his mama's chopsticks.

Aleksei's Mom took away his balalaika when he used it to bash his neighbor's head in, and fed him kasha three times instead of once a day. And he cried to his Momma.

Now these two examples are not the good American examples of "Momism," so Momma must've erred somewhere. These boys grew up into big bad men who substituted firecrackers with ballistic missiles and nuclear bombs.

And where Mom was once listened to, she is now helpless. Where she used to wipe off his running nose, he now wipes out nations without using his balalaika even once.

But there is always hope. Mom sits and worries, and even if her son has become public enemy of the year or the stout defender of an ideal, Mom still hopes for his well being.

She remembers when he was so soft and helpless, and could not go to the potty himself. Does he remember her?

Does he remember that he once came to her with his little bruises, asking for her to kiss the hurt away, and for assurance that he need not worry? He's a big man now, and Mom cannot stop him from killing, maiming, destroying and slaughtering.

She can scream "stop fighting" all over this earth, but the naughty little boys who are now big men just don't listen to their Mommies. They are in big time now, not fighting with balalaikas and firecrackers.

Some of them don't understand why Mommy is so nervous about nothing. "We're only playing," they reassure her, adding, "after all we're not little boys anymore."

But Mom knows. The pain is still hers. She knows that the insanity called war "separates the men from the boys" all right, but it hurts.

Mom wants peace.

Remember her on Mother's Day.

They Do It Again

By Albert Hilliard Hughes

WITH THE RELEASE in June of Martin Rackin's remake of John Ford's Stagecoach, the question is, "How many times do producers remake old films and why?"

The "why" seems important when one considers that Prosper Merimee's Carmen has been filmed at least 35 times, in one form or another, and Dumas films' Camille has made it to the screen no less than 24.

Sometimes a remake will be handled differently in many ways from original. Such tales as High Sierra, about a gangster, became the western, Colorado Territory; Jack London's The Sea Wolf became Barricade, about mining in the Old West; House Of Strangers, about a fictional banking family, became Broken Lance, about a land baron of the Old West (this was again remade with a circus background as The Big Show); and Kiss Of Death, another gangster opus became The Fiend Who Walked The West.

Then there are producers like Bryan Foy who took a sea story, Tuna, and filmed it 11 times, as Tiger Shark, Lumberjack, Bengal Tiger and others. Or Cecil B. De Milie, who filmed an old western melodrama, The Squaw Man in 1913, 1918 and 1931.

Occasionally an old war-horse is remade to suit the talents of a particular star: the recent Madame X for Lana Turner, and Kid Galahad, an old Bette Davis-Edw. G. Robinson film, remade for Elvis Presley. Susan Hayward starred in Stolen Hours, which was a remake of Bette Davis' Dark Victory and Rita Hayworth took the title role in Miss Sadie Thompson, a grade-D film remake of Somerset Maugham's old story, Rain, previously filmed with Gloria Swanson, '28 (Sadie Thompson) and Joan Crawford, '32 (Rain).

Jerry Lewis remade three stories, originally for actresses, with Lewis taking over the roles, retailored for himself.

Washington Committee Ponders IBM Move Here

In Washington, D.C., Dean of Instruction Harry P. Buttimer reported recently, a Federal evaluating committee is presently considering whether or not City College should receive a $410 thousand grant for the rental, housing, maintenance and operation of a complex IBM 1401 computer system.

The committee, part of the central agency for the Manpower Development and Training Act of 1962, will, hopefully, approve an additional allocation to the college through the MDTA agency in Sacramento.

This additional allocation will, if it is approved, come from a reserve fund made up of unused portions of budgets from other states.

However, Buttimer sees little chance that action will be taken right away, since other projects in other states do have higher priority.

The original petition for this grant was submitted, in the form of a 40-page resolution, early in January to a San Francisco office of the State Board of Education.

Three months, and many committees later, it reached the California MDTA agency office in Sacramento. About a week and a half before Easter vacation, the petition was approved.

Unfortunately, at that time, the state of California had already used its allocation for this fiscal year. Hence, the request to the national agency was made.

Upon receipt of the needed funds, a contract will be made between the college and State Department of Employment, which will provide for 30 to 40 hours a week of retraining courses at the college in computer programming and data processing.

The provision, part of a nationwide program of job training, will enable men who, because of antiquated skills, find themselves out of work and unable to support their families, the opportunity to take a free course which will qualify them for higher-paying jobs in plants and offices.

Above and beyond the 30 to 40 hours a week, the system will be available for college use in engineering computer courses, for storage of administrative records and general administration use, and for use by student government.

Presently, the college makes use of an IBM Series 50 computer-tabulator which is one of the simpler computers made and which amounts to little more than a "glorified adding machine."

The 1401 system, which rents for approximately $6 thousand a month, is an intricate and efficient system, widely used by most large corporations and federal and state agencies.

The 14K computer, part of the 1401 system, with its tremendous capacity of 14,00 storage units, can be of great value to administration and student government, because data and records can be economically stored on magnetic tape.

Obtaining information from records would be faster and more accurate than the microfilm system now in use at the college.

One immediate advantage, from the student government standpoint, has been shown by Council Of Organizations IBM Committee chairman, Wayne Wilson; who has already worked out a computer program which will enable COO to tabulate rapidly and accurately the names of all students who indicate interest in one or more of the various campus organizations.

Assuming that there will be no more long delays, the IBM 1401 will be set up for operation prior to Christmas of this year.

Council OKs New Constitution In Overtime Session

By Jeff Kraus

The new Associated Student Constitution was finally accepted by Student Council as it went down to their last minutes of meeting time before voting acceptance.

For the new constitution to be on the ballot in the May AS elections, it was mandatory for council to accept it before the meeting was over on April 27.

Even then, knowing this, council ran over the hour time limit and had to use additional time to vote on the constitution. Only 10 council members were present for the final vote.

Council also decided which amendment to use in their decision about The Guardsman Policy Board.

The amendment proposed by Fred Stewart was voted on first. This amendment, originally drafted by Lawrence Lazore, chairman of the Campus Forum, called for a five-man board. It was defeated, 2-13-0.

Councilman Steve Ahern then introduced the other amendment concerning The Guardsman. This amendment proposed a six-man board similar to personnel to the Publications Board, that would have the power to "make all decisions relative to Guardsman policy with the approval of Student Council."

Council was reminded that time was short and the members voted to adopt the amendment, 9-4-1.

Another proposal, to raise Student Council candidate grade point requirement to 2.2, was adopted at one meeting then rescinded at the following meeting. The requirement stands at 2.0.

Councilman Chris Loo proposed an amendment that would give the Frosh and Soph Class Presidents seats on council and the power to vote along with council.

Ernie Woodcock, Frosh Class president, told council that he felt that the Frosh and Soph Presidents were just "social figureheads" and that they should be given the right to vote in order to represent their respective classes more fully.

It was pointed out that the council was made up of both freshman and sophomore members, seven each, and the two classes were already represented. Council defeated this amendment, 7-8-0.

Councilwoman Sheridan Parker proposed an amendment that included a representative of The Guardsman in the Publicity Committee, so that the representative could report back to the paper action taken by the committee. Council agreed that this would be beneficial, and the amendment was passed.

Student Council moved to accept the new constitution as it stood amended, and after being defeated the first time because enough council members felt that it should not be rushed through, another vote was taken and the constitution was finally passed, 7-1-2.

The new constitution will now be put on the ballot and be voted upon by the student body in the elections to be held on May 18 and 19.

Election Commissioner Marty Watten reported to council that petitions from students seeking office were being turned in and all offices had candidates.

AS President Jim Soletti announced that the Meet-Your-Councilman table had been cancelled because of lack of interest from the councilmen. He said that it could be reinstated if the council members wished to participate actively.

Councilman Ron Appel reported that the College of San Mateo Student Council had recently passed a dress regulation bill that makes it possible for San Mateo students to wear "anything they wish" on campus.

The men could wear cut-offs and the women could wear slacks. Appel said that this had been approved by the college president, Julio Bortolazzo.

Faculty Member Edits Anthology

In the hope of giving the new college student "a chance to learn more about himself," Katherine Hondius, an English instructor here, has edited an anthology of short stories which are concerned with the problems of youth.

Identity: Stories For This Generation includes 17 modern American short stories which reflect the values of contemporary youth of various social backgrounds, temperaments and goals.

"I believe there is a new college student with new expectations of society. He is a protester and an idealist seeking self-knowledge in a world of tarnished values," Miss Hondius declared. It is for this student that she has compiled Identity.

An introduction by Miss Hondius briefly outlines the technical elements of the short story—characterization, theme, point of view, plot, setting and language.

Blood Wedding Last Drama Production Of Semester

Federico Garcia Lorca's Blood Wedding, under the direction of Walter Krumm, drama instructor, will be given as the final production of the drama department, Thursday through Saturday, May 11 through 14, in the theater.

First presented in Spain in 1933, Blood Wedding (Bodas de Sangre) received its New York premiere in 1935 under the title, Bitter Oleanders. One of his most exciting plays, it is an enduring testament of his brilliant gift for poetry and drama, and reveals Lorca, the poet and the dramatist, just at that moment when he has mastered his special talent.

Born in 1899, Lorca was the author of several plays, many poems and travel essays. His most celebrated plays besides Blood Wedding, are Yerma and The House Of Bernarda Alba.

By 1936 he was one of the most popular and best known young poet-playwrights of his time, having established has own travelling theatrical troup, for whom he wrote his later plays. However, all this came to an end when the Spanish Civil War broke out. His father-in-law, at the time the Mayor of Madrid and a socialist, was executed by the Falangist.

Later—one story has it—Lorca, while visiting a friend, Luis Rosales, in Granada, was arrested and taken out and shot, and buried in an unmarked grave. There are still arguments today as to exactly who was responsible for the great Spanish poet's death.

For a decade afterward, Lorca was an unknown quantity in Nationalist Spain. All references to him were strictly verboten. By 1950 he was finally being recognized anew and accepted. As is the usual custom in such socio-politico situations, Lorca underwent rehabilitation, and is today regarded with honor.

Veteran drama students in the cast are Gale Bradley, Margaret Calhoun, Anne Crichton, Steve Howes, Toni Johns, Phyllis Melmon, Diane Nichols, Lana Tursby and Cheryl Willis.

Other members of the cast, making their debut before a City College audience, are Ron Biance, Neil Keane, Kamron Kowsar, Tim Lynch, Al Melodia, John Merle, Gail Ross, Karen Weglin and Marilynn Whiting.

Rehearsal manager is Cheryl Cullen, stage manager is Joe Bienkowski; John Lechner and Ed Reed will handle the intricate lighting system, while props and back-stage duties will be performed by Jack Ellis.

COO Throws Spring Festival Dance On Friday The 13th

Thirteen has long been considered a mystical number, probably because, in the ancient Hebrew language, it was written AD, the abbreviation for ADONAI, or Lord. And for some reason, unknown to most, Friday the thirteenth is thought of as an ill-fated day.

But, for some deserving students at the college, Friday, May 13, could be very lucky.

That infamous day of days will see the Council Of Organizations present its annual Spring Festival in Smith Hall.

And this year, in keeping with the old adage, "Charity begins at home," the members of COO have decided to use a portion of festival booth profits and gate receipts to set up a COO Scholarship Fund, rather than contribute to an outside charity, as has been the practice in previous years.

The Scholarship Fund will receive its sustenance from the total gate receipts, less what is used to cover individual booth losses, and from 10 per cent of all booth profit.

Eligibility for the COO Scholarship is limited to members of clubs and organizations represented in COO, which should include a goodly number, since every recognized on-campus organization is required to have a representative in COO.

Presently, an eight-member committee, headed by Spring Festival Chairman Fred Reisinger, is busy formulating criteria by which applicants for this scholarship may be judged.

Indeed, the number thirteen may carry with it the aura of mysticism; but who can say that Friday the thirteenth is unlucky?

Club Notes: Forum Distribution Set For End Of May

By Bill Fritz

FORUM, the campus literary magazine, went to press yesterday and will be distributed starting May 30 at the Rampsorium.

Students with an Associated Student card are entitled to a free copy; others may purchase Forum for 50 cents. There are only 1000 copies being printed, and they will be distributed on a first come, first served basis. So pick one up as soon as possible, since they are expected to go fast.

Two major functions, the Merchandizing Club Fashion Show and Contemporary Affairs Forum's Vietnam Briefing, were cancelled last week: the first, through lack of interest and organization within the club; the second, because Professor Marshall Windmiller and the San Francisco State College Vietnam Task Force could not make it to last Thursday's meeting. CAF is tentatively planning the briefing for tomorrow's College Hour meeting in A-314.

The Campus Forum, having temporarily concluded its discussion of The Guardsman, has started the analytical ball rolling on a critical discussion of the Associated Student government. All interested students and faculty members are invited to participate in the discussions at the Tuesday meetings, during College Hour, in Bungalow 6.

The Pep Band announced that anyone interested in participating during next year's football and basketball seasons should consult Faculty Adviser Albert Samuels in S-160 or attend any of the band meetings on Fridays at 2 p.m. in A-135. Attendance at all games is mandatory.

Next semester the Pep Band will participate in the Junior Rose Bowl game in Pasadena.

KCSF plans to start broadcasting to Smith Hall between 8 and 11 a.m. daily. The Broadcasters would like to hear from students concerning preference in music. The Broadcasters can be reached in A-145.

A Naval Aviation Information Team will visit the college tomorrow and Friday to explain the Naval Aviation Officer Programs. Both Freshmen and Sophomores are eligible to qualify for Commissions in Naval Aviation. There will be a van, filled with recruiting information, and people to answer questions at the Ram on both days.

Committee Undertakes Study On Student-Teacher Relationships

By Viggo Petersen

Charles Muscatine is an English professor at the University of California and heads the committee which recently undertook a study of the problems besetting student-teacher relationships.

The committee interviewed 2800 students and published a 200-page report with 42 recommendations. The recommendations were designed to curtail the dissention which has been noted in recent semesters at various universities. The report appeared in a San Francisco newspaper under the headline: "What's wrong with UC?"

Following publication of the report, United Press correspondent Michael Hudson undertook to study the report and present segments of it which reflect the problem of education from the student's point of view. His story appeared in many metropolitan newspapers.

Hudson, quoting from the report, says figures indicate that "students who voice their alienation and discontent the loudest are usually among those with the highest grades." Also there are "hundreds" of students who may share the views of many of the discontented but do not choose to express themselves by taking part in demonstrations.

This "rebel" element lashes out at an establishment which "claims to champion freedoms, religion, patriotism and morality but produced and condones slums, racial segregation, false advertising, American economic imperialism and the bomb.

"Success in this kind of society becomes a game . . . it means playing a role . . . Having been raised in affluence, the students do not feel a pressure to achieve the traditional forms of success in business or the professions."

What "terrifies" many students, the report continues, is their conviction that individuals will lose their own sense of responsibility, their own freedom and their own humanity to a "bureaucratized, machine-run society."

Parents represent the older generation. They have accepted the "system," therefore, the student associates the system with his parents and their traditional beliefs in "patriotism, organized Christianity and traditional logic patterns."

Drug rebelling, nonaddictive drugs may be used as a device to produce creativity as a means of escape from reasoning out all the aspects of these traditions.

Or the rebellion may take the form of a revolt against specific ideologies such as segregation or Vietnam.

In discussing education the report points out that the student feels a "disillusionment" after "turning to the university for idealism and to the faculty for communication and wisdom and finds that the professors never even learn his name.

"The university then becomes just another part of the establishment. Students see the university as an agent of the power structure and they want it to become instead an agent of their moral revolution.

"A major task of the university is to convince the students of the values of free and independent inquiry, of the need of the university for autonomy from all quarters if it is to properly serve society."

Spikers Step On San Mateo Bulldogs, 80½-50½, Clinch Championship Undefeated

By John LeTourneau

The City College track team concluded its dual meet season by defeating College of San Mateo, 80½-50½, April 26, at the Rams' track to clinch the conference dual meet championship.

The Rams went into the meet without their ace sprinter O. J. Simpson, who is out for the season with a fractured thumb. In the hero role was sprinter Bob Prince who won both the 100-yard dash and 220-yard run, in fine times of 9.8 and 22.4, respectively.

Another double victory was Dwight Tucker who broke the meet record in the high jump with a leap of 6-0¼. He also had time to win the triple jump with an all-time personal low of 45-2. Tucker had a so-called bad day for a national leader in this departmjent.

Another record holder, San Mateo pole vaulter Dennis Phillips, quit jumping after 11-0, tying two teammates, complaining of a bad wind.

Lou Vasquez, coach of the City College team was again pleased with the team's performance. "This was a big meet and with Simpson and Ferguson out of action we needed good performances from all our men," Vasquez said.

In the hurdles Sonny Johnson and Don Jordan split the 120 high and 330 intermediate hurdles respectively. Also turning in good performances were sprinters Adam Banks and Ralph Barsi who pressed Prince in the 100 and 220.

Lee Benton turned in a good performance as he won the 440 and anchored the winning 440 relay team. In the distance races the Rams were paced by Fred Forsberg, Rich Cuadra and Bill Long. Forsberg won the two mile, Cuadra finished second in the 880 and Long came in second in both the mile and two-mile respectively.

In the weight class, Ralph Raines and Dennis Sullivan both took third place. However, the Bulldogs are considered to be very strong in those departments.

The Rams will be in the Golden Gate Conference trials at Chabot today and in the finals Saturday.

TRIPLE JUMP — Tucker (SF) 45-2; Pettit (SM), 40-1; Cameron (SF), 39-1½.

Track Squad Near Full Potential For Conference Meets

City College of San Francisco, dual meet champions and conference relay winner, will go into today's big Golden Gate Conference meet trials at San Mateo almost up to full strength as doctors have given sprinter O. J. Simpson the go ahead to compete.

The trials will determine who will compete in the conference meet finals to be held Saturday at the College of San Mateo.

Simpson, who has been out of action following a freak accident which fractured his left thumb, boasts a 9.5 (slightly wind aided) 100-yard dash and a 21.9 220-yard mark.

Dwight Tucker, who has not lost in either the high or triple jumps, is expected to pick up valuable points in those events as well as the long jump.

Tucker has the national junior college best high jump mark of the year at 6-10½. His 49-3½ triple jump is the best conference mark this year. If that isn't enough, Tucker also is capable of long jumping nearly 23 feet.

Tucker has picked up 15 points in several meets by copping firsts in all of his events.

In the 440 relay, the Rams will run a competent foursome of Bob Prince, Simpson, Adam Banks and Lee Benton who have burned conference tracks with a 41.7 clocking.

Anchorman Benton also does a sole 440 in 49.1.

The loss of George Ferguson, a 4:15 miler, will hurt the Rams' chances in that event and Bill Long will represent City College's highest hopes in that run.

Long's best time in the mile is a 4:28.0.

With tough competition coming from Contra Costa and Foothill, San Francisco is banking on the quintet of Prince, Benton, Harold Johnson and Chris Davis to come through with a good mile relay timing.

The four have combined to clock a 3:21.3 during the dual meet season.

Although San Francisco's pole vaulting leaves ample room for many feet of improvement, San Mateo will show off the national junior college leader, Dennis Phillips, who has vaulted 16-4.

Sportswire Cage Ratings Rank City College Second In State

By William G. Pates

City College of San Francisco's unbeaten 1966 Golden Gate Conference champions, runners up in the 15th Annual California State Junior College Basketball Championships, were awarded the rank of second in the state by the results of balloting for the JC Sportswire 1966 California Basketball Ratings released recently.

Riverside City College, three time state champion, was a near unanimous choice for number one, as they received 29 of 30 first place votes cast, with San Francisco getting the lone dissenting vote.

City College was the victim of somewhat tragic circumstances regarding any chances they might have had for the state championship.

Their plight could be compared with what the Boston Celtics would be like without Bill Russell, against 7-0 Wilt Chamberlain.

Without 6-5 All-Conference center Gene Williams, the club was simply not as effective defensively or on the boards and as a result had a fairly hard battle to reach the finals.

As it was Riverside's 7-0 Larry Bunce and the whole team in general, just played a fantastic game against the Rams, subsequently providing Sid Phelan with his worst defeat in his 11 years at City College, 91-61.

Bunce quite obviously played one of his best games of the year, as he scored on 14 of 17 shots from the field and scored 30 points, the exact margin of victory. Coach Sid Phelan believes that had the defensive-minded Williams, with his "Bill Russell" style of blocking shots been there, San Francisco's chances would have been greatly increased.

As a team, Riverside set a new record for field goal percentage in the championship game, 67.2 per cent, while the Rams were managing but 31 per cent or so of their shots.

City College was an easy winner as the second best team in the state being chosen for that spot on the majority of the ballots. San Francisco had a total of 258 points, 44 more than third place Imperial Valley College.

Despite the failure to win the state championship, Sid Phelan's club had a great year nevertheless. They compiled a 30-3 won-loss record, third in the state and second best in the college's history, as well as a twenty-one game winning streak.

Other Nor-Cal colleges in the ratings were: San Joaquin Delta (6th), San Mateo (7th) and Contra Costa (8th). Honorable mentions were Chabot, Marin, Merritt, San Jose and Vallejo.

Margin Of Victory

Flashes Edge Newman As Frosh Class Nips 'G', 51-50

The second round of action continued last week in the Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural basketball tournament.

Percy Jones, AMS president, said the interest is picking up after a slow start. In Tuesday night's action, Club League leader Newman Club, playing without its leading scorer, was edged by second-place Foley's Flashes, 57-55. The loss ties the Newman Club with the Flashes for the leadership.

In another close game the Frosh Class nipped The Guardsman, 51-50. The journalists, sporting the highest scoring output of the year, just ran out of gas, and the Frosh Class pushed across a late output and went home with the victory.

The third game Tuesday saw the Negro Students Association finally get a victory by defeating the Filipino-Americans, 76-66. The fourth game, between the Point Shavers and Alpha Phi Epsilon, was rescheduled.

In Wednesday night's action there was only one game played as the rest were forfeits.

In the only game played saw Negro Students Association easily defeat the improved Guardsman 65-44.

In the three Independent-Fraternity league games the first place Irish pick up a victory as they defeated Alpha Phi Epsilon by forfeit. In another game won by forfeit saw the Soul Plus beat Alpha Sigma Delta. The fourth game scheduled was a double forfeit between the Point Shavers and the Celtics.

In tonight's action in the Independent-Fraternity league, the Soul Plus will play Alpha Phi Epsilon. On the second night will be a crucial between the Irish and the Soul Plus. Also playing will be the Point Shavers and Alpha Sigma Delta. In the lone Club league game see first place Newman Club and the Filipino-American, on next Tuesday.

Golf Squad Bids For Championship

Golf Coach Grover Klemmer's squad made another move in its bid for the Golden Gate Conference championship as the Rams walked all over Foothill, 28-7. Veteran Tom O'Kane was low man for the match with an even-par 72.

O'Kane was followed by Mike Butler who had a 73 and who was in turn followed by Gary Mlaloeq with a 74.

Gary Corbi, a newcomer to the first five, had a 77, while Ron O'Connor, number one man on the Rams' ladder, blew to an 80, which, incidentally, was still good enough to win his match.

Chuck Epps had the best round for the Owls as he shot a 75. However, it was to no avail as he was matched against the 73-shooting Butler.

Net Season Near Disaster After Close 4-3 Loss

Coach Roy Diederichsen's netters dropped another heartbreaker recently as the Rams were victimized, 4-3, by the Chabot Gladiators. The loss was the club's fourth of the campaign, and it made a certainty of the fact that the team will not have a .500 record this year.

Diederichsen cannot be blamed for bemoaning, "This is our worst won-lost record ever."

However, the loss to Chabot could not have been much closer, even than the score indicates. Both clubs were tied 3-3 going into the last match which, unfortunately for City College, was won by the Glads.

In individual results, San Francisco's Greg Shephard bested Chabot's Woolfson, 6-3, 6-4. George Pontikoff whipped Brad Kolkman, 6-1, 6-4. The Rams' three other singles players were all defeated. Bob Kypta lost 3-6, 6-1, 5-7, while Quincy Lay was losing, 2-6, 3-6. Jim Moore fell by a 3-6, 3-6 verdict.

In doubles play, Shephard and Pontikoff won their match, 1-6, 6-2, 7-5. In the deciding number two doubles contest, Kypta and Lay were turned back, 4-6, 8-6, 2-6.

Despite Shephard's outstanding performance in league play, he is not invincible. At the recent Nor-Cal Sectional Tournament Shephard finished second to three-time champ, Tom Brown.

The loss was Shephard's second of the year in singles play but he has yet to lose a match in any doubles event this season. As it was, Shephard and Jerry Kern won the doubles title of the tournament to take some of the sting out of the loss to the 42-year-old Brown.

Ram Baseball Team Stays On Top With 6-4 Win Over Jags

City College's first place baseball squad held on to its slim one-game margin in the Golden Gate Conference race last Thursday by making a trip to San Jose City College to bag a 6-4 win over the Jaguars.

Righthander Bill Kirkpatrick, who survived the clash with an earned run average of 2.11, allowed the Jags a scattered eight hits to pick up his seventh win against a single loss.

The win was a must for the Rams, who are being chased by an unbelievable College of San Mateo club in conference standings.

The Bulldogs have picked up their last three wins like league games were batting practice.

After clobbering the Rams, 15-4, two weeks ago, the Mateans kept on swinging to cut down Contra Cost by an awing 25-1 count, and then blanking Chabot, 7-0, on a one hitter.

If the Rams were to slack off and lose even a single contest, the Bulldogs bats might pound San Francisco right out of sight in these final stages of conference doings.

Heading into their final four games the Rams are not in the best of shape. Pitching, which has done the job thus far, is slacking off a bit leaving ERAs at season's highs for both Ram starters and there is only one .302 batter leading the regulars in hitting.

Making the scene even duller — the Rams are slated to finish the season versus the mad dogs from San Mateo . . . something must give.

Rams Come Back After Loss, Defeat Foothill Owls, 5-1

Rounding the final turn as though they were on the way to making it a clean sweep for City College in spectator sports 1965-66, the Ram baseball team belted Owl lefthanded star Mike Noonan and Foothill, 5-1, at Balboa Park last week.

Making sure that they would not go into an expensive extended losing streak, the Rams pounded Noonan for six hits and all their runs in one big fourth inning.

Centerfielder Al Pasion, who went into the game on the rail of a batting slump, capped the big fourth inning with a double that drove in Ram tallies number four and five.

Noonan, who had completed eight games for the faltering Owls, is now in the red against the Rams—winning one and losing two, in that order.

The win left San Francisco still on top of the race with six games yet to be played. San Mateo, one game back, was still hot after downing City College the previous Thursday, 15-4, and clobbered Contra Costa, 25-1.

The Ram win dropped the Owls into a third-place tie with Diablo Valley. Each has a 9-6 record.

Elston Names Returning Champs

Ram football coach, Arthur "Dutch" Elston, stated recently that following the results of the spring sign-up for the football team he expects an estimated 24 members from last year's champion ship team to return in the fall.

Noteworthy among the expected returnees are O. J. Simpson, Fred Loville, Jerd Lapham, Bruce Rosenberg, Dwight Tucker and Milt Frank.

Elston also said that although the sign-up was fairly good, the coaching staff is always interested in new material and all men interested in the team should sign up with him.

Among the men out for the team for the first time are Sal Alioto, Larry Bingham, Wendel Blake, James Edwards, Perry Edwards, Dennis Felso, Joseph Hayword, Fulu Ileoa, Percy Jones, James McEldry, Ray Moore, Greg Pedrin, Art Read, Ernie Renero, Rhoy Steulben, Joseph Soriano, Darryl Strickland and Jess Webb.

Among those absent in the fall will be Mike Dunn and Bob Lee, transfers to University of Pacific; Suaese Melae and Dennis Sullivan at New Mexico State, Bill Gianquinto at San Francisco State, Laisene Malaulo at Los Angeles State, Joe Ross at San Jose State, Eural Smothers at University of Nevada and Mike Taylor at University of Southern California.

Mermen Place Seventh In Meet

With only four men, the City College swim team managed to place in six events in the Golden Gate Conference relays, April 22 and 23 at College of San Mateo.

Roy Burkhead, coach of the team, was "extremely" pleased with the team, simply because it went into the relays with only four men. Bruno Van Rign and Fred Adams could not compete because of the flu.

In the finals, the four Ram swimmers, Bob Martin, John O'Connor, Bill Pasquinelli and Barry Schesinger, combined to place sixth in both the medley and freestyle relays.

Martin came back to take a fifth place in the 200 individual medley, and also finished third in the 400 individual medley. In the backstroke, Pasquinelli, although nursing a bad cold, finished third and fifth in the 100 and 200 backstroke, respectively.

Burkhead commented, "I don't think I have been prouder of any team than the group of this year."

In the conference meet, Foothill took first place followed by San Mateo. With its four men, the Rams were in fourth place, but none of the men could enter other competition, and consequently all the other teams passed the Rams up.

'Wind It Up, Tack It Up, Blow It Out'

By Peter Dorn

PERHAPS IT'S a little late, what with about six weeks of learning to go, to give warning of the hazards of the Phelan avenue quarter mile, but the lesson may save a life.

Now it is common knowledge that the distance from the cafe parking lot crosswalk to the reservoir entrance is a quarter of a mile, which is the regulation distance for drag racing as set down in the official rules of the Great Highway Racing Association.

And while the GHRA has not officially sanctioned the Phelan strip, it has risen to be the third most popular course in the city, second only to Brotherhood drive and, of course, the Big Highway.

The Phelan strip is perhaps the most colorful in the city. At the line, one is guaranteed a good crowd which is made up of people who are about to enter the crosswalk. These people help inspire the racer to get off the line in good form.

A vehicle that is properly geared and carbureted, such as any red GTO, can run through all four gears with spectators at every shift point, as at the entrance to the Science Hall circle for second. ("Listen to him wind, wind, wind"), the crosswalk in the middle of Phelan for third (where another crowd is all excited as the people are trying to get out of the way, and the exit of the circle for fourth ("power-shift here we go").

The warning is in regard to the shutoff area, which was inadequate from the very beginning, and which was recently altered by the city in the way of a traffic "island."

This island is a genuine hazard to the strip, as it cuts the shutoff area to a ridiculous 70 feet, and something should orta be done about it.

New GI Benefit Bill Forms May Be Filed Now

Applications for benefits under the new GI Bill are now being filed here, according to Robin Dunn, college veterans' counselor.

All veterans in service since January 31, 1955, who have not used 36 months of benefits under a previous bill and have served more than 180 days are eligible. This excludes anyone in a six-month program.

The Veterans Education Assistance Fund is designed to meet the cost of tuition, books, fees, supplies and general living expenses incurred while attending college.

The bill becomes effective June 1, 1966, so those attending the summer session here could possibly receive benefits, Dunn said.

Applications should be filed before June 15 and August 1 for the summer and fall sessions, respectively, with the Veterans' Administration office, 49 Fourth Street, San Francisco.

This bill is on a slightly different monetary scale "in contrast to the Korean Bill," Dunn said. But benefits range up to $100 for vets with no dependents and $150 for those with two dependents. The academic load carried is also a factor in determining the monthly allowance.

Registrar Learnard To Retire In Fall

Mary Jane Learnard, one of City College's pioneer faculty members, and five other instructors will retire at the end of this semester.

Miss Learnard, who has served as the college's registrar since Fall 1946, served as assistant registrar when the college opened in 1935.

Three full-time instructors who intend to terminate their work here are Ruth Inskipp, William Culver and Joseph Chapman.

Mrs. Inskipp will be retiring from the department of dental assisting. Culver is a member of the drama and French departments and Chapman is an engineering instructor.

Walter Swanson, of hotel and restaurant, and Harold Hill, X-ray technology, are also retiring.

Sink Or Swim Grading Favored Over A's And B's

By Viggo Petersen

A grading system of P for "passing" or NP for "not passing," to be given only in courses required for graduation from City College, is currently under consideration, according to James Billwiller, dean of instruction.

The announcement came during an interview with Dean Billwiller concerning statements recently made at a Modesto Junior College seminar by two science instructors stating that the present criteria to grade students is "ridiculous."

The instructors, Mervin Lovenberg and John Mudie, condemned grading methods, saying that instead of encouraging thinking, the resent process of giving objective tests in order to determine a grade only encourages memorization.

The instructors predicted that in the future no one will have any use for a mind trained in memorization only. The colleges must inspire creativity and thinking since most memorization will be handled by machines, they said.

With the increase of spare time, people must learn to think and create, otherwise the idle hours and leisure moments will ultimately lead to a state of boredom and as a result, mental health will deteriorate as insanity creeps up on the bored, the instructors continued. They also said that increased suicide rates could come about as a result of simply having nothing to do.

They both advocated giving students consideration for their interest in the course and/or credit for their participation in class.

One of the substitute grading systems they suggested was that in addition to the present A through F scale, an instructor would have the prerogative of giving a failing student an I representing "interest" in the course or a P for "participation."

However, the biggest problem facing this kind of grading procedure, they said, would be how to determine transfer credits. The I and P grades apparently would not be used to determine a grade point average, their primary function being to prevent a student from failing the course.

Dean Billwiller, in discussing such a proposal, seemed to react unfavorably to this grading criteria. He seemed to feel that if a student simply is not qualified to receive a passing grade in a course, then no consideration should be given in regard to the student's interest in the course or his participation in class.

While discussing the P and NP grading system, comparable to an experiment at the University of California, Dean Billwiller said receiving a P grade in a required course would be sufficient, but he did not feel that grading in this manner would be sufficient to indicate a student's progress in his major.

He said there must be a strong indication as to whether a student should continue in a certain field during his stay at City College or should continue this course of study at a university. Simply giving a student a passing or failing grade would not be sufficient to let the student and his counselor determine whether he is in the right major, he said.

Dean Billwiller said that the pass or fail grades would be given in such required courses as communications, basic math and health, but he gave no indication as to when such a program might go into effect.

Blood Wedding Opens Tonight

Scenery Changes Make Tragedy Hard To Stage

Blood Wedding, the provocative folk tragedy by Federico Garcia Lorca, opens tonight for a four-night run through Saturin the theater.

Curtain time is at 8 p.m.

The play is loaded with excitement and dramatic experimentation, offering a real treat to the audience.

Director Walter Krumm selected Blood Wedding because it is in the style of Shakespeare's tragedies. The poetry fits neatly into the play, revealing Lorca's rare gifts of fantasy and lyricism which find full expression in this drama of violent passion.

This has been the toughest play to stage, Krumm said, mainly because of the technical problems. There are seven complete exterior scene changes and two complete interior scene changes, necessitating the use of the entire stage.

Paul Crowley, who designed the sets, is experimenting with color changes to set the mood. In one drop, for instance, there is a rose painted on the set, invisible to the audience until the light beams hit it, when a weird effect is created.

This is the first play in the theater where the entire lighting system will be used. The setting up of the lights came under the supervision of James Haran.

An extra feature will be two songs composed by talented Joi Gibrick. The first song will be sung by Lana Tershy and Margaret Calhoun, and the second by Gail Ross, to the guitar accompaniment of Bill Swartz and Steve Zlott.

Veteran drama students in the cast are Gale Bradley, Miss Calhoun, Anne Crichton, Steve Howes, Toni Johns, Phyllis Melmon, Diane Nichols, Miss Tershy and Cheryl Willis.

Other members of the cast, making their debut before a City College audience, are Ron Bianco, Neil Keane, Kamron Kowzar, Tim Lynch, Al Melodia, John Merle, Gail Ross, Karen Weglin and Marilynn Whiting.

Rehearsal manager is Cheryl Cullen, stage manager is Joe Bienkowski; John Lechner and Ed Reed will handle the lights and backstage duties will be performed by Jack Ellis.

Krumm said that he is grateful for the excellent support that he received from faculty members Crowley, Haran, Richard Fenner, and Cynthia Berol.

Employers On Campus Today To Recruit Job Applicants

City College's 11th annual Engineering-Business Recruitment Day starts today with a kickoff breakfast in Smith Hall at 8 a.m., Joseph A. Amori, director of personnel placement services and coordinator of the recruitment day program, announced.

The breakfast will be highlighted by speeches by President Louis G. Conlan, Dr. Louis F. Batmale, coordinator of technical-terminal programs, and Dean of Instruction Harry Buttimer. President Conlan will welcome the guests and then Batmale and Buttimer will describe their respective programs.

Joseph Magnin, Inc., will be honored at the breakfast. Each year it is traditional for one firm participating in the program to be given special recognition. Representing the firm will be Cyril Magnin, president, and Walter S. Newman, vice president.

Interviewing of the 250 graduates from 25 training programs will begin at 9:30 a.m. in Cloud Hall, where 150 representatives from 15 different firms will conduct the interviews.

The employers will be representing California, Arizona, Washington and Texas. The day has been billed as the most extensive recruitment drive in the history of the event.

Amori announced that the most sought-after graduates this year are electronic technicians whose skills are required in a great many industries, as well as military and government jobs.

Accelerated by the war in Vietnam, coupled with new advances in missile and space technology, the demand for skilled technicians has outgrown the supply by many hundreds.

The most critical office skill in demand is that of the secretarial worker. Typing and shorthand are vital on all fronts despite the fact that some office routines have been taken over by machines, but the "secretary remains the most sought-after member of the office team," Amori said.

Second to secretarial skills is the demand for accounting graduates, Amori stated. He further noted that starting salaries range from $400 to $600 per month with an average of $450 per month.

Amori further mentioned "that graduates from the merchandising, sales, retailing and marketing curricula will find a ready market for their skill," for although these areas may lack the glamour of the other areas mentioned, they provide financial security and many fringe benefits.

Of the program, Amori commented, "The campus-wide recruitment program has grown larger and larger with each succeeding year and has now reached the stage where the management demand outstrips graduate supply and working spaces are taxed to capacity.

Day Of The Bad Break

Friday, the 13th day of this month, according to the astrologists, is going to be a loser.

Any student whose cut record is close to the limit and who, therefore, plans to attend classes Friday is going to have bad luck.

Driving to the college in the morning, he is going to get caught in a traffic jam; students riding the Muni will be delayed as their bus breaks down with a faulty kinetic dimentionalism stabilizer.

All "choice" parking places will be occupied when the motorist-student finally arrives; he will have a surprise quiz in his first class, and when he goes for lunch the cafe will be overcrowded.

The vending machines will beat him out of his loose change, such as it is, and his car won't start when he leaves the campus. Those conscribed to the Muni will just catch the high point of the elementary school traffic.

Carnival, Dance Highlight Spring Festival Friday

Games of chance, exhibitions, food, prizes and a dance will highlight this year's Spring Festival, to be held starting at 7:30 p.m. Friday in Smith Hall and Statler wing, according to James Wyatt, director of student activities.

Twenty booths are scheduled which will offer a variety of entertainment. Admission to each booth is 10 cents, Wyatt said, with prizes offered to concession winners.

The carnival will be held in Smith Hall from 7:30 to 10:30 p.m., sponsored by the Council Of Organizations.

Each booth appearing at the carnival will be sponsored by a member of COO, and all money earned by each booth will go to the sponsoring organization. Some booths are expected to offer food. Admission to the carnival itself is 25 cents.

After the carnival, the dance, sponsored by KCSF will begin at 10:30 p.m. and end at midnight. Admission to the dance will cost three ten-cent carnival tickets and will feature recorded music.

The festival is held each year for the benefit of raising funds for the individual organizations on campus.

Though suspended in 1963 and 1964, it has been a tradition for several years at City College, and last year, when it was revived, drew a crowd of approximately 600, Wyatt said. He hopes for a capacity crowd Friday night.

Preprogramming For Fall Underway

By finals week, approximately 10,000 students will have individual interviews with their counselors for the purpose of programming their classes for next fall, Walter McCloud, counselor, said yesterday.

Counselors are sending each student a postcard stating the date of his appointment.

It is imperative, McCloud emphasized, that the student either keep this appointment or notify the counselor 48 hours in advance for a cancellation and rescheduling.

Students are required to pick up their registration forms which list registration time and priority number, in S-143-G between May 25 and June 8. Without this form, the student cannot register in the fall.

Cologne Of Vantage

To Fight Or Not

By Greg Frazier

HISTORY TELLS US that there have always been wars. Human nature tells us that there have always been those who refused to fight them. Herein lies a great moral issue, perhaps never before felt so deeply as in our own time.

Conscription, or the compulsory enrollment of men and women for military service, is by no means a product of 20th Century militarism. Neither is the objection to conscription a product of 20th Century rebellion and protest.

The obligation of individual service to family, group, or tribe outdates the birth of civilization. We can be certain that many a prehistoric man grunted his protest at being drafted into the hunt. There were those who refused to bear arms in the citizen-militia of ancient Greece; the soldier-serfs of the Middle Ages and the Massachusetts militiamen of 1775.

At one time, fighting ability was a test of manhood. The physically unfit and the objectors were either regulated to the tasks of women or put to death. Today a man can choose between the Army and the federal penitentiary; moreover, some feel that the decision NOT to fight is a far greater test of manhood.

The Selective Service Act of 1917, which established conscription on a national basis, drew a storm of protest, as did the Selective Service Act of 1941 which provided for compulsory registration. These acts had been repeatedly challenged on grounds of constitutionality and have been repeatedly upheld. The draft is here to stay.

Individual reasons for either going or not going to war are as numerous and diverse as the individuals themselves.

America's young men can be placed into three general categories: Those who consent to the draft, feeling military service an obligation and a price of citizenship; those who refuse to go and make ashes of themselves and their draft cards; and those who wouldn't go if offered a choice, but resign themselves to the inevitable and go reluctantly.

The first two groups are committed to a definite course of action. They have that peculiar peace of mind which arises oft of decisiveness. It is the latter group with which we are most concerned.

These men must resign themselves to the law of the land. They have been drafted, and they must go. But they do have a voice in their government—and herein lies the moral of our story.

It is an individual's responsibility as a man and his duty as a citizen to speak out on public issues. This applies to all men and all citizens, whether they be for the draft or against; be they hawk or dove, right or left, Republican or Democrat. By exercising this responsibility, we are assured a government of the people.

We cannot allow our voices to become weak through disuse.

The Thought Of War

By Rich Heintz

WHAT DOES the average college student think when the word "War" is mentioned?

Say the word "war," and the average college student of today does probably think about the war in Vietnam, but mostly he remembers his little green army men that he had so much fun playing with when he was little—he really doesn't have a comprehension of the word.

Perhaps this is because in the college generation of today, the stories about the war seem to remain stories since this is the first exposure to conflict which this generation has seen. It is hard to visualize the fighting. The reports in newspapers are no doubt complete in their coverage but still it's very easy to count the numbers instead of the lives. The war seems more like a Saturday war picture in a local show rather than the real thing.

What does the average college student think when the word "war" is mentioned?

He probably thinks of some remote place in which the United States has an interest, perhaps a side line. This image is easily created today because Vietnam is not the only main interest of the U.S. Unlike World War II, America has time and money to do many things. During WW II the entire U.S. economy was geared to wartime production, but today the U.S. is busy making rockets to the moon, computers and safety devices for cars. During WW II every American family felt the pressure of the war—many times they were rationed food and many other valuables which could be used in the war effort; the hardships were not confined to the fighting man in the field.

But today, an average family can go home and eat a turkey dinner while listing to reports about the war in Vietnam.

What does the average college student think when the word "war" is mentioned?

Perhaps there are some exceptions to those students who think of little green men in some distant interest in the east. But these exceptions are the people who have been touched, like many more will be in the near future, very personally by the war; perhaps a close relative or friend is fighting, wounded, or dead. These are the people who realize what war is—real people fighting with real weapons.

The average college student answer would probably be that he thinks of the draft board. But there is still the chance that he won't be accepted. But it is this same person who, if he is drafted, will know best of all what "war" means because he'll either be fighting, wounded, or dead.

College Swimmers Have Hard Time, Get Less Aid Than Most

IN RECENT YEARS City College of San Francisco has been quite successful in the world of sports.

Last semester the Rams won the soccer, football and basketball titles. In the Spring of '65 the golf team was cochampion of the Golden Gate Conference, and this year it has a chance to repeat.

Earlier this month the track squad became the new winners of the conference title. The baseball team is well in contention for the league's pennant race. Up until a year ago, the tennis squads of the early sixties were perennial titlists of the conference's net action.

All this goes to prove, obviously, that this college has great potential despite the fact that the college track isn't exactly the best in the city, that it does not have its own tennis courts as do many two-year colleges, and that the football field is not particularly in A-1 condition. But as imperfect as these facilities are, the teams have not been overwhelmed by the inadequacies.

Of course there is an exception to the above statement, and that lone example is the swimming team. Last year the swimmers were forced to cancel swimming as a competitive sport because lack of talent and equipment made the operation of the team somewhat difficult. And the reason for lack of talent was—no swimming pool.

In the Spring of 1965 the Ram mermen had this problem, this uncertainty of finding a place to swim. Although they are only a few yards away from Balboa pool, it was not good enough to hold practice.

The reason it was not good enough is that it is a "public" pool. And that meant that the Ram swimming team not only had to share the pool with the general public, but also with red cross groups, and high school teams.

So the college was forced to go to John MacLaren pool—a facility almost four miles away. The two pledged members of the team, and the "unpledged" members just had to go through too much red tape and uncertainty—much less spend additional hours of practice.

The Rams are now back in Balboa pool which they share with Balboa and Riordan Highs. They also have to share the pool with the general public as usual and other organizations that are also the "public."

What's more, the Rams are allowed, usually, on the middle lane in which to practice. This makes it hard for Roy Burkhead to coach, particularly since there are other teams practicing in the other lanes —except the lanes being used by the public.

Sometimes they cannot hold practice sessions at all through predictable unpredictable circumstances. When this is the case, a Ram team member is expected to practice by himself—without the help of his coach. Not only this, the college does not have any "home" meets; all their scheduled contests are held on the opponents' home ground.

In Marin county, the peninsula, the east bay, the colleges and high schools (such as Daly City's Jefferson) have fine swimming programs on their campuses. Foothill College is one example of this on-the-campus swimming pool in a two-year college—having just about the best team in the state, and perhaps the nation.

In 1960 the college swimmers had six All-Americans; if they had their own pool, say between the two gymnasiums, how far could they go then?

Letters To The Editor

RAM'S HORN

● Thanks For $237

Editor, The Guardsman:

Please convey to all the students at City College of San Francisco the warm thanks of the Board of Directors of the San Francisco Branch of the American Cancer Society. Your rally on April 21 raised $237 for our campaign. The rally was conceived by students, organized by students, and carried out by students and is a clear example of the rising role of responsibility and leadership students are expressing in American colleges today.

We are pleased and appreciative of the money raised and can assure you it will be put to good use in our work. We are equally pleased, however, to have this important voluntary expression of support in the fight against this disease that touches everyone in the world.

O. Cort Majors
President, S.F. Branch

● Coverage Still Good

Editor, The Guardsman:

On behalf of the lecture series, I would like to extend my thanks to Guiseppe Greco and the Editorial Board of The Guardsman for the excellent coverage that the Student-Faculty Lecture Series has received this semester.

It's a pleasure to see featured articles (even pictures) on cultural events rather than the two paragraph column on the second or third page that have emerged in previous semesters.

Jerry Dresner

(Editor's Note: The Guardsman appreciates Mr. Dresner's letter; however, he is a bit inaccurate. In Student-Faculty lecture coverage last semester, coverage included both advance information of the speech and coverage of the speech itself. The stories reporting the lectures averaged nine and one-half inches.)

● Elementary Problem

Editor, The Guardsman:

Even assuming that the wild and lawless students of City College require the additional supervision of 20 more policemen, it still does not follow that these policemen must have uniforms at Associated Student expense. A uniform does serve to distinguish policemen from nonpolicemen; but a white band such as grade school traffic patrol boys and beauty contestants wear would do so much more cheaply . . .

Too Old To Learn

By B.T.

THE LEARNING PLATEAU, it is taught, is between the ages of 19 and 22. After that, there is a gradual decline in learning processes, especially for some older students.

More than one student, pushing 40, has said of that "learning plateau" business: "So now they tell me, after I've struggled blood and frustration for so many semesters!"

Out goes the economics book, and the revelation comes in a course called Psychology 1A.

Now, Psych 1A is not an everyday psychology course, the kind that mommies apply to little Mark's bottom for his lax piano practice habits.

Or when ten good reasons must be invented for son Vance's haircut, even though he protests loudly with "but Mom, it's boss!"

It doesn't take the older student long to reason why some instructors and counselors refuse to return to college and earn higher degrees, yet several view the older student with scorn, and show it.

Let them bask in their sheepskins, for the learning plateau has long since gone, and the struggling few really appreciate and view their educators with awe, sometimes.

Some instructors knowingly avoid more college. They KNEW about that dreaded learning plateau. The entering older freshman didn't.

'S why hard, dis kine.

THE BIG DADDY OF ALL ceramics-jewelry-sculpture shows will be presented May 17, 18 and 19 in Arts 121, 126 and 127, from 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., and during the evenings from 7 to 9 p.m., announced E. Roy Walker, head of the ceramics department.

Walker will thrill art lovers who know of his talent in pottery, for he will demonstrate on the wheel during lunch hour.

It takes great skill and patience to fashion a blob of wet clay into a work of art, and Walker knows just how. He throws with amazing speed and dexterity, for it all isn't as easy as it looks.

Approximately one ton of clay was used for this show. See for yourself.

Tribute To A Legend

By Albert Hilliard Hughes

NAZIMOVA.

One of the great names of the stage and motion pictures, yet, today, she is virtually forgotten. Once a legend in her own lifetime, she lived to destroy it, unintentionally.

Born in 1875 in the Crimea, Alla Nazimova became an actress at an early age, becoming by the turn of the century one of the leading International favorites, here and abroad. Her first appearance in the U.S. was in 1906 in New York, where she appeared with great success in Ibsen's A Doll's House, The Master Builder, and in a now forgotten drama, War Brides.

This latter play was brought to the screen in 1916, with Nazimova making her motion picture debut in the role she had played on Broadway. She became a popular success with movie audiences everywhere.

Her unusual and exotic acting style was exciting and different to what the audiences had been receiving. By 1919 she had become Metro Pictures biggest boxoffice attraction.

With this success she began to demand more artistic stories. In 1921 she appeared in a modernized production of Camille, with Valentino as her leading man; the following year she made one of the few film versions of A Doll's House.

In 1923 she went all out for art, financing and producing, as well as starring in, her own production of Oscar Wilde's celebrated play, Salome. Although an artistic and critical success, it bombed at the boxoffice everywhere it played. She lost her entire personal fortune.

After a few more films, she dropped out of films in 1925, and in a few short years had gained a short of legendary aura. She attempted a come-back in 1940, but only got character roles.

Today, this once great actress is forgotten by the many and remembered by the few. But to anyone who has heard that magnificent voice, and seen that noble face, she can never be truly forgotten.

Placement Tests Guide Student Toward A Suitable Vocation

By Viggo Petersen

"A student today is going to have to decide in college what he is going to do for the next 40 or 50 years of his life," says Joe Amori, head of the student placement office.

He made this statement in rcference to the career planning program offered by City College to its students, which is a program for testing and advising students as to their specific vocational interests.

In discussing the problem of selecting a major, Amori said that many students enter City College with the desire to complete two years of education here, and then go on to a university.

"What happens to a great many of these students," he said, "is they get bogged down in some of the courses they take which are required by most state or private universities for entrance.

"The student may endeavor to study something he is neither interested in nor has the motivation to study. The result is the student finds himself needlessly dropping out of college."

Amori stressed that definitely, education is the cornerstone for enjoying a basically successful career. However, he pointed out that what many students fail to do is face up to the fact that they may not have the motivation or the interest to complete the requirements of higher education.

What a student should do, he believes, is to choose the career field he wants, through testing procedures, work out a suitable two-year program, and upon graduation, he will find himself qualified to enter his chosen career.

Amori pointed out that City College has 35 career skill programs to offer, and the placement office offers assistance in choosing any one of these programs.

He said that when a student requests guidance in choosing a career, he is tested as to his mental, physical and emotional makeup, so as to determine what type of work would best suit his particular personality. He is then advised and counseled and a suitable course of study is arranged.

While emphasizing the importance of career planning programs, Amori voiced concern over what he feels is a shortage of such programs in colleges today. He said the program has salvaged many would-be drop-outs or failures by offering them something which they can grasp and are interested in. Many students have elected to change their majors as a result of the tests.

Pre-Tech Prepares High School Students For 2-Year Colleges

By Susan Volk

Pre-tech, the new education program now part of the curriculum in 15 Bay Area high schools, has been designed to prepare students for the two-year college level in the engineering technology field.

James F. Schon, engineering instructor here who is acting as coordinator with the high schools in this project, explained that "since only approximately 15 per cent of high school students go on to complete a baccalaureate in college, there is a great need for a program aimed at preparing the other 85 per cent for the future."

The Rosenberg Foundation, concerned with this problem, made Cogswell Polytechnic College of San Francisco the administrator of a grant for the purpose of introducing a high school curriculum which would provide a preparatory background in engineering technology for these students.

The grant was aimed at students falling behind in science.

In 1961 Cogswell set up a workshop. There, teachers, counselors and administrators from two Richmond high schools met with Bay Area leaders in technology education, including Schon, to develop concepts for such a program. Ideas as to how student interest could be stimulated, and how students could best be prepared for college and future employment were shared.

When the teachers returned to school that fall they improvised a temporary curriculum. They attended another workshop the following summer, and by the fall of 1962, a complete pretechnology engineering program was in operation at the two high schools.

The principal areas of study are English, mathematics, science laboratory and technology laboratory. Schon was quick to praise the teachers.

"These teachers must be commended," he said; "considerable more effort is required than in the usual classroom, as this is a team effort project. An English teacher, for example, must understand scientific, technological and mathematical terms in order to help students correlate the subjects."

Guardsman Staff Columnist Sells James Article

By Melvin Beechman

Albert Hilliard Hughes, Guardsman columnist, recently sold his article, Outlaw With A Halo, to Montana, the Magazine of Western History, which is published by the Montana Historical Society.

Hughes' article is a comparative study of the historical life and the motion picture lives of Jesse James.

"The idea for the article came to me nearly 20 years ago," Hughes said, "but it took the recent television show, The Legend Of Jesse James, to reinspire me to expose the fraud which the movies have perpetrated in all the films about Jesse, making him something of a hero, when in actuality he was nothing more than just a plain crook, hence the title."

This is not Hughes' first accepted writing. A month ago he had two other articles, Dostoievsky On Film, and Hamlet And The Cinema, accepted for publication this Fall by Films In Review magazine.

Incidentally, Hughes says that the Dostoievsky piece was actually written as his term paper in English 1A. It was graded A.

When asked how long he has been writing, he stated he began when he was 14, in junior high school. He received his first recognition in 1958, when his one-act verse drama, The Lady With The Sombre Eyes, won second prize in a play contest sponsored by The Theatre Guild Of Webster Groves, in St. Louis, Mo.

That same year his article, Is The U.S. Movie Public Ready To Return To The Theatres?, was published by Box Office magazine.

It is with the sale of Outlaw With A Halo that Hughes receives his first monetary reward for his writing, and he hopes, "not the last."

Not content to rest on his minor successes, Hughes is busily at work on several projects, including, he says, "a complete rewrite of a rather bad western novel written about ten years ago."

This is his last semester at City College. He plans to enter State College in the Fall, where he hopes to major in English and journalism and minor in drama.

One Starry Night Is Theme Of Soph Ball For May 20

One Starry Night will be presented by the Sophomore Class in the form of a Spring Ball between 9 p.m. and midnight Friday, May 20, at the Fairmont Hotel's Terrace Room, according to a sophomore ball committee spokesman.

The orchestra of Maury Wolohan will provide dance music for the semi-formal affair, which is to be highlighted by the coronation of this year's Sophomore King and Queen.

As in the past, the royal couple will be selected not from a long line of blue-blooded ancestry but, rather, from a tall stack of copper pennies. The crowns will be awarded to the couple for whom the most money is collected.

Members of sponsoring organizations will have until 10 p.m. on the evening of the ball to amass small fortunes for their candidates. Proceeds from this contest, which last year totaled over $700, will be added to the sophomore scholarship fund.

At the ceremony itself, last year's winners, Mike and Nancy (Demetrak) Sesnik, will present the lucky couple with the perpetual King and Queen trophies.

Also going to the royalty, as well as to the other candidates, will be gifts, such as tickets to the Fantastiks and the International Repertory Theatre, dinner at Ondines Restaurant, gift certificates from Bruce Bary's and many, many more.

Candidates for this year's honors are Newman Club's Wayne Becnel and Carmel Finigan, Alpha Phi Omega's Bob Kerr and Nancy Veach and Percy Jones and Marshalee Taylor, sponsored by the Associated Men Students and the Campus Police.

Other aspiring crown-seekers include Al Maher and Marti Romero, sponsored by the Associated Women Students, Beta Tau's and Theta Tau's Russ Cavalini and Jan Goodrick and Gary Sutton and Judy Stewart, sponsored by Phi Beta Delta and Phi Beta Rho.

Tickets for the Sophomore Ball are available at the Silver Pole or may be purchased at the door. Admission is free to Associated Student cardholders, while tickets for noncardholders will sell for $3 per couple. It is to be noted that only one member of a couple need be a member of the Associated Students to qualify for free admission.

Computers May End Reg Lines

A pilot study of computerized registration which will eliminate the three-day registration procedure, is now underway here, according to Lloyd D. Luckmann, coordinator of instruction.

A full scale study involving the entire student body is scheduled for Fall 1966, and Luckmann predicted that regular operation of the system would be in effect by Fall 1967.

The study, to include 1000 students, both new and returning, with as great a variety of situations possible, will program students for the Fall semester 1966.

When students fill out their proposed programs with their counselors they will fill out an additional form listing classes wanted, instructor preferences and time availability.

Luckmann mentioned that universities where such a program is now in effect report 97 per cent student satisfaction when no instructor preference was listed.

These universities include Purdue, Rhode Island, Miami and Washington.

Candidates To Be Presented At Ram Rally Tomorrow

By John Janigian

Tomorrow's Election Rally, highlighted by the introduction of candidates, will be held during College Hour at the Ram, Marty Watten, election commissioner, announced today.

Entertainment will be provided by The Friendly Stranger, a popular group that has recently performed at dances around the Bay Area.

The candidates for Associated Students offices will then be introduced, with the council aspirants being first. The two candidates for AS President, Bruce Fisher and Ernie Woodcock, will conclude the introductions with three-minute campaign speeches, Watten said.

Upon the completion of speeches, Watten will make an announcement about the proposed new college constitution which will be on the ballots next week.

For it to be ratified, a two-thirds vote is needed by those who vote. Watten will also promote the Council or Organization's Spring Festival which will be held Friday evening in Smith Hall.

There are currently two uncontested offices. They are Associated Men Student President, candidate Jerd Lapham, and Associated Women Student President, candidate Diane Lattimer. For them to win, they must receive one vote over 50 per cent of the votes, Watten stressed.

Candidates for AS elections must be current members of the Associated Students and may seek the backing of a campus organization if they so decide. The backing of an organization isn't necessary but it does make campaigning an easier task, Watten said.

Eligibility of candidates depents on a final check of qualifications, which is still pending, Watten said.

Campaigning officially started Monday and will go through the election. "The rally will probably be the only time at which voters will see all the candidates," James Wyatt, student activities adviser, declared.

Polls will be open next Wednesday and Thursday from 9 a.m. to 2 p.m. in Smith Hall, outside the library, at the Silver Pole, in the gymnasiums and Arts Hall.

"It is important that all candidates abide by the election rules," Watten said. Any posters or publicity stunts not approved by him may lead to disqualification.

Watten also announced that since no political parties on campus have signed up, there are, in fact, no parties.

Each One Teach One Program To Start Here

By Bill Fritz

Each One Teach One is the fundamental theme behind the San Francisco State College Tutorial Program in which college students provide free tutoring services to underprivileged, minority group youngsters with academic problems.

Student Councilman Fred Stewart reported recently that he has received an endorsement from Lloyd D. Luckmann, coordinator of instruction, and Dean Ralph Hillsman to establish an extension of State's plan here. (This plan is not at all connected with the program which, last semester, grew out of the San Francisco School District's Compensatory Education Program.)

The Each One Teach One program, organized two years ago and run entirely by students, has almost 350 tutors working in established centers in churches, Boys' Clubs and schools in the Fillmore, Hunter's Point and Mission districts.

The program, which involves about four hours a week of the tutor's time plus an occasional Saturday or Sunday excursion away from the center, is based on the idea that one college student working consistently with one child, for an extended length of time, can result in significant, positive changes in that child's self-image, his attitudes toward school and learning, and in his relationships with other people.

The concluding section of State's tutor's manual summarizes what can be gained by both the child and the tutor from this program:

"After tutoring a while, you'll realize that the 'each one teach one' idea is really a two-way arrangement. Your student gains in confidence and discovers certain capacities and potentials he'd never suspected in himself. Well, so will you. Something's bound to happen to your confidence. And your capacities for imagination and frustration tolerance will be tested to their limits . . . Beyond this, your personal exposure to some of the society's basic problems may lead you to question the direction and meaning of your own education."

Further information concerning this program may be obtained, starting Monday, at an information table set up near the flag pole.

Veto By Soletti Kills Proposed Council Change

By Jeff Kraus

Associated Student President Jim Soletti used his presidential power to veto a proposed amendment to the new AS constitution made by Student Council last week.

Soletti informed council that he would use his power to veto the amendment concerning the addition of the Frosh and Soph Class Presidents to the voting membership of council. This amendment had already been defeated at the meeting the week before.

Council spent most of the May 2 session rediscussing the new constitution, which had already been approved the week before.

A motion to reconsider the constitution by Councilman Joe Parnell was passed and he brought up the amendment to add the two officers to council.

VETO HOLDS

Council members agreed with Parnell and passed the amendment. But Soletti then announced that he intended to veto the bill at the May 4 meeting.

Soletti presented his veto at the May 4 meeting, and council needed a two-thirds vote to override the veto. The vote fell short, being 6-8-1 against.

Councilwoman Judy Stewart had reopened the grade point amendment again, wishing to have the constitution changed from 2.0 to 2.2 for candidate eligibility.

Soletti again said that he would veto it if it were passed, and council seemed to heed the warning, defeating the amendment by a 6-7-0 vote. Soletti cast the deciding vote to break a 6-6 tie.

THIRD TIME A CHARM

Councilman Ron Appel then moved to adopt the constitution for the third time. For the last time council voted and passed the final draft by a 11-1-0 vote.

Also at the May 4 meeting Councilman Parnell introduced a resolution stating that the Associated Students adopt a child through Foster Parents Plan. This called for a supplementary request for $180 to pay for the adoption fee.

Janet Hinterman, finance chairman, reported that the supplementary fund was running low, and other budgeted organizations would have to receive cuts in their budgets if this money were to be allocated. It was pointed out that the request would be for next semester, so that it would be on the budget for that semester. Council felt that this was a good idea to promote the college's image, and passed the resolution, 13-1-1.

Parnell made it clear that it would be up to the discretion of future councils whether this program would be continued.

CANDIDATES INTRODUCED

Election Commissioner Marty Watten reported that the Elections Assembly will be held tomorrow during College Hour. The candidates for AS President will be introduced and will make a short speech. The other candidates will also be introduced.

Finance Chairman Hinterman also reported that the requested budgets totaled about $51,000, and there would have to be a little cutting of some of the budgets.

Asian Book Drive Begins May 19

"No comic books," says Charles Pickens, president of Alpha Sigma Delta, in announcing the annual Asian Book Drive, to be held from May 19 to May 27.

Every Spring semester Alpha Sigma Delta collects books which are sent overseas to the Asian Book Foundation, who distributes them to those who can't afford to buy them. The books are used to help educate both young and old.

Books may be left in the receptacle near the Silver Pole in Science Hall.

Pickens further stated that there will be a rally on May 19 to "kick the drive off." Then, on May 27, "there will be a dance, in which admittance will be five books or one dollar. We prefer the books. However, any money taken in will also be turned over to the foundation," Pickens said.

"The books are needed," Pickens stated, and he urged everyone who has any old textbooks, old, but first-rate novels, either to deposit them in the specified area in Science Hall or to come to the dance and bring all they can.

Rams In Close Baseball Race; Coach Optimistic

With the net result of a grueling 21 game Golden Gate Conference baseball season probably hinging on tomorrow's battle between City College and College of San Mateo at Balboa Park, Coach Ernie Domecus expresses optimism for a 1966 championship.

"The Bulldogs will have to try to come get us now," explained the Ram's mentor after San Francisco held on to its slim one-game lead last week by sweeping three games.

The Rams started the week by tromping on league doormat, Contra Costa, 9-7, on the loser's field.

San Francisco pounced on the Comet's starting and losing pitcher, Bill Harrison, for eight runs in the third inning before the righthander settled down to blank the Rams for the remaining six innings.

The Comets crept back from a third inning, 9-2, deficit with two runs in the fourth inning and three tallies in the sixth frame. But righthanders Greg Sinclair and Bill Kirkpatrick stopped them for the last three innings — Sinclair picked up his sixth win of the season against two losses.

Shortstop Tom Callan and first baseman Frank Grimaud led San Francisco's charges by each going three for five and scoring one run.

Two days later, Thursday, Domecus champ hopefuls traveled to Chabot College to post an 11-5 win.

Mound star Kirkpatrick turned in a beautiful four-hit performance to pick up his eighth victory against a single loss.

Long-ball hitting Callan again supplied the power by slapping a homer and two singles in three trips to the plate.

Staying home for the first time all week, and apparently liking it, the Franciscans snowed Merritt College, 10-0, Saturday.

For the first time this season Domecus started his number three hurler, Hugh Miller, and discovered a diamond in the rough.

The little righthanded fireballer twirled a magnificent three hitter, striking out seven and walking two.

And while the Rams were walking away with their three contests, San Mateo picked up three too. But not so handily. The Bulldogs picked up their 13th and 14th straight by the skin of their teeth. In each case the winning run was tallied when with two down the next batter struck out but got first on an error, and then scored. — G.F.C.

Netters Tabbed Third At Chabot

City College's tennis team will take an important step in its drive to take the California state championship when it ventures to Chabot College this Friday and Saturday for the North Sectionals of the state tournament.

Golden Gate Conference champion Foothill is favored to come out on top of the sectional meeting. College of San Mateo is the second-seeded team in the tournament while San Francisco and Chabot are a toss-up for the third spot.

The Rams' top netters, Greg Shepard and George Pontikoff, have both been seeded in the singles division and they have also been seeded as a team in the doubles competition.

It should be noted that either Chabot or City College is capable of pulling off an upset, as is San Mateo. San Francisco Coach Roy Diederichsen recently stated, "If everyone on our club plays his best game I think we can take it."

Shepard and Pontikoff are both good bets to make it through the weekend as Pontikoff was a State semifinalist last year while Shepard, a freshman, has not lost a conference match all year.

A Sweep—A Record

SWEEP—Bob Prince and Adam Banks come in 1-2 in City College's sweep of the 100-yard dash against College of San Mateo. Completing the total sprint victory was Ralph Barsi who finished a step ahead of the San Mateo runner on the left.
RECORD BREAKER—Versatile Dwight Tucker is shown here in the long jump. Tucker is also the Rams' top high jumper with a best of 6-10½ and a triple jump of 51-10½. Both marks are City College and Golden Gate Conference records. —Guardsman photo by Man Lam Wong

Cagers May Lose League Games Through Illegality

The Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural basketball league standings are pending, since two teams may forfeit all their games because of using a player illegally.

The two teams that may have to forfeit their games are the Celtics of the Independent-Fraternity league and the Negro Student Association of the Club league.

Percy Jones, AMS president, explained that one man is playing for both teams. "I sent both squads a letter of warning and they know the rules. One person is hurting both teams since they will lose all their games," Jones commented.

In Tuesday night's action the co-leaders of the Club league advanced into the final game of the season as they both won easily. Foley's Flashes defeated the Filipino-Americans, 63-55. Also the Newman Club Vikings advanced as they defeated the Frosh Class, 56-38.

In the other games, in the Independent-Fraternity league the leading Irish clinched the title as they defeated the Point Shavers by forfeit. Also in a controversial game the Celtics defeated Alpha Gamma Sigma by forfeit, but the decision may be reversed.

In Wednesday night's action, Foley's Flashes took over first place in the Club league as the NSA upset the Newman Club, 52-36. However, the NSA may have to give up the victory because of an infraction.

In another game, the Filipino-American defeated The Guardsman, 53-41.

In the remaining Wednesday games, Club leader Foley's Flashes defeated the Frosh Class, 96-52, and the Soul Plus defeated Alpha Phi Epsilon, 81-64.

Golfers Wind Up Dual Match Season With Three Losses

Grover Klemmer's golfers, coming off a strong finish in dual match competition, are, at press time, prepping for the Golden Gate Conference tournament at San Jose. The amiable Ram mentor's charges have lost only three matches in conference play and have been playing as consistently as any City College team in many years.

The Ram linksmen whipped Merritt twice, 25-5 and 26½-8½, then turned back Foothill, 28-7 and 29-6, and in the first meeting with Chabot, on the Gladiators' home course, narrowly came out on top, 20-15.

Tom O'Kane was twice medalist in the five matches. He was low man with 72s against Chabot and Foothill while Mike Butler was low against Merritt and in the second Foothill with a 70 and 72, respectively. Gary Mialocq was medalist in the first Merritt contest with a 74.

Of the conference tourney, Klemmer said, "I don't think San Mateo (first place in the league) can win it; on a neutral course I think we can beat them eight out of 10 times. We finished way ahead of them at Fresno and so did Diablo Valley.

"I would rate San Francisco and Diablo Valley as the strong teams, but of course San Mateo could win it but so could a lot of other clubs."

Two Ram Athletes To Be Named To Hall Of Fame List

The day is fast approaching when two more of City College's former great athletes will be elected to the college's athletic Hall of Fame.

Each year, two past greats, who must have been out of the college for at least two years, are selected from a list of eight candidates provided by The Guardsman sports staff.

The list of candidates is then submitted to a four-man committee which selects the two who are to receive the honor. The committee is comprised of Dean Ralph Dillaman, Athletic Director Jack Gaddy, Tom Wilson, health department, and Counselor Bill Fischer.

The former stars selected by The Guardsman this year include basketballers Everett "Goose" Adams, Art Adams (no relation) and Jerry Chandler. Tennis great Bob Siska and Olympic soccer player Gary De Long have also been selected.

Three baseball players are up for the Hall this year. They are Rich Nold, now in the Washington Senators farm system, Walt Williams, who is in the St. Louis Cardinals organization, and Bob Farber.

Among those who have already been inducted into the Hall are former All-Pro halfback Ollie Matson, NFL official and Matson's teammate at City College and USF, Burl Toler, Dean Hillsman, President Louis G. Conlan, the college's first basketball coach and Dallas Cowboy rookie Tom Piggee.

Another distinglished athlete is Gary Lewis of the San Francisco 49ers. A former City College and prep All-American, Lewis starred at Arizona State before turning pro.

Four Ram Swimmers Qualify At Sequoias For State Competition

Four City College swimmers qualified to compete in the State finals, as a result of placing in the Northern California finals, held at College of the Sequoias, April 29 and 30.

The four swimmers are Bill Pasquinelli, Bob Martin, Bruno Van Rign and John O'Connor. The quartet placed in the medley relay, and will go to Foothill for the finals.

Martin placed in the 400 individual medley and came back to finish third in the 100 individual medley. Pasquinelli also was a finalist as he placed in the 200 backstroke and finished third in the 100 backstroke.

Roy Burkhead, coach of the team, was pleased with the team's performance. "I only brought the four men down for the meet and they all did exceptionally well," Burkhead said. Burkhead is optimistic about the State finals, however, "it will be an uphill climb all the way, with only four men," he commented.

To place in the All-Northern meet one had to be among the top four in his event. In the state meet it will be the top four from Northern California and the top four from Southern California. Eight will compete in each event but the semifinals will eliminate four.

As a team the Rams will not have a chance to take any place, but the individual swimmers will try to place in the meet.

Of the Northern California teams, Foothill will have the best chance to win the crown.

Highly Touted Ram Track Squad Takes Disappointing Third In Conference Finals

By G. Frank Cooney

SAN MATEO—Undefeated Golden Gate Conference dual-meet champs and pre-season conference relays winner, City College succumbed to numerous record-breaking efforts and was soundly upset by finishing third behind Foothill at 113 and Contra Costa at 95½ in the Conference Track and Field Finals here Saturday.

Led by 24-year-old Mt. San Antonio decathlon champion and Olympic star (1964) Russ Hodge, the Owls piled up an early lead by placing several men high in the shot put, discus and long jump.

Dwight Tucker, a national two-year college leader in both the triple and high jumps, turned in below par performances but came up with his usual first places in both events.

Tucker's 6-7 high jump bettered the Conference Meet record of 6-4½, but was not near his best. He has gone over the top higher than 6-9 several times this year and has a best of 6-10½.

Finishing second in the high jump was Larry LaPray who leaped his life's best of 6-6.

In the triple jump Tucker flew 46-5¼. This was his first meet since he three stepped an amazing 51-1½ at the Fresno Relays.

Taking another San Francisco first place was the Rams' undefeated relay team of Adam Banks, Bob Prince, O. J. Simpson and Lee Benton, which ran the 440 in a meet record time of 41.1.

Benton also anchored the mile relay squad and finished strong, a hair behind San Jose's Lee Evans in an identical timing of 3:17.7 to shave more than a second off the meet record.

Evans was the most outstanding single performer in running events. He set two national two-year college records. The little Jaguar's impressive double win was in the 220 (21.1 around one curve) and the 440 (46.2 around two curves).

O. J. Simpson, All-American JC football star who turned in a 9.5 100 yard dash this season, ran surprisingly well considering he wears a cast on his left hand.

In sprint events the weight of a light cast can throw the sprinter off balance and ruin his time. But Simpson faired the ordeal by taking a second in the 100 with a 9.8 and a third in the 220 with his life's best of 21.5.

The 220 was an outstanding event in that the poorest showing in that sprint, which was around one curve, was a respectable 21.6.

In the 220 the Rams also placed Bob Prince (21.5), Chris Davis (21.5) and Adam Banks (21.6). In the very tight century sprint City placed with Prince (9.9), and Banks (10.0).

Track Team To Enter West Coast Relays In Fresno

With an undefeated dual meet season under their belts, the City College track team will have some of their top men in action at the 40th annual West Coast Relays, May 13 and 14, at Fresno State College.

In the relays, Coach Lou Vasquez will enter runners in the 440 and 880-yard relays. Also competing will be jumping star Dwight Tucker, who will be entered in the high jump and triple jump.

A big question mark will be ace sprinter O. J. Simpson. Simpson, who recently broke his thumb, may be able to run, but this is up to his physician. If he is not running, the two relays will be in trouble, since the Rams will be facing very stiff competition.

Tucker, however, should be impressive since he has the nation's top high jump and triple jump marks of 6-10½ and a very impressive 51-1½.

Competing in the relays will be Bob Prince, Lee Benton, Chris Davis, Adam Banks, Sonny Johnson and possibly Simpson. Benton, Prince and Davis will be running in both relays.

On May 17 the trials of the Northern Cal meet begin, and the Nor Cal finals are May 21. The first four men in each event will get to compete in the California Junior College Championships.

The men considered strongest for the state meet will be repeaters Tucker, hurdler Johnson, and the mile relay team. Also a strong contender should be 440 man Benton, who is also a member of the mile relay squad.

RA Bowlers Win Sportsday Honors

City College's bowling team of the Recreation Association returned home from Sportsday at Merritt College April 23 with three first place honors.

The coeducational bowling team was named "highest team" with 1961 pins. Members of the team include Sharon Harris, Dave Monga and Arlene Hierro.

Miss Hierro won women's high series for the bowling team and Miss Harris won the women's high game.

The tennis team received two honors, a first place for the coeducation team and third place women's singles, won by Janet Chang.

Women's second place in badminton was won by Gesha Kurrell and women's doubles by Phyllis Hanway and Miss Kurrell.

The coeducational volleyball team came in third place.

Diablo Valley College, which also attended the sportsday, won a silver beer mug for having the most spirit.

Other two-year colleges which attended were Monterey Peninsula and Foothill.

Tracksters Place Second In Strong North Cal Relays

With double wins by jumper Dwight Tucker and the relay team of Banks-Benton-Davis and Prince leading the way, City College of San Francisco's Golden Gate Conference track and field champions won second place behind favored Fresno City College in the Northern California Junior College Relays held at Fresno's Ratcliffe Stadium April 30.

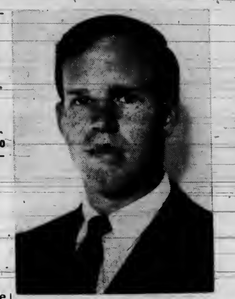
Fresno's strength in the distance and field events provided them with the vital points necessary for victory, as they outscored the Rams 64-44.

Tucker had his best day of the year in the triple jump event as he managed a 51-1½ effort to set a new meet record. The leap is the third best in junior college competition history and betters all other marks this year by more than a foot.

Tucker also took the high jump with a 6-9 leap.

Banks-Benton-Davis and Prince were involved in two highly contested races in the 440 and 880 relays, winning both by a total margin of three-tenth of a second. In the 440, the "team" beat out meet winner Fresno by two-tenths of a second with a 41.5 timing, their best run of the year at that time.

They just escaped the jaws of defeat in the 880 relays, scraping past threatening Sacramento City College by a tenth of a second in 1:26.8



City College finally lost a close one —the mile relay—to San Jose City College, who was clocked in 3:17.8. American River took the sprint medley easily with a three-second advantage over second-place Merritt and a 4.2-second edge over San Francisco.

Fisher Lone Presidential Candidate

Official Weekly Publication of The Associated Students of City College of San Francisco

The Guardsman — Election Edition

VOLUME 62 — SAN FRANCISCO, CALIFORNIA — WEDNESDAY, MAY 18, 1966 — NUMBER 10

I SEEK THE Associated Student Presidency because I want a campus that vigorously pursues its academic and social objectives. Student government long has been inadequate to the needs of the campus.

WHEN ELECTED, I will explore the possibilities of beautifying the barren wind-swept hill of this campus. I will also strengthen the Student-Faculty Relations Committee for the purpose of bringing students and faculty into a more homogenous arrangement.

I WILL EXPLORE the possibilities of creating a student union on campus, for even though we are viewed as a "street-car college" the students deserve and should have a collegiate atmosphere.

WHEN ELECTED, I will launch a program that will bring student government to the students. The winds of change have again arrived on campus. Let us not again allow them to pass unused.

Happiness Is A Hershey Bar & Bunny Mag

By Peter Dorn

SCENE: A green beret and a Vietnamese soldier (Nationalist) are sitting in a foxhole and smoking American filter cigarettes.

"You are the 'Chocolate Soldier' of this campaign," said the Nationalist to his American companion.

"Whatdayamean?"

"Well, you carry boxes of cookies in your field pack instead of hand grenades, and chocolate bars in your cartridge belt."

"Well, all those mothers back home keep sendin' cookies, and the orderly room is piled high with macaroons, so the sarge makes us take a batch every time we go out. And I like Hershey bars, and I wish they'd send us some Playboy and Hot Rod magazines so I could show you what I'm fighting for."

"You mean you're not here to protect me and my people from communist aggression, you mean there's another reason," said the Nationalist slyly.

"The main reason can be traced back to my draft board; actually, I don't give a hang about what happens to you and yours."

"I can understand what you mean, from what I've seen and heard of your land, I'd like to get a visa and get the hell out of this miserable . . . what's that out there?"

"Looks like someone movin' around out there all right."

"Why don't you shoot a burst into that area with that magnificent automatic rifle of yours that was made where your brother-in-law lives?"

"Are you kidding? Intelligence said that we would encounter no hostile forces this far east. Now if I go back to the base with 15 rounds missing, do you realize how many forms I would have to fill out and what a harassment I'd get from the management?"

"Yes, your military does strange things from time to time; I keep noticing that more and more, for instance, why do they give you that green hat while I get to wear this steel helmet?"

"Hmmmm. I never thought of it like that."

Council Fetes Registrar

Mary Jane Learnard, retiring registrar, will be the special guest at the Student Council banquet on June 1, in Statler wing.

"Recognition will be given to Miss Learnard for service to the college," said James Wyatt, activities adviser.

Louis Conlan, president of the college, will speak, giving a summary of the accomplishments of the semester.

Sophs' One Starry Night Friday At Fairmont Hotel

The Sophomore Class will present its Spring Ball, One Starry Night, starting at 9 p.m. on Friday at the Fairmont Hotel's Terrace Room, according to a sophomore ball committee spokesman.

The ball will feature the coronation of this year's Sophomore King and Queen. This title will be awarded to the couple for whom the most money is collected. The money will be added to the sophomore scholarship fund.

The candidates for the title are Wayne Becnel and Carmel Finigan sponsored by the Newman Club, Al Haher and Marti Romero sponsored by the Associated Women Students, Alpha Phi Omega's Bob Kerr and Nancy Veach, Beta Tau's and Theta Tau's Russ Cavalini and Jan Goodrick, Gary Sutton and Judi Stewart sponsored by Phi Beta Delta and Phi Beta Rho, Percy Jones and Marshalen Taylor sponsored by the Associated Men Students and the Campus Police.

Also, trophies will be presented to the couple by last year's winners Mike and Nancy (Demetrak) Selsnik.

Tickets, free to Associated Student card-holders and $3 per couple for others, are available at the Silver Pole.

Stage Band Holds Jazz Concert Here

The City College Stage Band will be the featured performers at tonight's jazz concert, band director Arthur Samuels said today.

Samuels said the band's music will be patterned after that of Count Basie and Woody Herman with arrangements by such notables as Bill Holman, Frank Foster, Ernie Wilkins and others.

The Stage Band has just returned from an appearance at the Monterey Peninsula College Jazz Festival and was highly praised by Jimmy Lyons, emcee of the show and festival director.

Sponsored by the Associated Students, the concert will climax the semester for the band.

Samuels expressed his hope for success in saying, "We think it will be an excellent concert and hope to get a large crowd to come out and see what we've been doing."

Jewelry Demonstration Continues In Arts Hall

The intricate methods of making costume jewelry will be demonstrated by Jerry Arena, jewelry instructor, in A-121 through tomorrow. Arena announced that a display of some very beautiful pieces of work will be available.

From 10 a.m. to 3 p.m., and during the evenings from 7 to 9 p.m., interested viewers may browse.

Choral Concert Here Tomorrow

The choirs of the college's music department will present a choral concert during College Hour tomorrow in the campus theater, announced William Grothkopp, instructor of music.

The A Cappella Choir, which recently sang at the Junior College Music Festival in Santa Rosa, will perform Bach's Cantata 140 and selections from Choral Fantasia.

The Chamber Choir will sing the second set of Liebeslieder Waltzes by Brahms. The Men's Glee will present selections by Bach, and Riders In The Sky. These choirs are under the direction of Grothkopp.

Pergolesi's Stabat Mater, a sacred piece for soprano and alto, will be sung by the Women's Glee under the direction of Richard Fenner.

The program will be repeated starting at 8 p.m. next Wednesday. Milhaud's Jewish Sacred Service will be performed in addition to the previously mentioned program. Composer Darius Milhaud teaches alternately at Mills College and in Paris.

Edgar Jones, well known Bay Area baritone, will be soloist in the performance of Milhaud's composition.

Woodcock Withdraws; Elections Begin Today

By John Janigian

Current Sophomore Class President Bruce Fisher will be the only candidate for Associated Student President in the AS elections which will be held today and tomorrow. Fisher became the sole seeker of the office when his only opponent, Ernie Woodcock, withdrew.

Woodcock issued the following statement at the time of his withdrawal:

"It is with much regret at this time that I withdraw my candidacy for the office of Associated Student President. I wished very much to run, and if elected, take this college's student government one step forward.

"I have, however, been ordered to report to my induction center and cannot, therefore, in clear conscience run for an office from which I might have to resign."

Wayne Wilson, a candidate for Freshman Class President, also withdrew from the race.

This now leaves four posts unopposed. They are AS President, Associated Men Student President, Associated Women Student President and Freshman Class President.

For these candidates to win their posts they must win a majority of the total ballots cast, according to Jim Wyatt, student government adviser.

If an unopposed candidates fails to win a majority of the vote, a special election will be called at the start of next semester, Wyatt said.

Also on today's ballot is a proposed new constitution. It is the first time since 1945 that the college's entire constitution has been revised. For it to be ratified it must receive two-thirds of the vote.

Copies of the constitution will be at each precinct, as well as in Statler wing, the Deans' offices, and in the AS office.

"Last semester 20 per cent of the total student enrollment voted, and the semester before that 26 per cent of the students voted," Wyatt asserted. "This sounds like a small number of students voting, but compared with other colleges it is considered a good turnout," he added.

Marty Watten, election commissioner, stated that with the constitution on the ballot the number of sudents voting should increase appreciably.

Except for Woodcock and Wilson, all previously listed candidates will be on today's ballot, Watten said.

Precincts are located in Smith Hall, outside the library, at the Silver Pole, in the men's and women's gymnasium and in Arts Hall, with polls open from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. All students are eligible to vote.

(For other candidates and their statements, see page 3.)

Commencement Affair May 26

City College's annual Commencement Week Assembly will be held at 10 a.m. Thursday, May 26 in the theater, Dean Mary Golding said today.

All sophomores who have met requirements for graduation are receiving personal invitations to the event which will see the awards and scholarships presented to deserving students. They will also be excused from their 10 and 11 o'clock classes that day.

Mrs. Michael Diane San Felipe will be valedictorian. She has done all her college work here at night.

Gregory Frazier, Guardsman columnist and honor student, has been chosen to respond to an address to be given by Dr. Louis G. Conlan, president of City College.

Major awards are the President's Plaque for service and the Scholastic Cup to the graduate with the highest grade average.

Triple-Hosted Awards Party Set For Tuesday

The semiannual Awards and Recognition party, triple-hosted each semester by the Associated Women Students, the Inter-Sorority Council and the Recreation Association, will be held from 6:30 to 8:30 p.m. Tuesday in Smith Hall, AWS President Brenda Jung announced yesterday.

Summer Magic has been designated as the theme of this semester's party, influencing the atmosphere and decor of the entire affair.

Best Dressed Coed Magda Jacobs will be presented with the trophy her title won for her in a brief recognition by AWS members.

RA President Crystal Jang will present awards to the deserving coeds of her organization, and ISC President Doreen Berkson will likewise bestow sorority honors.

Miss Berkson will present the Dougherty award for the highest scholastic achievement by a sorority coed to a recipient from Theta Tau or Phi Beta Rho.

Entertainment, including selections by pianist Etsuko Iwasaki, a number of baffling stunts by magician Lee Martin, and a "beauty talk" by Mrs. Charles Preston, fashion coordinator for H. Leibes' department store, is expected to enhance the program's brief agenda.

A Seaside Setting Wins Second Prize In Garden Show

Members of the Horticulture Society of the Ornamental Horticulture Department recently took part in the California Spring Garden Show, as a conclusion to this semester's activities, Harry Nelson, head of the Ornamental Horticulture Department announced.

In complying with the stiff regulations set down by the judges, the Horticulture Society won $750, thereby maintaining the prize-winning tradition set by the society in previous years.

The display, entitled A Seaside Setting, also won one second prize and two third prizes. In the absence of a specific general theme, students were free to create their own floral designs.

"This is considered a great job," Nelson said, "since the students are competing against professionals who enter the contest every year, whereas the horticulture students, for the most part, have never participated in the show."

The Horticulture Society, under the leadership of President Chuck Purcell, was in charge of the entire operation. Nelson complimented all of the students for the cooperation they showed, "not common at the college level."

Preceding the garden show, the horticulture department and the retail floristry department held a joint open house April 22 to 24.

The affair was highlighter by the judging of 14 floral window displays prepared by the floristry students, under the direction of Maryhope Jacks, and judged by members of the Retail Floristry Foundation. Virginia Rosch placed first, Kathleen Richard won second place and David Rowe placed third.

As the festivities continued, the Board of Directors of the California State Floral Association held their quarterly meeting in the horticulture workshop. The meeting was followed by a buffet luncheon prepared by the Hotel and Restaurant Department and served at the Horticulture Center.

After the luncheon, scholarships were awarded to Celeste Stracener, La Donna Lundgren and Virginia Eberlin by the floristry foundation.

The other days of the open house were opened to neighboring residents and students and faculty of the college.

Underpaid Profs

By Greg Frazier

SCRATCH A TEACHER, and beneath a thin veneer of stern, professional aloofness you will discover nothing more frightening than a plain old human being.

It is common knowledge that teaching is one of the most underpaid and overworked professions in this country. Although we can't offer teachers higher wages, lighter work loads, or any of the multitudes of rewards they so richly deserve, we can offer them a few words of sincere appreciation and a story.

In order to understand the teacher and his work, one must put himself in the teacher's place and see the world from a teacher's point of view.

We students tend to see teachers only in their professional role, and like movie stars they become detached from reality and take on celluloid personalities. We forget that teachers are also members in good standing of the human race. Some even have families, watch television, fight with their wives, nag their husbands, swat their children and try to make ends meet on minimal salaries.

Imagine correcting 90 term papers, full of awks, frags, trites and wdys—a dreadful task, even if you could read the writing. We merely grumble and complain when our papers aren't returned in two days.

Students take a course for one semester, pass or fail, then move on to other courses. Teachers don't move on, but stick around to teach the course for another semester, then another, then another. Some teachers have taught the same course for longer than their students have been around to grumble.

The tragedy of modern education lies in the alienation of teacher and student. With today's increasing enrollments, student and teacher lack that vital human relationship which brings about mutual respect and understanding.

In lieu of more material appreciation, we would like to pass on a little story. The origin of this tale is unknown to the writer, who heard it by word of mouth, but it is his belief that it springs from antiquity.

* * *

ONCE UPON A time there lived a great and benevolent king, who, upon summoning his minister, commanded him to seek out and bring before him the most wise and knowledgeable man in all the land so that he might reward him.

Several decades had passed before the minister returned and confronted the now old and wizened king. He had brought not one man, but two.

"Who is this first man?" asked the king, puzzled.

"This man is the wisest and most knowledgeable man of all the kingdoms of the world," replied the minister.

"Well, who is the second?" asked the king.

"The second, Your Majesty, is his teacher."

"Then I shall reward them both with equal generosity," replied the king.

Who's Conforming?

By Rich Heintz

THEY WERE all nonconformists. They never conformed and they were happy, as long as they all nonconformed together.

Wherever they went they all wore jackets with the letters NC cigarette-burned on the backs and with sandals, beards and a knowing look in their eye. They held seminars about life often, although they usually got side-tracked on how messed up other people were.

They often discussed the meaning of life together. They felt that the meaning of life couldn't be in owning nice clothes, a bottle of hair cream or even a red GTO, since they felt people had these items just to impress other people. They would rather go to museums and listen to lectures knowing that the meaning of life must be there since they usually didn't understand the museums or the lectures.

Sometimes their beliefs came close to being a religion. Often their talk had a tinge of everlasting zeal. And sometimes they would even find a "convert." One convert had before been a victim of the "empty life," as he later said. He had had money, clothes and a red GTO. But his fun life had caught up with him and he had flunked out of college. He later confessed that actually he hadn't enjoyed life before since he was "just conforming to what other people wanted me to do."

Of course, there were always some who fell away from the cause.

Some decided that the beard was too uncomfortable and others fell away even more tragically. One NC fell away when he converted the man above. It is rumored that he found the convert's little black book and is now arranging to buy a red GTO.

But these were the exceptions to the group. Usually when one NC felt depressed he would call another NC since they had given each other their phone numbers. This saved many NCs from picking up a shaver and ending it all (the beard).

Once the group was almost destroyed when one member threw in his jacket, telling them, "all that you people do is conform to your own standards" as he walked out.

A hush fell over the group until one NC yelled triumphantly, "He's wrong, he's wrong, after all we wear different brands of sandals, different colored beards and different sized jackets."

So their life went on with all the NCs confident that they didn't conform at least not to what most people usually conform.

The VOTE: As Important And Vital On Local Scene As On National, State, City Levels

THE POWER OF THE VOTE can be very awesome sometimes—as it was in the Lyndon B. Johnson landslide over Barry Goldwater. Other times it can be quite dramatic—as it was when the late John F. Kennedy barely won out over Richard Nixon.

But the power of the "absent vote" is neither awesome nor dramatic. It is nothing and it puts nothing into the public trust. It has often been pointed out that Americans will go across the seas to defend their freedoms such as the right to vote—but they won't even go across the street to use that right.

And the Vote is as important and vital on the local scene as it is on the national scene. Incapable local officials can be just as harmful to the community as an incapable president can be to the nation.

Today and tomorrow are the election days for City College. While the college elections may not seem as important as the "outside" elections that will be taking place throughout this year—they are important to the college itself.

Self-government here has usually been somewhat tainted by student apathy. The general feeling is that the Associated Student President and Student Council do not hold much power. But they do, particularly in the control of the budget. And if a student or group at City College depends upon Student Council for funds, they will find out just how much power student government has.

Although the AS Presidential race is uncontested as of this writing because of a last-minute withdrawal by Ernie Woodcock, there are other offices just as vital in the student government.

There are many students here who are dissatisfied with many of the functions and regulations at City College and they gripe. What they can do, obviously, is take a more active part in their government here, find out which candidates have the same or similar views as theirs and then vote for them. But not to vote is doing nothing and doing nothing gives you nothing.

Voting becomes a habit, and the place to start the habit is here—if anything else, self-government at City College needs the Vote.

State's Yield To VDC Demands Gives Group Sense Of Power

EVER SINCE the Vietnam Day Committee was first organized, its prime objective has been to hamper United States defensive efforts in Southeast Asia. It appears now not to be a nonviolent group as claimed.

Early this month, according to the State College daily newspaper, the Golden Gater, the VDC gave the San Francisco State College administration an ultimatum either to halt the Selective Service deferment tests scheduled to be given on campus, or face VDC efforts to put a stop to the exams by any means needed.

Knowing the protest group for what it is and the type of action it has taken in the past, listed under "peaceable civil disobedience," it is doubtful that the threats were bluffs.

So San Francisco State's administration cancelled the draft deferment exams for the stated reason that the VDC interference would have an adverse effect on the examinees.

This may be true and it may not. But what of the VDC members—what kind of effect did the cancellation of the tests have on them? One of a new sense of power, no doubt.

It is unfortunate that such an organization as small as the VDC can force a large and respected institution to meet its rebellious demands. Now the antiwar group has gained a new power and encouragement—and this is what makes it all the more dangerous.

The United States already has enough fringe groups such as the W. DuBois Club and the Minute Men plaguing the nation; an addition to this extremism is not needed.

Soviet's Latest Fashion Move Attempt At Style Regression

By Connie Skipitares

In a literal "strike below the party hemline," Soviet fashion designers last month revealed their forthcoming contribution to the world's seasonal style-setters' with the announcement of the fully-covered kneecap in women's street-length wear.

The "new" dress reportedly displays both necklines and sleeves, with waistlines more attuned to nature than Paris, in addition to sporting hems ending a modest inch or so below the knee.

The Soviets, highly known for their removal from convention, seem to be exploiting the American and Parisian fashion designers' virtue of accelerating obsolescence in fashion; however, in its drastic clash with London's recent acceptance of the "seven-inch-above-the-knee" dress, Russian timing is about 10 years off.

The pace-setting designers of the "free world" abondoned the knee-draping dress in the mid-fifties and ever since, have been unsuccessful in revitalizing it as a "comeback."

The shocking, but wholesome drift toward seeming stricter morality in dress was revealed in the government newspaper, Izvestia, which commented on the success the Soviet dress has thus far achieved in international exhibition. The article concluded its propagandized message with a very enthusiastic addition of its confidence that the new line will soon appear on the world market.

Could the Soviets be seeking more than the mere suggested "cover-up?"

A Draft Survey

By B.T.

POLL-TAKING is fun, especially for a columnist who must meet a deadline. Now the following is by no means to be taken seriously. The opinions merely reflect some opinions of a few conscientious political science students:

Since there are no individual photographs for this survey, readers must use their imagination. If curiosity compels one to seek out the individuals for arguments or other reasons, this poll was taken in A-302, Tuesday at 2:30 p.m.

QUESTION: Do you think college students should be deferred from the draft?

RUTH WELTE, blonde, age 18: "I don't know. It depends. If it's one of your friends, it's different."

MONIQUE LEB, brunette, age 18: "I'm from Romania, and I feel deeply about men who should help their country. Since the students are citizens of the United States, they should fight for their country although the fighting is not done on U.S. soil. The boys in Vietnam are trying hard to keep the war isolated to East Asia."

BOB BARNUM, long curly hair, bearded intellectual, age 23: "Yes, if they retain a 2 point average over a period of two to three semesters."

ALEC JUNG, age 19: "Only college students who could maintain this average should be deferred."

DAVID WATJEN, age 19: "I really don't care anymore. I'm already deferred. But I'll go if they want me."

RON PINELLI, veteran, age 26: "Yes, so that they can get better jobs in the service. They have to go anyway, but they need a good education. Boy, when I was in the peacetime Army, I worked in personnel. It was a gas. I got to choose the files for guys to be shipped overseas. Everybody treated me just great, off post!"

Several students refused to answer the questionnaire, saying that they are already deferred.

JACK ALDRIDGE, instructor, said, "You can't judge a book by its cover, if this poll proves anything."

But it does!

That a columnist can meet a deadline.

Cine-Art

Tragedy Of A King

By Albert Hilliard Hughes

OEDIPUS REX, Sophocles' classic Greek tragedy, in a special film version, will be the film to be shown tomorrow night in the theater at 8 p.m.

Filmed in Eastman Color, the cast includes members of the Stratford, Ontario Shakesperian Festival Players, headed by Douglas Campbell in the title role. Production has been directed by famed director, Tyrone Guthrie, who has directed the film in a highly stylized theatrical manner.

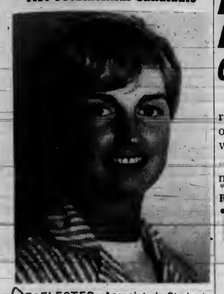
Most of the action is static, and concentrated on one set. The cast wears bizarre, but interpretive masks throughout, in true ancient Greek theater tradition.

A YEATS ADAPTATION

Based on the W. B. Yeats English adaptation, this production follows the original Greek tale faithfully.

The story of Oedipus is ageless, being based on the ancient myth, and tells the story of the King who unwittingly slays his own father and, later, marries his own mother. Throughout Oedipus' life, since infancy, he was plagued with tragedy.

It is from this play that psychologists have found their term, "The Oedipus Complex," which has been so widely applied, especially to Shakespeare's great tragedy, Hamlet.



This famous drama of the incest between a man and his mother has been one of the most outstanding of all the Greek plays extant.

DEVOID OF ACTION

On the screen, devoid of true cinematic style, the play of Oedipus comes across to the audience as just a filmed production of the play. It is mainly declamatory, without much action, except as provoked by the excitement of some of the lines.

Had it been made by Michael Cacoyannis, who produced in 1962 an exciting and dramatic film version of Electra, or by George Tzavellas, who, the same year made Antigon, then Oedipus Rex might have been more outstanding as a film. This is not to say it is not worth seeing, but it is simply only a filmed play, and not truly cinematic.

Vice Presidential Candidate

IF ELECTED Associated Student Vice President I hope to improve the college spirit, commonly called student apathy. I wish to encourage student participation in both social and cultural activities.

At the present time I am Vice President of the Sophomore Class, and Head Song Girl. I have also served as Student-Faculty Relations Chairman for two semesters, during which I started This Week bulletin.

I have helped with social events, attended Area 6 and Golden Gate Presidents Conferences, and the State Conference.

Chris Scales

Two Candidates Compete For Soph Class President

Two candidates will vie for the office of Sophomore Class President. Their statements are as follows:

Helen Ferentinos

- If elected Sophomore Class President I will strive to make that position an active, and important one.

As councilwoman this semester, and Recording Secretary last semester, I worked to improve communications between the various factions of this college community. I have also participated in Alpha Gamma Sigma, the Student-Faculty Relations Committee and Campus Forum.

Joe Parnell

- If elected Sophomore Class President; I will do everything I can to increase college spirit, and make our campus life more enjoyable.

I am 21 years old, a veteran of three years in the Navy, Vice President of the college Honor Society, and a member of Student Council. I'm the councilman responsible for keeping the lights on in Statler wing, and having the students clear off the tables.

Dental Students In Capping Ceremony

Eleven dental assisting students reached the final level of training when they participated in the semi-annual Dental Assisting capping ceremony, signifying they have reached a high degree of efficiency.

The ceremony saw Joan Atkinson, Tanya Boyd, Sandra Geran, Lynne Malin, Elizabeth Meijer, Higinia Siu and Christina Symonds receive capping honors.

After hearing the welcome address, given by Louis Batmale, coordinator of technical - terminal instruction, caps were presented by graduate Leona Disney president-elect of the San Francisco Dental Assistants Society. Graduate Winnie Jung, director of the San Francisco Society presented the San Francisco Dental Assistants Society Award.

Last night's ceremony was a milestone in more ways than one. It was the last one in which Ruth Inskipp, who started City College's dental program in 1954, would officially participate. Mrs. Inskipp is retiring in June.

To show their appreciation of Mrs. Inskipp's long devotion to the program, 400 graduates of the program had made donations that would establish a dental assisting scholarship in Mrs. Inskipp's name, at City College.

The dental assisting program provides chair-side work outside the classroom for its students, with practical experience, starting in the third semester, at both the University of California dental school, and the College of Physicians and Surgeons.

Vice Presidential Candidate

MY QUALIFICATIONS for the office of Vice President include membership on Student Council and a position as a subcommittee chairman.

I have also been a Council Of Organizations representative, Associated Women Student secretary, and AWS board member and chairman of several committees for social activities.

When elected Associated Student Vice President, I will promise to encourage cultural and social activities for the entire student body, and combat student apathy.

Sheridan Parker

Mike Nygren

- I held the office of Frosh President in Fall of '65 and I am presently holding a Freshman seat on council. Also I have attended two Area 6 conferences and several Golden Gate Presidents' Conferences. Therefore I feel I am qualified to run for a seat on Student Council.

Fred Reisinger

- As an independent, I will work primarily for the student. For too long the students have been forced to accept conditions which they have neither created nor desired. I want to bring color and life on this campus and to do away with this depressing glorified high school atmosphere.

John T. Rhoten, Jr.

- It is my desire to see the students of City College take interest in, and participate in the college and its activities. I have served in Council Of Organizations and feel qualified to serve on Student Council. If elected, I will endeavor to promote interest in our college.

Katie Shypertt

- I am running for Student Council to help bring excellence to City College. I visualize a campus that strives toward the goals of academic superiority, campus beauty and a better social life for students. This is a college of high quality; together we can elevate it to an even greater rank.

Professionals Give Reasons For Popularity Of The Long Hair Fad

By Viggo Petersen

The presence of long hair on men was the subject recently of an opinion survey among a number of psychiatrists, professors and social historians.

For the past couple of years, wearing long hair has been associated with a number of social happenings. A person (usually a male) who wears his hair longer than what is usually considered normal (going without a haircut for about four months) is usually classified as being a member of some sort of social disorder.

Normally, he is either considered 1—a beatnik, 2—a beach bum, 3—an entertainer, the latter being the more respectable of all the evils.

Whatever category he is placed in, a person who wears long hair is usually regarded by the general public as some sort of social deviate or misfit.

Not so, say the professionals.

One authority said that the only reason a wearer of long hair is considered unusual is because John Q. Public has chosen to label him as such.

That is to say there is nothing wrong with growing long hair, but there is something wrong with a parent or a principal of a school who chooses to go to court to persuade the son or the students to get a haircut, as has occurred in recent months.

This particular authority believes that this is one reason some young people choose to wear their hair long. Simply because it draws attention and gets people upset.

He said that it is a way of expression of rebellion and declared there is nothing wrong with rebellion or the expression of it, but harmful results could come about as a result of trying to suppress this expression.

What was generally pointed out was that long hair is an expression or a means of identifying. In prisons or in the military, for example, hair is cut in order to make one lose his identity and to make him conform to certain rules and regulation.

In many cultures hair, long or short, has been displayed to symbolize something. Indian tribes have used shaving of the head as representing a boy's growth into manhood. Various tribes such as the Mohawks have used their own particular style of head to represent themselves.

In ancient China it represented a man's glory.

These facts were pointed out by the various social historians represented in the survey. Also cited were the eccentric hair-dos of Buffalo Bill Cody and General Custer, the latter usually referred to by the Indians as "golden hair." Often these various hair styles represented merely social trends or else were a means of expressing individualism, the historians said.

What resulted from this survey was some professional opinions that there are far more psychological and social reasons for men growing long hair other than just trying to look like a Beatle.

Eleven Sophomores Enter Race For Council Positions

Eleven candidates are in the running for the sophomore seats on Student Council, seven of whom are to be elected.

The candidates and their statements are as follows:

Ron Appel

- Experience is the best qualification for any position. Having already served on Student Council and in the Council Of Organizations, I have the necessary qualifications, having been Vice President, Associated Men Students; Campus Activities Coordinator and Representative to Area 6 conferences.

Judy Barling

- As a candidate for council I feel a need to represent my fellow students. I feel a large school such as City College has lost all its closeness. I want to help bring a small school closeness to a large school system.

George Fonti

- I am running for an office in Student Council because I want to take an active part in our student government and by running for office, I and my friends will be interested in it.

Janice Goodrick

- I would like to be a member of Student Council because I have an interest in government. In my high senior year at Lincon I was class secretary. During the last two semesters I have been Frosh Class secretary. I want to do my part in student government here.

Rich Heintz

- As a reporter for The Guardsman assigned to cover council meetings for a semester, I came to know many council members well. There are effective council members and ineffective council members. I ask the chance to be an effective one.

Don Kafafian

- I'd like to see something done about the apathy here. Council members should examine methods for achieving this end, perhaps by lowering the price of Associated Student cards for students not registering vehicles. And I'd like to see the student government made more representative of the students.

Jim McIntyre

- I have been active in student government for three semesters, holding the office of Vice President of Inter-Fraternity Council this semester. I feel that this experience qualifies me for a position on Student Council.

Eight Freshmen Seek Posts On Student Council

Eight candidates are in the running for the freshman seats on Student Council, seven of whom are to be elected.

The candidates and their statements are as follows:

Pat Fluren

- I am running for Student Council because I feel there is a lack of interest in student affairs on campus. I would like to change this attitude. I've worked in student government this semester as a cabinet member and feel that I can hold a position on council.

Steve Howder

- I wish to run for a post on Student Council, and if I am elected I will try to do the best possible job to help the students of City College. I am the starting catcher of the varsity baseball team which has been in first place for the majority of the season.

Kenneth Jones

- I am running for Student Council. I feel I can take the responsibility of this position because of my interest in seeing how and why the Associated Students use their funds. If elected, I promise to supervise the spending of money wisely and to the best of my ability.

Ron Lent

- As many of you realize, Student Council has not been functioning at a satisfactory level this semester. Why? Because students have failed to take an active interest in "their" government. I would like to see this changed, and for this reason I am running for Student Council.

Nancy Luscia

- I would like to become a member of Student Council because I have ideas that would, I believe, work for the betterment of City College. I've gained experience this semester by being a member of the Rally Committee, a member of cabinet and attending Student Council meetings.

Craig Noonan

- This being my first semester at City College, I want to start my involvement in student government as soon as possible. My main reason in running for Student Council is to see that the $40,000 semiannual budget is spent more in the general interest of the individual student.

Lynne Pozza

- Last fall, I was an officer in the Frosh Class. Since then I have joined a sorority on campus and participated in its activities. If elected to this office I will strive to bring student government to the students. By being elected I hope to get to know the student better.

Celeste Stracener

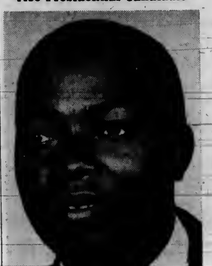
- I was a coordinator of the Red Cross-International Relations Club "pairs program" this semester, have a 3.5 grade average and will work hard to represent the Frosh Class on Student Council.

Paul Goodman To Appear Here

Dr. Paul Goodman, nationally known and controversial lecturer and social critic, will speak here during College Hour tomorrow, according to Ted Taylor, Contemporary Affairs Forum sponsor.

Noted for his criticism of administrators, grading systems and "Greek letter societies," Dr. Goodman is prominent in educational circles.

He has taught at and been associated with many schools, is a Fellow of the City Institute for Policy Studies in Washington, D.C., an associate of the University Seminar at Columbia and a member of the New York City Board of Education.



Hired by the Associated Students of San Francisco State College, he is working there with the experimental college.

He has written many books, fiction and nonfiction, concerned with the field of social science.

Goodman, in his critique, has been known to favor abolishing grading systems and allowing students to have a greater voice in school administrative policies.

He will take part in open discussion with students here in S-204, Taylor said.

Vice Presidential Candidate

IF ELECTED VICE PRESIDENT I promise to do the very best of my ability, not just for myself, but for you—the entire student body.

In my past semesters at City College, I have held offices of Frosh treasurer, Council Of Organizations treasurer, and Freshman council member. In the Fall of 1965, I was one of the yell leaders. Besides being a member of the Recreation Association and the Pep Band, I also served as the Associated Men Student treasurer. At the present time I am the AMS President, and a member of the Campus Police department.

Percy Jones

Three 'Top Six' Elective Offices Are Uncontested

Three offices of the "top six" are uncontested in Associated Student elections, in addition to the AS Presidency. They are the Presidencies of the Associated Men Students, Associated Women Students and the Freshman Class.

The candidates and their statements are as follows:

Jerd Lapham, candidate for AMS President

- I am presently on the Rally Committee, President of the Block club, and an assistant athletic commissioner. I am a graduate of Lowell High School and was honorably discharged from the Army. My record, I feel, speaks for itself. I have enjoyed student government and would like to serve in the office of AMS President.

Diane Lattimer, candidate for AWS President

- I feel I have the necessary qualifications for Associated Women Student President. This semester I served on the AWS Board which included membership in several different committees and which gave me an insight into the difficulties and problems facing AWS. It would be my pleasure to serve the women of this college.

Chris Lou, candidate for Freshman President

- Our college is growing in size, not only in enrollment, but in the future plans of expansion. Capable, dedicated and hard-working student leaders will be needed to guide the students. This opportunity gives me a chance to ask you to return me to student government, not in the capacity of councilman, but as Freshman President.

Council Finances Golf Team's Trip

In what could be the shortest meeting of the semester, Student Council passed a supplementary request for $536.70 from the golf team last week.

The money, needed by the team to compete in the State Golf Championships at San Diego, was for all the expenses the team would have. Council showed its support of the team by allocating the funds by an 11-0-2 vote.

Sophomore Class President Bruce Fisher announced that an all-expense paid trip to Disneyland would be awarded to the winners of the King and Queen contest. The trip is courtesy of PSA Airlines.

Chuck Stern reported on the Model United Nations delegation from the college. Stern, spokesman for the Model U.N. delegates, told council of the convention.

Rams Sweep Big Four As College Beats San Mateo, 7-3, For Baseball Crown

By G. Frank Cooney

Capping perhaps the most successful athletic year in this or any two-year college's history, City College's baseball team clubbed College of San Mateo, 7-3, last Thursday at Balboa Park to wrap up the first diamond title in ten years and make it a clean sweep for the Rams in all four major sports.

Rams have now brought home Golden Gate Conference championships in football, basketball, track and baseball to say nothing of soccer, golf and tennis titles.

The final baseball win over the Mateans was an important one since the Bulldogs were only a single game behind San Francisco going into the clash and a San Mateo victory would have meant the Rams would have had to settle for a co-championship.

Righthander Greg Sinclair went all the way for the eighth time this season to get credit for his seventh win against two losses. The mound ace struck out six while yielding two walks and seven hits.

Power hitting Tom Callan slapped two singles in four trips, batting in two runs, to lead the Rams in the offensive department.

Swift little Al "Cochise" Pasion, outfielder, scored two runs and pushed across one to further the Ram's championship clincher.

The stage for the final big game was set the preceding Tuesday when the Bulldogs stayed hot on the Rams' trail by winning their 15th consecutive game with a victory over Foothill, 8-5.

City College, however, kept its one-game edge by pounding Diablo Valley, 7-4.

"These guys have put together fine ball games all year," Coach Ernie Domecus praised, "and showed that they deserved the championship by snapping through San Mateo's 15-game win streak."

The 18-3 conference record is the best in the college's history and gave San Francisco its first championship since Bill Fischer's troops copped the title in 1956 with an 11-3 tally.

Domecus, a Ram centerfielder under Fischer in the only other college championship year of 1948 and 1947, thus becomes only the second diamond coach to grab a league crown.

Saturday's Nor Cal Meet Big Step For Ram Track Team

Conjuring up at best only an attitude of cautious optimism after finding the going a might competitive—to say the least—in last weekend's Fresno Relays, the Ram track team will take a big step toward the State Finals when it goes to Foothill College Saturday at 10 a.m. for the Northern California Meet.

Although City College was able to get National Junior College record-breaking performances in the 440 relay and the triple jump at Fresno, they managed to place in only two other events.

Fresno City College must again be considered the favorite when the best NorCal squads gather at Foothill's all-weather asphalt track.

Also tagged "Rams," Fresno finished just behind southern California's Bakersfield College at the West Coast Relays, representing Northern California's best entry.

City College wound up third just behind Fresno.

But this does not mean that the NorCal standing will turn out in the same fashion because with the elimination of Southern California colleges from certain events, points are opened up for northern colleges which did not take points in those events at Fresno.

Indeed, Foothill College's Russ Hodge, a 24-year-old former Olympic decathlon star, could easily outclass all comers in any one, or all, of his several events. This fact keeps the Owls, winners of the conference finals meet at San Mateo, an ever-present menace to anybody's chances.

Records Set, But Tracksters 3rd In West Coast Relays

By William G. Pates

With records being broken all around them, City College of San Francisco's Golden Gate Conference dual meet track champions decided to set a few of their own, but it wasn't enough as they finished third in the junior college division of the 40th annual West Coast Relays at Radcliffe Stadium in Fresno where "world records are broken."

As the competition field broadens the Rams finish lower is about the story of City College's performances in these post-season meets. San Francisco hasn't won such a meet since the conference relays before the season opened. They finished second in the NorCal JC Relays, third in the conference championships meet.

Favored Bakersfield won with 37-7/16 points, followed by NorCal Relay winner Fresno with 31 and City College with 26.

By far the highlight of the Rams' efforts throughout the day was the national junior college record performance by the 440 relay team of Banks- Prince - Simpson and Benton with a timing of 40.9 to edge meet winner Bakersfield my one-tenth of a second.

In the 880 relay, the same team ran their best ever with a 1:26.4 timing and it was still just good enough for second as the Bakersfield Renegades set a new national junior college record with a 1:24.7 effort.

Dwight Tucker had a most satisfying day with a victory in the triple jump with a 50-11½, his second best of the year, for a meet record. The jump bettered his mark in the conference championships by four and a half feet.

Tucker placed third in the high jump with a 6-8 mark although both first and second likewise had 6-8 marks. They placed better on fewest misses.

Netters Defeat Foothill To Win Gate Conference

Coach Roy Diederichsen's tennis team came up from third place in the first day of competition to win the Golden Gate Conference tennis title by one point over defending state and conference champ Foothill.

The Rams racked up a total of 17 points to Foothill's 16 and to second-seeded College of San Mateo's 14.

Top-seeded Greg Shephard of San Francisco won the singles' title under somewhat unusual circumstances. In the final match, he was even with teammate George Pontikoff after the first two sets, Pontikoff winning the first set, 6-2, and Shephard winning the second by the same score.

Then, suffering from blisters and wanting to save himself for the doubles competition, Pontikoff decided to default the match.

The strategy paid off as Shephard and Pontikoff did win the doubles championship by beating Geoff Kerber and Dale MacGowan of Foothill in the semifinals, 6-3, 3-6, 6-2, and then taking Foothill's Rapoza and Svedeman in the finals, 6-3, 6-0.

Diederichsen was pleased with the play of Quincy Lay and Pete Klestoff, both of whom won their first round matches. "Without the two points we got from those two victories," Diederichsen explained, "we definitely would not have won the tournament and the title."

The coach also pointed out that Bob Kypta had the misfortune of drawing Kerber, the Owls' number one man, as his first round opponent.

The "Dead Man's Hand" in poker (aces and eights) is so-called because this is what "Wild Bill" Hickok was holding when he was shot in the back and killed in 1876.

AMS Sportsnight Monday Features 'Grudge' Match

A team of five students will be out to avenge a basketball loss inflicted by faculty members last semester, when a return "grudge" match highlights the Associated Men Student Sportsnight starting at 6:30 p.m. next Monday in the men's gymnasium.

"The battle," a basketball clash to be precise, "will highlight an evening of fun in true competitive spirit," according to Percy Jones, AMS president.

Another major event will be the Intramural championship game to be played between the winners of the Club and Fraternity - Independent leagues.

The Negro Student Association, defending intramural champs, have fought a long uphill battle after suffering early season mishaps and hopes to be able to defend its title against any one of the possible adversaries shooting for the upset.

Coming on strong in the second half of intramural action is the Soul Plus, a team composed of many star athletes (none of whom is actually a varsity basketball player) like University of Southern California - bound football lineman Mike Taylor, probably the only 270-pound basketball player in San Francisco.

Also doing its best to get another crack at the NSA is the runner-up of last semester's close, 52-51 war, the Irish.

Boxing, a sport which is making a bid for re-recognition, will also be featured. Coach Roy Diederichsen, a former professional fighter himself, has prepared another card of tough matches.

While it won't be known who will fight until after the semifinals, hopes are running high that two popular athletes, Chris Ransom, a husky halfback, and Chris Davis, a swift sprinter, will pair off for a match.

Odds, however, stack such a fight up as an unbelievable mismatch, with the winner sure to be—Chris!

Politicians, then, must above all be "good Americans," and this is a saga about one politician who made it and about one who failed.

Mr. Goldi Lox and Mr. John Sent were candidates for a top spot. Now there were many nasty things said about both of these persons; some people said that Mr. Lox was going to lead the nation into war, and Mr. Lox wrote books and made speeches trying to show the country why some military action was in order and how it should be carried out.

But Mr. Sent was a sly old bird, and while Lox was running around explaining the inevitable military venture, Sent said, "I'm for peace."

The good folk of the land clustered about Mr. Sent and admired him in great throngs.

Mr. Lox was worried about the way things were working out, so he ran and had a talk with an old military man, General Kenbrauser.

"General," said Lox, "I'm not a war monger, am I?"

"No," replied the general, "you're not a war monger."

"You see, people, I'm not a war monger," cried Lox, running around the outskirts of the crowd that was standing about Mr. Sent and admiring him as he reiterated, "I'm for peace." No one paid any attention to Lox.

Of course there were many things said about Sent; he had a homosexual in his flock and a Senator Buddy Bender of his party was selling slugs to put into Pentagon vending machines, rumor had it.

But Mr. Sent was never on the defensive because he ignored all that was said about him, and he just kept repeating that he was for peace, for civil rights, for better government, for motherhood and for red-line tires on all automobiles. He proved to be the better American of the two, and he was elected, or so rumor has it.

Golfers Steal Conference Meet Title In Driving Rain

City College claimed still another Golden Gate Conference championship as Coach Grover Klemmer's golfers won the 1966 edition of the links title playing in driving rain at San Jose. The Rams edged second place Diablo Valley by five strokes, 393 to 398.

San Jose City College was third in the competition at 409, while dual match champ San Mateo was a distant fourth at 417. Foothill followed with 420.

City College's Doug Nelson led the pack as he shot a four-over-par 76. Nelson was followed by another Ram, Gary Mialocq, who had a 77 as did third-place Don Perry of San Jose and fourth-place finisher Tom O'Kane of San Francisco.

Actually, Mialocq, Perry and O'Kane were tied at the end of 18 holes and had to play off. Mialocq birdied the second playoff hole to take second place and Perry birdied the third to give him third place.

San Francisco took four of a possible five medals as Ron O'Connor picked up the fourth medal for the Rams as he shot an 80.

Of the up-coming State tournament, Klemmer said, "I think we have a good chance to take it if everybody hits the way he can.

"You'll remember we were fourth in a tournament which was very similar to the state meet when we played at Fresno during the Easter break, and at the time we weren't really set and we are shooting better golf now than we were then."

Swimmer Named All-American, 14th In Nation

Bill Pasquinelli was named to the Junior College All-America team as a result of his performance in the 100-yard backstroke in the state finals held at Foothill College, May 6 and 7.

Pasquinelli finished 14 among the nation in the 100-yard backstroke.

Bob Martin just missed being selected in the 400-yard individual. The All-America selection is based on the top 10 in each event. Martin was selected 11th in the 400-yard and 12th in the 200-yard individual.

Roy Burkhead, coach of the team, was more than happy with the performances that the two Rams turned in. Burkhead mentioned that Pasquinelli and Martin were the only team members who were in the state finals.

Both Pasquinelli and Martin finished eighth in the finals in all four events. Also the Ram pair gave the Rams valuable points as they were awarded four points for eighth place.

In the team scoring, Foothill ran away with the state title with 192 points. Pasquinelli and Martin accounted for 32 points.

Burkhead commented, "I think the two men did as fine a job as anyone could ask for, and I only hope we had more men in their to help them out."

The two swimmers will not go on to the national championships, and Burkhead hopes to welcome them back next year, along with the other members.

Coach Roy Burkhead's swimmers were the only spring sports group which failed to win some kind of a championship this year.

RA Sportsday Archery Title Won By Genero

Jose Genero won first place in archery for "high score" during Sportsday May 7, held at San Jose and West Valley Colleges.

Sportsday was split between the two colleges by holding separate sports events at each one.

Leon Dalton was third in men's tennis singles. The Recreation Association's bowling team won second place.

A combined City College and Monterey City College volleyball team came in third place. Members of the San Francisco team were Crystal Jang, Maria Gonzalves, Melinda Wong and Brenda Lee.

Forfeits Mar Intra Climax

The final games of the Associated Men Student Intramural basketball tournament last week turned out on a weak note. Six games were scheduled, but only three were played.

In Tuesday night's action the Newman Club Vikings clinched a tie in the Club league by edging the Filipino-Americans 50 - 46. The other three games were all double forfeits.

The six teams picking up a loss on their last regular season game were the Celtics, Alpha Phi Epsilon and the Irish. The Soul Plus, Point Shavers and Alpha Sigma Delta also lost games.

In the first game Wednesday night Foley's Flashes won the second round Club league championship by defeating The Guardsman, 69-48. The Flashes will play the Newman Club, first-round champs, for the Club league title.

In the second game the Frosh Class finished out its season with a victory over the NSA by forfeit.

Percy Jones, Associated Men Student president, said that the NSA and the Celtics of the Independent-Fraternity league had forfeited all their games, because one player was on both teams.

After the Newman Club meets the Flashes for the Club league title, the winner will play the Independent-Fraternity league champ Irish at Sportsnight next Monday.

The Irish will be attempting to win their second intramural title in a year, having upset the Freshmen 62-50 for the spring 1965 championship.

Shephard Finally Loses; Rams Second In Nor Cal Tennis Meet

By Randy Koernig

Greg Shephard finally lost a junior college tennis match. It might not be of major consequence to many people, but Shephard's loss to Larry Hall of American River Junior College marked the first time Shephard had been beaten by a player to whom he could be considered equal.

In high school, none of his peers could overcome the former Lowell High star who was undefeated in three AAA seasons. In the Golden Gate Conference this year he was undefeated.

In fact, to this reporter's knowledge, and correct me if I'm wrong, the only major match Shephard has lost in the last four years was a three-set decision to former San Jose State star Whitney Reed, possibly the best player in Northern California.

In the quarterfinals of the Northern California Junior College Championships, which were concluded Saturday, Shephard had to go three sets to whip Mike McLean of American River, 3-6, 8-6, 6-3.

Shephard's doubles partner George Pontikoff was eliminated in the quarterfinals by Hall who, by virtue of his conquest of Shephard, became the NorCal JC singles champ.

Shephard and Pontikoff won their quarterfinals doubles match with the team of Adams and Osborne of College of the Sequoias, 4-6, 6-4, 6-3, but were eliminated in the semifinal round.

Hall and McLean teamed up to whip Foothill's Geoff Kerber and Dale MacGowan in the doubles finale, 6-1, 8-6.

American River, a Sacramento college, won the team title with 17 points while City College and Foothill were tied for second with 11 each.

Fisher Wins AS Presidency

Jones New Vice President; 401 Votes Ratify Constitution

By John Janigian

Bruce Fisher, unopposed candidate for Associated Student President, was swept into office in last week's elections. Fisher received 754 votes out of a total of 1041 votes cast. To be elected he needed a simple majority of the votes.

The new AS constitution, which was on the ballot, was ratified by a vote of 406 yes to 186 no. This is the first time since 1945 an entire new constitution has been adopted by the students.

Percy Jones won the contested Vice Presidential race capturing 474 votes, Chris Scales received 301 votes and Sheridan Parker got 147 votes.

The candidates for Associated Men Student President, Jerd Lapham and Associated Women Student President, Diane Lattimer both received majorities to win their bid for their uncontested posts. Lapham received 712 votes and Miss Lattimer received 677 votes.

Joe Parnell won his bid for Sophomore Class President receiving 622 votes. His opponent Helen Ferentinos received 256 votes.

Chris Loo won the post of Freshman Class President when his opponent, Wayne Wilson, was disqualified for campaign irregularities. The disqualification came only after much confrontation between Marty Watten, election commissioner, Jim Soletti, AS president, and James Wyatt, student activities adviser.

Wilson appealed to the Student Council even though Loo received a majority of the votes.

Wilson's eligibility had been questioned, and he was declared out of the race the week before elections. On May 17, however, he was permitted to run.

The seven sophomore seats on council were filled my Jim McIntire (585), Mike Nygren (565), Rich Heintz (503), Katie Shypertt (506), Judy Barling (465), John Rhoten (452) and Don Kafafian (443).

Three candidates failed to win positions. They were Janice Goodrick (427), Fred Reisinger (426) and George Fonti (353). Ron Appel withdrew two days before voting started.

Eight candidates vied for seven Freshman seats on the council. Steve Howder (606), Ron Lent (596), Pat Fiuren (574), Lynn Pozza (567), Craig Noonan (567), Ken Jones (562) and Nancy Luscia (549) won their posts. Celeste Stracener (485) failed in her bid to be elected to council.

"The turnout wasn't as good as expected," Watten said, but he attributed it to an uncontested presidency and the fact that no voting machines were in operation.

The 1041 voting represent approximately 12 per cent of those eligible.

When In The Running Wear Two Hats

By Peter Dorn

POLITICIANS are the mirrors of a nation; they reflect the people of their land, which is why Americans think of most politicians as being crooked, and two faced.

Now the majority of the citizenry does not know very much about politics and, further, they don't care. However, occasionally a sensational rumor about some foremost politician stirs the interest of the people, and they retain that rumor in their minds up to ballot time.

Politicians, then, must above all be "good Americans," and this is a saga about one politician who made it and about one who failed.

Mr. Goldi Lox and Mr. John Sent were candidates for a top spot. Now there were many nasty things said about both of these persons; some people said that Mr. Lox was going to lead the nation into war, and Mr. Lox wrote books and made speeches trying to show the country why some military action was in order and how it should be carried out.

G'man Takes A Holiday

There will be no Guardsman next Wednesday, June 1, because plans included only 12 issues this semester. Anyone who has been faithfully counting past G'man publications is aware that 11 have already been published.

Elementary deduction reveals, therefore, that only one issue is left for the semester, and the editorial board has decided to save this one for June 8, of this year, if the Good Lord's willing and the creek don't rise.

June 1 Banquet Features Installation Of Officers

Newly elected Associated Student officers will be officially installed at the semiannual Student Council banquet on June 1 in Statler wing.

The banquet, highlighted by President Louis Conlan's review of the past semester's accomplishments, will also serve the purpose of honoring retiring registrar, Mary Jane Learnard.

Miss Learnard is leaving after 30 years of service here.

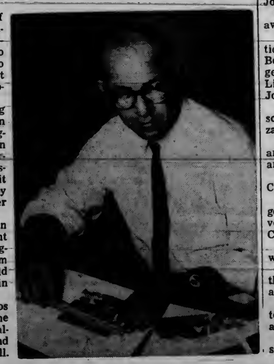
The banquet will also feature the awarding of two service plaques to a faculty member and a student for their outstanding contributions to the Associated Students of City College this semester.

VISTA Returns Here Friday For Recruitment Bid

The Volunteers In Service To America, or VISTA, returns to the campus for its fourth annual recruitment drive by setting up two recruiting booths in the cafeteria and at the courtyard flagpole this Friday, Dean Ralph Hillsman disclosed this week.

The recruiting team will answer any questions students may have concerning the organization and assist students in filling out application blanks.

Interviews will be given to VISTA hopefuls and then volunteers will be chosen. Any interested student should apply, Hillsman said, since a student has no way of knowing whether his skills are needed.



VISTA has been called the domestic peace corps because volunteers serve much in the same way as do their companions overseas.

VISTA volunteers must meet the barest essential requirements to apply. They must be at least 18 and a citizen of the United States. If the applicant is married, his spouse must also apply and be approved. No married couple may have dependents under 18 years of age.

There are no educational requirements to apply, although a high school diploma is desirable. VISTA volunteers are chosen according to their abilities, leadership qualities, personality and the need of the organization.

All volunteers are selected, trained and assigned by the organization. The training program usually lasts anywhere from four to six weeks depending upon the nature of the assignment. The volunteers are trained in an area which resembles, as closely as possible, the assignment they will be given.

Devlun Photos In Exhibit

Madison Devlin, right, of the audio-visual aids department here, is one of 35 professional photographers who are presenting an exhibit to show the many and different aspects of professional photography to the public.

The exhibit, which is being sponsored by the American Society of Magazine Photographers, is scheduled to begin June 10 in the Crown Zellerbach building in San Francisco and end July 1, when it will begin a tour of the Bay Area including the Kaiser Center in Marin County.

Devlin's panel will contain some four or five different black and white photos ranging in subject matter from landscapes to a famous old sway-back cavalry horse in Marin.

Devlin said that the photos in the exhibit will cover the whole field of photo-journalism not only in black and white but in color as well.

Commencement-Awards Assembly Honors 154

By Connie Skipitares

A total of 154 scholarships and honors this year will be awarded to students here at the thirty-first annual Commencement Observance and Awards Assembly to be held in the theater tomorrow.

President Louis G. Conlan has excused all of the awardees and graduating students from their 10 and 11 o'clock classes tomorrow for participation in the assembly.

Following the assembly, a reception will be held in the Horticulture Center for the honor students, the scholarship awardees and their families.

Highlighting the assembly will be the presentation of the President's Scholastic Cup for highest scholastic achievement, awarded by Conlan himself, and the President's Plaque for outstanding service, to be presented by Dean of Women Mary Golding and Dean of Men Ralph Hillsman to the two respective recipients.

The awards program begins with the traditional welcome by the presiding President Conlan. Valedictorian Mrs. Michael Diane San Felipe and "response" speaker Gregory Frazier are students representing the graduates.

Bruce Fisher, Sophomore Class president, will represent the class.

Fourteen memorial scholarships will be awarded by Dean Golding.

- The Archibald J. Cloud scholarship will be awarded to Lois Frediani and James Van Soletti.
- The Flossita Badger scholarship will go to Joan Baron and Mary Tufo.
- Judith Stewart will receive the Margaret Dougherty award.
- Recipients of the William Mayo scholarship will be Robert Bossi and Edgar McAtee.
- The Edith Pence scholarship will go to Barbara Chromiak, Sharon Gannon and Cathy Terzian.
- Diana Caliz and Myrta Perez will receive the James Denman scholarship.
- The Alice Eastwood scholarship will be awarded to Philip Arcuri, Jon Huttinger, Gene Moggia, Perry Moore, Charles Purcell and Ralph Rivas.
- The William Eckert scholarship will be awarded to Carolyn Johnson.
- Kenneth Yee will receive the Frederick Ward Foultz scholarship.
- The Dr. E. Frank Inskipp scholarship will go to Geraldine A. Gibson.
- Mary Ontiveras will receive the Florence Louis scholarship.
- The Eugene and Fanchon Mead scholarship will be awarded to Lula Tubbs.
- Richard Biezze will receive the Mrs. Edward De Witt Taylor scholarship.
- The recipient of the Dorothy Mercer scholarship is Diana Caliz.

Seven special scholarships will be presented by Coordinator of Instruction Lloyd D. Luckmann.

- RIS Foundation scholarship will be awarded to Richard Thomas.
- State of California scholarships will go to Carol Powell and Donald Quok.
- John Huang, Jobst Singer, Sylvia Selim and John Wilkes III will receive University of California scholarships.
- Chapman College scholarships will be awarded to Karen Carlson and Craig Menefee.
- Natalie Federoff and Masai Ohy will be awarded Bank of America scholarships.
- Pickett Slide Rule scholarships will go to Peter Chin, William Chen, Edward Mieh, Luther Nieh, Seraphim Upshinsky and Alexander Wong.
- Joan Morris is the Wall Street Journal award winner.

Organizational scholarships will be awarded by Dean Hillsman.

- California Scottish Rite Foundation scholarships winners are Marilyn Boynton, Richard Chin, Peter D'Angelo, Helen Ferentinos, Lisa Friend, Linda Krausse, William Noonan and Jobst Singer.
- The International Relations Club scholarships will go to Marie C. Gonzalez and Giuseppe M. Greco.
- League of Musicians' Wives scholarships will go to Antone J. Liqueri and John Michael.
- Luther Nish will be awarded the China town Optimist Club scholarship.
- James Fong, Sharon Fong, Eugene Lee, James Marron, Mary Ontiveras, Sandra Tom will all receive Chinese Students' Club scholarships.
- Square and Circle scholarship will go to John Chin.
- Sandra Gay Braccia will receive the Dental Assistants Association award.
- Dental Education awards will go to Thomas Clooney, Mae Ching Lee and Peter Zoubounis.
- Executive Secretaries scholarships will go to Diana Elson, Marie M. Gonsalves, Sandra Harris, Linda Joe and Amy Terada.
- Foot Printers' Association awards will be received by Joe Parnell and Robert Tietjen.
- Medical Assistants Association scholarships will be awarded to Sandra Glasser and Claudia Waligora.
- California Parents and Teachers, Inc. scholarship will go to Gloria Matoza.
- Earl Braverman will be the recipient of the Printing House Craftsmen award.
- Retail Floristry scholarships will be awarded to Virginia Eberlin, La Donne Lundrguen and Celeste Stracener.
- San Joaquin Valley Surveyors scholarship will go to John Francis Rogers.

Departmental scholarships will be presented by Dean of Instruction Harry Buttimer. The Academy of Art scholarship will be awarded to Winston Sin; the United States Post Office awards to Carolyn Johnston, Virginia Toich and Jerry Tokugawa.

Advertising Art and Design Department scholarships will be announced at the program.

The Hotel and Restaurant department will be awarding scholarships to James Bette, John B. Skance, Michael Vaile, Michael Dunn, John Kugler, David Hoof, Ronald B. Daniels, Mark Navratil, Leonard Nossaman, Abraham Seruya, Sam Morrato, Ronald Daniels, Max Greenspan, Yasutaka Fugiwara, Stephen Magnani, Ray Atkinson, Jeremy Harrison, Carl Jensen, Thomas Marquoit, Anthony Marrato, Michael Vidal, Jerry Yee and Carol Beggetta.

Twenty-one students will be graduating with honors.

McCarthy Hearings Film Tomorrow

Point Of Order, the documentary film based on the controversial McCarthy-Army hearings of 1954, will be tomorrow night's movie in the theater at 8 p.m.

Produced by Emile De Antonio and Daniel Talbot, and edited by Robert Duncan from film footage of the famous television Senatorial hearings, the film condenses to 97 minutes what actually lasted for hours, running from April through June of that year.

Little purpose has really been served at this early date in preparing for theatrical release one of the more unpleasant moments of American history. It has interest only to politicians and sociologists, if at all.

Later generations, who will view it more objectively, will probably find it more to their taste, historically, than this generation does.

Term-Paperitis

By Greg Frazier

THE TIME has come for educators the world over to re-evaluate their positions in regard to the term paper. Previous attitudes that ". . . the term paper is good for students because . . . it makes them sweat,"[1] are no longer valid in light of new scientific evidence.

Dr. Morris Muscletone sweeps aside the "goodness" of this attitude, stating.

"The mere thought of the term paper produces an overabundance of the apocrine secretion in the student's thaploid gland, which triggers excessive perspiration in the region of the underarms, causing malodorous complications which no present deodorant can rectify."[2]

On the other hand, Prof. S. A. Dist spoke for a generation of his colleagues and set an educational milestone with this statement:

"The term paper is unquestionably the most difficult and hated task the student must face in the process of his education. Therefore, the term paper is good."[3]

"Bull!"[4] rebuts psychologist Hans Jungian. "The student's hatred of the term paper has definite psychological repercussions. It lies smoldering in the unconscious upsetting dissonant cognizance and seriously erupts and manifests itself in antisocial behavior. The majority of card-carrying protestors is suffering from severe termpaperitis."[5]

Term papers have also driven students to severe mental breakdowns, plagurism and the use of LSD. One San Francisco student was recently discovered swinging through the trees in Golden Gate Park, babbling incoherently about bibliographies, footnotes, op cites and other term paper jargon.

Subsequent investigation disclosed that the student had taken a large dose of LSD, and believed that exclamation points, periods and various punctuation marks were chasing him. His breakdown was ultimately traced to over-anxiety caused by his inability to complete an assigned term paper.[6]

Educators, take heed. There is no place in the Great Society for the term paper.

(De)grading System

By Rich Heintz

COLLEGE is supposedly a place where students learn, not only their class work, but also independence of thought.

But today, this is not the case. It seems that a grade point has replaced independent thinking as a goal. A grade point does not necessarily reflect a student's ability to think as much as it reflects that student's ability to memorize, especially in this age of the IBM tests.

That's why a pass or fail grading system outclasses any grade point system. There are many reasons why the pass or fail system is superior.

In America today, many people feel that college should be a place to learn a vocation so that a person can earn more money, and it is. But, if a college is to teach that person how to live a better life, then the student should take courses outside of his major field.

This is where a grade point system fails. Who in his right mind is going to endanger his grade point by taking a course which might be difficult and is outside of his major field of study?

As an Associated Collegiate Press release quotes the Western Michigan University paper, the Western Herald, the "New draft procedures are making grades increasingly important, magnifying all the drawbacks of the grading system. Students will soon take only courses in which they know they can do well, thereby narrowing and limiting their educational experiences."

Perhaps memorization is the biggest sin of a grade point system and the greatest would-be virtue of a pass or fail system.

Present testing methods require that a student memorize, but they do not require a person to think, at least in many courses. Learn it for the test and forget it. But the pass or fail system would combine the two, memorization and learning. The entire testing system would have to change (and hopefully it would), since presumably if the grading system changed so would the attitude towards testing.

Expression of thought, both written and oral, instead of the impressions of a pencil on a ditto sheet would become the standard.

The North Carolina State University Technician states it well in another ACP release: "When graduation time draws near, the determining factor in presenting a degree would be the total knowledge and understanding obtained by the student in his four or five years at the University . . ."

If a college is to foster independence, then the pass or fail system should be employed. But then, maybe America isn't ready yet for independence.

Individuality Lost In Shadow Of Computer In Specialty Age

LAST MONTH, Dr. Edward Feigenbaum, associate professor of computer science at Stanford, spoke on campus about the capabilities and possibilities of the computer.

During the week preceding Feigenbaum's talk, Guardsman columnist Pete Dorn pointed out the coincidence that a movie shown on campus to various classes, Edge Of Abundance, sounded out a warning against automation and computers while Feigenbaum's planned speech subject was partial to them.

The further we move into this technological age, the less semi-skilled and unskilled labor remains. A high school diploma is rapidly losing any influence it had, and the college degree is becoming a "must." The big push is toward "the simpler way" and specialization. The individual is getting lost in this shove.

A person can now go to college so he can learn to tell a computer what to do. Right now 50,000 Americans have the sole job, known as programming, of guiding a computer. By 1970, according to the Science Digest, 275,000 more programmers will be needed.

We can't help but think of the day that may come when the computer will virtually run every phaze of our lives. Computers are used in relation with polls which eventually classify people according to what they think about certain things such as their favorite color.

This isn't a warning of the Robot's taking over; it's just a rewarning — which started sometime in the 1950s and probably even earlier — against the computer classification and simplicity taking away a human being's individuality.

Today the United States Air Force is using a computer program to pick the right man for the right job. The USAF has three computers in a Nebraska air base which are linked up with every major air base in this country and in Europe.

Each computer has a similar system and uses the same "computer language." With this program, the Air Force is able to place hundreds of men it has stationed all over the world in the right position according to the computer.

The disheartening thing is that it is apparently working. Haven't we always been told that we, as distinct individuals, can be anything we want to be? Nothing was ever said about a machine planning our futures. We hope this doesn't become widespread.

Competition Responsible For Advance Of Cheaters

By John Lee

In the last decade American educators have seen, perhaps even aided, the advance of the cheater throughout the higher institutions of learning in this country.

Since the end of World War II, the role of the colleges across the nation in the growth and development of American business and industry has steadily increased as has the demand for a four-year college education.

As the demands increase, so do the pressures on college students to excel above their fellow students in any and all fields. The attitude has then developed that to excel one must be superior; if one isn't superior in knowledge, then he must be superior in cheating to survive.

While cheating should be primarily an individual problem, all thoughts and designs of which should theoretically be smothered in each individual's conscience, the increased competition in the higher institutions has caused it to expand into a mass media.

Most educators agree that cheating and competition go together like a typical American breakfast of ham and eggs with orange juice, yet they either fail to recognize, or refuse to recognize the fact that to cure the primary problem at hand you must first eliminate those conditions which are causing it.

Since the competition can never be eliminated from our modern society, if it is expected to remain healthy, the problem is to ease those tensions which helped to give cheating its boost.

One way of easing these tensions is to stop encouraging students to cheat with statements of the penalties of cheating plus an additive of the "just don't get caught" nature.

Of the many suggestions about the best "sure-fire" way to stop cheating, possibly the best is to change the moral values of our present 'great society' and to damn cheating rather than condone it.

If a person caught cheating were ostracized thoroughly instead of forgiven, perhaps the next time he would think twice before making use of the opportunity to cheat, and cheating as a mass media would be on a definite downswing.

Fourteen Mugs Wait Identity

The registrar's office is desperately attempting to 'save face' for 14 students who are currently roaming the campus with no apparent knowledge of their strange predicament.

As the office once again plays host to the semesterly "face without a name" game, it has thus far proved itself a 14-time loser in attempting to locate the 14 file-photoless students registered by the statistics at the college.

Photographs, taken at registration, of all 14 victims are posted in the "wanted by FBI" corner of the registrar's office, where two of the mugs have been unhelpfully nicknamed Batman and Robin by "pen-happy" fellow students.

The secretaries in the office have been baffled and unable to match the photos of these 14 students with their respective processing files because of the duplication of the confusingly common and frequently used surnames and first initials of the students.

Who are they?

At least by their pictures, it appears that six men and eight women students comprise the list of unidentifiables, with names ranging in frequency from Smith to Lee.

Probably so far the only thing that has kept wandering students away from the photos is another "pen-happy" student's inscription of "wanted by FBI" decorating the poster.

The registrar's office has created quite a task for itself in undertaking the investigation.

Outpost

South Sea Break

By B.T.

MARY JANE LEARNARD, registrar, will vacate her job on June 30, leave all pressures to her successor and relax in the South Seas.

"I would like to visit Tahiti, Pago Pago, and all those lovely islands. Then I will return to the family ranch in Palo Alto where I can be with the family, and continue to ride horses," she said.

Miss Learnard has the secret for combating tension and pressures, for she possesses a rare tranquility and even temperament.

I'm happy to get away from the pressures of this job. But I don't dwell on problems, even if I disagree. Fortunately, I have the ability to take what comes and let unpleasant things remain forgotten," Miss Learnard said.

Miss Learnard has spent 42 years of her life in the employment of the California school system. She started as a secretary to the Superintendent of Schools in Sacramento, and worked at Sacramento Junior College.

Then she helped start this college, and has remained here since its opening in 1935.

"I'm what you call a classic example of people who go to college and never come out doing what they majored in. My major was French! I studied French, Spanish and Italian. I love languages.

"But the job I wanted just wasn't available. I stumbled into this job, and have enjoyed it," she said.

Miss Learnard feels that a "good strong basic education" is needed by all. "Just so a person is capable of changing directions, that's the most IMPORTANT thing," she advised.

She earned her BA (1923) and MA (1935) at Stanford University.

"I remember when we used to post and sort cards here by hand. We had faculty volunteers who helped type all records. Now we have automation, and it is great fun to work with the machines and convert to them. The machines do so much tedious work.

"But the most exciting thing about my years here is that I helped pioneer two colleges. The one thing I am sad about is that our commencement ceremonies are always held indoors. One year we had the commencement program at Sigmund Stern Grove, and it was magnificent. Too bad it isn't done anymore," Miss Learnard lamented.

Lorca's Labor Lost

By Albert Hilliard Hughes

ACADEMIC THEATER quite often can be a blessing or a bore for both the dedicated and the nondedicated theater-goer. One blessing is that it enables audiences to see plays not otherwise available. However, some productions of certain plays do not justify a presentation.

Federico Garcia Lorca's Blood Wedding, as it was done May 11 through 14 by the drama department, was not a blessing. This is regrettable, as Lorca's great Spanish tragedy, which mixes realism and poetry in telling its story of love and hate, deserves better treatment. One factor instrumental in weakening the City College production was its collection of unrestrained accents, ranging from "terribly British" to good old mid-western twanginess. There was an obvious lack of true Spanish flavor to the play.

Drama students are very often encouraged to sacrifice much of their characterization for the sake of diction and audibility. This evidently was the circumstance behind this production.

The majority of the cast had merely learned so many lines and this was revealed through their failure to infuse them with any sort of emotion.

As the bride, Phyllis Melmon had moments in which one almost believed in the character; Leonardo, as played by Kamron Wowsar, exhibited a spark in Act Two; and Lana Tershy, in her Act One scene, displayed the only understanding of the play.

A few members of the cast performed dutifully, if nothing else, while others simply walked on stage, said so many meaningless lines (as they spoke them), then made their exit.

Walter Krumm, who has staged some fine productions in the past two years, is to be commended for wanting to stage Lorca's play. But, miscasting in most of the roles, failure to standardize accents, and bad timing throughout the play, only weakened what had potential.

Blood Wedding is not an easy play to stage, even by a better than competent cast; in lesser hands it becomes a tedious evening of theater.

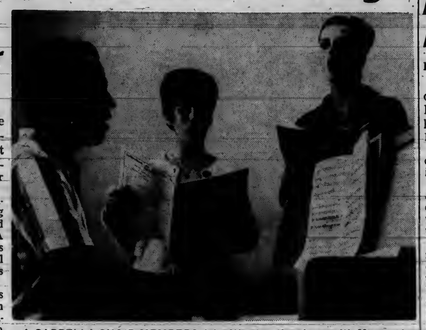
Second Choral Concert Here Tonight

Women's Glee, A Cappella Choir Both Perform

The A Cappella Choir and the Women's Glee will present a second choral concert tonight at 8 p.m. in the campus theater, according to William Grothkopp, choir director.



The Women's Glee, under the direction of Richard Penner, will sing Pergolesi's Stabat Mater, a sacred piece for soprano and alto. The A Cappella Choir will perform Milhaud's Jewish Sacred Service featuring well known Bay Area baritone Edgar Jones as soloist.

Composer Darius Milhaud teaches alternately at Mills College and in Paris. Jones teaches voice and conducts the chorus at Mills. He also sings with the Bach and Mozart Group which performed here last fall.

Jones sang the premier of Jewish Sacred Service in May, 1949 at Temple Emmanuel with Milhaud conducting.

James Haran will be the reciter for the program.

Admission to the concert is by ticket only, Grothkopp said. They may be obtained in A-129 or from Dean James Biltwiller in C-302.

Forum Magazine Due Tuesday At Ramporium

Poetry will dominate this year's Forum Magazine, City College's campus literary publication, which will be released Tuesday, May 31, at the Ramporium, Adviser Catherine Connolly announced today.

Forum, an annual publication distributed each spring, contains a variety of creative material in the fields of art, photography, prose, poetry and music. The work is completely student-at-large contributions and represents long hours of work and thought.

Of the many manuscripts submitted, those published were judged by Forum staff as the best. This year's co-editors of Forum are Valerie Hughes and Bill Huebsch.

A highlight of the publication is expected to be the photographic contributions. Featured among these is a display of photography taken by prize-winning students of instructor Emmett Smith.

Council Votes To Install Juke Box In Statler On Trial Basis

By Jeff Kraus

Student Council last week adopted a resolution to provide a juke box to be set up in Statler wing on a trial basis for one semester.

Councilman Joe Parnell proposed the resolution. He stated that many students would enjoy the benefits of the juke box in Statler wing, as it would be "very relaxing." It would also make Statler wing more like a student lounge.

Councilman Fred Stewart objected, saying that the noise from the juke box would disturb any students who felt like discussing matters of importance, such as politics. Stewart pointed out that Statler wing is the only place a student can go after 2:30 p.m. to relax, have a cup of coffee and discuss intelligent subjects.

It was at this point that Councilman Chris Loo amended the bill to read "on a trial basis for one semester." Council accepted his amendment.

The vote was taken and council passed the resolution by a 7-4-2 vote. The juke box will go in Statler wing in the near future.

Council heard two requests for funds. The first request was from the baseball team, in the amount of $247.50, for participation in the Northern California Baseball Championships. The money was for travel expenses and umpires' fees.

The other request was from Councilman Stewart for $25. Stewart needed the money to have fliers made up and to pay for some additional pamphlets describing a student tutorial program.

This program is designed to help underprivileged children in San Francisco. Council supported Stewart's work in this field by allocating the money.

Councilman Steve Ahern brought forward a resolution that met with council's unanimous approval. He suggested that council acknowledge Ruth Inskipp's 13 years of "devoted service to the college" by sending her a bouquet of roses and a framed resolution of appreciation. Mrs. Inskipp, dental assisting instructor, retires in June.

Alpha Sigma Delta Holds Book Drive Dance Friday

A dance for the benefit of the Asian Book foundation will be held Friday night in Smith Hall beginning at 9 p.m., according to Chuck Pickens, president of Alpha Sigma Delta.

Admission to the dance will be either five books or $1, Pickens said, but books are preferred.

Musical entertainment will be furnished by the Friendly Strangers who appeared at the book drive kick-off rally May 19 at the Ram.

This event marks the third annual Asian Book Drive and, according to Pickens, is held every spring semester. The books will be distributed overseas to those who normally could not afford them.

Supreme Court Defines Obscenity In Selling But Not In Writing

By Bill Fritz

The Supreme Court has been in a dilemma over obscenity. It can't define it. As a result, Ralph Ginzburg now will have to spend five years in jail and $28,000 paying for the Court's quandary.

Previously, the Court had established three criteria for determining whether material was obscene.

First, the material had to be utterly without redeeming social importance; second, the dominant theme of the material had to appeal to the prurient interests of the average adult; third, the material must affront contemporary standards—that is, the national standards as determined by the Supreme Court.

In a pluralistic society, almost any material is bound to meet one of the requirements. Therefore, the Court has accepted at least a half dozen obscenity cases since delineating these criteria; but they have not declared one piece of writing obscene.

Nor did they change this record last month when they upheld the conviction and fine of Ralph Ginzburg, publisher of EROS. The Court, in a five-to-four verdict, upheld the sentence on the grounds of salacious sales pitches. The advertisements, claimed Justice Brennan, "deliberately emphasized the sexually provocative aspects of the work in order to catch the salaciously disposed."

The Court, in its anxiety to demonstrate it can label something obscene, has left itself in a precarious position. American advertising uses "salacious appeals" in order to induce the consumer to part with his money.

Is the "Dodge Rebellion" now crushed because of that slinky, capri-clad female who crawls all over their cars? Or what about the perfume that asks: "What maks a shy girl get Intimate?"

In two other obscenity decisions last month, the Court was once again forced to bend its original guidelines. It upheld Edward Mishkin's three-year conviction by declaring that a magazine no longer need appeal to the prurient interests of the average adult, but to the prurient interests of any "probably recipient group." And in overruling a Massachusetts ban on Fanny Hill, it maintained that Fanny belonged to the history of English literature rather than that of smut. However, it indicated that any salacious advertising of Fanny would subject it to the same ruling as EROS.

More difficulties present themselves. What of the work that does not appeal to the prurient interests of the average adult, but at the same time attracts among its recipient group those whose prurient interests are appealed to?

And if the justices were trying to sell Fanny Hill, how would they describe it without appealing to prurient interests? Where is the line drawn? Perhaps the time has come for the Supreme Court to recognize the futility of defining obscenity in a pluralistic culture where one man's opinion is as good as another's. Plurality has its price, and the maintenance of morality by the individual rather than the state is one of them.

Deferment Exam Deadline Slated Next Wednesday

By Viggo Petersen

Final deadline is next Wednesday for filing applications for the last selective service test to be held June 24, according to Tom Nesbitt, director of the testing office.

Applications for the test may be obtained in the testing office located in S-142.

The June application date and the June 24 testing date were recently established for the benefit of students who did not file last April for the first three testing dates.

Students may obtain a general information pamphlet, an application card and an addressed envelope in the testing office. After the application has been mailed, the student will receive a notification by mail informing him of the time and room number of the test. He will also receive an "admission ticket."

Applications for the June 24 test must be postmarked no later than midnight Wednesday, June 1.

Nesbitt said that no anti-test demonstrations were held on previous testing dates at City College. The only problem, he said, resulted when students found themselves finishing earlier than the three-hour alloted time limit.

According to the rules of the test, he continued, students must remain in the testing area for the full time limit. Many students found themselves finishing early and as a result became somewhat restless.

City College has notified the selective service testing center that it will be able to accommodate 350 students on the June 24 testing date, according to Nesbitt. He said that by this date all the students at City College who desired to take the test will have had an opportunity to do so.

Testing areas at the college have been in Cloud Hall, the library, Science Hall and Smith Hall.

'Don't Be Slotted,' Says Paul Goodman

By Susan Volk

Dr. Paul Goodman, controversial lecturer and social critic, suggested students "try to conceive a better future society," and prepare themselves now to contribute to the construction of such a society in an open discussion with students here last Thursday.

Goodman, now employed at the experimental college sponsored by the Associated Students of San Francisco State College, believes that most colleges today are preparing students to fit into prepared slots.

"Due to the defective characteristics of our society," he said, "few graduates will get jobs in which they can exercise any initiative."

Goodman thinks that many students aren't happy with prepared slots. "They either want to do it their own way or they want to make sure the slots are humanly worthy," he said.

"Most jobs," he said, "are of human, social use if performed honestly. He suggested that a person do nothing which doesn't fit his integrity even if he gets fired.

Summer Session Opens June 27, Ends August 5

Summer session this year begins on Monday, June 27, and any student wishing to attend should inform his counselor either by Friday or when he fills out his application for fall enrollment, according to Registrar Mary Jane Learnard.

Enrollment is open only to students in attendance at City College, Miss Learnard emphasized, and San Francisco high school graduates and senior students who have not attended another college.

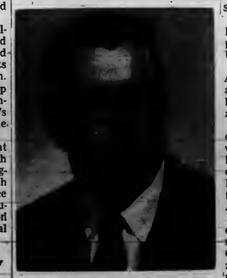
Registration procedure calls for programming followed by filling out registration books in the library at one of the following times:

From 9 a.m. to noon or 1 to 4 p.m. next Wednesday, from 9 a.m. to noon June 2, the same hours June 3 or the same hours Monday, June 27, in the registrar's office.

Most of the popular courses will be taught in the summer but there are a few general regulations the students must follow.

The maximum load is six units plus physical education. Any student enrolled in business administration 1B, chemistry 1A-B, or zoology 1A-B cannot enroll in any other class since these classes are considered full loads.

Any veterans under the new G.I. Bill or veteran dependents under provision P.L.634, must carry the equivalent of 14 lecture hours per week for full subsistence. These veterans or dependents are expected to report to the veterans affairs office in A-201.



The last day to drop a course, Miss Learnard said, will be July 8, and leaves of absence will not be granted after July 15. Unlike regular sessions, however, students cannot change schedules except to drop a course.

Summer session closes August 5, with finals scheduled August 4 and 5.

Lee, McDonald To Speak On Elections And BART

Professor Eugene Lee will speak on the California Primary Election — an analysis of registration, voting and procedures in general — during College Hour on Thursday, June 2, in the college theater.

The lecture is the last in this semester's Student-Faculty lecture series.

PROFESSOR EUGENE C. LEE, scheduled to speak here during College Hour, June 2.

Lee is an Associate Professor of Political Science and teaches in the political science department at the University of California at Berkeley.

He was graduated from UC at Los Angeles in 1946 and received his Ph.D. at Berkeley in 1957. From 1948 to 1950 he served as assistant to the city manager of San Leandro.

From 1955 to 1959, Lee was an academic assistant to Dr. Clark Kerr, first when the latter was Chancellor of the Berkeley campus, and later as President. Since 1959 he has served in the Institute of Governmental Studies, first as Assistant Director and later as Associate Director.

In 1962, Lee was appointed by Governor Edmund Brown as first chairman of the state's "Little Hoover Commission" on governmental organization and economy. A year later, he received a Rockefeller Foundation grant to engage in teaching and public service activities in East Africa.

Lee's appointment as Vice President, Executive Assistant of the university, was effective on February 1, 1965. His office is responsible for the preparation and processing of the agenda for the Regents' meetings and for the President's Cabinet and the Council of Chancellors.

His responsibilities also include a continuing review of administrative structure of the university and general coordination and liason between university-wide offices and the campuses.

He is the author of two books, The Politics of Nonpartisanship and California Votes; he is also the author of several articles that have appeared in professional journals, in the field of American state and local government and politics.

Tomorrow, George McDonald will speak and show slides on the topic BART Status Report during College Hour in S-100.

McDonald, a graduate of San Jose State College, is Director of Public Relations of the Bay Area Rapid Transit District where he has been employed six years.

For Whom Does Yon Bell Toll?

Rumors that Stanley Mudde, the celebrated campus bell-ringer, had bats in his belfry spread throughout campus last week.

Many students were rudely awakened from their classes when the first fire drill of the year was called in Cloud Hall.

Never having heard the college fire bell before, the irate students jumped to the conclusion that Mudde had either lost his cool or was rehearsing for his rumored bell-ringing appearance on the Ed Sullivan show.

Later, most students and faculty were willing to accept the explanation that the San Francisco Fire Department was responsible for the drill, although a few returned to classes vowing to fix Mudde's belfry so that all he would ever hear were bells.

College officials refused to comment.

Rams Vie For State Baseball Title

Tough Cerritos Next After Comeback Win In NorCal

By G. Frank Cooney

City College's best ever baseball team, winner of the Northern California title with a double header sweep over Santa Rosa Junior College, 3-1 and 5-4 in 11 innings, will now head to Norwalk and face the most gung-ho two-year college diamond squad in history, Cerritos College, this weekend for the State Championship.

The Rams, who came back after losing the first game of a three-game series, 6-4, at Santa Rosa last Friday, will be putting their all against the southerners starting with a 3:00 p.m. game Friday and winding up on noon Saturday with a scheduled double header. Best of three winner will be the State Champions.

Evidently as tough as nails, Cerritos has won every one of its 38 games this year. ". . . And we're downright set to make it 40 straight," said Cerritos coach, Wally Kincaid!

But Ernie Domecus' troops have other designs in mind.

Battling hard for each of their 27 victories, the Golden Gate Conference champs have won their way into the State Crown set—as one Ram player put it—"a la hustle."

If was hustle, or rather the lack of it, that almost cost the local nine the NorCal pennant. Leading, 4-2, in the first game against Santa Rosa, the Rams blew an easy double play that allowed the tying run to score and opened the way for the Cub's winning homer.

With one on and the score tied, 4-4, Cub second sacker, Bob Brown, pounded a liner toward the left field fence 445 feet away. But left fielder, Gerald Bosch, crashed the cyclone fence to prevent the ball from leaving the premises. Coming to the ground sorely hurting from his collision with the fence, Bosch was unable to make a play and the ball lay untouched alongside the injured outfielder while Brown easily scampered around.

So Brown was credited with an inside the park homer as shortstop Paul Gimbre scrambled out to attempt the impossible throw as the Ram centerfielder looked on.

Nearly flawless in their home game, the Bear-Cubs finally let their booboos undo them in the first game of the twin bill at Balboa Park. While Santa Rosa's third bagger, Tim Hagen, showed some nifty glove work in the first clash, his two errors in the second game meant the difference.

Bill Kirkpatrick's heroics were hard to imagine. The Ram mound ace got credit for—other than a worn-out arm—both of the victories in the double header. Finishing up strong in the first game, Kirkpatrick stayed warm through the second battle and when Hugh Miller looked like he was tiring Kirkpatrick came on in the eighth and stayed in through the eleventh without yielding a run.

Kirkpatrick also got credit for the 15-8 clobber over Laney College in the pre-NorCal regionals.

So now the stage is set for City College's sixth State title try this year, and again the Rams will play the David role on the Goliath's stomping grounds.

Track Team Places Third In NorCal; State Meet Next

By G. Frank Cooney

Los Altos Hills—Still in somewhat of a slump, if track teams are allowed such terminology, City College's injury plagued track team finished behind Fresno City College at 98 points and Allan Hancock at 54 digits with 52 Rams units in the Northern California Track Meet here Saturday.

Successfully defending their NorCal title, Fresno's Rams scored only two firsts but picked up ample points along the way to easily outclass all competition.

Still unbeaten, the Ram 440 relay team of Banks-Prince-Simpson and Benton clocked a 41.1 for one of City College's two first places. The previous week the same quartet set a pending National Junior College record by stopping the watch at 40.9.

Dwight Tucker, unbeatable through regular season, yielded to his second upset of the last two outings by placing second behind Fresno's Don Thompson in the triple jump with a leap of 48-9¼ to Thompson's 49-4. Tucker has three stepped 51-1¼ this year.

Not to be completely outdone, the former football end won the high jump competition with a disappointing leap of 6-6. In this event Tucker has shown phenominal promise all year and has a best of 6-10¼.

Hancock distance runner—via Britain—Neill Duggan scored a triple victory in the mile, two mile and 880, and was the standout in individual competition, indeed all competition.

The first four finishers in each event, and seven in field events, get to compete in the State Championships.

With such being the case, O. J. Simpson did not make either the 220 or 100-yard dash cutoff.

Rams heading for the State finals will be the 440's big four, who will double in the 880 relay; high and triple jumper, Tucker; and Bob Prince who qualified with a third place 21.7 220-yard dash mark.

TEAM SCORING—Fresno CC, 98; Hancock, 54, San Francisco, 52; Foothill, 50; Contra Costa, 42; Sequoias, 32; San Jose CC, 25; Chabot, 16; San Mateo, 12; Marin, 10; Merritt, 8½; Porterville, 6; Reedley, 6; Siskiyous, 6.

ACTION AT THE HOT CORNER—San Mateo runner slides safely into the bag as third baseman Milt Panagatacos patiently awaits for the relay from the outfield. The Rams stopped the Bulldogs' winning streak at 15 games, by a 7-3 score, and won the conference title.

Pennant Winners 'Behind' Bulldogs In All-Conference

The Rams may have clobbered San Mateo in the Golden Gate Conference final to capture the league baseball pennant, but they were forced to play second fiddle behind the Bulldogs in All-Conference selections released by conference commissioner Louis G. Batmale last week.

San Francisco's winningest pitcher, Bill Kirkpatrick, who compiled a 2.04 earned run average in 88⅓ innings while winning eight conference games and losing one, is half of the college's All-Conference duo.

Also on the mythical squad is power-hitting Ram catcher Steve Howder who has punched two homers and three, triples in the last 14 games and wound up the season at .298 with 15 runs batted in.

While both these players made first squad, nary another Ram from this college's best-ever baseball team was even mentioned.

The second-place Bulldogs, however, placed a total of four players on the first and second squads.

Even though San Francisco batting averages were not the best, it was expected that Ram righthander Greg Sinclair would have at least made second club. Chabot's Dick Tidrow made second string with a 7-6 record and a 2.50 ERA. Sinclair's ERA was 2.07 and his record 7-2.

Basketball Team Loses Four Top Players To Scholarships

With the City College basketball season only two months over, Coach Sid Phelan is already looking forward to next year.

The Rams, second-place team in the state finals this year, will lose four of the top six men on that squad.

Ed Wilson, Willie Jones and Charlie Parks will be attending the University of Idaho in the fall as a result of scholarships. Although guard-forward Willie Wise will be still playing in the Bay Area he is the recipient of a scholarship at the University of San Francisco.

Wilson, Jones and Parks will all be juniors at Idaho, but the loss of Wise, who had one more year of eligibility left at the college, will definitely hurt the Rams next season. He will transfer to USF as a sophomore.

Coach Phelan plans to build around returning All-Conference center Gene Williams. The Rams will be still loaded with height with the return of backup men Bill Berger and Girard Chatman.

At guard, the team should be strong with the return of starting guard Paul Batmale, John Pezzolo and Isaac Neal.

City College Sixth In State Golf Tourney

The 1966 golf season has finally come to an end, and City College has found its niche as the number six team in the state. The Rams finished 20 strokes back of first-place College of the Desert which won with a 763 total.

Coach Grover Klemmer's charges finished higher in the standings than any other Golden Gate Conference team. However, College of San Mateo was only seven strokes behind the San Franciscans. The Rams had a 783 total while the Bulldogs shot a 790.

This year's tournament was one of the closest in recent years. Each of the top 10 teams had sub-800 totals and the tenth-place team was only 33 strokes behind the winner.

The individual competition was won by Greg McHatton of Fullerton Junior College. He shot a 144. Earlier this year McHatton won the Fresno Easter tournament in which Fullerton also won the team title.

Eight of the top 16 spots were dominated by the colleges from Southern California. Third place went to El Camino and fourth went to Los Angeles Valley, both of the Metropolitan Conference. In fifth place was Santa Ana College which edged out San Francisco by only two strokes.

Eighth and ninth places were occupied by Glendale and San Diego City College, respectively.

The next five spots all went to Northern California teams, the teams being Menlo, San Joaquin Delta, Merced, Allan Hancock and American River.

In 15th place was Santa Barbara City College and in the number 16 position was Sierra College.

Conlan To Speak At Block Awards Banquet Tuesday

Louis G. Conlan, president of the college, will be the keynote speaker at the semiannual Block SF sports banquet next Tuesday, May 31, at Smith Hall.

Arthur "Dutch" Elston, Block SF sponsor said today that the dinner will honor all athletes in spring semester sports. Also on hand for the affair will be all the San Francisco high school coaches as guests of the Block SF Society.

Each Ram coach will describe his team and announce his most valuable athlete, who will be rewarded with a trophy. The outstanding sophomore athlete will also get a trophy for being selected as most valuable.

Ram teams this spring have won the Golden Gate Conference title in all sports except one. Basketball, track, golf and baseball teams have all brought the title to City College. The lone spring sport that did not win was the swim team.

Cost of the awards is budgeted by the Associated Student treasury. The dinner will be prepared and served by the college's hotel and restaurant department.

Playoffs Decide Intra Winners

Two playoff games were necessary last week to determine the intramural Club and Independent-Fraternity league winners, respectively.

The Newman Club met Foley's Flashes in a rubber match which saw the smaller Vikings display an effective fast break to beat the Flashes, 45-35.

In the second playoff game, surprising Soul Plus upset the round robin champ Irish, paced by Eural Smothers 20 points. The game was tied several times and was knotted 22-22 at the half. The Irish missed five free throws in the last two minutes.

Soul Plus won, 41-40.

The Soul Plus and the Newman Club Vikings clashed Monday night for the intramural title in the Associated Men Student semiannual Sportsnight. Results were not in at press time.

Netters Wind Up Second In State Championship At Sacto

By Randy Koernig

City College's two-man contingent to the State Junior College Tennis Tournament surprised quite a few people, including Coach Roy Diederichsen, by battling to a second place finish at Sacramento's American River Junior College last Saturday.

After the Ram netters' second place finish at the North Sectional Tournament at Chabot College one week before the state tourney, the veteran mentor explained that it would be very difficult for the San Francisco entrant to take the state title because of the fact that with only two players, Greg Shephard and George Pontikoff, City College would not be able to pick up any early match points.

However Shephard was not eliminated from the singles competition until the final round when he lost the title to American River's Larry Hall, 7-5, 3-6, 6-4.

It is interesting to note that Shephard and Hall were at one time the top seeded doubles team—in the Boys'-18 division in Northern California, one of Shephard's high school teammates informed this reporter.

Shephard and Pontikoff remained in contention for the doubles crown until the quarterfinal round when they fell before the team of Lawson and Inholt of Los Angeles City College. The score of the three-set match was 6-3, 4-6, 6-4.

Finishing in third place behind San Francisco was Los Angeles City College. Foothill College, the famed champion-grower of Los Altos Hills, settled in the middle of the pack at the finish.

College of San Mateo, in the eyes of many observers the second strongest team in the Golden Gate Conference, failed to win even one match.

In finishing second in the state the college's tennis squad finds itself in the company of this year's Ram basketball team which also ended up as the state's second best team.

O. J., Taylor Sign With Trojans

O. J. Simpson, the greatest force in City College football since Ollie Matson, and Mike Taylor have filed "letters of intent" with the University of Southern California.

Taylor, a 6-5, 258-pound tackle, was part of the "team of Ross-Malac-Dunn and Colombo" who were greatly responsible for the club's fantastic season. For his efforts Taylor was named to the first team all-conference and was awarded the best lineman trophy in the Pruno Bowl.

There just aren't enough words to describe City College's Junior College All-American O. J. Simpson. All year he had the power, the moves, the speed and the desire as he broke eight conference records and set two national marks.

Just a few of his accomplishments during the year were: most yardage rushing in a single game (304-18 carries), and most points scored in the league (126, 156-year).

Mayor Policy Threatened By Washington

By Peter Dorn

ONE OF THOSE education commissions has just suggested that all four and five-year-old children should be included in public education, and the suggestion has received broad Federal support.

Everybody will agree that sending the kiddies to school at an early age is a good thing and there is no need to point out all the obvious advantages.

Just one thing though; what is going to happen to afternoon television programs? What with all the tots at school, there will be no market for the cereal trust and the toy manufacturers, and so they will promptly stop financing the kiddie show.

Housewives, however, will have more leisure time and, therefore, will spend more time trying to outstare the one-eyed monster. Here, then, is a new era of television.

With a little overhauling, kiddie-geared shows can be made palatable for the housewife. How? Less action and more romance. All one has to do is to witness some daytime television and see the sort of thing that is oozed to the housewife daily; if she can take that stuff, she's ready for the new afternoon show.

In regard to housewife television, there is an old show business axiom, "Give 'em what they want." The old Mayor Art show, as an example, can be salvaged and, with a little alteration, be remade into another J. B. Tucker show, as "live" interview type shows seem to be popular with the little lady.

The cosmetics trust will stop at nothing upon being informed of the available air time; perhaps they will even succeed in giving Count Marco about three prime afternoon hours; perhaps Liberace will come back to the 21-inch color screen.

Shame on the fellow who breaks a leg, catches a cold, takes a vacation, or for some other reason finds it his misfortune to stay home for one weekday with nothing but a television set to pass the time; he'll never do it again.

Mother Of Four Is Graduating Valedictorian

Diane San Felipe, this semester's graduating valedictorian, is a 27-year-old housewife and mother of four children who maintained a 3.75 grade average while attending the college's night school program.

Mrs. San Felipe has spent eight years satisfying her 60-unit state college requirement.

The maintenance of an overall 3.75 grade average in her work enabled the determined mother to become eligible for the screening and later selection as valedictorian of the 1966 graduating class.

In a speech at the Commencement-Awards Assembly, she emphasized her belief that education should not stop after graduation, but should continue throughout life.

When questioned about her vital determination to further her education, Mrs. San Felipe attributed her initiative solely to husband Michael's persistent prompting. She's pretty glad he's a nag!

A pospective applicant for admission to San Francisco State College in the fall, Mrs. San Felipe intends to further her studies as an English major and music minor. Her ultimate goal is to become an elementary school teacher of either first, second or third grade, because, as she expresses it, she just "loves little ones."

Who says "moonlighting" doesn't have its rewards?! —C. S.

Barbara Wilson Scholastic Cup Winner; Service Award Goes To Clara Silva, Tom Cloney

Highlighting the thirty-first annual Commencement Observance and Awards Assembly was the presentation of the President's Cup for Highest Scholarship by City College President Louis G. Conlan to Barbara Anne Wilson for her total grade point average of 3.90.

Mrs. Wilson attained her high school diploma through correspondence study and attended classes in the college's night school program. She accomplished all this while caring for a husband and four children.

TOM CLONEY, one of the two winners of the President's Award Plaque May 26. The other was Clara Silva.

Second major award at the assembly was the President's Award Plaque for outstanding service by a graduating man and woman. This year's winners were Clara Silva and Tom Cloney.

Cloney was Sophomore Class President and State Information Chairman. As State Information Chairman he was in charge of compiling records which were sent to the California Board of Education.

Miss Silva was chosen for service with the Associated Women Students.

Mrs. Wilson, Carol De Pauw and Kenneth Eggers were graduated with Highest Honors for maintaining a 3.75 grade point average or better, while Louis Collins, Jr., Lawrence Coulter, Natalie Federoff, Annette Gross, John Huang, Ray Miller, Gohar Riddle, Diane San Felipe and Robert Zollman were graduated with High Honors, or a 3.5 average or higher.

Graduates with Honors and a minimum average of 3.3 were Gerardu Assebleregs, Ray Colla, John Hjelle, Rex Holloway, Michael Lee, Marilyn Moskovitz, Luther T. L. Neih, Diana Renstrom and Marie Snider.

The mean grade point average among the 21 honor graduates was 3.55 with seven of the 21 in the 3.6 or higher bracket.

The William J. Eckert Art Scholarship was awarded to Carolyn Johnston by the faculty of the Advertising Art and Design department.

"The $50 award was given to Miss Johnston on the basis of rare, consistent and conspicuous effort toward the perfection of her artistic talent," William Harris, advertising art instructor explained.

Victoria Cero, former advertising art and design student at the college, is the winner of a second award in the Ninth Annual Collegiate Advertising Art Contest. Miss Cero was graduated from the college in June of 1965 and is now a second semester student at the Art Center College of Design. She was also a winner in the United Crusade Poster Contest. Her major while at City College was advertising art and design.

The topic theme of the advertising art contest was "See The USA." The competition was sponsored by the Advertising Association of the West and by the Crown-Zellerbach Paper Company.

College To Explore Class Registration By Computer Plan

By Steven Hara

Automation in class registration may come as early as Fall 1967 if a pilot study in IBM data-proecessing proves practical, according to counselor Walter McCloud.

Information was gathered recently so that a study on the practicability of computerized registration could begin over the summer. The study's main purpose is to see if a machine can accommodate the programming whims of 9000-plus students, McCloud said.

Students selected at random at the rate of one in six filled out special program request sheets when they consulted their counselors for Fall programming.

The request sheets have spaces for courses, section numbers and an optional section for instructors. Of particular importance to the study, McCloud emphasized, is a small box on the sheet which accommodates the student's time availability on a weekly schedule.

The forms will be key-punched on an IBM card and fed into a specially programmed machine. The machine matches to the best of its ability the student's requests and the time schedule with which it is programmed.

The computer can make up to 500 matching attempts, but even then it may reject the student's program. McCloud said students could stump the machine by having too many requirements in the request sheets or possibly a bad time availability.

Stumping the machine, at this time, is the only major problem that could cause the whole system to fail. At other colleges where computers are used, success has been described as remarkable. Only three to five per cent of the total number of students registered could not be machine programmed.

Students who do beat the machine are manually processed by the counselors and the unfortunate thing here is that the student will face poorer odds in getting the courses he desires.

By the time his rejected card is found, even if he is processed immediately by counselors, chances are everyone else will already have been programmed.

The study is underway without any problems expected or anticipated. The atmosphere in the counseling office is one of optimism. If the study proves practical, McCloud said he looks forward to the day when Registration Week is lowered to just one day.

Four Tips On How To Be An Honor Student

By Rich Heintz

There are many different books on the market today concerned with bigger and better methods of studying. None of these books, however, leaves anything about better grades to chance; the only answer is hard work.

This semester there are 21 students graduating with Honors. Three of these students have maintained a 3.75 grade point average or better, winning Highest Honors. Nine other students maintained minimum 3.5 averages to gain High Honors, while another group of nine achieved 3.3 for Honors.

Concerning the areas in which the winners live: 45 and 5/11 per cent of the honor graduates live in the Western Addition; 9 and 1/11 per cent live in the Sunset; and 9 and 1/11 per cent live in Bayview; 27 and 3/11 per cent live in Noe Valley and 9 and 1/11 per cent live in Visitation Valley.

In relation to the semesters in the past, from June 1961 through June 1966, the average number of honor graduates was higher during the odd numbered years than during the even, with 32 and 2/3 per cent in the "odd years" as compared with 28 and 2/3 per cent.

On the average, the honor graduates had last names consisting of 6.09 letters.

The majority of the twenty-one honor graduates are women this semester, only five are men. Four women who received honors are married.

Even though the books proclaim that only hard work gets higher grades, it seems that it wouldn't hurt if a person happened to be a married woman who lives in the Western Addition, plans to graduate from City College during an odd-numbered year and who also happens to have a surname consisting of 6.09 letters.

Three Retiring Instructors Plan For Active Futures

By John Lee

Of the five instructors, three full-time and two part-time, who plan to retire at the end of this semester, at least three are already planning active futures.

A member of the administrative staff, Mary Jane Learnard, assistant registrar then registrar of City College for 31 years, will also be retiring in June—and heading for the South Seas.

The three full-time instructors are Ruth Inskipp, dental assisting; William Culver, drama, English and French; and Joseph Chapman, engineering. The two part-time faculty members are Walter Swanson of the hotel and restaurant staff and Harold Hill, X-ray technology.

Mrs. Inskipp has to her credit a long list of achievements including supervisor of dental assistants at the University of California, director of the program here and the establishment of a Dental Assistants scholarship in memory of her late husband, Dr. E. Frank Inskipp.

Culver came here after six years in the San Francisco high schools, directly from Commerce High in 1947, and taught English and drama until about four years ago when he joined the French department.

He isn't looking forward to retirement this year because he "will miss the association with the young people."

However, he has plans for the future in play directing and "popping in here from time to time."

Chapman left the Navy as a Captain after 30 years of service to join in the engineering department in 1956.

Despite his avowed reluctance to leave, Chapman really has no plans for the future except enjoying life, unless of course, he "gets restless."

Swanson is General Manager of the Convention Bureau and has come to City College one hour a week to lecture for 25 years.

He could not be reached about his future plans because he is already on his way to Europe via a slow boat.

Hill has taught X-ray teehonology part time at City College for 15 years having come here in 1951.

Harris Takes Top Prize In Radiology Lecture Contest

For the first time in the history of the conventions of the California Society of Radiologic Technologists, a two-year college student, Leon Harris, won first prize in the convention's lecture contest.

Harris, who is a premedical student studying X-ray at City College read his paper during the convention to describe newer and more efficient methods of Venography, an X-ray process to study veins, stated X-ray instructor William Hoskins.

Not only was this the first time that a two-year college student has won a top award at the convention but it is also the first time that a student from City College entered the contest.

The convention is attended by all of the major colleges in California with two-year courses in X-ray, and the top awards at the convention have been going in recent years to students from such colleges as Stanford and the University of California.

Harris, who is graduating this June, will serve an internship at the San Francisco Children's Hospital.

President Evaluates Semester

By Viggo Petersen

Spring, 1966, has been a "very successful" semester at City College according to Dr. Louis G. Conlan, president of the college.

"We have seen fewer disqualifications, a larger number of students returning to City College, increased interest in scholastic and student activities, and more students transferring to four-year colleges," Conlan said. "Students have approached their responsibilities well."

The President, in reminiscing over the semester, cited the successful achievements of the athletic department, the blood drive, the spring festival and student government.

Baseball, basketball, track, tennis and golf teams all competed well as their championships indicate, he said, and he gave special recognition to the teams which earned slots in the state tournaments.

Conlan commended Jim Soletti as Associated Student President, pointing to the fact that Soletti has been chosen President of the California Student Government Association. Soletti will preside over the Association's convention, which City College will organize.

Looking ahead, the President foresees a fall enrollment of approximately 9000 students in the daytime classes, which is about 700 students more than enrolled last fall. He said there would be no problem admitting these students to the college, but he predicted that enrolling in particular classes would be difficult.

He believes the increased enrollment is due to the increased number of draft calls to supply manpower for the war in Vietnam, and also due to a greater awareness of the values of a college education.

Computer registration, a process by which the availability of classes will be predetermined, will be in the experimental stages next semester, he said. The program will not go into effect until a year from next fall.

In respect to parking, President Conlan declared that no plans are under consideration to improve parking facilities. The present facilities are sufficient, he believes, adding that City College has been advised not to request use of the south reservoir.

Ex-Student Awarded National Fellowship

Ronnie Hennessey, a graduate of City College, was recently awarded a National Science Graduate Fellowship in Entomology.

Hennessey, who graduated in 1962, had previously received a Chinese Students Scholarship.

While at City College, Hennessey was "very much interested in genetics and parasitology and had great vocation for zoology," a science department spokesman said. At one time he collected and classified many of the lower vertebrates of the central region of California.

Born in San Antonio, Texas, Hennessey was graduated from Westmoor.

Big Sister Program Sign-Ups Underway

Sign-ups are now being taken in Dean of Women Mary Golding's office, S-150, for coeds wishing to act as "big sisters" or registration assistants for sisters" for the fall semester.

Two hundred coed are needed as "big sisters" to assist the 1000 new women students with the usual questions and problems that accompany orientation procedure at the college.

A brief but important meeting is scheduled for all applicants at 10 a.m. Friday, June 17, in S-100, according to Susanna Nasser, group chairman.

Impressions

By Greg Frazier

FOR MANY STUDENTS this semester will be their last at the college. After two long years of academic pursuits we are left with a multitude of impressions, some of which we will carry forever. Following are a few of this writer's impressions after two years of writing for a college newspaper.

• Man projects his lack of perfection into his institutions, and newspapers are certainly no exception. When a newspaper goes to print it exposes itself either to the favor or condemnation of those it serves. It makes itself a target for any and all manner of criticism—some deserving, some not so deserving— but this is an occupational hazard of owning, operating or working on a newspaper.

• If a newspaper could speak the truth to all persons in all places at all times either we'd all be reading the same newspaper or we'd crucify an editor.

• Journalism is very difficult, but not impossible, to learn in the classroom.

• The college newspaper places itself in double jeopardy. Not only must it weather the storm of student criticism, but also that of the faculty who are infinitely more knowledgeable and understanding.

• Readers of college newspapers must realize that they are staffed by students. And it's common knowledge that students make mistakes—just ask any teacher. But then, teachers also make mistakes—ask any student.

• Deadlines are exactly that. If you don't meet them, you're dead.

• Arguments rage as to whether the college newspaper should give greater coverage to campus news or world news. If there are presently 10,040 students in attendance at the college, then we suggest the college publish 10,040 separate newspapers.

• Reporters are never free from the echoes of yesterday's newspaper. (See today's Ram's Horn.)

• One thing that sets us humans apart from the animals is that we (hopefully) learn from our mistakes. This goes double for reporters. Their readers make sure of it.

• The Perfect Reporter passed away more than 1936 years ago, but we remaining carry on stubbornly.

• Today's modern newspaper reader wants not only news, bnt comprehensive analysis of the news, which makes us think that tomorrow's newspaper will be completely staffed by Compnters.

• College newspapers are merely reflections of the college they represent. It is from the college that they draw their material and their staff. Any criticism directed at the college newspaper is either directly or indirectly pointed at the college itself. Critics of the college newspaper would do well to examine the macrocosm of which the newspaper is but the microcosm.

• The only thing we know is what we read in the newspaper.

57 Varieties

Summer Travelog

By Rich Heintz

SUMMERTIME is here. Time to close the books (if they happened to be opened) and forget about college (if it hasn't been already).

It will be time for students to take off and fulfill their heart's desire, perhaps making money for a new car or taking a trip to Europe. For a great many people it will be a time to see the United States, whether just out sight-seeing, hunting, fishing, hiking, exploring . . .

For those students this summer who will spend their time enjoying the outdoor life in the U.S., and especially if they are optimists, there is some advice that . . . is imperative they receive.

Do not, repeat, do not, read during extra time this summer, a book called Silent Spring, by Rachel Carson, especially if an optimist.

No not, however, misunderstand the advice. It is a good book, well written, very readable and interesting. Miss Carson is a gifted writer, but she may ruin the summer, especially if the summer is spent camping out in "scenic" America.

Her book, Silent Spring, is not directly concerned with ruining summer vacations. What her story does do is destroy many illusions. People take things for granted and one of these is the conservation of our natural resonrces. Silent Spring brings to our attention how our natural resonrces can be plundered by a lack of planning, knowledge and effort.

It is a story of the insecticide; its ineffectiveness and misuse.

It is a story of how these "ineffective" insecticides are being used haphazardly against one enemy and killing many useful insects. Miss Carson explains how the balance of nature is being upset by chemical insecticides being indiscriminately sprayed on the land.

If a person does take the chance and read the book, he might find that the scenic place where he's vacationing may be mentioned in the book. (Clear Lake was used as a vivid example of how insecticide "experts" failed to realize the effects of DDT before they poured some into the lake to combat gnats, of which Clear Lakes does have an abundance. Evidence of DDD in fish in 1959 required suspension of the use of the chemical in the lake.)

If a person is a pessimist with a strong stomach, Silent Spring could be enjoyable reading, but it is recommended "non-reading" for those who still believe in "America the beautiful."

There is a common slogan that a person should "see America first;" perhaps it should be changed. "See America first, while there's still a chance."

Year's Sports Achievements See Rams Rule Supreme

THE FALL 1965-Spring 1966 sports year at City College can be described in only one word—EXCELLENCE.

Our Rams brought home the Golden Gate Conference Championship in all four major sports—football, basketball, track and baseball.

In football, coached by Dutch Elston, the Rams won their first grid title outright since 1948 by going through the season undefeated. Another undefeated team of the big four sports was Sid Phelan's basketball squad which won its seventh title in eleven years. The Ram cagers celebrated their first undefeated season in their entire 30-year history, and was ranked as the best team in the state save Riverside.

Lou Vasquez guided the Red and White trackmen to their first Golden Gate Conference (initiated in 1962) title, and its fifth championship in the last nine years.

And Coach Ernie Domecus took his baseball squad to the state championship and brought home its third pennant in its history.

The last time the City College baseball squad won the conference championship was in 1956. The coach was William Fischer, now a counselor, and Domecus was a playing member of his squad.

Not only did success in the big four sports make it a great season for the college sports world, but the 1966 championship of Coach Grover Klemmer's golfers was equally welcome. It was the linkers' second title in a row (tied with Merritt in 1965) and their first sole title in eleven years.

Coach Roy Diederichsen brought more fame to the college with his state championship soccer squad, and his tennis team, which won a conference championship.

There has never been such a year for City College as that of Fall 1965-Spring 1966. We hope it happens again.

Vietnam Soldiers Rejected

DURING the last Memorial Holiday weekend, in two separate events, a group of people who call themselves Americans disgraced the United States and everything it stands for.

In Wetumka, Alabama, the town's officials disclosed the appalling fact that no proper or available burial site could be found for a 19-year-old soldier—a Green Beret. The soldier, Jimmy Williams, happened to be Negro. This American died so that the inconsiderate, self-centered "citizens" of Wetumka could continue holding on to their inane opinions and bigotry.

But such a disgraceful incident as this was not just isloated in the South. In Chicago, a Hilton Hotel manager turned away more than 75 Vietnam War veterans, wounded in action, because their presence would have an adverse affect on the other customers.

We wonder if the midwest hotel manager minded having these veterans in a Vietnam swamp fighting a force that does not believe in the private ownership of such businesses as hotels.

These two occurrences must make men in the armed services wonder what they are fighting for, and Jimmy Williams' parents must wonder exactly what their son gave his life for—it certainly wasn't to preserve his freedom, because he never had it.

Letters To The Editor

RAM'S HORN

• Misplaced Opinion

Editor, The Guardsman:

I have great difficulty in understanding the arguments offered by the writer of the article on Point Of Order in the issue of May 25th. I have not seen the film, so I have no opinion about its merits as documentary or work of art.

I wonder, in fact, if the writer of the article can claim any more basis for judgment than I. However, the subject of the film, which he attacks, is precisely what will lead me to see it this evening. I have no objection to the writer not sharing my curiosity, but in the paragraphs below I shall indicate several matters to which I do object.

I cannot follow the argument which says that "one of the more unpleasant moments in American history . . . has interest only to politicians and sociologists, if at all."

Ignoring the sloppiness of the sentence structure, I must wonder at the philosophy. Are we really producing students who believe that the ordinary citizen has no concern with the unpleasant moments in history? Who then should be concerned? Later generations?

If we are not now concerned with the kind of unpleasantness the McCarthy era represented, later generations may not have the opportunity to view anything objectively. (I cannot understand, either, why the writer feels that this generation cannot view the issue objectively.)

Apathy, coupled with fear, made McCarthy possible in the first place. Indifference to the issues of political freedom and the right to dissent without being labeled "subversive" or "communist" is a danger not only to the present, but to those future generations for whom, along with our own, the writer presumes to speak.

Perhaps most important is the question of how so subjective an article appears unsigned in the pages of a newspaper as though it were news. Who's minding the store? Don't our journalism students learn somewhere the difference between reporting and expressing opinions?

It has always been my understanding that opinion of all sorts (unless in a specific editorial spot and thus officially speaking for the management) and above all critical reviews must be signed so that the writer makes known and assumes his responsibility.

I hope no one will argue that the attitudes expressed in this article are

'Oscars' For Music

By Albert Hilliard Hughes

WINNER of three Academy Awards and 22 nominations, Vienna-born Max Steiner has been for many years one of the foremost, but least honored film music composers.

Although he did not receive an "Oscar" for it, his score for Gone With The Wind is perhaps his best known and may be considered one of the greatest ever composed for a motion picture.

After coming to the United States, Steiner later (1929) began composing for films, becoming in 1930 head of the music department of the now defunct RKO Studios. Later he joined Warner Brothers, writing the scores for several Bette Davis triumphs, including Jezebel and Now Voyager.

As instrumental in lifting the level of filmusic to an art as any other composer, he has yet to be rocognized by musicologists. Regretably, his music is never performed in concert halls, although mnch of it is deserving.

In his youth Steiner studied composition with Robert Fuchs and conducting with Gustav Mahler. At 15 Steiner composed and conducted his own operetta, which, when produced, ran a year in Vienna.

As a lasting tribute to the man who might well be called "the dean of filmusic composers," Albert K. Bender of Bridgeport, Connecticut, has founded the Max Steiner Music Society, dedicated to the perpetuation of Steiner's music. Since its inception in September 1965, devotees from such countries as Japan, Australia, Malta, Scandinavia are now honoring this sadly neglected, but truly great composer, who celebrated his 78th birthday in May.

• Shame On Apathy

Editor, The Guardsman:

Shame on all those apathetic students who didn't vote on May 18 and 19. These are the type of ritualistic rumblings which emerge from the administration, Guardsman editorials, and student government officials.

. . . It is high time that the student body wake up to the fact that good candidates require more than "past experience" . . . Not one candidate brought up even one issue. A glance at the election issue of The Guardsman reveals that none of next year's student leaders has any ideals or values . . .

It is a depressing fact that these people will control a budget of $40,000 to $50,000, all student functions and the rules and regulations that control us.

I believe that the poor election turnout was due to a lack of issues rather than student apathy. Last year's election, which was based on issues, received twice as many votes.

In anticipation of those who shall call me a negative critic, I have formulated just a few of the changes that I would like to see: Establishment of initiative for pressure groups to present their ideas to the students . . . improvement of cultural activities . . . paintings and sculptures in the halls . . . a larger theater . . . student-faculty lounge . . . improvement of the natural appearance of the campus by the horticulture department . . . expansion of the college paper . . . freedom for the distribution of literature and the solicitation of funds . . . more emphasis on informal sports . . . liberalizing of the dress code . . . discussion classes added to the curriculum . . . abolishment of the grading system . . . establishment of a free book exchange; lowering of the price of books at the campus book store run by Student Council) . . . painting the dingy basement halls of the science building . . . candy and cigarette machines in Arts Hall.

• G'man Questioned

Editor, The Guardsman:

Re reporter Susan Volk's brief story on Professor Paul Goodman's appearance on campus May 19 (Guardsman, May 25), may I inquire why more information was not published about his outspoken remarks and the enthusiastic responses he received from the large audience of students and faculty? The report, at the bottom of page 3, reads like a pedestrian account of a tired professor's remarks to a nondescript audience during just another College Hour program.

Where in the account is any inkling of the huge student and faculty audience that jammed Science Hall room 204 to hear Professor Goodman (many were sitting in the aisles, lying on the floor, crowding the entrance, or turned away at the door)?

UC Advisory Board Reinstates Major In Journalism

Proposals for restablishment of the graduate and undergraduate school of journalism were submitted to the University of California in Berkeley Chancellor Robert Heyns in a recent report of the Chancellor's Advisory Committee on the Graduate Professional School of Journalism.

Journalism as a major was dropped two years ago at the University of California in Berkeley.

The proposed re-establishment of the school of journalism will include a major and a minor to be administered through the College of Letters and Sciences.

The new degrees will have as their primary requirements Journalism 21, which is the UC course parallel to Journalism 21A-B, presently being offered at City College of San Francisco.

Listed as "basic considerations" were five statements of educational philosophy in Berkeley, which declared:

"That Berkeley should strive for pre-eminence in any field it enters.

"That there is room for drastic improvement in the field of journalism in general.

"That Berkeley has the intellectual resources in major substantive areas which, when combined with a strengthened professional faculty, will give it an extraordinary potential in this field.

"That education in all significent fields at Berkeley is strongest at the graduate level and that journalism, with its growing importance to our society should be no exception.

"That the fact that the profession has not agreed on the ideal blue print for such education should be not a deterrent but rather a challenge."

Fall Registration Extends Use Of TV

The closed-circuit television system, used successfully in spring registration, will again be utilized in Arts Hall next fall.

A special TV system will also be set up in the counseling offices to help the counselors keep in touch with the registration activities, counselor Walter McCloud said today.

The following is a list of registration times according to registration numbers as released by McCloud:

All returning students will begin registering on Tuesday, September 6, starting at 8 a.m. with numbers 1 to 699; 8:30, 700-1099; 9, 1100-1599, 9:30, 1600-1799; 10, 1800-2199; 10:30, 2200-2599; 11, 2600-2899.

In the afternoon at 1 p.m., 2900 to 3299; 1:30, 3300-3599; 2, 3600-3999; 2:30, 4000-4099.

On Wednesday, September 7, registration will begin at 9:30 a.m. with numbers 4100-4299; 10, 4300-4499; 10:30, 4500-4899; 11, 4900-5099; 1, 5100-5249; 1:30, 5250-5399; 2, 5400-5599; 2:30, 5600-5789.

Thursday, September 8 at 8 a.m., 5800-6099; 8:30, 6100-6499; 9, 6500-up.

Starting at 1 p.m., all previously disqualified students, students on leave of absence or students with other extenuating reasons for missing a scheduled time may register.

Vacation Job Prospects Bright

The Federal Government and some generous employers will make the quest for summer jobs much brighter this year, Joseph A. Amori, placement director, disclosed recently.

Although thousands of college and university students will "invade the state in search of summer employment," job offerings are more abundant for students with special skills and those who began to look for work earlier in the year, Amori said.

The Post Office Department has opened 1000 positions for college students in San Francisco. City College students took civil service examinations during March in order to compete for some 550 postal jobs. They will work as carriers, clerks and drivers.

About 500 more students in this area will be working in the post office in coordination with the new federally-sponsored college Work-Study program. The hourly wage is approximately $2.57.

Reports from vacation resorts indicate the highest number of job applications in history this year, with as many as 10,000 applicants at one large resort alone — and only 500 jobs available.

Many jobs still remain for qualified and interested students to work in summer camps for both boys and girls.

"Especially needed are camp counselors with skills in art, dramatics, woodwork, ceramics, jewelry-making, nature study, and aquatics," he emphasized. Majors in education, sociology and recreation are preferred.

Salaries range from $150 to $500 for the season, plus expenses.

Those with typing and shorthand skills will be needed as summer reliefs. Secretarial majors who plan on entering the labor market upon graduation are especially needed. Jobs pay from $350 to $400 per month.

The college placement office will be open through the summer, Amori said.

Soph King, Queen

BOB KERR AND NANCY VEACH were crowned Sophomore King and Queen during the Sophomore Ball held in the Terrace Room at the Fairmont Hotel two weeks ago.

The title was awarded to the couple who collected the largest amount of money. Kerr and Miss Veach, sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega, were able to collect $531.48, and the total money collected was $1460.59, all of which goes into the class scholarship fund.

The winners, because of their skill and savior-faire in collecting money, won a free trip to Disneyland.

More than 200 couples participated in the One Starry Night ball.

Council Approves $45,711 Budget For Fall Semester

By Jeff Kraus

In its closing meeting of the semester, Student Council gave its approval to the fall semester budgets for campus organizations by an 11-0-1 margin.

Before passing the budgets, council members reviewed each request and made such cuts as they felt necessary. The total amount for all the budgets came to $45,711.99.

In other business, Councilman Steve Ahern proposed a resolution congratulating The Guardsman for its election coverage and "the fine job accomplished by the paper for the entire semester."

Councilman Tom Csekey objected, declaring that "this was the job of the paper" and that he didn't feel the paper should be "complimented for just doing its job." But the majority of the council members agreed with Ahern, and the resolution was passed, 7-1-2.

Councilwoman Helen Ferentinos brought before council a resolution providing for a 25 per cent cut of a budget if the sponsor or a representative of the budgeted organization fails to appear before the Finance Committee at the time the budget is to be discussed. The motion was adopted, 6-2-2.

Councilman Csekey moved to approve the appointment of Celeste Stracener as chairman of the Student-Faculty Relations Committee. The appointment was accepted unanimously.

Council Banquet Honors Retiring Mary J. Learnard

In honor of her devoted service to the college, the Student Council of City College dedicated its semi-annual banquet, held June 1 in Statler wing, to retiring registrar Mary Jane Learnard.

Guest speaker at the banquet, President Louis Conlan, reviewed Miss Learnard's 31 years of service to the college. Lloyd Luckmann, coordinator of instruction, followed with some "reminiscence."

Plaques for outstanding service to the Associated Students were awarded to Maurice Chaver, student, and Norine Smith, English instructor.

Dorn New G'man Editor In Chief

At a editorial board meeting held last week, Peter H. Dorn was elected Editor In Chief of The Guardsman for the Fall semester, 1966. Dorn was this semester's Managing Editor.

The editorial board also elected Bill Pates, this semester's Sports Editor, to the position of Managing Editor, while Connie Skipitares was named Feature Editor.

The News Editor will be Rich Heintz, currently the Feature Editor and columnist.

Rounding out the board's selections were G. Frank Cooney, Sports Editor, and Arturo Rodriguez, this semester's News Editor, who will be Staff Editor.

Summer Magic Party Honors AWS Members

Summer Magic, the spring '66 version of the semiannual AWS Awards and Recognition Party, honored and bestowed awards upon members of the Associated Women Students, the Inter-Sorority Council and the Recreation Association at a brief ceremony in Smith Hall May 21.

Highlighting the informal buffet was the installation of next fall's AWS officers by outgoing AWS President Brenda Jung.

Special recognition was given AWS board member Andrea Signorello, who was selected as the coed who had "worked the hardest" for the organization this semester.

State Primary Election Topic Of C-Hour Discussion

By Giuseppe Greco

The California primary election at the polls yesterday was described as "weird" by University of California Professor Eugene Lee in a lecture here during College Hour last week.

"It is probably the weirdest primary California has had in its history," Lee said in a discussion which preceded the primary.

In the Senate, 40 seats were open for office, and four times the usual number of candidates were running for the posts. Also, 18 assemblymen were running for Senate seats, and 11 were retiring from the office.

The balance between Democrats and Republicans, as Lee saw it, was reasonable. "It reflects the last presidential elections with about 60 per cent Democrats and 40 per cent Republicans. However, the proportion of 53 per cent Democrats and 47 per cent Republicans is a more likely one for California," he said.

Lee, citing Modoc as an "as Maine goes. . ." indicator, described it as "a county of 10,000 votes, the only one which in the past years has gone with the state winner, always."

Speaking of differences between the two parties, Lee said, "The Republican party differs from the Democratic in that Republican legislators do not encourage or desire Democrat votes."

Lee emphasized the almost total absence of competition. Only in the State Senate was a two-party competition taking place. "In Los Angeles," Lee said in attempting to make clear the lack of competition, "of 14 districts, eight are entirely Democratic, five are Republican and only one is competitive. Good representativeness and poor competitiveness, then."

Lee believes that the primary, "so important in politics, can be won by a fraction. What is politics, then, when the candidate elected obtains only 15 to 20 per cent of the total vote? The result would be a small political group or faction."

About polls, considered by many as important to elections, Lee said, "They are extremely unreliable because the difference between the polling population and the voting population may be crucial."

The lecture, one in the Student-Faculty Lecture series, was the last of the spring program.

Lee, author of two books concerned with politics and a number of articles in the fields of state and local government and politics, is an Associate Professor of Political Science at UC, Berkeley.

All In All—It Was A Very Good Year

By William G. Pates, Sports Editor

Success in athletic competition is pretty much of a relative thing. There are no simple, concrete answers as to what constitutes success, because it is composed of a myriad of differentiated connotations from the minds of men.

Achievements that would leave some in the depths of despair and depression represent the pinnacle of attainment to others. For these reasons this past year saw both greatness and disappointment and a combination of the two, depending on how you look at things.

Only three things were certain as the season opened. Roy Diederichsen's version of the Glasgow Celtic would exert enough energy to win a third straight state soccer title; Lou Vasquez's cross country club, intent on improving on the impossible, would sink into the deepest recesses of the abyss and that the college's swimming team, if indeed there was to be a team, would return sans pool in the college tradition.

As for what else was to happen, who then could have foreseen what was to take place.

Rumors circulating through the halls had it that the college had produced a football team, of all things, and that it had an outside chance at the championship.

One coach was even said to have commented, "This team has the potental of being the best team the college has had in ten or twelve years. It's up to them; they can be very good if they want to be."

The club performed in typical poor preseason form, possibly caused by the gopher holes and marsh lands which are lavishly distributed throughout the practice field.

But then apparently the gridders did want to be as good as the coach had prophesied, so they walked over the two preseason favorites and everybody else in the league—41-6, 34-0, 36-8, 45-6, 31-20, 48-6—and take your pick until the final game when they fell, with egg, mud and various other composts all over their face, to an 18-18 tie with the league cellar-dweller, who shall remain anonymous.

This team got the shock of its life when it trampled the evil conquerors from the south, Long Beach City College, 40-20, in the Prune Bowl. Seems the men weren't supposed to win that one either and they were surprised at how easy it was to push the Vikes around.

Heroes? They were available in great abundance. There was the entire offensive-defensive line, a couple'a defensive ends and an obscure fullback, obscure at least to the college population, O. J. Simpson, who had a passion for breaking records on land, on sea and in the air.

In the final analysis, Orenthal James was the single deciding factor in the saga of the "making of a championship—1965."

Tumult and shouting in recognition of the football and soccer teams' achievements were conspicuous by their absence in the glorious college tradition. You gotta go far to impress a City College student.

No one to spread a pall of optimism around the place, Coach Sid Phelan delivered his annual degradative report on the moral and physical decay of City College basketball allowing that "the team hadn't shown anything" and that they "lack judgment and extra effort."

This group of unfortunates, despite Phelan's warnings, went ahead and won the league title without a loss, ran a 21-game win streak, compiled a 30-3 record and won second in the state championship because of the loss of center Gene Williams which brought on a phenomenal shooting effort by Riverside City College, the winners.

It won't be any different for Phelan next year in that he'll lose most of the team as he has nearly every year since he arrived.

Ram success in golf and tennis could be likened to a "Horatio Alger" or "Cinderella" story but is likely an example of losing the battle but winning the war. What corn.

"Equal improvement" by other clubs cost the defense of the golf title. So O'Kane-O'Connor-Nelson-Butler & Mialocq won the conference meet and finished sixth in the state championships without the league match crown.

Greg Shephard and George Ponitkoff, the college's tennis team, did everything but walk on water following the most disastrous tennis season in years as they stole the conference championships and finished second in the Nor-Cal and State Championships only because Larry Hall of American River knows how to beat Shephard.

Overshadowing these heroics were the track feats of O. J. Simpson, Dwight Tucker, Bob Prince, Lee Benton, Adam Banks and Chris Davis in leading the college to an undefeated conference dual meet title.

Injury to Simpson hurt them as they finished third in the conference and Nor-Cal championships and the state results are best left unsaid.

Finally came what was expected to be a bad taste in a mouth of great things. The baseball team was labeled "hot and cold" with inconsistency in pitching. Well they burned themselves to the state finals before freezing over, compiling a 18-3 league record.

The bulk of City College students held up well under the grandeur. They didn't let it go to their heads or the heads of the athletes either for that matter. Life changed little although it was heard that the baseball team's catcher was elected to council, probably a bribe to ease the conscience of the students. All in all, it was a very good year.

Falcons Sweep Twin Bill, Spoil Ram State Title Bid

By G. Frank Cooney

The longest and by far the most successful baseball season in City College history finally came to a halt with the Rams resting in second place among two-year colleges in California.

They may be resting now, but on the weekend of May 28, at the State Championships in Norwalk, it was visions of "wresting" that the City College nine had in mind. They were out to take the title of "most powerful two-year college diamond squad in California history," away from Cerritos College in a best-of-three series for the State Crown.

But the Falcons flew away with both titles by bouncing the Rams, 3-2 and 13-1.

City College got the jump or the Cerritos powerhouse in the first game of the best of three game slate with a two-run fourth inning. When Tom Callen doubled and then Paul Giambra tripled and scored on Frank Grimaud's fly, it seemed that the intrastate clash was going to be top heavy.

But the San Franciscans succumbed to what seemed to be the inevitable when Cerritos came back to score one run in the sixth frame and then finished the job with a two-run eighth inning.

"They didn't look better in that first game," San Francisco Coach Ernie Domecus said of the Cerritos club, "but they just got the breaks in what could have been anybody's game."

Cerritos spoiled any ideas of a Ram double header sweep on the following day when the Southerners collected 16 hits and tallied in all but two innings to earn the California Crown.

"Unfortunately," Domecus calculated, "the team just came up with one of its poorest games of the year in that second clash." We made a couple of mistakes in the beginning and just could not bounce back."

Two of the Rams' most consistent helps of the year, Bill Kirkpatrick and Steve Howder, were out of commission —in a way—for the do-or-die second game.

Howder, who played despite a back ache, was one of the team's most dependable sluggers all season. But the powerful City College catcher played the state championship series all taped up and could only manage one hit in seven trips to the plate.

Kirkpatrick, who along with Howder represents the Rams' All-Conference picks, did the unbellevable the previous week when he got credit for both wins in the Santa Rosa double header and even drove in the winning run in the 11th inning of the second contest.

But the "Kirk" did not come in to save the Cerritos game, with either his sling or a bat. He had already lost his first game of the post-season in the initial game, leaving his conference and State title tally at 12-2.

The Rams' season, the longest in the college's history due to a triple round robin, had a final tally of 27-10.

Fisticuffs Spark AMS Sports Night

The emphasis may have been on the Intramural Championship and the Student-Faculty basketball game, but the highlight of the Associated Men Student-sponsored Sports Night on May 23 was a card of seven rousing boxing matches organized by Coach Roy Diederichsen.

Serving as an anticlimax and following the ring matches, the Soul Plus played basketball of varying degrees to soundly down a hard-working Newman Club Viking squad, 50-37, and capture the Intramural Crown for Spring, 1966.

The Soul Plus, made up of varsity players from various sports other than basketball, at times looked very organized but more often than not merely overpowered their opponents. Indeed at times some "Souls" showed the grace and eyesight of rhinoceroses.

And in the Student vs. Faculty rematch, the students remained suppressed, 29-26, for the fourth straight time.

The fights were so spirited that they included only three decisions in seven bouts. One of the best battles ended in a very unpopular decision when Bob Jordan, who belted Richard White from start to finish, came out a scarless loser.

In the upset of the evening, LeRoy Character won a split decision over the more experienced Orie McRae. Also Chris Ransom KO'd James Scanlon in windmill fashion, James Anderson dec. Tommie Burks; Tony Nerio TKO'd Jim "Cassius" Cortes; Harry Finigan KO'd Chuck Cameron and Jerry Shannon TKO'd Del Brown.

Spikers Take 7th Place At State Meet In Modesto

By Mike Smith

The City College spikers, dual-meet titlists of the Golden Gate Conference, took a seventh place finish among some 35 two-year colleges in the State Junior College Track Championships in Modesto two weeks ago Saturday, May 28, to end their 1966 spring season.

Despite expectations by some observers that the Rams would place first in at least one event at the meet, they won none and came in next best in three, the high jump, triple jump, and the 440 relay. Dwight Tucker chalked up a 6-10 mark in the high jump, and 49-9½ in the triple.

In the 440 the Rams placed behind leader, Los Angeles Tech, with a 41.1 timing. This may have been the only disappointment in the State gathering. As Coach Lou Vasquez stated, "The only event we expected to win was the 440, but we finished second due to a bad pass." Los Angeles turned in a 40.9 mark, equaling the national junior college record co-held by the Rams.

Among the Golden Gate Conference squads, the Foothill Owls and the Contra Costa Comets finished ahead of City College.

Foothill, who was considered "a shoo-in to take the conference dual-meet title by everyone," according to Vasquez, placed sixth, one notch above City College and one below the Comets.

The State meet was won by Hancock College, and Fresno who was favored to take the title finished with 31 points, ten behind Hancock. San Francisco was 17 points behind with a total of 24.

Block SF Cites 90 Athletes At Semiannual Banquet

By John LeTourneau

President Louis G. Conlan delivered the keynote speech as 90 athletes received their awards in various sports, May 31 at the Block SF dinner held at Smith Hall.

Five out of six spring varsity sport teams finished in first place in the Golden Gate Conference—track, golf, tennis, baseball and basketball. The only team that didn't win a conference title was the swimming squad.

Also receiving awards were the junior varsity basketball team and the Campus Police Pistol team. These men will receive certificates as their awards.

Each coach named his Most Valuable Player, except the Golf team. Lou Vasquez, track coach, named Dwight Tucker as the team's outstanding performer.

Basketball Coach Sid Phelan selected two Most Valuable Players. They are sophomores Ed Wilson and Willie Jones. Coach Roy Diederichsen chose Greg Shephard as the tennis team's Most Valuable Player.

Ernie Domecus, coach of the baseball team, announced that pitcher Bill Kirkpatrick was Most Valuable Player, while Bob Martin was chosen by his teammates as the swimming team's top man.

Grover Klemmer, golf coach, said there was no single Most Valuable Player to be selected.

The biggest individual award was given to cross country and track star Joe Singer who was selected the outstanding Sophomore student athlete.

There were 77 athletes who received Block SF jackets.

In basketball they were Paul Batmale, Girard Chatman, manager, Larry Gray, Willie Jones. Isaac Neal, Fred Owens, Charlie Parks, John Pezzolo, Gene Williams, Ed Wilson, Willie Wise, Roger Silver, Bill Berger and Rich Thompson.

Baseball jackets were awarded to Gerry Bosch, Tom Callan, Barry Carli, Nick Eterovich, Bob Farmer, Paul Giambra, Frank Grimaud, Steve Howder, Murray Jacobs, Bill Kirkpatrick, Tony Maganini, Hugh Miller, Milt Panagotacos, Maris Pantels, Al Pasion, Keith Pitson, Ed Sickinger, Greg Sinclair and Joe Szander.

Track jackets were awarded to Adam Banks, Ralph Barsi, Lee Benton, Rich Cuadra, Chris Davis, Carson English, George Ferguson, Maurice Flowers, Fred Forsberg, Hoy Henderson, Scott Heyman, Arlan Huang, Sonny Johnson, Don Jordan, Bill Long, John O'Looney, Bob Prince, Ralph Raines, O. J. Simpson, Joe Singer, Alex Stefanovich, Tim Sullivan, Dwight Tucker and Tony Tuitele.

Diederichsen announced that jackets were to be awarded to tennis champs Greg Shephard, George Ponitkoff, Quincy Lay, Bob Kypta, Pete Klestoff, Jim Moore and Bill Heffernan.

Golf championship jackets were awarded to Mike Butler, Gary Corvi, Geery Dorn, Doug Nelson, Ron O'Connor, Tom O'Kane and Gary Mialocq.

Swimming jackets were awarded to Bob Martin, Bill Pasquinelli, John O'Connor, Bruno Van Rign and Barry Schlesinger.

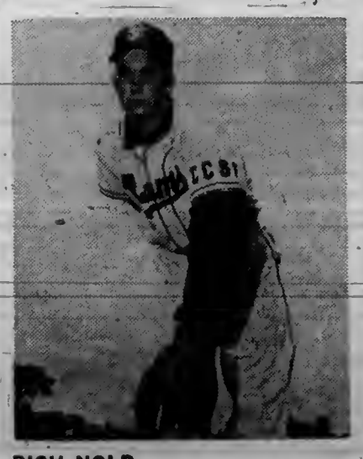
Certificates were given to 13 athletes who participated on the junior varsity basketball and pistol teams. The pistol team recipients were Bob Tietjen, Dwain Miles, Leo Dunn, Bob Nasise and Jim Juarez.

The eight members of the junior varsity basketball team were Mike Dunne, Lou Washington, Steve Valutin, Ron Driscoll, Steve Lipson, Rich Rolandson, Bob O'Connor and Leon Sammuels.

De Long, Nold, Wyatt To Hall Of Fame

Three more former City College sports greats were added to the college's Hall of Fame last week. The three new "immortals" are Gary De Long, a goalie on the Ram soccer squads of 1960-62, former Ram baseballer Rich Nold, and one-time track record-holder Jim Wyatt, who was elected by acclamation. Wyatt currently holds the post of Student Government Adviser at the college.

GARY DE LONG



De Long became a first-stringer on the soccer team in his freshman year. In the two ensuing seasons he went on to become an All America performer. He was able to play three seasons at City College because at the time, the college was in a soccer league with such major universities as Stanford and the University of California.

After leaving City College he went to San Jose State College where he again made All America and was further honored by being named to the United States Olympic soccer team which traveled to the Olympic Games in Tokyo in 1964.

Nold, a pitcher, had a 5-3 record in his only season at City College, but after being signed by the Washington Senators he rose rapidly in the baseball world. Pitching for the Senators' New York-Penn League farm club, he won 20 games while losing only eight in 1964.

He also set a league record the same year as he struck out 268 batters in 242 innings. For these two accomplishments, the National Association of Baseball Writers named Nold the NY-P League's Most Valuable Player.

Parks Named To All-State Team

Despite the fact that City College's Golden Gate Conference Championship basketball team finished runner-up in the state championship finals, the team apparently had talent attainable of nothing better than one all-state second club position snatched by forward Charlie Parks, according to the results of the JC Sportswire 1966 All-California Junior College Basketball Teams.

Parks, somewhat of a disappointment to Coach Sid Phelan his first year, really came through to lead the club in scoring with 234 points in conference play and 505 for the year.

Recipient of a basketball scholarship to the University of Idaho, he was named to the Golden Gate Conference first club All-League team as well as to the All-Tournament team at the 28th Annual Modesto Invitational Tournament.

Willie Wise, pliable at guard, forward and center; forward Ed Wilson and defensive specialist center Gene Williams, whose loss possibly cost San Francisco the state championship, received honorable mention.

Lively Arts

Drama, Music, Journalism Aid Creativity

IT WAS TOLSTOI who said, "Art is a human activity having for its purpose the transmission to others of the highest and best feelings to which men have risen."

Students with the urge for self-expression in the fine arts as well as the applied arts and the lively arts, can achieve this release here on campus by participating in the many diversified programs offered by the college.

But by far the most popular form is in the lively arts which have a cultural value while at the same time they stimulate and encourage local artists.

MUSIC ENRICHES

The College Orchestra gives formal concerts and performances throughout the year, offering students the opportunity to practice and perform all styles of musical works, ranging from classical music to "soul" jazz.

The A Cappella Choir, Chamber Choir, Men's Glee Club, Women's Choir, and vocal soloists take part in two annual vocal festivals and present choral concerts throughout the year.

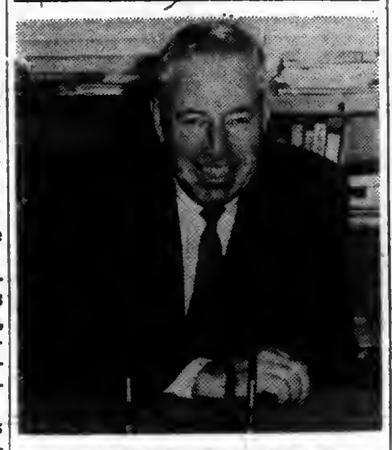
The department of music and the Associated Students also present the fall and spring Concert Series, featuring outstanding professional ensembles, instrumentalists and vocalists. The department also presents the annual Christmas concert.

DRAMA TRAINS, ENTERTAINS

The drama department offers training and experience in all the arts, crafts and techniques of the theater—and entertainment. Courses include theory and technique of acting, play reading, speech for the theater, theatrical make-up and stagecraft.

Drama department productions have included Playboy Of The Western World, Little Foxes, Teahouse Of The August Moon, The Good Woman Of Setzuan, The Winslow Boy, Inherit The Wind, No Exit, The Thurber Carnival and Blood Wedding.

For aspiring disc jockeys, the radio and television broadcasting department operates KCSF, the college radio station.



JOURNALISM INFORMS

The college newspaper, The Guardsman, is a member of the Associated Collegiate Press and has received 32 All-American ratings in 48 semesters of membership. The Guardsman is a weekly newspaper entirely produced by journalism students, who plan and direct all phases of the newspaper publication.

The Guardsman is a vital organ of communication of the Associated Students, serving the best interests of the college to its students. The newspaper also invites student opinion through letters to the Ram's Horn.

ORIENTATION EDITION

This special edition of The Guardsman is published exclusively for entering Freshmen and is the result of joint efforts of both the outgoing and incoming members of the editorial staff.

ON BEHALF OF the administration and faculty, it is my pleasure to extend a most cordial welcome to the Fall, 1966, entering class. We are pleased that you have decided to continue your education here. May I assure you that we stand ready to assist you in every possible way.

YOU MUST REALIZE, however, that this is a cooperative undertaking to which you must contribute your full share if it is to be successful.

JUST A FEW YEARS AGO, students entering college could be quite certain that the world they were preparing to enter, upon completion of college, would not change much during their lifetime. This is no longer true for we are living in an age of change brought about by technology and automation.

CONSEQUENTLY, young people today must be better prepared than ever before if they are to succeed in this changing world.

THE PERSISTENT EXERCISE of a little extra effort is one of the most powerful forces contributing to success. This persistence will, no doubt, allow you to meet the challenges of this atomic, automated era.

Time And Place, Cost And Deeds Of Campus Life

For anticipators, worry warts and organizers, seven important items of interest come under the heading, What Every New Student Should Know.

For those interested in details, honor students register starting at 9:30 a.m. Tuesday, September 6, followed by others according to numbers. Registration picks up again at 9:30 a.m. on Wednesday, September 7.

Registration will stop that afternoon to provide time for any rescheduling of classes. It will begin again at 8 a.m. September 8 and end that day, with no late registration planned.

Freshman Class activities, as such, will start Thursday, September 15, with a class meeting at 11 a.m. in S-100. Purpose of the meeting is election of officers to work with the class president and selection of a semester project.

There will be a Frosh Rally on Thursday, September 22, at the Ram during College Hour. And the main event of the semester, the Frosh Premier Show and Dance, is scheduled for 9 p.m. Friday, September 23, in Smith Hall.

Since it is not possible to learn without books and supplies, the Ramporium, the college bookstore, is open from 7:30 a.m. to 4 p.m., excepting Fridays when it closes at 3:30 p.m.

For those who can't find a place in the cafeteria to study or warm their hands, the library is open from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. daily and from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays.

The cafeteria in Smith Hall is open from 11 a.m. to 1:15 p.m., the fountain area from 7:30 a.m. to 1:15 p.m. and Statler wing from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

College Hour, 11 a.m. Thursdays, when a minimum of classes is scheduled, provides time for lectures, concerts, plays and rallies.

And on Tuesdays, during 11 a.m. semi-College Hour, all clubs and campus organizations meet in designated rooms.

Midterm periods end October 21 and December 2, respectively, and finals are January 19 through 27.

'Big Six,' Council, President's Cabinet Play Important Roles In Student Government System

Student government at the college can best be explained by first noting three distinct groups which play a part in its makeup.

First, there is what is referred to as the "big six." Included in this group are the Associated Student President and Vice President, the Associated Men and Women Student Presidents and the Sophomore and Freshman Class Presidents.

Each is elected by the students-at-large semesterly. However, only one of the "big six"—the Vice President—may vote on the official governing body of the association.

WELCOME TO one of the top two-year colleges in California. City College of San Francisco has much to offer you. Our academic and extra-curricular activities rate among the finest in the State.

DURING YOUR stay here, I hope you will take an interest in the varied activity program offered by the Associated Students. These activities are supported by the proceeds from the Ramporium, our campus bookstore, and the sale of Associated Student cards. As your President, I urge you to become a member of this body and purchase an Associated Student card.

THE SEMESTER ahead looks like a great one. Last year we won seven championships of which six were in the Golden Gate Conference. We won the State championship in soccer, our basketball and baseball teams got into the playoffs for the State title. Also, there is a full slate of cultural, social and special events. It is no wonder that other two-year colleges look to San Francisco for leadership.

AGAIN, WELCOME to City College. I hope you can take the opportunity to make these some of the most memorable years of your life.

—Bruce Fisher, President,
Associated Students

STUDENT COUNCIL COMPOSITION

This body is known as Student Council. Its members, all of whom may vote and introduce formal motions, inelude seven representatives of the Freshman Class, seven representatives of the Sophomore Class and the Vice President.

Each is also elected by the general student body each semester.

The AS President presides over all meetings of counell and may vote in the case of a tie.

RESPONSIBILITY, AUTHORITY

Student Council is responsible for and has final authority in the supervision of the affairs, policies, properties and conduct of the Associated Students of the college.

"Associated Students" means those registered students who have in their possession a current AS card available at the beginning of each semester for $5.

One of council's major duties is that of allocating funds to official budgeted organizations on campus for the semester succeeding its term of office. For example, last spring council allocated almost $38,000 to operate student activities for last semester.

TWENTY COMPRISE CABINET

After Student Council comes the third and final division known as cabinet.

A cabinet member may either be appointed or elected by the organization he represents at Student Council meetings, or appointed by the AS president. Like the Associated Men and Women Student Presidents and the Freshman and Sophomore Class Presidents, cabinet has a voice but no vote on the official body.

A question frequently asked is: Are the "big six," council and cabinet all that make up the college's student government system? The answer is no!

PARTICIPATION OPEN TO ALL

All students here are eligible and invited to take an active part in their student government system and are welcome to voice their opinions on campus issues at appropriate times in an appropriate manner.

Council meets from 12 noon to 1 p.m. each Monday and Wednesday in bungalow six, which is directly behind Cloud Hall and the nearest bungalow to Arts Hall.

The college offers units in four areas of student leadership. SL G2 is designed for those students interested in the management of club activities. SL G8 is open to students desiring practice in the organization of assemblies, forums and rallies.

Those students interested in Student Government will be encouraged to enroll in SL G10. This course is primarily for Associated Student officers but is open to others. Student leadership, G16, is for the band.

Eagles Lead Enrollment

It looks as though the "competition" among San Francisco high schools in enrolling their graduates here is getting hotter all the time.

Washington High took over the lead Lincoln held for more than a year.

There were 891 former Eagles to the Mustangs' 862 here in the spring. Close behind was Lowell with 843 graduates.

Galileo placed fourth with 646.

The following figures indicate how the other high schools were represented here: Balboa, 491; Poly, 342; Mission, 334; Wilson, 210; John Adams, 166; O'Connell, 20, and Gompers, 13;

Commerce, Continuation and Girls High schools, now all defunct, placed 9, 5 and 1, respectively.

Private high schools contributed 1103 to City College enrollment. California high school graduates who did not attend school in either a San Francisco private or public school numbered 888 last semester.

The rest of the United States sent 695 here.

Students from foreign high schools numbered 351.

Mary Jane Learnard, in her last year as registrar, noted interestingly that there were a total of 16 non-high school graduates on campus last spring. These were students who had not completed high school and are over 21 years of age.

After passing a special college entrance test, the San Francisco Unified School District awards them diplomas.

Students Adapt, Not Conform To New College Environment

THE TIME HAS COME when a high school education is not enough. Be it technological advancement or just plain status, employers now require a college education before they even give the job-seeker individual consideration.

Students do not usually like to admit that the reason they are attending college is to be eligible for better jobs and therefore more money. They prefer to quote the more lofty ideals of the desire to seek the Truth—or education for the sake of education alone. There are those who are actually here for this reason and no other, but they are few and far between.

But whatever a person's reasons for continuing his education, one dominant fact remains. He is doing it on a voluntary basis; the time of compulsory education has passed. Anybody on this campus can leave at any time. He will not leave a gap. Annually increasing enrollments show that there will be two new students to take his place.

Entering college means entering a new environment. A person has to adapt to an environment—he does not have to conform to it. There are few rules and regulations to follow at City College, but these few must and will be adhered to.

The two-year college is the backbone of California's system of higher education. It offers relief to the already over-crowded State colleges and universities and it helps the student complete his lower division requirements of a college education with a minimum of cost. It makes possible the dream of a college education to all with the ability to receive one.

But when somebody foots the bill, it is only right that the receiver of the benefits recognize certain obligations. In the case of City College, the city of San Francisco takes care of the major burden of expenses with state funds taking care of the rest.

For their effort, the city and state ask but one thing—that the student receive the best education possible under existing circumstances. Upon graduation, the student is not required to pay back anything. He is not even required to remain a resident in the area that was taxed the heaviest for his education.

The two-year college is a tried and true route to the universities. The time will come when it will be the only route, because of increasing enrollments. A college education is here for the asking, but it is up to the individual to work for it. Learning is never easy, but that is what is offered here. Good luck.

Map Shows Areas For Student Cars

AS Members Have Parking Rights Here

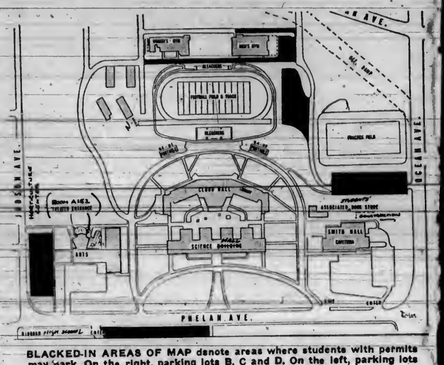
Approximately 1800 parking spaces are available for students driving to the college, provided that the cars parked in these areas have a valid parking permit on their windshields.

Parking permits are issued by the Campus Police department to those students who have joined the Associated Students. Cars parked in the student parking lots without the permit are subject to citations.

Five student parking lots east of Phelan avenue are as follows:

Parking lot B, the blacked-in area on the map between the football practice field and Smith Hall (cafeteria), is a student parking lot. Entrance to the lot is from Ocean avenue. Walking time from the center of lot B to the flag pole in the center of the main courtyard is three minutes and 20 seconds.

Parking lot C is the area between the football field and track and the practice field. Entrance to this lot is also on Ocean avenue and through lot B. Walking time from lot C to the flag pole is three minutes and 35 seconds.



Lots F and G encompass the area between Arts Hall and Judson avenue. Entrance is from Judson avenue. Walking time from the combined lots is clocked at three minutes and 25 seconds.

The "Big Daddy" of all campus parking lots is the north reservoir which can accommodate 1000 cars.

From the reservoir, across Phelan avenue, it takes four minutes and 40 seconds to walk to Science Hall.

All other lots are for faculty or guest parking.

Although the ticket is issued by the Campus Police, it is the same as any citation issued by the regular San Francisco Police force. The fine is payable to the Hall of Justice.

BLACKED-IN AREAS OF MAP denote areas where students with permits may park. On the right, parking lots B, C and D. On the left, parking lots F and G, along Judson avenue. The Big Daddy of all is the reservoir.

Sights To See Around Roller Coaster Campus

City College, located on San Francisco's Hill 29, has seven permanent buildings, only one of which, Science Hall, dominates the top of the incline.

Although true, this is little consolation to the incoming student who may have a high registration number and a comparatively late registration hour.

And a typical class schedule can pose problems.

At 8 a.m. the young student finds himself in front of Science Hall, the major building on the crest of the hill. He proceeds to climb the three flights of stairs to his first class on the third floor.

The 9 a.m. carillon rings, and he dashes from his third floor class and realizes that he has only 10 minutes to reach his next class—physical education.

He then staggers down the three floors of Science Hall, walks out the east door and finds himself in a large courtyard with Science Hall behind and Cloud Hall directly in front of him.

He continues to walk east through Cloud Hall and finds himself at the crest of a downward hill which will eventually take him to the men's gymnasium. Upon descending the incline beyond the stadium, there are two large buildings in front of him.

Coeds enter the building on the north, so he assumes that the place for him is the structure on the south.

At long last, 10 a.m. rolls around and he notices that he has a long-sought-after break. Where does he go?

He decides he needs nutrition and begins to climb the hill from which he descended just 50 minutes earlier.

At the top of the incline, he turns south and walks down a hill where he finds Smith Hall and the new Statler wing directly to the left of it and set further back.

After sipping a cup of coffee in the fountain section of Smith Hall and somewhat rested, he decides to explore. Outside he finds to the immediate east the Ramporium, the Associated Student bookstore. This structure is not considered permanent because of future building plans.

At the chimes for the 11 a.m. class he realizes that he has to trudge to Arts Hall.

Now, he makes an about-face, turns to the north and starts the journey back up the hill that took him to Smith Hall, across the middle of the courtyard and then down the hill on the north side of Hill 29.

There stands Arts Hall, soon to be expanded to house photography, advertising and graphic arts.

Priceless Rivera In Arts Hall

College Boasts 'Biggest, Best'

A masterpiece by the late Mexican artist, Diego Rivera, self-described as the "biggest and the best," adorns the east wall of the theater lobby in Arts Hall, after lying hidden for nearly two decades before a fitting site was found.

This great masterpiece, a mural, entitled, Marriage of the Artistic Expression of the North and South On This Continent, was given to the college after being painted as part of the living arts displayed at the Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939 on Treasure Island.

While being moved to the college at the close of the fair, the mural was insured for $50,000 with Lloyd's of London. It is now insured for $125,000. In the art world, however, "priceless" would be the expression used to indicate its value.

When it arrived at the college, no facilities were available to accommodate the huge mural which is 22 feet high and 75 feet long.

The mural was placed in a protective case and stored in sections near the men's gymnasium where it lay for 18 years.

As the plans were being drawn in 1958 for what is now Arts Hall, provision was made for the mural to be mounted in the theater lobby of the building.

And so with the completion of Arts Hall, the outstanding mural, which is a priceless property of the college, was again displayed after its long period of dormancy.

The mural is divided into panels and in the center one is a serpent-fanged machine god. Around it are inventors, statesmen, personal friends of Rivera and shots from some of his favorite movies.

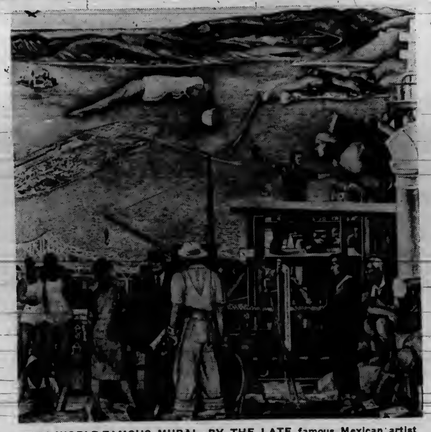
In the far left panels of the mural, Rivera has created an Aztec motif.

Moving to the right, such great men as George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln are painted.

In the approximate center of the mural, sculptor Dudley Carter is shown carving the Redwood Ram, which, also a "relic" of the 1939 Golden Gate Fair, is now permanently located on the campus near Smith Hall.

The Ram was moved to its present location in 1956 where it has staunchly endured vandals and weather.

Below the Ram, Rivera is seen with his wife.



Rivera also placed dictators Stalin, Mussolini and Hitler in his mural.

Twice Olympic diving champion Helen Crlenkovich, then a City College student, is in the mural as she seems to glide silently above the bay waters and the city of San Francisco.

Finally, on the extreme right of his masterpiece, Rivera showed inventors Thomas Edison and S.F.B. Morse, and Robert Fulton and his steamboats.

The overall theme of the mural was to, and does, depict Pan-American unity.

When asked why he painted himself holding hands with movie star Paulette Goddard, Rivera explained, "It means closer Pan-Americanism."

THE WORLD-FAMOUS MURAL, BY THE LATE famous Mexican artist Diego Rivera, is mounted on the east wall of the theater lobby in Arts Hall. A section of the priceless masterpiece, entitled, Marriage of the Artistic Expression of the North and South on This Continent is shown here.

Redwood Ram Stands Guard At Main Campus Entrance

The Redwood Ram, the best known symbol on campus, stands guard at the main approach to the campus, serving as a meeting place for students and a reminder of college spirit.

Created in 1939 by sculptor Dudley C. Carter, the Ram made its debut under the admiring glances of the crowds visiting the California Handicraft Exhibit of San Francisco's Golden Gate International Exposition of 1939 on Treasure Island, where it was carved.

Following the fair, the Redwood Ram was formally presented in 1940 to the late Archibald J. Cloud, then president of the college, by the late architect Timothy Pfleuger as Carter's gift to a new and expanding institution.

After an unfortunate five-year stay in the men's gymnasium, forced there by lack of a suitable place to display its beauty, the Ram was moved from place to place as new buildings came and temporary ones went. When the West Campus was abandoned to become reservoirs, it was decided that the present spot was best.

There, on January 3, 1956, at about 10 a.m., the Ram was permanently mounted on a specifically designed pedestal provided by the engineering department.

Carved from a redwood stump, the figure took about 16 eight-hour days of work to complete, and it was carved with a double-bladed axe, some chisels and lots of skill. The complete statue, which was painted Red and White, the college colors, in 1947, weighs about a ton.

Recently, because of an excess of paint that had been splattered on the Ram, his standard Red and White color has been chipped off.

The Ram is now painted brown.

The Redwood Ram.

Success Story — The History Of City College

THIS PORTRAIT OF PRESIDENT Archibald J. Cloud, first president of the college, 1935 to 1949, and President Emeritus, 1949 to 1957, was taken by Madison Devlin, audio-visual aids instructor. A color photograph, it now hangs in the library.

Campus Hits Big Time With 'Lee' Miss America

Although the college had previously made news nationally, notably when it was listed by Look Magazine as one of the top ten two-year colleges in the country, nothing put it on the map more dramatically than the triumph of Lee Meriwether — City College student, 1954 — Miss America, 1955.

The two years marked the trek eastward to the college's permanent campus, a move that had visual evidence shortly after Louis G. Conlan "came home" as President of the college where he had been a member of the pioneer faculty.

Within two years after his appointment, President Conlan led a building program that was to stretch to the present time. The "war babies" were soon to reach college age, and at City College, as well as throughout the nation, accommodations were being made for their education.

The two-year college, largely a product of California, had proved itself and proved to the nation that every person was to be afforded the opportunity of a college education without tuition.

Construction and occupation were the earmarks of the period started in 1954. Cloud Hall: curiously, dedication ceremonies on April 25 marked an anniversary — 17 years to the day after ground had been broken for the construction of Science Hall.

Smith Hall construction, to house the famed hotel and restaurant department and the cafeteria it operates, was started not only in the Cloud Hall dedication year but also in the same month.

Completed in 1956, and already outgrown as a cafeteria what with steadily increasing enrollments, Smith Hall occupancy was followed in 1959 by the start of construction of Arts Hall and the college stadium.

Arts Hall, 1961 — for the first time City College had a real theater, not too large, it is true, but nonetheless a theater, possessed of the most modern equipment possible — and comfortable seats.

Music, art, closed-circuit television, ceramics — each had quarters conducive to carrying on the tradition of artistic achievement bravely begun by the Argonauts in 1935.

Building of a sort not anticipated by San Francisco's school department created a minor furor in 1962 when a freeway tentacle chopped off a corner of the campus. The corner just happened to be the site of the horticulture center, built in 1947.

In 1964, however, a new center was completed along with its greenhouse and room for 30,000 plants rescued from the old greenhouse.

Students entering this semester will push the total number of students who have enrolled here close to the 160,000 mark.

From Powell street and Galileo High headquarters to Balboa Park and the temporary West Campus — City College is the San Francisco School Department's top Success Story.

San Francisco The Campus For 1470 Argonauts In 1935

City College of San Francisco (then named San Francisco Junior College) became a reality August 26, 1935, when the first student body met in the War Memorial Opera House to be addressed as "Argonauts."

Between opening-day formal speeches, 1470 students and 72 faculty members read a newspaper bearing the name Emanon — (try it in reverse).

A high point in the speeches was to become a familiar reminder from pioneer President Archibald J. Cloud: "A college is more than buildings..."

There were many buildings, yet each was borrowed.

Morning classes met in the University of California's Extension Building at 540 Powell street, afternoon classes in Galileo High School, where administrative offices also were located. Beyond these bases, classes requiring special facilities found them in from 18 to 25 buildings throughout the city.

An automobile tour of 18 of these sites, made in 1938 by an Associated Student President and a Guardsman reporter, clocked two hours and 35 minutes driving time exclusive of parking mileage and stops at the 18 locations.

Thus, without a campus of their own, the early student bodies could rightly call the city itself their campus, Union Square their recreation center between classes, cable car rides around and over Russian Hill to Galileo a stimulating diversion.

Within 30 days after opening ceremonies, the Argonauts had organized the Associated Students, drafted a constitution and elected officers; named their newspaper The Guardsman; adopted a mascot, the Ram; chosen colors, Red and White, and adopted a motto, Ut Adolescentes Vitae Educantur which, translated from the Latin, means That Youth May Be Educated To Life, all through the democratic process — the vote.

One year later, 40 acres of Balboa Park were acquired as the site for a permanent campus, and on April 25, 1937, Science Hall construction, in the form of ground-breaking, began.

A special bond issue, necessary to qualify the school department for federal funds was passed by San Francisco voters — and the two gymnasiums were assured. So, in 1940, 3000 students occupied their own campus — soon to be dubbed pneumonia hill by the more cynically minded.

For three semesters the new campus, the college's own campus after five years of wandering, was at peace, or at least fighting only for familiar items such as adequate parking facilities.

Until December 7, 1941.

Although enrollment ebbed to fewer than 1000 in 1943, the war years saw the college not only maintaining its two basic curricula, university parallel courses and technical training programs, respectively, but also meeting wholeheartedly every effort to aid in the World War II effort.

Summer sessions were inaugurated, victory gardens of vegetables dotted the campus, evening classes were established, and a variety of specialized programs was provided to service units in San Francisco as the need arose.

Through it all, even though necessarily on a limited basis, the traditions, the activities, the spirit established by the Argonauts in 1935 of accepting any challenge continued.

The West Campus — 1946-1954

THESE 14 BUILDINGS, constructed with parade ground area in foreground for the US Navy Waves' separation center, were once standing on the present site of the south reservoir across from Science Hall. The college used these buildings as its West Campus from 1946 to 1954.

City College had a West Campus from 1946 to 1954.

Buildings, 14 including a gymnasium-turned-auditorium all originally constructed for Navy Waves and situated where the south reservoir across from Science Hall now stands, were used by the college.

With ex-GIs swelling enrollment past 5000, the West Campus era saw major events in college history.

Foremost was the change of name. The hated "Junior" was officially killed and on February 12, 1946, it was City College of San Francisco.

Activities were at their height. Music — Christmas concerts drawing capacity crowds in 1000-seat auditorium... drama — Shakespeare, top-drawer... Man Who Came To Dinner the same... Ramporium established ... The Guardsman published twice a week... campus-wide participation in the music-drama production of Vagabond King... 4000 total audience.

And Archibald J. Cloud, retiring as President in 1949, gave this thought in a valedictory message: "Education is not a destination — it is a journey — always, we are en route."

Works Of Art Adorn Campus

MANY ORIGINAL WORKS OF ART adorn the walls and halls of City College in addition to the Diego Rivera mural and the Redwood Ram.

Usually the first to catch the eye of the visitor because of their location just inside the main entrance to Science Hall, are the twin murals by artist Fred Olmstead, depicting a student engaged in study, (top left and bottom right).

Painted in 1940 and 1941, these impressive works were, almost unbelievably, finished by Olmstead in his "spare time," while he concurrently worked on two stone sculptures now in the courtyard facing Cloud Hall.

The two figures, among the last commissioned by the Federal Work Projects Administration, were set in place in 1941, shortly after completion of Science Hall.

Facing each other, they are the heads of Thomas Edison, (top right), and Leonardo da Vinci, (lower left), meant to represent Theory and Science.

For the record, Edison is on the north side of Science Hall's courtyard, while da Vinci stands on the south side of the court.

In keeping with the impressive murals created by Olmstead, is Stanley Sadler's mural depicting the evolution of type and journalism from the invention of type by the Chinese to the latest presses and newest processes, (top center).

The mural is fittingly mounted in room 345 of Science Hall, near the graphic arts laboratory, the advertising art department and the office of The Guardsman, official publication of the college.

Not exactly an art treasure but deeply revered by faculty and students is the college's motto, The Truth Shall Make You Free, from the New Testament, John, VIII, 32.

Other works of art adorning the college's walls include two 40 by 50 foot mosaics by Herman Volz, outside the north and south walls of Science Hall, a portrait of Dr. Archibald J. Cloud, first President of the college, located just inside the entrance to the library in Cloud Hall.

IF ARTS HALL in the above shot appears as one winding ramp — it isn't. This optical illusion was created by pasting the picture in the upper left-hand corner over the large one. Clear? — sure!

Gridders Prepare To Defend Title After Best Season

After an eight-year title draught, the 1965 Ram football team went undefeated in season play and broke 20 records, including two national records, to finish the most successful season since an undefeated season in 1948.

Although this was the third time that the Rams have had an undefeated season, the 40-20 win over the bowl-undefeated Long Beach City College Vikings in the Prune Bowl capped this season head and shoulders above all previous seasons.

Honors were heaped on the Prune Bowl winners with the entire starting line elected to the 1965 Golden Gate All-Conference clubs, while star halfback O. J. Simpson was voted to the National Junior College All-America team.

Some of the records were the most yards rushing, most yards for a season, most points, and most touchdowns in a seven-game season; most yards rushing, most total yards; and national records of most points per season (138), and most yards per game (304) both set by Simpson.

Since the gridders won the league title and a bowl game they were voted the number six two-year college in the nation in a post-season poll.

Hopes are set high for this fall as the defending champions are looking forward to another successful season now that they have shown that they have the ability to win big, but the loss of most of the '65 team stars to many of the large four-year colleges in the area has put a damper on all preseason predicions.

Returning veterans from last year's squad are Chris Ranson, halfback; Jerd Lapham, tackle; John Valero, halfback, and Art Luna, tackle.

Hopefuls for next year's influx are Pete Mullins, QB from Washington's championship squad and Wayne Mc-Conico from Cal Poly.

While plans for next season's team are great, they are definitely slowed by the noticable lack of a veteran quarterback.

FORTY-NINER "BABY BULL" GARY LEWIS is shown displaying his defensive talents during a contest versus Merritt College in 1960. Lewis led the team in scoring, passing yardage, interception returns and was second in rushing. He was named Back-Of-The-Year in 1960.

Soccermen Seeking Fourth Consecutive State Title

In an attempt to continue complete dominance of all competition, the Ram soccer team heads into the 1966 season bidding for an unprecedented fourth consecutive state soccer championship. The Rams will also be shooting for their eighth straight title.

The college has won the conference title since the league was organized in 1963. Previously, the Rams had established themselves as consistent winners in the Northern California Intercollegiate Soccer League which includes Universities of California and San Francisco, and Stanford.

In 1962, the "mighty Bears" forced through a vote to exclude City College from the league on the grounds that it was the only two-year college participating.

It was also the only two-year college to win the league title and defeat UC et al in the process.

The team's state title record is unblemished. In three skirmishes the Rams have exploded for 26 tallies, to one for the opposition. Title game scores have continued to soar, from the initial 4-1, to 8-0, and finally 14-0.

Last year the squad breezed through the season for the title. At times the club found itself "going through the motions" of a championship team—thus failing to match its potential. Yet, the team displayed its unlimited scoring power enough times to win.

Past performances make the 1966 team a solid favorite to repeat as conference champions. The loss of Alex Mendieta, who tallied 29 times last year, will of course be costly to the squad, but Coach Roy Diederichsen will have several outstanding candidates bidding for the captain's post.

Most likely the job of team leader will go to two-year All-American Connie Shishkin.

His defensive work in the Ram backfield was increasingly important when the team found itself in an offensive lag. His steady play accounted for his surprise naming to the coveted squad.

Other team members counted on to strengthen the Ram bid are Ronnie Van Velthuysen, Pete Rossi, Mike Montes, Nelson Artiga and George Fernandez. All five were named to the Northern California Junior College Soccer All-Conference squad.

As far as the state title is concerned, it will be within reach once again. Usually the hope to achieve four consecutive state crowns would seem unlikely, but the reverse is true here.

It is a common fact that other teams in the league have not been able to keep up with the Ram squad since the league's inception. Although each year has seen every club in the league improve, the Rams have consistently outclassed the field.

Opportunities For Athletic Competition Are Offered

Numerous opportunities are offered each semester to students interested in participating in athletic competition through the efforts of the Associated Men Students and the Recreation Association.

The AMS sponsors two intramural basketball leagues which are composed of Club teams in one league and Fraternity and Independent teams in the other.

The games are usually played each Tuesday and Wednesday nights, and participants must comply with the specific regulations.

At the season's end the winner of the Club league vies with the champions of the Independent-Fraternity league for the intramural championship. This action takes place on AMS Sports Night along with boxing matches and other events.

Some of the activities offered in RA are coed archery, badminton, bowling, folk, social and modern dancing, and men's and women's softball.

The RA feasting team has fared spectacularly in competition, including Spring '65 when City College became the first two-year college to win the Northern California Intercollegiate Fencing Association title.

Last semester City College fencer Gerald Esponda became the first two-year college participant in the history of the event to win the individual championship Laura Trophy.

Cross Country Team Hopes To Bounce Back

The 1966 Cross Country team will try to bounce back into conference contention after finishing eighth in the Golden Gate Conference competition in 1965.

Coach Lou Vasquez is optimistic about the team's chances. This season, unlike last year, the squad will be composed of veterans.

The Rams lost three important men in Rich Cuadra, Joe Singer and Bill Long. However, Vasquez will greet his two top men in Alex Vosher and George Ferguson.

Since their induction in the Golden Gate Conference in 1962, the Rams have never attained their actual heights in their quest for the title. This could be the Rams' big year.

RAMBLINGS Ram Fields Send Athletes To Pro Ranks

By William Pates

THERE IS a common belief in many quarters that sports at the two-year college level are of little use other than as a last resort for some "aging" athletes who were unable to make it anyplace else.

This just isn't so. It is more than that.

Last year saw City College win its seventh consecutive conference soccer championship, its third in the Northern California Junior College Soccer Conference, and crush Victor Valley College for the state championship for the third straight year by a score of 14-0.

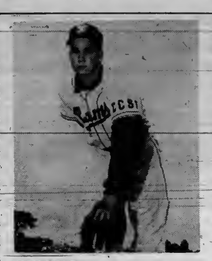
The Ram football squad devastated the opposition in the Golden Gate Conference, smashed the myth of Southern California supremacy by winning the Prune Bowl, 40-20, over Long Beach City College and ended the year ranked sixth in the nation.

They, the two-year colleges, perform in the capacity of a "farm club" for those athletes passed over by the scholarship-wielding universities to bring their capabilities to the attention of these four-year institutions as well as the professional sports organizations.

In a dual capacity, these two-year colleges exact the role of a "training camp" for these "late flowering" athletes who otherwise would be ignored, or thrust into the background in university and college freshman and junior varsity teams.

City College of San Francisco has had great success in this regard, although several athletes were already "great" when they arrived on this campus.

By far the best known is "old number 74," Ollie Matson, an eventual member of the National Football League Hall of Fame.



Matson came out of Washington High, having broken the Academic Athletic Association scoring record in 1947, to lead the Ram football team to an undefeated season and the old Nor-Cal Junior College Conference title. He scored 19 touchdowns and ran for more than 100 yards in four of the team's 12 games.

Matson went on to the University of San Francisco and fame with the Chicago Cardinals and the Los Angeles Rams. He is spending the waning years of his career with the Philadelphia Eagles.

More recently, former Ram fullback and quarterback Gary Lewis has been availing the 49ers of his talents.

OLLIE MATSON

RICH NOLD

Lewis was an All-American at Polytechnic High and was named 1960 Big Eight Conference Back-Of-The-Year while at City College. The 6-2, 230-pound fullback led the Rams in passing (23-58, 333 yds.), scoring, (70 pts.), interceptions (6-63 yds.) and was second in rushing (45-412 yds, 9.3 av.).

In 1963 he played in the United Football League after being drafted as a "red shirt" by the 49ers. He was called up half way through the '64 season and started the last three games at fullback. Lewis ran for 115 yards in 49 attempts and caught seven passes for 73 yards.

Although pushed out of a starting spot by the talented Ken Willard and John David Crow, Lewis was the third best rusher on the club with 210 yards in 42 attempts. He picked up 319 yards in 25 tries on the kickoff return squad, second only to Alexander, with an average of 24.5 yards a return.

Another professional hopeful is halfback Tom Piggee, a 19th-round draft choice of the Dallas Cowboys who was signed at the end of the year.

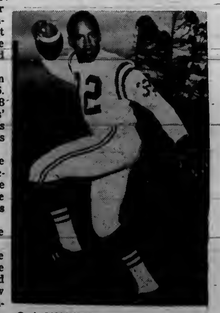
Piggee led the Rams in rushing two years straight and tied for the honor of 1961 Back-Of-The-Year in the Big Eight Conference.

In 1960, the 5-11, 200-pound runner picked up 675 yards in 91 attempts and bettered this effort with 742 yards in 1961 with an average gain of 7.4 yards.

Piggee went on to San Francisco State where he carried the load for the Gators in 1964 with 568 yards rushing. He had his greatest day while at City College against Modesto when he ran for 211 yards in but 18 carries and scored four touchdowns.

A current prospect is O. J. Simpson who had a fantastic season in 1965. Simpson set a national record of 138 points, scored three td's in the Rams' 40-20 Prune Bowl victory as well as gaining 949 yards rushing in 82 carries in seven conference games.

O. J. broke numerous conference records while setting a national record of most rushing yardage in one contest with 304 in 18 attempts. The lists of tributes and accomplishments go on and on and on.



There has been equal success in the field of baseball.

Rich Nold, under contract to the Washington Senators, has had the greatest success. In 1964 he was named the Most Valuable Player in the New York-Pennsylvania League by the National Association of Baseball Writers.

Nold compiled a 20-8 pitching record and set a league record for strikeout with 268 in 242 innings. He spent most of 1965 in the Army and had trouble getting back in shape. Nevertheless, he was able to compile a 5-9 record in the Carolina League, playing for Burlington.

George Case, manager of the Senators Florida Instructional League, says Nold has a delivery like that of Bob Friend.

"It's an off-rhythm deceptive delivery," Case commented. Nold had a 1.34 earned-run average in his first 22 innings, walked two and struck out 26.

O. J. SIMPSON

A Straw Breaks Camel's Back

In America nobody walks, or so it seems. Students at the college, as well as at other colleges, bring two tons of steel along with them wherever they go, and so space is needed to park the tag-along while the master goes about his business.

As enrollment increases, so does the need for more parking space increase proportionately. Obviously there is a point at which mass will cover all parking space, in this parking lot as well as in the building on the hill. The student entering the lot seems to have found the saturation point; hopefully he will fare better in that building on the hill.

Motorcycles are rapidly gaining popularity, but the small space allotted them in the cafeteria lot can only serve about half of the available two-wheelers, and so the owners will have to take their chances with poor parkers and dishonestly inclined people on the street until someone allots more campus parking space for the wild ones.

Student Council Shows Reluctance To Start Business

By Bill Fritz

All things considered, this semester's Student Council is having a bit of a hassle just getting off the ground.

It would seem, to the casual observer, that the council members are either still awe-struck by the import of their positions or a bit timid by nature.

As a result, the first four meetings of Student Council were highlighted by cabinet reports, announcements and, not last of all, the swearing in by Associated Student President Bruce Fisher of the Top Six officers, council and the many and sundry cabinet members.

ELECTION COMMISSIONER Don Chiang reported the vacancy of two council seats due to the absence of Soph Councilman Mike Nygren and Frosh Councilman Craig Noonan from the campus this semester.

A special election will be held in council after the first midterm examinations. Balloting was set at this time to allow consideration to incoming Freshmen for the unoccupied posts. Petitions are available from the Election Commissioner in B-5.

The Fall budget report was made by Finance Chairman Linette Wong to the effect that allocations to AS supported organizations and activities will total $45,711.99 for this semester. Income to cover these expenses will, once again, spring from Ramporium sales, vending machine returns and from the sale of AS cards. Consideration of supplementary allocation requests will begin this week.

Sponsors of organizations needing additional working capital were requested to inform the Finance Chairman as soon as possible.

AS CARD SALES Chairman Marty Watten assured the council that sales will easily exceed the minimum goal set at 3600.

This semester all on and off-campus publicity and promotional duties have been given to Skip Archibald, AS publicity chairman. This consolidation of publicity under one office should eliminate much confusion and facilitate the dissemination of information and promotional material.

From the Campus Police came a report by Jeff Alecorn that tagging of unathorized cars in the student parking lots will begin next Monday. Parking permits may be obtained from the Campus Police in C-116.

Assistant Dean of Student Activities James Wyatt announced that he had received a letter from the Chancellor of the Universiy of California, Roger W. Heyns, extending an invitation to the members of the faculty and student body to attend the annual University Day on the Berkeley campus on Saturday, November 12.

In addition to the tradltional morning program, the University Day Committee will receive a block of seats at the California-Army football game to be held that afternoon in Memorial Stadium. Tickets may be purchased for $1 by University Day visitors. Anyone interested is expected to inform Wyatt in B-5 as soon as possible.

Clubs Recruit On COO Day During C-Hour Tomorrow

An estimated 23 clubs are expected to turn out tomorrow at the college's Council Of Organizations Day. A rally at the Ram has also been tentatively scheduled to add to the activities, Fred Reisinger, president of the COO, said.

Every semester the COO dedicates one College Hour so that clubs that have lost members may recruit new ones. "This is the only time clubs have a chance to attract new members," Reisinger emphasized.

THE PARTICIPATING clubs put up tables and have members and displays or literature to answer the questions of prospective members. Fraternities display beer mugs and no-longer-used paddles and, in the past, sororities had cookies and coffee.

The clubs represented are social clubs, interest clubs, and career clubs. This semester three new clubs are expected on campus, the Veteran's Association, the City College Touring Club, and the Chess Club, Reisinger announced.

Aside from COO Day, the COO sponsors the Homecoming Queen contest, the Fall Talent Show and the Spring Festival. The proceeds of the Spring Festival have been set up as a scholarship fund. The scholarship is awarded to the most deserving club member, Reisinger said.

The COO also donates moral support to the Tutorial Service, of which Fred Stewart is the President. Reisinger explained that the tutorial program aids underprivileged young people.

REISINGER WAS the President of the Pick and Hammer Club when he was elected President of the COO by the other representatives.

Martin Watten, last semester's Election Commissioner, is the Vice President of the COO.

COO meetings are held every Tuesday and Thursday from 1 to 2 p.m. in B-5. At that time representatives discuss future functions and problems of their groups.

All organizations are represented at COO meetings. This includes the Frosh and Soph Classes, the Block SF, Honor groups and Campus Police. Anyone having conflicting interests during College Hour is invited to drop by club meetings at any time, Reisinger said.

AWS Hosts Annual State Conference Here In October

Associated Women Students will be hosts at a state conference of AWS organizations here from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. on Saturday, October 8, in the Smith Hall cafeteria.

AWS members from approximately 17 two-year colleges in this area have been invited to participate, Dean of Women Mary Golding said today.

The Role of the College Trained Women in this Changing World is the main topic of this conference. This will be sub-divided into five individual workshops; The Role of the Daring and Adventerous, The Role of the Overseas Careerist, The Role of the "At Home" Careerist, The Role of the Urban Activist, and The Role of the Housewife Plus.

Coffee will be served and the meeting will begin with a general speaker. Then each member will disburse into the different workshops to hear speakers on the role of specific interest to her. Later they will all meet again for lunch and entertainment.

Diane Lattimer, AWS president of this college, has been working to make this conference a beneficial and memorable occasion for all participating. She urges any member interested in attending to sign up in Dean Golding's office, S-150.

AWS members unfamiliar with the activities undertaken by this organization might find this conference a good way of becoming acquainted with members not only of this college but of other colleges, Dean Golding said.

City College Bulges

Registration reached an all-time high at City College last week.

According to figures tabulated thus far by Gertrude Sommerville, registrar, a total of 11,424 students is enrolled. And there are more to be processed!

The previous high at City College was set last fall when 10,797 students enrolled here.

This semester's breakdown of enrollment also tops last year's with a total of 8865 in day classs, compared with 8557 last year.

Evening classes total 2559 this year which is 339 more than last year's 2220.

Enrollment also jumped 1384 over last spring's registration of 10,040 and this jump could, too, set a record.

The reasons for the significant increase in enrollments were cited by officials as threefold: a greater number of people reaching the age of 18, increased stress on college education and the increasing demands of the Selective Service.

It has also been stated that because of the increased demands of the Selective Service, a greater number of students is being readmitted.

Problems have naturally developed from increased enrollments, notably, availability of parking and classroom space.

Also, registration proved to be hectic for many, but next year plans indicate that computer registration may be more than experimental.

Lack Of Facilities, Low Budget Restrict Activity

By Viggo Petersen

Some of the more common complaints heard around City College center around one idea.

"This place is dead," is frequently a voiced lament.

"There's no action out here," is another way of putting it.

Not too much does "happen" at City College.

Then the question arises, why doesn't more happen out here?

Why, for example, does Eric Fromm, the great lecturer and social critic, lecture at the College of Marin and not here?

Why do the New Christy Minstrels appear at two-year colleges around the Bay Area and not here?

According to James Wyatt, assistant dean of Student Activities, the reasons range from a low budget to improper facilities to bad luck.

DEAN WYATT POINTED to the fact that City College has one of the lowest budgets of two-year colleges in the state used for entertainment purposes.

He pointed out that Modesto Junior College is prepared to pay Petula Clark, who is scheduled for an appearance at that college later this fall, $5000 dollars for a one-night stand.

But, Dean Wyatt continued, Modesto is fully prepared to get every cent of it back through paid admissions, because of availability of a large auditorium on campus, sufficient in seating capacity to regain the money in receipts.

THE (LITTLE) THEATER at City College is just that: little. It seats, according to Dean Wyatt, 352 people, hardly ample to seat a substantial audience to support a "name" act.

He went on to say that the men's gymnasium could seat a large audience but improper lighting and the location of the gymnasium speak for themselves.

As an example of misfortune, last year a scheduled appearance of Roger Miller at a City College rally had to be cancelled for an uncertain reason. Apparently Miller was to have appeared for publicity.

However, looking over this year's schedule of activities, it would be unfair not to note some of the attractions which highlight the fall semester.

FOR THE POLITICALLY minded, Robert Scheer, recent candidate for the seventh congressional district, is scheduled to speak here on October 13.

Scheer is widely recognized as an outspoken critic of President Johnson's policies in Vietnam.

Although he lost the primary elections, it is considered quite significant that he carried 45 percent of the electorate in the returns, which would represent a number of people who support his views.

Many regard Scheer as a spokesman for antiwar critics.

Also, for the politically minded, the Democrat and Republican candidates for the newly formed tenth Senate district, Supervisor George Moscone and James L. Walker III, will appear at City College October 27.

And Dr. Nevitt Sanford of Stanford University, known also for his views on the Vietnam war, is scheduled to speak on the Authoritarian Personality November 10.

BECAUSE OF LAST year's disappointments caused by the inability of Miller to appear, Wyatt was reluctant to give any indication as to future entertainment at rallies. However, he emphasized that best efforts will be put forth to provide suitable entertainment.

A number of cultural events are scheduled this year, which will include guitar festivals, piano concerts, stage band concerts, drama and a film series.

Finally, one interested to any degree in sports, does not neglect the efforts of the football team. This year's squad, which is still savoring the glory of having been last year's conference champions, is highlighted by the return of O. J. Simpson who, to anyone who follows sports to any degree, is recognized as perhaps the state's, if not the nation's greatest running back.

JAMES WYATT, formeriy student government adviser, has been elevated to the position of Assistant Dean of Student Activities.

Title Of Dean Leaves Wyatt's Job Unchanged

Former student government adviser James Wyatt said his new title, assistant dean of student activities, has left his job "essentially the same."

He stated that he felt the new title was given because the "job has grown," and the "importance of student activities has grown."

He now has some added duties, such as assigning sponsor for the various clubs, arranging for chaperoning of various student activities, and arranging for visits of groups such as VISTA, the armed forces, and the Peace Corps. These tasks were previously done by the Dean of Men.

Wyatt had been the student government adviser since 1964. He had, prior to coming to the college, been a coach, counselor, and student government adviser at Abraham Lincoln high school.

A former City College student, he once was captain of the track team and broke a record in the half-mile. His name is in the college's Sports Hall of Fame.

College Staff Undergoes Changes

Three significant changes have taken place at City College.

One is the promotion of Dean Ralph Hillsman, former Dean of Men, to the position of Dean of Students. Also, James Wyatt, who previously held the position of student government adviser, is now Assistant Dean in charge of Student Activities.

With the retirement of Mary Jane Learnard as registrar, Gertrude Somerville, previously assistant registrar, has assumed those duties and is the college registrar.

As Dean of Students, Hillsman will still work closely with students but on an individual rather than an activity basis. He will continue to work with attendance problems, promote general morale, interpret regulations and advise campus conduct.

The major difference is that he will assume responsibility for the entire student body rather than just for men students.

Theater Lab To Promote Drama

The theater lab, inaugurated by the drama department this semester, is a new concept designed to promote student involvement in the art of play production, according to Walter Krumm, drama coach.

The lab students are comprised of Paul Crowley's stagecraft and theater graphics students and Krumm's acting class. They will all read Mother Courage by Brecht, Caligula by Camus, St. Joan of Arc by Shaw, and Shakespeare's As You Like It, a selection of plays with different styles and variety.

Scenes from these plays will hopefully be performed during College Hours, with students designing and building the sets. One of these plays is intended for production next semester, and the experience should be beneficial to potential drama students, Krumm declared.

The major production, Oscar Wilde's The Importance of Being Earnest, will be presented December 14 through 17 under the direction of James Haran.

Colleges Compete With Arms, Space Demands For Tax Money

THE GUARDSMAN sincerely welcomes all new students and most of the returnees this fall and will spare one and all an enumeration of the benefits in a college education.

This is the students' newspaper. Students can read it, they can express their views in it with a letter to the Ram's Horn, they can ignore it or wrap fish in it, but whether they like it or not, they're paying for it.

The students' money, collected from the sale of Associated Student cards, Rampórium Bookstore profits and other campus enterprises as the vending machines when they are operational, is metered to various campus activities by members of Student Council, who are elected by the students.

STUDENT COUNCIL ALLOTTED The Guardsman enough funds for 12 issues at 3000 papers per issue.

Those who are inconvenienced by such things as crowded classrooms, closed classes and a cafeteria that stresses togetherness, can only be reminded that this institution is supported with tax dollars.

And there is a great demand for these dollars elsewhere, such as for the finance of Asian Crusades and orbital space ventures. The city of San Francisco also needs dollars such as the millions that were spent to rehabilitate that cardboard edifice in the Marina; it also has to pay for the maintenance of useful structures like courthouses and jails and the such, and this takes more dollars.

BUT IT'S WHAT THE CITIZENS of the land want because tax dollars are metered by people who are elected by the citizenry, and so all is sure to work out for the best.

The Guardsman welcomes letters and reserves the right to tamper with them for brevity's sake only, but also there are words that a student publication under the auspices of the San Francisco public schools system just cannot print, and so The Guardsman has the right to censorship also. Letters may be published anonymously at request, but the editor must know the identity of the author so as to insure that it is a product of a member of the campus community.

A GROUP OF STUDENTS is initiating a tutorial program this semester for the purpose of teaching "slow learning" children who live in the poorer sections of the city. Volunteers for this worthwhile project can find further information in Bungalow 4.

Students participating in this program will be asked to leave their middle-class values at home and to try to understand the values of the children whom they will be trying to help.

Morals Outrun Today's Society

By Connie Skipitares

THE PRE-TEENER shamelessly frequents the corner of a brothel-lined street. Unsure, but hungry adolescence attends a planned parenthood lecture propagandizing the omnipotent "pill." Confirmed conformity seeks the experience of a "mind-excursion" through the assistance of a hallucinatory drug.

WITNESS THE "NEW MORALITY!"

Evidence of its presence can be detected in every walk of American life—in an idle conversation between two citizens, in the day-to-day hotline monotonously dispatched by the faithful media—in short, life's encounter with Mainstreet, USA.

Wherever you go, you find people speaking of the "new morality," the "new freedom," "the sexual revolution." What does all this mean to America and Americans—the Americans who are using today's obsession with sex as a catalyst in their prediction of a moral collapse in our society.

The significance of the movement lies in a contagious spirit of permissiveness—of anything goes—in all areas of social conduct, particularly in manners, dress, and sexual relationships. Yet, contrary to popular consensus, the "new morality" is not defined specifically by the actions of the "younger generation" alone. It applies at every age level.

"AMERICA," as one noted sociologist put it, "seems to be engaged in one vast, all-pervading, all permissive sexological spree!"

Statisticians have recently noted that, with the possible exception of the Red Chinese, no people in the world have changed as much in the past 20 years as we Americans. "And nowhere," it was added, "is the change more apparent that in our ethics of sex!"

The American emergence from the first World War, coupled with the consequential surge toward Freudian doctrine, may very well be held responsible for setting the stage for the current wave of ill-restrained behavior, but today's most contributing factor to the emerging mores is simply a flight from boredom.

Thus, the "new morality" was born, leaving in its wake a panic-stricken America!

FOR THE MOST PART, it is a confused and misled faction of today's adults—some of our parents, some of our educators, some of our politicians—which is experiencing the most severe panic in terms of what they have labeled the "younger generation's answer for life."

And these diehards have displayed this not-only in their suppression of sex education for their children, but much more powerfully in their fear of the death of our society by moral decadence.

With some, this panic has ultimately overridden the original cause for awe and stir, camouflaging the actual motivations initiated by the "new morality." And as for the rest, a rise in activated concern seems almost imminent, for panic is contagious.

WHAT CONSOLATION THEN, can be given to this highly moralistic America and its Americans? Certainly a regression back to the Puritanical or Victorian eras would not solve the problem! After experiencing an age of leisure and affluance, no problems can be resolved, exclusively, by a return to external restraints, censorships, curfews, or any modern equivalents.

We need a society that is more willing to accept change with reason, and at the same time honestly exercise a stronger will of self-discipline in order to begin coping with the "new morality" or this era.

A Tiger Pause

NICHOLAS, after visiting Jackson square, will come to City College—his photo, that is.

NICHOLAS is part of the collection made by Madison Devlin, head instructor of the audio-visual aids department here, whose photographs will be displayed in a photo exhibit at Yen Yen of Malaya shop, 536 Pacific, through October 29.

DEVLIN, working with Carroll Soo Hoo, professional photographer, will be showing animal subjects, such as Nicholas the tiger, taken at the Fleishhacker Zoo, at the request of the San Francisco zoological society. When the exhibit closes, Devlin will bring it to City College where it will be shown in the Cloud Hall gallery.

A PROFESSIONAL photographer himself, Devlin is a member of the American Society of Magazine Photographers. His works have been published in magazines and textbooks.

Heroic Sophs Risk Surf In Successful Rescue Of Child

Surf rescue is the most difficult and dangerous of all forms of aquatic life-saving. The dangers which face a potential rescuer often either scare him away or make him an added victim.

There is a gallantry in attempting a surf rescue that is a mixture of foolhardiness and raw courage. It can't be denied that there must be an indescribable feeling a person experiences when he accomplishes such a rescue.

AT OCEAN BEACH the odds of successfully completing a rescue are especially low. The tides, undertow, surf and wind all work together to discourage all but the daring.

Because everything works against the rescuer at the beach, few attempts are made. When one is made, therefore, it is a noteworthy event.

Such was the case in mid-June when six of the college's men made front page news.

A 12-year-old boy had been pulled out to sea when the six heard his cries for help. Three of the young men were in the water at once.

FORMING A CHAIN reaching toward shore, the first of them to reach the boy was Mike Lowery. Keeping the boy's head out of the water, Lowery passed him to Bill O'Brien who in turn passed the victim to Doug Nelson.

Approaching Nelson was the fourth man, Richard Swartz, who had brought his surfboard out. Taking the boy from Nelson and riding in on the board, the incident of the first victim was closed.

LOWERY, HOWEVER, had since taken in what was described as "lots of water" and O'Brien and Nelson were busy fighting the surf. The fifth man, Bob Martinez, on his surfboard, picked up Lowery and headed for shore. Nelson and O'Brien were picked up the same way by Jack Pita.

The quick action and natural coordination of the six sophomores averted death. For their heroism, they were given news coverage and a letter of commendation from Dean Ralph Hillsman.—S. H.

The Guardsman reserves the right to edit letters in the interest of brevity and rhetoric. If so desired the writer's name will be withheld, but the identity of the writer must be known to the editor."

After this last semester, The Guardsman will have to add a few more lines to the policy. Any letter that has been published, posted on a bulletin board or read to a class or made public in any way, prior to submission to Ram's Horn cannot be accepted because a letter is a letter is a letter.

Also, The Guardsman is not obligated to print letters relative to political candidates or issues, nor does The Guardsman solicit letters discussing or critizing religious beliefs.

As the Editor In Chief is held responsible for the content of the paper, he has the option to reject any letter that is trite or in obvious bad taste. Such an occasion has not occurred at this college for quite some time.

Ear-Piercing Not-So-New

(ACP)—Cameos, ivory roses, and pearls are the latest craze of an old style. A mode which began in Biblican days—ear-piercing—is still popular today and has become the latest campus fad.

The Pow Wow, newspaper of Northeast Louisiana State College, Monroe, La., reported recently on the not-so-new activity:

Centuries ago women and even children wore earrings, believing they would prevent or cure diseases of the eyes. During the reign of Elazabeth I, men wore earrings suspended from one ear.

Earrings and ear-piercing have bobbed in and out of style since days of old. Most of the time, earrings have been popular when hair styles were short or piled high on the head. Seldom have they been popular with long hair as they are today.

All over the country coeds are getting their ears pierced.

Doctors, jewelers and friends are being asked to perform the surgery. Regardless of who does it, a certain amount of skill is required to get the angle of piercing right and the holes symmetrical. If the holes are too low, a heavy earring will cut the lobe or stretch it out of shape. If the holes are too high, a stud earring may rub against the ear cartilage.

Amateur punchers generally use one of three methods—the ice cube, the clothes pin or the slow piercing.

Perhaps the most painful is the clothes pin method. The length of time for leaving the pins on varies, but the best time to remove them is before the coed faints.

The slow-piercing method, the most dangerous of the three, uses a self-piercing post, an earring that pierces the ear slowly. This method increases the possibility of infection.

The ice cube method is uncomfortable but is perhaps the safest. Ice cubes are used to numb the earlobe before piercing it with a pin. With any of the methods, the ear usually drains and itches for a time.

College Cycle Begins Again For Everyone

By B.T.

SO THE CYCLE begins again: Registration (Survival of the Fittest test) Day, sitting in wrong classrooms, being locked out of certain classrooms for being one minute late, taking surprise quizzes, and standing in endless queues for books and jobs.

Together, students shift from a glassy-eyed daze to a numb-stupor, and back to that glassy-eyed daze of midterm week. Others train themselves to sleep, upright, during lectures, with ears tuned in only to technical terms such as, "mammalian mandables," "epistemology," and the like, missing such essentials as why and how.

Still others just put their heads down on the library tables and snore away. Many come to college to eat lunch. Whatever the reason, whatever the price, the returnees are hooked. From the returning war veteran to the draft dodger.

Returnees never learn, they just go crazy.

MIKE RUSSELL, 23, is unashamed to admit that he prefers college to being in the Army. Russell left here over a year ago to become a VISTA volunteer. He was sent to live with the poor in Alabama.

"It is really an education to see how other people actually lived. Most of all, I was shocked at the injustice of small town police.

"One night another volunteer and I chaperoned a dance for the Negroes. I had to make a telephone call, so we drove many miles into town to find one. The police followed our car.

"I was arrested and thrown in jail for making a U-turn! The judge called it 'reckless driving!' I was fined $115 but the training director paid it. Later, we learned that the police were upset because we were living and working with Negro families.

"Another volunteer was fined for kidnapping! Imagine, he was actually taking one of the kids for a walk. He lived with the kid's family!

"All in all, it was a great, I enjoyed it. I had always wanted to do something for the underprivileged, and this was it. Oh, but it's so awfully hot in the south. And we had only six weeks of training," related Russell.

HE DESCRIBED the training center as a "broken down, abandoned Army barracks" with inadequate facilities." It really wasn't enough training. I want to learn more. All they gave us were seminars in the problems of poverty and how to meet them. A person can't really learn enough to apply it practically in a six-week period," said Russell.

He became interested in the tutorial program, and was discharged from VISTA to work with culturally deprived children in the Appalacian Mountains.

This semester Russell is back as a Cultural Anthropology major. "I realize that I need more education to really become a humanitarian, so here I am," he declared.

Russell was recruited at Cal, Berkeley. Three weeks later, he received a telegram saying, "Congratulations, you are invited to train . . ."

Just what he wanted. A telegram that didn't begin with, "Greetings . . ."

The Observer

By William G. Fates

CALIFORNIA'S widely divergent political arenas are rapidly evolving into experimental workshops and training camps for politically aspiring actors and athletes, but thankfully other states are following suit and thereby sharing the shame.

Had it not been for the election of song-and-dance man George Murphy, who tapped his way into our hearts over a man known to the inhabitants of the San Joaquin County Jail system as Emil Flick, the actor-athlete-politician boom might never have erupted to the extent that it has.

THIS ISSUE FIRST appeared in form some 16 years ago during the heart of the McCarthy era when the extremely liberal United States Representative from California, actress-businesswoman Helen Gahagan Douglas lost to colleague "tricky Dick" Nixon in a race for the Senate.

Mrs. Douglas lost to Nixon because of his soon-to-become famous soft-on-Communism issue, not because she was an actress. However, she was running for the Senate after serving in the House and had credible credentials qualifying her for both offices.

TODAY, THERE ARE ACTORS, athletes and a menagerie of sorts running for high political offices with little if any applicable experience for these positions.

And even more unfortunate, is the fact that these individuals are running for office because of the positions they hold in the public eye, not in spite of them.

In the year of the consensus, for example, handsome, clean-living, long-time Oklahoma football coach-folk hero Bud Wilkinson put his record of 145 wins and a basic conservative viewpoint on the line in his race for the United States Senate and lost by 21,000 votes to Cotton County farm boy State Senator Fred R. Harris, only because the sage of Southwest Texas State Teachers College swept Oklahoma by better than 100,000 votes.

HAD NOT WILKINSON'S Sooners lost to Alabama 17-0 in the 1963 Orange Bowl game, he might conceivably have spent the last few years voting against medicare, social security benefits, civil rights bills, war-on-poverty, aid-to-education, foreign aid and all the rest.

This proves, consequently, that if you offer the voters the choice between a winning coach and a Phi Beta Kappa key-holding lawyer with eight years experience in the state senate, they will take the coach. Unless you have the coattails of a then-popular President to pull the Phi Bete from the abyss and save the people from their hopefully only temporary ineptitude.

NEEDLESS TO SAY, this shows a certain lack of judgment on the part of the voters and instills some fears as to their capabilities in choosing their leaders, for Harris has been singled out as one of the most promising members of the class of '64 and is one of the few to hold a subcommittee chairmanship as a freshman.

Today former Olympic game medal winners, actors and aging Miss America are out on the hustings running for office in greater numbers than ever before. The majority, however, are seeking offices at a lower, less complex, less demanding level of government where they can do less harm.

This is not to say that these people don't have the right to run for public office. Every American should have that right.

But every American who hopes to seek a public office would be rejected if he were lacking qualifications in the same manner as are many of these persons.

SIX TERMS AS president of the Screen Actors Guild are somewhat less than adequate qualifications for the office of Governor of California it would seem, but then Miss America of 1947 is running for a seat in the Tennessee House of Representatives and Bob Mathias, Olympic decathlon winner in 1948 and 1952, is running for the Congress.

Whether or not these candidates win is up to the glamor-struck public, but an Oscar, high Nielsen rating, winning football season or track record shouldn't be a prerequisite for vaulting these persons into contention for offices.

The campaign of the next 60 days will show whether the prudent, moral, intelligent voters of California are to complete another step in the show-folk takeover of the government.

Now if we can just get John Wayne to run against Kuchel in '68 . . .

Harold Korf, New College Librarian, Plans Changes To Assist Students

Weekly Schedule Sees Six Hour Gain; Stacks May Open

By Steven Hara

Harold Korf is new on the campus, and many students probably don't know who he is, although they've taken advantage of the changes he has made since his arrival. He is the new head librarian.

The most profound change he has initiated is in the time schedule. The library is now open from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. on Mondays through Thursdays and from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Fridays—an increase of six hours a week over the old schedule.

Korf isn't a radical; any changes he makes in library policy are done strickly for the sake of efficiency. It's his job.

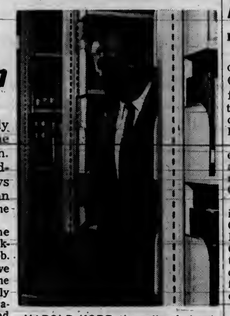
THROUGH THE YEARS there have been many librarians working in the college, but these persons usually doubled as instructors or administrators. Korf is the first person employed by the college as the librarian since Marcus Skarstedt became Dean of Curriculum in 1949, a span of 17 years.

A 1949 graduate of the University of California, Berkeley, Korf spent the past six years as the librarian of Golden Gate College. In his new position he faces all the problems imminent with the complexity of a growing college.

Speculating on the problems he faces, Korf cites these as the most prominent: the lack of space, the need for strong faculty-library coordination and the desire for full efficiency.

SEATS DISAPPEAR and studying becomes harder, he says, when many students find their way into the library because they have nowhere else to go. All students have the privilege of using the library, so the only obvious solution is the strict use of compon courtesy.

Korf stated that one of the major purposes of any college library is to supplement and assist the instructor by making available material related to classwork.



With a new and increased budget of $30,000 for books, it is possible to expand the library's collection of books. The problem is knowing which books are desired and which would be the most useful. A working relationship between the faculty and the librarian is essential, Korf believes.

Service depends upon the ability of the library staff to function at its highest possible efficiency. Some students may have noticed that the periodicals are now in the former reserve book room and that all reserved books must be signed for at the circulation desk. This is a move to make the most use of the least amount of manpower.

OTHER MEASURES will follow, especially to ease the workload of the staff which has to accommodate the new schedule, for although the hours have been increased, the staff has not.

One change that is of great interest to the students is presently being considered, Korf commented. There is a possibility of opening the stack shelves to honor students or to the students at large under controlled conditions. "But it's just being looked into," Korf reiterated.

The stacks were originally open when Cloud library was unveiled in 1955, but a disappearance of books led to the policy the library now uses—closed stacks.

Honor Society To Elect New Fall Officers

The City College chapter of Alpha Gamma Sigma, national two-year college scholastic honor society will elect officers for the fall semester at its next meeting Tuesday, October 4, during College Hour, in S-211.

Wallace E. Wells, AGS faculty sponsor and recently elected Vice-President of the State Executive Board of AGS, hopes all eligible students participate in the elections next Tuesday.

"I would like to see some 'new-blood' serving as officers and co-ordinators of service projects and social activities of the club," Wells said.

AGS members will serve as tutors for students with academic problems and as readers for blind students at the college.

During Orientation, AGS members distributed material explaining the purpose of the club and eligibility requirements.

Temporary membership is open to students who, in the last preceding semester of attendance, were enrolled as full-time students and maintained a 3.0 grade point average.

Life members, that is, gold-seal bearers of the California Scholarship Federation in high school, may become associate members of AGS when they enter the college.

However, all eligible students are not automatically members of AGS. They must apply for membership. Any interested students may consult Wells in S-140.

AS Budget Soars To All-Time High

The Associated Student budget appropriations for the Fall Semester of 1966 have reached a total of nearly $46,000, thus creating the largest budget in City College history. This amount exceeds this year's Spring Semester budget by $6000.

Linnete Wong, AS Finance chairman, reported that any request for supplementary appropriations must be made two weeks in advance.

For example, the Freshman Class had a request for $920 approved, compared with an appropriation of $212 granted last spring. This increase was due to the great number of Freshman students entering City College this fall.

Campus Lineup: Newman Dance Features Vandals

Setting a pace for the numerous campus activities to follow, the Newman Club, the college's Catholic youth organization, will sponsor a dance Friday night in Smith Hall from 9 p.m. to midnight.

The Vandals wil be featured.

GUITAR FESTIVAL

The third presentation of a four concert-lecture series will be held tomorrow during College Hour in the theater.

The program will feature music from different countries, with special emphasis on the development of guitar music from the 16th century to modern times.

KCSF "KICK-OFF"

City College's official radio broadcasting station, KCSF, premiered its program last Monday with a change in format, featuring popular music rather than rock.

Program time, from 8:30 a.m. to 1 p.m., includes the daily news broadcast every half hour on the quarter hour.

FILM SERIES

Nanook Of The North, an American entry in the college's weekly film series will be presented in the theater tomorrow evening. Curtain time is at 8 p.m.

This film, in addition to the eight others that will be presented in the series, was personally selected for the viewing audience by James Haran of the college's drama department.

Represented will be a sampling of cinema achievements from the United States and five foreign countries.

AWS LUNCHEON

The Associated Women Students will be hostesses at a luncheon honoring new women instructors on Friday in the retail floristry building.

Coleman Describes City's Involvement In War On Poverty

By Sally Doerty

Dr. Arthur Coleman, chairman of San Francisco's Economic Opportunity Council, spoke to a full house at City College's theater September 15 concerning San Francisco's involvement in the War on Poverty.

Among other points, Dr. Coleman emphasized the tremendous success of a unique feature of Community Planning: The Local Target Area Action Committees.

San Francisco was initially divided into four target areas, Hunter's Point, Chinatown, Western Addition and the Mission District, with the fifth, the Central City, added later. Each of these districts was designated as a critically poor area in need of both financial assistance and individual vocational direction.

IN DR. COLEMAN'S opinion, the fact that each board is composed of members of that particular community allows for better understanding and cooperation between community and board.

It also enables the boards to organize programs without waiting for approval from some far removed controlling boards.

Dr. Coleman believes it is this feature of the Poverty War which is unique to San Francisco, and he said that "we have been held up as a model to other cities throughout the nation."

DR. COLEMAN STATED, however, that as in any other large organization, the local EOC contends with other problems. Factions have developed within the Council. Citizens United Against Poverty, a committee made up of local persons, has charged that the council was not working in the best interests of the people because it was controlled by more affluent members.

IN DR. COLEMAN'S WORDS, "The War on Poverty is suffering from Poverty."

The Economic Opportunity Act was passed on August 20, 1964. Its seven divisions are under the direction of three governmental agencies, the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, the Labor Department and the Office of Economic Opportunity which is headed by Sargent Shriver.

Title 2, Community Action, is the division under which cities attempt to develop overall poverty stricken areas.

THE IMMEDIATE OBJECTIVES of EOC are to use the money at hand to help change the attitudes of existing welfare agencies.

Dr. Coleman stated that people are tired of others planning for them; the existing structure of the various agencies stifles all creative initiative. It does not allow an individual to plan for himself and as a result he is trapped by the very agency designed to help him.

A second objective is to stress the importance of Project Head Start, a program designed to help preschool children from a poverty area catch up with average students.

Objections raised against Head Start include "necessity of reaching the entire family rather than a single member of a family." Dr. Coleman believes that for long-range purposes the individual is more important, and with proper training, can eventually influence his family.

Curriculum Additions Blaze Trail To New Horizons

By Marty Arbunich

The 1966 Fall semester at City College brought with it a fresh program of training which was added to the roster of courses available to the student body. These new fields of work, classified as two-year curricula, are teaching assisting, instructional-media assisting and instructional-media technology.

Under the direction of Jules Fraden, instructor who is coordinator of teaching assisting and Louis Batmalé, administrative coordinator of technical-terminal education, this newly founded program has started off on the right foot.

THE FIRST OF the three programs is the curriculum in teaching assisting. This two-year course of study is designed to train students to rise to the position of assistants to prekindergarten and elementary teachers.

Both levels of teaching have their respective course requirements and each student is expected to graduate with at least a C average, in order to merit the certificate of proficiency in teaching assisting.

This certificate enables the graduate to receive special graces in attaining a job position.

Graduates will also be qualified to perform the duties of a teaching assistant in public or private nursery schools, cooperative nursery schools, children's centers, as well as in Head Start and prekindergarten programs.

The immediate ambition of a graduate of teaching assisting ranges from preparing bulletin board displays in classrooms to aiding in physical education activities.

THE SECOND PROGRAM of study, related closely to the first, is instructional media assisting. The purpose of this course of study is mainly to prepare students for employment as specialists in the use and operation of audio-visual aids and instructional displays in elementary and secondary schools and also to assist teachers in various school libraries.

Like teaching assisting, this course of tutoring also grants a certificate of achievement, and entails similar employment advantages under the same graduating conditions.

INSTRUCTIONAL-MEDIA technology, the final field which completes the triangle of this program, conveys the skills necessary to engage in audio-visual equipment repair work.

After his two years of study in electrical repair, the qualified graduate, who held a C average, will receive his certificate of proficiency and supposedly will have the know-how to repair televisions, tape recorders and other audio-visual equipment necessary for instruction in school systems and businesses.

The chief reason for the establishment of the three aforementioned fields into the study curriculum at City College is due to school administrators' interests in employing properly trained teachers' assistants. Consequently, the actual teachers' time will be conserved and used more efficiently.

CITY COLLEGE is actually operating as a pioneer in this mysterious and unexplored field. At the present time only 12 day class students have shown a fervent desire in this curriculum, but the number is expected to increase considerably by second semester.

In reality, less than a handful of other colleges have attempted to insert this curriculum into their instructional offerings, and it appears that only a bright future awaits the products of this trailblazing academic study.

Both Fraden and Batmale visualize a wide open future of prosperity, though starting out at a slow pace. "These are only part-time jobs at the moment, but careers will soon open," Fraden remarked.

Special night classes are also being given to approximately 90 nontrained teachers' assistants. These men and women are learning their own trade at night while they put their knowledge to progressive use in the day.

Ram Gridders Favored To Hold Crown

Line Inexperience To Put Pressure On Running Game

By G. Frank Cooney

This will be an encore year for the Ram gridders, who almost rewrote the Golden Gate conference record book last season enroute to a league crown and a Prune Bowl massacre.

And for the bulk of some 50 City College students who suited up for the opening game against American River, the workouts started long before classes, or even registration.

Way back in early summer one could have seen some of the Rams at Silver Terrace and other parks, running and getting into shape.

And so most of the group that showed up for the initial practice on September 1, were a hard core of dedicated players.

THE RETURN OF one such player, All-American halfback O. J. Simpson has caused a few people to make out-of-sight type predictions.

Sure Simpson is the best running two-year college halfback in the nation. And he did average 11.6 yards per carry last season. And also broke several records on the national level.

But, Coach Art "Dutch" Elston does not think this will be enough to carry City College through another outstanding season.

"Things are still in a state of flux," Elson said, "and it is even hard for me to predict this season's possibilities.

"There are many, many things that also need to be considered," Elston explained.

LIKE THE LOSS of an All-Conference "line of the year."

Granted, Simpson's abilities are great, but what about that 23-pound line that delivered him up and down the field last year?

It's gone.

There are some sizable linemen on this year's team too, but Elston figures that they are lacking experience for the most part.

His "green peas," as he calls them, include Texan Ruby Jackson, whose measurements read like a Texas tall tale, at 6-5, 295 pounds. Also Allan Cowlings (6-5, 220) and the brothers two, John and Mike, who between them are 400 pounds of Deschler.

Each of the Deschlers was Lineman-of-the-Year in the AAA, John in 1963 at St. Ignatius and Mike at Sacred Heart in 1965.

WHILE HIS LINE is nothing to scoff at, the coach also wisely points out that it doesn't go as deep as did last year's.

"The two-platoon system which worked so well last season, might be hard to organize," Elston pointed out; "we will surely have to double up in a couple of places anyway.

"But I think they are championship material in the making if they keep working hard," Elston surmised.

"I hope we can come around soon because our conference opener against Diablo Valley may be the toughest league game we have."

Elston went on to point out that the loss of 1965 Back-of-the-Year, Ron Fassler, was a big one. Fassler not only was the second best running back in the league, behind Simpson, but was a good blocker and defensive back.

ALTHOUGH FASSLER'S two-year college football career is over, he is here this semester nursing a leg which was broken in the Rams' 40-20 conquest of Long Beach City College in the Prune Bowl last December.

But Milton Frank (5-9, 195), who gained some poundage over the summer, will prove to be a tough customer at the left halfback spot.

At quarterback, Pete Mullins, one of the best throwers ever to come out of the AAA, is expected to do the bulk of signal calling.

LETTERMEN ENDS, Bruce Rosenburg and Dwight Tucker, hope to add a touch of experience to the exterior line. Both are good receivers, and Tucker's jumping ability (6-10½ high and 51-1¼ triple jumps) will add to the Ram aerial attack.

Fullback is a toss-up between two lettermen, Glenn Baker and John Morrello.

There are only eight lettermen back from last year as opposed to 25 who made up the 1965 record-breaking club.

In all, the 1966 football team cannot, as yet, be placed in a class with the 1965 squad that overshadows them, but things are still changing and anything might happen.

The Golden Gate Conference is a tough league and there is no such thing as easy opposition. This must be realized.

A YEAR AGO a strong Ram team suffered a defeat in the opener at Los Angeles Valley, 26-0, and went the rest of the season undefeated to be ranked sixth in the nation.

This year the first step was better, though considerably easier, over American River, 25-0. There are at least eight more steps, and when all is done the Golden Gate Conference standings are expected to stack up like this:

1. City College of San Francisco—a well balanced team.
2. Diablo Valley—bigger and faster than last year's team which tied the Rams, 18-18.
3. Foothill—a fast line and good quarterback, large in numbers.
4. Chabot—eight returning starters will help.
5. College of San Mateo—looks like quarterback Rich Cuadra will be a good one.
6. San Jose City College—a real dark horse.
7. Contra Costa—significantly better, but so is the whole league.
8. Merritt—Coach Jim Swan, however, is pleased with progress.

Defending Champs At Stockton Friday

City College's Ram football team, undefeated in the last ten outings, will be heavy favorites going into this Friday night's clash in Stockton against the San Joaquin Delta Mustangs.

This, however, is not taking into consideration the many injuries which have plagued the Rams during the last two weeks. Kevin Shea, outstanding Ram center, will probably be out of action because of an injury incurred in last week's practice.

Others, including O. J. Simpson, are suffering from ankle and leg soreness due in large parts to the condition of the practice field.

Last year the Rams bounced back from their only defeat of the season to score a comeback victory over the Mustangs in a homecoming game, 26-13, and Simpson tallied his first two-year college score against this very team.

The Mustangs opened their season meeting an obviously improved College of San Mateo. The Bulldogs chased the Deltans, 21-13, with a heavy air attack by letterman quarterback Rich Cuadra. Both the Rams and the Mustangs threw a bye last weekend.

Intramural Petitions Due Monday

This year's intramural program again is being run by Associated Men's Student President Jerd Lapham, who is taking over for last year's coordinator Percy Jones.

Lapham's main concern is having cooperation from all the participating teams involved, a problem which is left up to the individuals participating.

This year's activities will be run on an air-tight schedule, by which all participating teams involved will have no complaint about the way the program is run, Lapham said.

The deadline for filing petitions is next Monday and forms for entries can be procured at Bungalow 5. The program of activities is expected to begin on October 16, but will be no later than October 20.

Sports Night, a yearly exhibition of different events, will allow the student body the chance to watch different sports activities in action. This is a semesterly event held here, and offers everyone a good night of sports action.

Booters To Defend Third State Title, Meet State Friday

The 1966 City College soccer team was shooting for its eighth straight conference title and fourth state championship in succession when it met merritt in Oakland Friday and won, 4-1.

This Friday the soccermen meet San Francisco State in a practice game.

Coach Roy Diederichsen is extremely pleased with the spirit of this year's Ram squad. "This team may not have the ability of the past teams, but the drive and hustle will make up for it," Diederichsen said.

The veteran Ram mentor also added that this Ram squad has the potential to be as good if not better than previous teams. "Every game will be a team effort; because there is no one man who outshines the rest," Diederichsen commented.

LAST YEAR THE Rams were led by two-time All-America Alex Mendietta, the leading offensive player who scored 70 per cent of the team's goals.

This year, according to Diederichsen, it will be different. "We'll miss Mendietta," he observed, "but instead of one man getting most of the goals, five or six men will do the job."

OF THE RETURNING veterans who may add to the Ram booters' scoring attack, Robert Rojas an All-Conference inside left last year, will take over at center forward.

Other added scoring may come from veterans Ben Boykanyo, at inside right, Nelson Artiga, at left wing, and newcomers Henry Meija and Mickey Duzdevich.

The halfbacks look very good with Tom Sammuelson and All-Conference Pete Rossi returning and three-time All-City star Roger Sarria playing center half.

"This team is as well balanced a team as I have seen, and there are many other players with the ability of these eight," Diederichsen added.

Diederichsen said that overall the booters will be strong, but if there is a weakness it is that the defense is a little shaky.

The Rams usually play each two-year college twice and most local four-year college teams once during the season.

San Mateo and Menlo are expected to field strong teams.

Solid Defense, Simpson Dump American River, 25-0

College scouts and a few hundred football fans turned out to see the beginning of All-American halfback O. J. Simpson's second year, but were instead treated to a solid defensive show as the Rams dumped American River, 25-0, here, September 18.

Offensive skills, and Simpson's awesome talents, were not lacking as O. J. rolled up 166 yards in 23 carries for his "average" scoring day of three TDs.

In all, City College rolled up a total net gain of 349 yards to American River's 97.

BUT EVEN ALL this was slightly overshadowed by the fact that the San Francisco defensive line—Jerd Lapham (6-4, 265), Allan Cowlings (6-5, 220), Ralph Monroe (6-1, 230) and Mike Streich (6-5, 260)—held the Beavers to a net rushing attack of nine yards.

"We're a coming ball club," Coach A. W. (Dutch) Elston calculated; "the defense showed it can do its stuff but our offense isn't quite there yet. It's a matter of timing, but they'll come around soon," Elston said.

POOR TIMING OR NO, the Ram offense was too much for American River's Beavers to dam up.

Little by little, as opposed to last season's long gainers, backs Milton Frank (5-9, 190), Glenn Baker (5-8, 185) and Simpson rolled up the better part of 269 yards on the ground.

AGILE SIMPSON, whose unique abilities are matched only by his sense of humor, was not kidding when he pointed out that "the offensive line did real good for a first game."

Ruby Jackson (6-5, 295), John Monroe and the Deschler brothers, John and Mike, all did their share of the heavy work.

Many people expected the sixth nationally ranked Rams (1965) to have a more balanced attack this year, but such a situation has not materialized yet.

This is perhaps due in part to the fact that Pete Mullins (6-3, 195) did not go to the air very often in the first game.

MULLINS' HERALDED long ball won't even thrown but he did complete three of nine for 49 yards.

Early in the fourth quarter, after Simpson and starters had pounded 1, 7, and 2-yard scores, the nonstarters came in to apply still one more scoring drive.

Signal caller John Lazarich moved the Rams 36 yards in three plays culminating in a 26-yard aerial to Mike Carter.

Carter, however, had troubles even though the pass was on the money. He had to step from the grasps of a defensive back on the 1-yard line and rebound his tip-up on a second try in the end zone for the score.—G.F.C.

Rugged Field Hampers Daily Grid Practices

By G. Frank Cooney

SOME football teams need lots of practice to get their squads into shape, but City College's squads might be in better shape if they refrained from the daily practices.

Or so it seems after seeing nearly the entire starting line succumb to leg injuries, of one type or another, during last week's drills.

Faulty uniforms, poor playing and cold weather are not to blame. It's the very ground they practice on that is the culprit.

One must realize that the gridders' practice field is not their own.

IT IS ALSO the local, after work, golfer's nine-iron practice course—please replace your divots, sirs—and the neighborhood dog run.

The concrete-like turf also serves as some kind of prairie dog or gopher metropolis during certain times of the year.

Consequently, the terrain is similar to California's.

One wrong step and a runner is falling off Mt. Whitney into Death Valley. Since such plays are not called in the huddle, the bewildered runner seldom knows what hit him.

Like last week, when huge Ruby Jackson, (6-5, 295) was trotting along and then all but disappeared from sight. After finally climbing up to sea level, Jackson hobbled over to the side of the field whispering sweet football plays in the wind.

AS THE CROW FLIES, it takes O. J. Simpson something way under ten seconds to run 100 yards. But, going over hill and dale during the daily drills, he considers himself lucky to break the four-minute century in one piece.

Also, many serious consequences result from the practice field's upkeep, or lack of it.

Kevin Shea, just about the only man on the Ram football team who can get off a decent center to a punter, was put in the hospital last week after receiving injuries on the obstacle course, used for a practice field.

Simpson, linemen John Monroe, Mike Streich and punter Hugh Miller can be seen limping from class to class, to say nothing of the lamed members of the physical education classes which meet out there.

Meanwhile, yonder in the horticulture department, ardent green thumbs are busily potting plants.

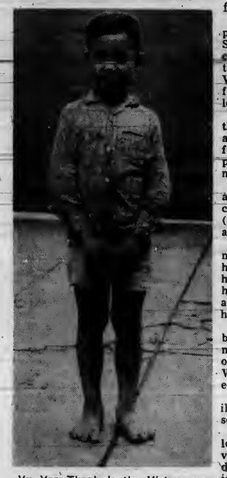
Decker Takes Over As New Swim Coach

New head coach of the swimming team is Curtis Decker who is replacing Coach Roy Burkhead. Coach Decker has inherited the same problem his predecessor had which is no home pool. For years the swimming team has had to go to a city pool to practice.

Coach Decker needs the backing of the faculty and student body to get a pool built on campus. In his campaign to get a pool, he has sent many letters to California colleges for measurements of their pools. He commented recently that City College is one of a few colleges that does not have its own pool.

Coach Decker, who was swimming coach at Galileo high school for ten years, is now in his second year at City College. He said the team prospects are good and expressed enthusiasm about the coming year.

The team holds practice from 7 to 8 a.m. one day a week with one hour and a half additional afternoon practice at Balboa pool.



The team is expected to be strong mainly because of the return of Bill Pasquinelli, a member of the All-American swimming team.

Foothill and the College of San Mateo will provide the toughest opposition for the Ram mermen. No meets are scheduled in San Francisco, and, in fact, a schedule has not yet been set. Not having its own pool in which to practice, could hurt Ram chances for a successful team.

AS Makes Dream Real For Vietnamese Child

By Connie Skipitares

Despite much red tape, communication was finally made last week between the 7-year-old Vietnamese child, Vu Van Thanh, and his 10,000 foster parents, the Associated Students of City College, when the boy wrote a heartwarming letter expressing his appreciation for the money he and his family are receiving from AS funds.

Vu Van Thanh is the Vietnamese boy who was adopted by the Associated Students last semester through action of Student Council.

In launching the Sophomore Class project last semester, the Associated Students, working through the cooperation of the Foster Parents' Plan, turned a dream into reality for Vu Van Thanh and his poverty-stricken family when the adoption was leagalized.

Currently, the AS budget is alleting the Foster Parents' Plan a monthly allowance of $15 to be sent to Thanh's family. In addition, a fund-raising project to collect money for a Christmas gift for the family is also pending.

THANH AND HIS family live on about 83 cents a day. His family includes three sisters, Cu (13), Nhan (4), Hong (1), a brother, Long (11), and the two parents.

The Thanhs fled from North Vietnam in 1954, just after the father lost his left hand. The elder Thanh did, however, manage to find work and help provide for the family until about two years ago when he learned he was suffering from tuberculosis.

Thanh's mother works as a day laborer and earns the above sum of money. Cu stays at home and helps occasionally by working in some fields. When she finds work, she is able to earn about 41 cents a day.

The total income of the Thanh family is hardly adequate to provide the seven with their basic daily needs.

A PALM LEAF-ROOFED hut, with leaf walls and an earthen floor, provides the Thanhs with as sufficient a dwelling place as they can afford. It is furnished with a bed, two divans, a table and a chair.

Through the brief schooling he has had thus far, Thanh has learned to express himself in his native tongue. Here is an example of that expression in the letter that was translated by the Foster Parents' agency in New York and sent to his foster parents here:

"Dear Foster Parents.

"I am very glad to know that you have accepted me as your foster child. I thank you very much.

"On July 13, I received your monthly allowance of VN $935 together with one bar of laundry soap. The money enabled mother to take care of our school fees. Thanks to you, we children are well fed and well clothed.

"I am currently in kindergarten class. I shall do my very best so as to be able to write to you soon.

"My family is doing fine here. The rainy season is here. There have been some very heavy downpours.

"I ask your permission to stop here. I do wish you good health and success in your studies."

(Signed) Your foster child,
Vu Van Thanh

Lorimer Due For Guitar Festival Here Tomorrow

Michael Lorimer, a former student of Andre Segovia, will appear at the theater as the featured artist in a program entitled Masterpieces From The Renaissance To The Present, the last in a series of four concert-lectures, during College Hour tomorrow.

According to Robin Brown, organizer of the series and its first guest artist, Lorimer is, perhaps, the finest young, American classical-guitarist in the world today. "It takes time, energy and guts to study under Master Segovia," Brown added, "and he's done it five times, once on a scholarship."

IN ADDITION TO Segovia, Lorimer has also studied under Guy Horn in Los Angeles, Jose Tomas in Spain, and Oscar Ghiglia, another up and coming young guitarist, in Paris. He holds the honor of being in the Winston-Salem Master Class.

His latest accomplishment appeared in the form of a recording contract, which he has recently signed with Angle Records, an all-classical subdivision of Capitol.

At the first concert-lecture of this series, Variations On A Classical Guitar, Brown's subject was Classical Guitar And Foreign Song. He played, sang and explained about the birth of the guitar and its growth through the years. He ended with what he called Songs To The Guitar.

DANCE INFLUENCE In Guitar Repertoire was the title for the second concert-lecture presented by George Sakllariou September 27. Some of his selections were Bourree and Gavotte, Greek Dance, Variations On A Theme by Mozart and Asturias.

Third of the series was presented on September 29 by Vincent Michael. It was entitled South American Guitar Music. He played music from Argentina, Brazil, Uruguay, Paraguay and told jokes between selections.

This Guitar Festival is part of the Artist Series presented by the Associated Students and the music department of this college.

The two remaining concerts in the artist series will feature Istvan Nadas and Carlo Busotti, duo pianists, Thursday, October 20, and Sylvia Jenkins, pianist, Thursday, December 1.

Three student concerts are scheduled in December featuring choral groups, orchestra and band.

Council Opens Gate To Football Games For Servicemen

By Bill Fritz

Student Council on Monday of last week passed, by a vote of 8-0-2, the first resolution of the semester permitting uniformed servicemen free admission to all home football games.

The resolution, presented by Frosh Councilman Ron Lent, is intended to act as a morale booster to Bay Area servicemen in light of the recent student demonstrations and social criticisms heaped upon the armed forces.

Don Chiang, AS election commissioner, announced the resignation of Frosh Councilman Steve Howder and Soph Councilwoman Katie Shypertt as of last Wednesday.

A SPECIAL ELECTION must be held by next Monday, October 10, to fill the two Soph Council seats vacated by Miss Shypertt and Mike Nygren, who did not return to the campus this semester. Election petitions are due this Friday in B-5.

Concerning financial matters of the Associated Students, council approved three supplementary budget allocations totaling $315.

The AS Executive Committee was the recipient of $140 for supporting membership dues in the San Francisco Symphony Foundation and for the rental of an additional bus to transport students to the football game in Stockton last Saturday.

To the Rally Committee went an allocation of $110 to cover the cost of new yell leader uniforms and to allow for the increase in bus rental costs.

A supplementary allocation of $65 was made to Alpha Gamma Sigma honor society. The money will be used to cover the society adviser's expenses when he attends the state advisory board meeting of AGS in Los Angeles.

A SUPPLEMENTARY allocation request by KCSF was tabled for consideration after a study is made of the radio station facilities.

Council unanimously approved the lists of Frosh and Soph Class officers submitted by Fosh Class President Chris Loo and Soph Class President Joe Parnell.

Dean of Women Mary Golding announced that seven students at the college have been declared eligible for $1200 scholarships to the College of the Seven Seas.

Soph Class President Parnell reported the receipt by the Associated Students of a letter from their Vietnamese foster child.

IBM One-Day Registration Process Ready In February

By Tim Duncan

Computer-registration has arrived at City College and is tentatively scheduled for use for the spring semester. Lloyd D. Luckmann, coordinator of instruction and spokesman for the president's committee on registration, stated that most of the "bugs" have been worked out and registration day for all students will be next February 6.

The counseling staff has already launched the new procedures for mechanized registration, for which students will file a new form, entitled Course Request, which will be accompanied by a directory of courses and faculty, since both are translated to numbers on the form.

Students will be expected to indicate the classes their counselors have recommended, together with their alternates, and their preferences for instructors and hours.

THE CUMPUTER will be capable of making some 5000 attempts to enroll each student according to the subjects, instructors and hours requested. If the perfect pattern is not attainable, the one based on subjects and instructors will be attempted; if it fails, then the student will be enrolled in the subjects and units he has requested.

Conceivably this latter pattern may be impossible, and Luckmann explained that in such cases, the student and his counselor will be notified of the impasse, and the human factor will be reintroduced.

On registration day students will be assigned to appear at half-hour intervals according to their registration numbers. Smith Hall and Statler wing will be the setting for this reconfirmation of the students' preregistration.

A SIX-STEP FLOW has been planned, Luckmann said.

The student obtains heading card, picks up registration book, has legal address and residence checked, fills out registration books, picks up IBM program, and files registration book, IBM program and heading card.

It is estimated that a student who encounters no difficulty with his residence status should complete the six steps within 30 minutes.

IN THE EVENT that final debugging becomes too complicated and the first attempt becomes a trial run, Oscar Anderson, coordinator of educational management, and his teams will be prepared to continue with the present registration procedures and methods.

Students will continue to hold registration numbers, and the three days of registration planned for the spring semester will remain on the calendar.

Evelyn Tierrell AWS Conference Keynote Speaker

Evelyn Tierrell will be keynote speaker at the Alta California Conference of Associated Women Students being held here in Statler wing from 9:30 a.m. to 2 p.m. Saturday.

Mrs. Tierrell is on the Board of Directors of San Francisco Beautiful, president of the Episcopal Church Women's Organization, a girl scout leader and very active in conservation here and in Marin County. The Role Of The College-Trained Woman In This Changing World will be the topic of her speech.

The conference will then break up into five workshops. Speakers for each of these will be Helen Huffman, counselor here, on Role Of The Daring And Adventurous, Dolores Stone on Role Of The Overseas Careerist, Sharon Hawley on Role Of The "At Home" Careerist, Freida Klussmann on Role Of The Urban Activist and Mrs. Richard Nasser on Role Of The Housewife Plus.

Members will reunite to hear reports on the workshops which will be followed by lunch and entertainment.

Diane Lattimer, president of AWS of City College said, "It will be an interesting conference. I think anyone attending will benefit."

Women students interested are invited to register in Dean Mary Conning's office, S-150. Lunch will cost $1.50 per person, according to Miss Lattimer, and should be paid for upon registering.

Auto Checks And Intra Basketball Head AMS Plans

The Associated Men Students are planning to sponsor an auto safety check on campus as part of this semester's activities, according to AMS President Jerd Lapham.

The purpose of the auto safety check is to examine the condition of brakes and various other parts of automobiles on campus for safety reasons, with the cooperation of the Campus Police and the San Francisco Police Department, Lapham said.

"The general policy of the AMS is to be active and to encourage more students to participate in activities," Lapham stated. He also indicated that there is a lack of participation in campus clubs at City College.

To stimulate participation in campus activities, the AMS may sponsor an awards hot rod competition for interested students, Lapham said.

He also reminded interested men students that the deadline for intramural basketball entry petitions is Friday. The tournament begins Tuesday, October 25 and Wednesday, October 26.

"To conclude the semester's activities, the AMS will sponsor their Sports Night on Thursday, January 12," James Wyatt, Dean of Student Activities, revealed. Plans for the Sports Night include a championship basketball tournament, a boxing exhibition and a possible faculty-vs-students basketball match, Lapham added.

Working with Lapham on this semester's AMS goals are Bob Allen, AMS vice president, and Ron Appel, AMS public relations man. Lapham added that he is looking for a man to be AMS treasurer.

Can The USA Make The Choice Of Life Or Death For Rest Of World?—Henry Commager Says No

By Viggo Petersen

Fall, 1966, is here and life continues as it always has. Nothing has really changed.

It is the beginning of another football season; classes are well underway; 1967 cars will be introduced soon.

In football the 49ers are on the way to what appears to be another momentous season, as already cries of "Wait'll next year" echo from Kezar stadium.

AND SUMMER FINALLY arrived in San Francisco just last week.

While noticing the routine of the new season take shape, one cannot but notice another routine which has become as much a part of everday living as the football season, going to class and going to work.

This is the war in Vietnam.

Things are as they always have been in Vietnam; the casualty lists are steadily rising; newspaper articles describing gigantic "joint operations against the Viet Cong are still present, young men ("boys" to some) continue to be shipped home in boxes, some never having reached their 20th birthday.

One may even venture to Travis Air Force Base and perhaps witness an old friend or school buddy being properly labeled and processed for his final trip home.

And, as always, the arguments continue: what to do about Vietnam?

IN THE ISSUE OF the Saturday Review dated September 17, a somewhat biased but nevertheless thought-provoking article appears concerning the war. The article is written by Henry Commager and is entitled Can We Control The War In Vietnam?

Commager presents a history of all the involvements the United States has been engaged in since the Revolutionary War, accompanied with his own comments as to how and why the U.S. got involved in and the implications which resulted from the involvement.

But when Commager reviews the Vietnam war, he presents a somewhat different approach in his criticism.

RATHER THAN CONDEMN the war itself or the handling of it, Commager directs his criticism at what is constantly being said about Vietnam.

He criticizes the administration for statements it has made which he considers misleading and made to conceal errors in the management of the Vietnam war.

He points out, for example, how the American people "... have been told the war was not really a war; that a few days' bombing would bring North Vietnam to its knees; and that a show of force would bring the war to an end." And he states:

"The record of no other war in our history is so littered with the bric-a-brac of miscalculations, misguided policies and mistaken predictions."

He believes that the confidence which the U.S. has in its ability to control the war is felt merely by the arrogant who are convinced that the United States can do no wrong.

"TO SUPPOSE THAT we are a special people, that the choice of life and death for nations has been delivered into our hands—this is a fearful kind of arrogance and pride," Commager contends in his article.

His conclusion: "Nothing in our experience promises us that we can subdue the arrogance or conquer the pride."

Commager is a prominent lecturer, educator and author in the field of American history.

His teaching has carried him to many foreign universities, including Oxford and Cambridge, and he has served on the staffs of a number of noted American universities.

His most famous books include The Growth Of The American Republic, The Spirit Of Seventy-Six and America In Perspective. He also writes for the Atlantic magazine and Harpers.

'Trigger-Happy' Accusations May Hinder Law Enforcement

THE RECENT city riot, precipitated when a boy was shot, brought about the old cry of trigger-happy policemen.

Protestors say that car theft is hardly a crime that should carry a death penalty, and this is true. However, an officer who is chasing a suspected criminal doesn't know why that person is running; he only knows that it is his duty to stop the suspect.

What is an officer to do if a fleeing suspect fails to halt after the usual warnings? Should he just let him go; this would be the easiest way because there would be no criticism of the officer concerned.

IN THIS COUNTRY where a firearm is available to anybody, a disarmed officer would be a joke, and while an officer may be physically armed, he may, in the future, think twice about stopping lawbreakers who fail to halt at the old "Stop in the name of the law." And it just might come to this if people accuse a policeman of murder when he was using his last resort in apprehending a suspected lawbreaker.

Existence Becomes Life

THE ASSOCIATED STUDENTS have just received a picture of a Vietnamese child that they adopted last year through a foster parent plan. The fifteen dollars that are sent to his guardians monthly change his existence into a life.

Perhaps other organizations on campus could find the means of adopting a child, whose picture and story are on page one. It is a wonder how an underprivileged child such as this, who has never seen a television set of his own, either color or black and white, and who has never owned a ray gun or an electric data computer replica, can produce a handwritten letter such as he wrote to his foster parents.

STUDENT COUNCIL SHOULD be commended for this project and, hopefully, other groups might get with this foster parent plan and show the people of that country that American dollars can buy better things than arms and soldiers.

Psychedelusion In Rock Sounds

By Connie Skipitares

AMERICAN popular music today, identifiable almost exclusively as rock 'n' roll, has for the last several months been undergoing severe criticism questioning its possibility as a corruptive medium.

Music makers have literally been plagued with accusations that psychedelusion is creeping into their records.

Songs performed by such groups as the Beatles, the Rolling Stones, the Byrds, and "mastermind" Bob Dylan (who creates most of the stuff) are meeting with much disapproval among the older generation because of the alleged references to LSD and the "junky world" that can be interpreted in the Big Beat lyrics.

THE CURRENT CONTROVERSY was actually roused about a year ago when disc jockeys on eross-country radio stations began plugging a tune which they believed contained a key to this era's panacea for the recording business: Bob Dylan's Mr. Tambourine Man.

Unfortunately for public opinion's sake, critics all too quickly labeled Dylan's creation as a narcotic-oriented troublemaker describing a dope pusher and a drug-induced dream.

But most persons dismissed the interpretation because of its new and novel nature, and considered the lyrics to be "quite good poetry." That is, until a flurry of similar songs suggesting a similar message entered the scene, causing the usual "upturn of eyebrows" in awe and disgust.

IN EXPRESSING CONCERN over the alleged trend, Variety, the weekly show business newspaper, claims that "the pop music biz is now facing its profoundest 'moral crisis' since Elvis Presley outraged his elders by swiveling his hips on television some 10 years ago."

But, struck back a disc jockey from a New York radio station, "evil to him who thinks evil," contending that if the American public is stretching for an interpretation and stretching hard enough, it may very easily receive an invitation to take a "trip" on LSD.

Anybody listening for drug inference in pop songs — and adults are known to do it as well as teenagers — is going to run up against the age-old problem of what is "dirty" and what is not!

Perhaps the greatest single cause for concern by most observers is that the so-called "drug songs" might cause youngsters to experiment with drugs. Yet, there are others who contend, quite confidently, that mere lyrics have no, and should have no, effect on behavior.

COMPLICATING THE ISSUE even further are performers who have heard the "drug song" talk, discovered a money-making gimmick, and proceeded to record material with implied hidden meanings camouflaged by a "junky works" title on a song or album cover, while the contents are completely harmless.

Here, the exploitation of today's youth by means of this type of chicanery should be cited as a more serious problem. As nearly everyone eventually discovers, the business of the music business is making money!

However, the controversy of innocence versus evil in what can easily be termed youth's most popular pastime today, still remains to be resolved.

CAN WE MERELY dismiss it as "another passing fad," or shall we allow it to take hold in our society?

The answer alone lies in each individual's power of rationality — in the ability of the unsocialized to overcome bias, and the uneducated to overcome gullibility.

Fair(?) Sex Grabs Jobs

Since the women's suffrage act was passed, there is no stopping the woman from breaking down the man's world.

There are jobs galore which are limited to members of the fair, or rather, unfair sex. The poor men—can't be airline stewardesses, mini-skirt models, go-go girls, reeeptionists, playboy bunnies or enter other "highly desirable" occupations.

Metamorphosis Of Betty Boa

Slinky Sheds All In Showcase Drama

By John Janigian

A big event took place last Friday at the college, and the biology department asked, "Are the students adult enough to witness this revolutionary happening?"

The shedding of clothes has always raised an eyebrow or two, but at the college, students were on hand to witness the shedding of the skin of a boa constrictor that has made her home on the third floor of Science Hall for over two years.

This startling news was revealed by Carter Baum, technical instructional assistant of the biology department.

"Betty Boa," given an all-too-appropriate name, had given up eating and her eyes became opaque, two definite signs that shedding was due.

The boa usually consumes about one mouse per week but has had as many as five mice at one time. The docility and loss of appetite might mean she was in love if she were human, but as a snake these features are signs of the imminent shedding of the skin.

The opaqueness of the eyes is caused when the skin extends over the eyes, the first place where the skin loosens from the skeleton.

The boa sheds its skin depending on the amount of its growth which in turn depends on the amount of food that the snake has consumed. As most Americans are indulgent, so the boa leads the easy life.

Constrictor Constrictor is the genus and species name of the snake. She is aboreal but a good swimmer. Her family is fairly common in the tropics and if one of them mistakes a person for a rodent it's all over for him.

Boa constrictors grow to over 12 feet long. The average boa grows about one foot per year; however, in later life growth depends on feeding, Baum confided. Plans are presently underway to get a larger cage for Betty Boa. According to the sign pasted under the cage, the boa is a popular pet. Popular with whom?

Hawaii: Year-Round College Better Than Summer Vacations

By Herb Dirion

To some college students summer vacation is perhaps the most anxiously anticipated time of the year, yet for others, the prospect of books, papers and the monotonous grind of year-round campus life never stirs an extraordinary thought.

As an excellent exercise for keeping the intellect in shape, summer school courses are offered in a variety of different institutions and a particularly appealing one is the University of Hawaii.

THE UNIVERSITY of Hawaii was founded in 1907 as a College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts. Today it embodies seven colleges: Arts and Sciences, Business Administration, Educational, Engineering, General Studies, Health Sciences and Tropical Agriculture, and a Graduate Division.

Because of its geographic location, the United States Congress in 1960, chose the university as the site for the Center of Cultural and Technical Interchange between the East and West. At the East-West Center on campus, one can meet students from Japan, China, India and the Philippines, not to mention a few Buddhist Monks who inhabit the place.

Because of the warm climate on the Island of Oahu, where the university is located, the dress is indeed very casual. It is not unusual to see students going and coming from classes in shorts and sandals or barefooted, women included. One seldom has the need to wear long pants and starched shirts, and there is never need for woolens or sweaters.

While at the university one finds many varied and interesting things to do. Almost every afternoon conducted tours leave the campus headed for such places as the sugar and pineapple fields, Pearl Harbor, the Polynesian Cultural Center and Bishop Museum.

ON WEEKENDS the tours include sightseeing in the outer islands of Maui, Kauai and Hawaii.

Other leisure pastimes at the university include an activities-office-sponsored luau for the summer session students. Contrary to popular misconception, luau does not mean Hawaiian feast. It means taro leaf.

A Hawaiian feast is an "aha 'aina" or the gathering (aha) of friends for a meal ('aina).

In ancient Hawaii the food for the aha 'aina consisted mainly of poi, pig, fish and potatoes. Everything was then cooked in the 'imu or underground oven because that was the only way, and the feast was eaten sitting on the ground.

One finds that during his stay on the Islands and at the university, the Hawaiians and kamaainas (old-time residents, Hawaiian or not) are warm and friendly and eager to extend their hospitality.

BEING A MAINLANDER, one shortly becomes aware of his identity as a "malihini," but after acclimating himself and accepting the ways and customs of the kamainas, he then gradually becomes just like one himself. This is not a difficult transition for most people.

In addition to being a malihini, one from the mainland is also referred to as a "haole," which means white and not of Polynesian or Eurasian descent. On the other hand you can be a "hapa haole," which means either half Polynesian or Eurasian.

Incidentally, the Polynesian girls are beautiful!

"Aloha!"

A Voyage Through The Scarlet Rivers Of Life

With the many new horizons opening in medicine, none is more fantastic than that purported by The Fantastic Voyage.

Medicine has progressed to the point where man can more or less depend on his society to keep him in good health. Medicine is on the verge of conquering cancer, mental disease and arthritis.

WHAT THE FANTASTIC VOYAGE proposes, rather indirectly, is that man can be miniaturized enough that practical entry into another person's body will be possible.

The impact of such a statement seems ridiculous at first, but after some thought, the great possibilities such an idea would entail are tremendous.

If a doctor could be shrunk to the size of a mierobe and injected into a patient's body, there is no limit to the area that might be probed and operated on. The inner reaches of the brain, eye, ear, heart and lung would be open to surgery.

This is the idea conveyed in the motion picture. An example of such an operation is the removal of a clot. A man has a blood clot in an inaccessible part of the brain.

A special team is miniaturized and put into the body to unclog the clot and save the man's life.

THE SPECIAL EFFECTS department which conjured up the impressions of the man's insides deserves hearty congratulations for a colorful and exciting attempt.

With the imaginative backdrop of the heart, lungs, ear, brain, blood and pleural cavity, the audience gets a look at medically approved suggestions of what makes a man tick.

The movie doesn't handle itself in a completely serious manner and the audience on exit from the theater may, in fact will, think the whole voyage was made in fun.

However, the medical possibilities are still present and it shouldn't surprise anyone to see the premise come true in the time to come.—S. H.

The Working Student Knows The Long Pull

By B.T.

A FEW READERS are extremely talented people who can "read-into" sentences and paragraphs, and misconstrue and twist the whole meaning of a column into something that can literally dance off the page and create a volcano of argument.

College columnists are always exposed to so much criticism, negative thinking, and not surprisingly, little of it is constructive. When a columnist receives praise, he is literally accepted into the human race again.

After all, he is learning how to create reader-rapport, not trouble! People read the column, or "read-into" the column.

Outpost chooses to comment on the working student, and how he himself knows what a long, hard pull it is to conquer each plateau in college.

Some falter along the way and quit. Some of the quitters become misfits in the business world who really hate their jobs. They have no choice or educational background, but to stick with it.

Other students have the courage and tenacity to earn a degree, and step out and "fight for a job" in a field that is crowded with talent. This person is a real inspiration to others.

"Aw, big deal," the readers-in would say.

OUTPOST CHOOSES to heap congratulations on a tempermental young Frenchman named Michel Janicot. Janicot, a talented writer, was editor, managing editor, feature editor, reporter and cub reporter — in reverse order! — for The Guardsman during the years 1962-1964. He is a veteran.

He held numerous part-time jobs in order to finance his college education. Recently, he received his B.A. degree from San Jose State College, and is now with the Wall Street Journal.

"So what," cry the readers-in.

He didn't DROP OUT, that's "so what!"

DAVE KLEINBERG, another former Guardsman editor, is now editor of the 25th Infantry Division's newspaper in Cuchi, Vietnam.

"We spent three months dodging bullets over the wooded areas of the Mekong, and two choppers I was in were hit by machine gun fire," he wrote.

"Now, nice and safe in Saigon, where we've been confined to quarters to escape VC terrorists during election week. In seven more months will be home," Kleinberg reported.

WHY THE LIFTED eyebrows and surprised comments on the sick situation at Hunter's Point?

It is quite unbelievable how the sophisticated people of this beautiful and sophisticated city can calmly stand by and close their eyes to the frightening events that happened in the Fillmore district and at Hunter's Point.

One teacher, fresh out of college with her teaching credentials, was appalled at the lack of textbooks and pencils. She said she "conned" a San Francisco newspaper for extra copies to use as reading matter for one of her elementary school classes.

Sociologists have repeatedly complained about the diseased condition there, and they have repeatedly presented their views and plans for curing the growing cancer of seething emotions that are brought on by inadequate housing, and other sociological problems.

The Observer

By William G. Pates

IT HAS OFTEN been said this year that the choice offered Californians in this typically confused California gubernatorial race is nothing more than the choice between the lesser of two evils.

However, the individual and factional philosophies, personalities and evils responsible for the makeup of the two running evils are so complex and diverse as to call for deep and thorough examination.

ON ONE HAND you have a man who, due to his political instability, has jetted across America's political landscape from screaming left-wing New Deal Democrat to shouting right-wing radical running against a man who has propelled himself across America's political landscape from moderate Republican to liberal, progressive, moderate, middle-of-the-road, conservative Democrat.

In another sense Californians are expected to decide between a manufactured anti-everything candidate of nonexperience, who has taken non-stands on nonissues and whose academy award performance is under the direction of the Spencer and Roberts public relations firm, and a man with eight years' experience as chief executive who has taken wishy-washy and unpopular stands on profound issues of the day such as race relations, jobs, education, crime, conservation and housing and who is, according to his opposition, controlled and manipulated by the left-wing California Democratic Council which holds a less than admirable respect for this individual.

THE GREATEST SINGLE issue revolving around one candidate's entire approach to the campaign is morality — but everyone knows you can't legislate morality.

But it is this person's belief that the present Governor is responsible for the entire breakdown of simple morality of this, the number one state in the number one nation.

For the other side their exists a good record compiled during eight years in the fields of education, highways, water, conservation, bureaucratic stumbling and little else.

THIS SIMPLE MORALITY issue is made up of many individual items all of which can be found in the conservative manifesto as such.

Among them are a paranoid preoccupation with evils in big government . . . "Let's return sound, sensible government to the people . . . and once again have government of the people, by the people and for the people . . . for every ounce of federal help we get we surrender an ounce of personal freedom . . . I am not a politician," and a lusting for decency, i.e., clean fun middle-class suburbia conservative style.

This decency quest can be found in support for the anti-obscenity C.L.E.A.N. amendment, abhorrence of the Berkeley sit-ins and filthy speech movement, deterioration of morality in government, and condemnation of so-called treasonous acts of dissent by those opposing the Vietnam conflict for example.

All these the Republican candidate supports but there has been a transformation on other issues.

THE PRE-SPENCER and Roberts candidate was against the income tax, saw abolishment as a step toward imposing statism on the people, federal aid to education was a tool of tyranny and welfare recipients were a faceless mass waiting for a handout.

Today he calls for lower cost government with better management, while providing the people with all their needs, improved unemployment insurance, stronger social security and better administered welfare. All in all a generally pro-government line.

From this, to predict how this Republican will act as governor, would be futile.

As well, he berates a man with wishy-washy convictions, personality, force of will, leadership, oratorical style for being a man with wishy-washy convictions, personality . . .

THE GOVERNOR, on the other hand, rarely runs on his record for he is spending most of his time discussing inexperience and the Birchers.

However, despite the lack of leadership and inability to impose his will on the legislature, California is enjoying prosperity with rising employment, income, sales and profits in all facets of life.

But it is not enough, and there are still problems in this state; so you can say that it is time for a change.

Observing all this a question comes to mind, can the quick Ronnie Reagan leap over the crabby Brown governor or visa versa?

Foreign Students Are More Affluent After City College

By Sally Dorety

Foreign students who have completed studies at City College and returned to their own countries to work are far more affluent than those who have not, according to Joseph M. Jacobsen, foreign student adviser here.

Jacobsen recently returned from a six-month trip around the world taken while on Sabbatical leave from City College.

Showing the first of three series of slides at the International Relations Club meeting last Thursday, he commented on the squalid conditions observed throughout the Asian countries.

POVERTY AND AFFLUENCE exist side by side and in some city harbors, "small boats on which entire families conduct a home life are so tightly packed together they are no longer able to move about."

One of Jacobsen's purposes was to visit some of his former students who have returned to their native countries and are presently conducting businesses of their own.

Asked to compare the difference in economic status between citizens who had studied in the United States and those who had not, Jacobsen commented, "I saw approximately 50 former students, and with no exception, each of them was successful in his chosen field. Several of the American hotels in which we stayed were managed by these people. One man was a dentist, another a restaurant owner."

However, the percentage of those foreign students who return to work in their countries is relatively small.

CITING KOREA as an example, Jacobsen said, "Only 10 per cent of those intending to return do so, 90 per cent prefer to try their luck in the United States. This is one of the most serious problems confronting underdeveloped countries."

A second purpose of his tour was to determine the needs of various countries in secondary education. Jacobsen would like to see a program begun at City College which would train students as two-year college teachers with the understanding that they would return to their native countries to teach.

He feels that if more underdeveloped countries were able to offer programs similar to "our semi-professional curriculum," students would feel more encouraged to stay and find work at home.

Campus Lineup: Football Rally Set Tomorrow

The VIP's have been signed to perform at the football rally at the Ram during College Hour tomorrow to kick off another football season.

In addition to the VIP's, the song girls will be on hand doing their latest routines.

• GRAD PETITIONS: Friday is the deadline for all students wishing to file petitions to graduate. Petitions may be obtained and filed at the registrar's office, S-121.

Any student not certain of his eligibility for graduation should make an appointment with his counselor.

• SYMPHONY FORUM: City College students have an opportunity to receive a 50 per cent discount on tickets for a series of 20 concerts through the San Francisco Symphony Forum.

The forum series opens November 30. Tickets went on sale to students on September 28 at the finance office in Smith Hall. The sale will end on November 5.

• SHIPWRECK DANCE: The dance sponsored by Phi Beta Delta, and scheduled for Friday night, has been cancelled. The cancellation was said to be due to a shortage of funds necessary to finance the dance.

• RECREATION ASSOCIATION: Old and new members of the Recreation Association attended the welcoming social given for them September 27. This semester's officers were introduced at this time. They were President Joy Green, Vice President Mary Pagliari, Treasurer Sharon Harris and Historian Diane Christiansen.

The Recreation Association is open to all students. Sign-up is on the bulletin board in the women's gymnasium.

Sports offered are volleyball, badminton, tennis, and modern dance, square dance and folk dance.

ISC Greets Frosh

GRACE AMERAL, LEFT, and Judy Barling, will be the official hostesses for the Inter-Sorority Council's rushing tea Sunday afternoon welcoming new women students interested in joining one of City College's two sororities.

Miss Ameral, president of Phi Beta Rho; Miss Barling, president of Theta Tau; Mary Riordan, sponsor of Phi Beta Rho; Elizabeth Ananes, sponsor of Theta Tau and the pledge mistresses will form the receiving line to meet the new women.

The tea, which is held each year, is a formal affair and attire should be selected accordingly, Dean of Women Mary Golding said.

It will be held at the retail floristry building from 2 to 5 p.m. Sunday.

Deadline To File For Fall Scholarships On October 8

Students wishing to apply for a State of California scholarship for the academic year of 1967-68, can file an application before Saturday in Dean Mary Golding's office, S-142, in order to take a Scholastic Aptitude Test to be administered here on Saturday, November 5.

Applicants must be residents of California and United States citizens under 24 years of age, a high school graduate and in need of scholarship assistance. There are approximately 2700 scholarships available, ranging from $300 to $1500.

Local scholarships are still available to City College students who qualify, Dean Golding said last week. In order to be eligible, the applicant must receive satisfactory grades on the first midterm examinations. Applicants must also be full-time students.

The dean stated that applications must be submitted this week, two weeks prior to the first midterm.

The San Francisco Executive Secretary scholarships have five awards available to third or fourth-semester students who are majoring in this field.

The California Scottish Rite Foundation offers scholarships of $175 each to be awarded to four students.

Applicants must have been graduated from a San Francisco high school during the last school year (1965-1966) and must be planning to transfer to a four-year college or university after graduation from City College.

Life-science scholarships are available to high school graduates intending to major in any branch of life science at City College.

The William K. Mayo scholarship is awarded each semester to a student who best exemplifies the qualities of scholarship in engineering or engineering technology.

Desider E. Slavoj, Engineering Society adviser, will accept applications in S-3B.

The dean stated that the scholarships in the hotel and restaurant field have already been picked and awarded. There are scholarships in this field to be awarded next semester for which applications are due by first midterm of the Spring semester 1967.

More scholarships will be available next semester, Dean Golding said, and she encouraged qualified candidates to apply for them. Every student has an equal opportunity to qualify for these scholarships and is encouraged to do so, she emphasized.

No Chance Of Open Stacks In Library In Near Future

Opening the library stacks was mentioned last week, but that's all, Librarian Harold Korf said today.

"There's more to running a library than meets the eye. Opening the stacks would give rise to problems I can't even conceive of now," Korf said.

"As you know, the stacks were originally open to all students, but books began to disappear so the college had to close them. The problems which existed then continue, but now we have the sheer size of the college to contend with. There are about 6000 more students here now."

When asked what the problems were he cited the fact that the library has a main corridor that stretches from the circulation desk to the administration offices where the traffic of students can't be controlled.

"Students could walk out with books right from under our noses," Korf explained.

He commented further that the staff isn't as large as he'd like it to be, but finances won't permit expansion.

"A safety factor involved with not opening the stacks is that there aren't any emergency lights in the stack room. If the lights went out with students in there, will, just imagine," he mused. The three floors of stacks have no outside lighting.

How to solve his problems was summed up laconically. "I'd like to see the whole building knocked down and rebuilt. It just isn't made for a library," he said, adding,

"It's not false to say we're thinking about opening the stacks, but I wouldn't even consider seeing them open this semester or the next if I were a student."

VISTA Recruiting Starts Tomorrow

Representatives from VISTA, the volunteer corps of the War on Poverty headed by John Herbert, VISTA area field representative, will be at City College tomorrow and Friday.

The visit from VISTA will be to outline the role college students can play in the War on Poverty as VISTA volunteers.

Two representatives from VISTA will be here from 8 a.m. to 3 p.m. both days. Their stations will be at the flag pole in front of Cloud Hall and in front of Smith Hall. They will be here to answer any questions and give any information concerning the VISTA program.

VISTA volunteers are serving in urban slums, in rural areas, on Indian Reservations, with migrant laborers and in Job Corps Centers, in a variety of programs including mental health and literacy programs.

VISTA volunteers may express a preference as to where they wish to serve and the type of assignments they desire. They receive their living expenses plus $50 a month.

Warning Parking Tickets Replaced By The Real Thing

Valid parking citations have replaced the pink-colored violation warnings which have been issued to violators over the first three weeks of the current semester, Kevin Kelly, chief of the campus police, warned today.

The warnings were posted simply to allow students enough time to obtain their official parking permits necessary for legal parking in the college's various student lots.

"At this date there have been approximately 2000 registered parking permits issued to the AS," Kelly claimed.

THE CAMPUS POLICE is an organization which is few in number but endures a vital job essential for the student body's security. The force of 29 uniformed male officers and 3 uniformed coed secretaries compose the protection squad of the campus.

Both Lawrence Lawson, chairman of the Campus Police, and Kelly manage the force which must meet the demands of 9000 day students.

Aside from patrolling and controlling traffic within their boundaries of jurisdiction, the Campus Police also regulates the cafeteria and other areas on campus, and keeps the atmosphere calm at dances and ball games.

In order to become a Campus Policeman a student is required to complete two semesters of Criminology 70. Kelly believes that the duty of a Campus Policeman is a rewarding experience, specially for those expecting to enter the police department or the highway patrol.

MOST OF THE attention of the Campus Police, however, must be given to traffic control. Now that the parking laws have been restored, an average of approximately ten parking violations will be issued to guilty motorists on campus daily, Kelly reported.

Motorcycles have become a menace, too. The increasing number of cycles has produced a critical problem in A lot.

Kelly claims that a lot will have to be closed off to allow for the erection of the new administration building. However, he is seriously contemplating a method to accommodate those being "evicted."

When asked if there were any plans for parking expansion, Kelly replied, "We want to open up the adjacent reservoir on Phelan avenue. There is a possibility of doing so next semester. This would allow us an additional 700 parking stalls."

'Best Photo Work' On Display In Cloud Hall Gallery

A new exhibit of the best work done in the photography department last semester is now on display in the Cloud Hall gallery. All the work that is being exhibited represents the various media of the photography program.

These media include professional, commercial and illustration photography, color printing, design photography, portraiture and photojournalism.

Motion picture and side photography is not represented. The best work in these media is shown yearly in the Arts Hall theater.

Emmett Smith, photography instructor, is the person chiefly in charge of the exhibit. All work exhibited in the gallery is judged by the photography department and must meet the high professional standards set by it. Three factors in achieving professional quality are technique, concept and imagination, Smith explained.

One man shows of the work of former photography students are also exhibited each semester. This includes persons who have become successful in the fields of professional and commercial photography.

Cloud Hall gallery is used exclusively by the photography department to exhibit the work being done in photography. The photography exhibits have been in Cloud Hall gallery since 1955. It wasn't until 1956 that the photography department was granted exclusive use of the gallery by the college and that permanent panels were installed for the displays.

A special exhibit of zoo photos by Madison Devlin, instructor here, will be shown in November.

City College Dumps San Joaquin, 32-3

Rojas And Meija Lead Rams Over Thunderbirds, 7-4

When the City College soccermen defeated Merritt College, 7-4, September 23, they won behind the four-goal performance of Bob Rojas.

All the Rams' scoring was done by two men, the four by Rojas and three by inside right Henry Meija. This pair scored on good passing from the rest of the team.

Coach Roy Diederichsen was pleased with the Rams' first victory, and it was a league game to boot. "Our team work was excellent, and we never let up throughout the entire contest," Diederichsen commented. The Ram mentor also pointed out that he thought the booters were in excellent condition for the first game.

At points the Ram defense was a little shaky in giving up four goals. However, Diederichsen had praise for left halfback Tom Sammuelson, and right halfback Pete Rossi. Sammuelson and Rossi controlled the center of the field, and were the key to the T-Birds lack of scoring.

The highlight of the game was when T-Bird All-American candidate John Camacho scored on a 40-yard free kick. The ball was kicked with such force that the Ram defenders just saw a blur. With Camacho the rest of the Merritt squad was tough.

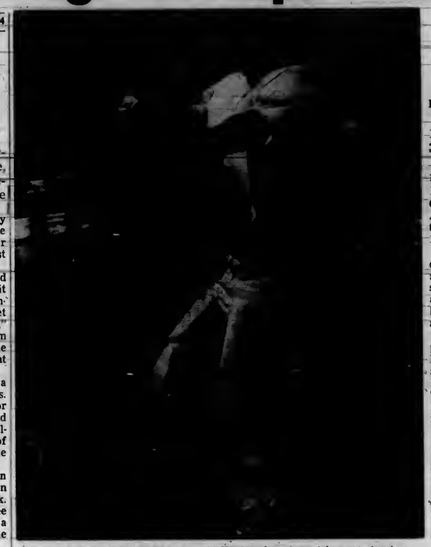
In the game the T-Birds handled the secondary fairly well; it was the front line and the two halfbacks that made the difference for the Rams.

Diederichsen is still happy over the team spirit, and says it is "the best we have had in the past three years at the college."

Today the Rams travel to Diablo Valley and will meet the Vikings in a Western Intercollegiate Soccer Conference game.

Diederichsen rates the Vikings and Menlo as the two likeliest who could take the crown away from the Rams.

Frosh Spikers Lead Squad Into Season



The 1966 City College cross country team, spearheaded by Fred Forsberg from Lowell High school and Roger Gribble from Lincoln High school, will be leading a squad which contains mostly freshmen.

Coach Lou Vasquez, when asked how he thought his team would do this season, stated, "It's too early to tell right now."

He mentioned, however, that the Golden Gate Conference is usually won by a sophomore team. This means the Rams will have their work cut out for them this season.

Vasquez thinks that Diablo Valley will be one of the top contenders in this year's race for the crown.

Saturday at Sacramento State College the Rams will participate in the Sacramento Invitational which will be held starting at 11 a.m. This early meet will give Vasquez a chance to get a good look at what his team will have.

Simpson Again Pacemaker In Ram Preseason Finale

By Bob Ferrando

The City College Rams ran their two-year unbeaten string to 11 games, by defeating the San Joaquin Delta College Mustangs 32-3 last Saturday night at Pacific Memorial Stadium in Stockton.

The Rams were again led by All-American O. J. Simpson who ran and caught passes with great authority. Simpson picked up 136 yards in 14 carries to lead both teams in this department.

Quarterback Pete Mullins, the former All-City star, directed the Rams attack with great poise, completing 5 for 10 in the air for 104 yards.

San Joaquin defense, like so many other Ram opponents, was geared to stop Simpson. But like all the other squads, failed in their attempts. With a scoreless first period behind them both clubs started to open up offensive weapons in the second period.

AFTER DOWNING a Delta blocked punt, on the San Joaquin 14-yard line, the Rams fashioned their first scoring play of the game. Quarterback Pete Mullins hooked up with Dwight Tucker for a 14-yard TD to give the Rams a 6-0 advantage, the PAT kick failed.

The Mustangs from Stockton, fired up by the Rams' quick score, came back with a drive of their own going 39 yards in nine plays with Larry Frey kicking a 23-yard field goal to reduce the Ram lead to 6-3.

The Rams struck back quickly, with O. J. Simpson outrunning the Mustang defense for a 37-yard TD run. Mike Carter added the conversion kick to give the Rams a 13-3 advantage.

AFTER STOPPING a Mustang scoring threat the Rams again were knocking on the Mustang goal line. Milt Frank and O. J. Simpson combined to run over and around the Mustang defensive front wall, climaxed by a Simpson 23-yard TD run. Mike Carter again added the conversion, to run the score to 20-3 at the half.

The first half showed the Rams running and passing game clicking behind the field leadership of Pete Mullins. O. J. Simpson lived up to his reputation as one of the top backs in the nation as he led the Delta linemen on many long running chases.

Milton Frank, the hard-running back from Balboa High showed some great open field running as he was continually causing the Mustangs defensive problems.

The Mustangs went into the game with a no-win, two-loss record.

The second half opened up with the Rams taking the kickoff and driving for the score with Pete Mullins hitting O. J. Simpson with a 35-yard TD strike, the extra point kick failed and left the Rams with a 26-3 lead.

Numerous infractions against both teams slowed the first half down, and stopped several scoring threats.

San Joaquin, although consistently outplayed, showed a desire to play rough football as tempers flared throughout the second half.

COACH ELSTON'S Rams, after stopping a Delta threat in Ram territory, again started a sustained scoring drive. The Rams last score came with Pete Mullins hittlng fullback Glen Baker with a 29-yard scoring pass, the extra point attempt failed ending the scoring for the night.

The remaining quarter and a half turned out to be a dragged-out penalty war between both clubs. A new stadium penalty record was set for one game, with the Rams picking up 21 infractions for 234. The Delta squad, not to be outdone, picked up 105 yards on 11 penalties to give the officials a real workout for the night.

Gridders To Host Tough Viking Squad In League Opener

City College will kick off league action for all Northern California two-year colleges when the defending champ Ram football team hosts a tough Diablo Valley squad Friday starting at 2:30 p.m. on the Rams' field.

The gutty Vikes were the only Golden Gate Conference team to match the Rams, point for point, last year when they spoiled City College's otherwise perfect record in the league finale, 18-18.

And the Vikings are a far sight tougher this year with 11 of last season's regulars returning to add a lot of experience to their squad.

ALTHOUGH PRESEASON results appear to give the Rams an edge in the odds, such is not the case.

Even though the Vikes lost their first encounter, 20-12, and the Rams won theirs, 25-0, the respective competition was not on a par.

Fresno, which downed Diablo, is a seasonal powerhouse, while American River, which lost to the Rams, is at best mediocre.

The return of All-American halfback O. J. Simpson gives City College the best single running back in two-year college history. But the Viking's backfield has an experienced one-two punch.

Letterman fullback Ron Remington and speedy right half Jim McLennon will carry the offensive load for Diablo.

THE RAMS WILL counter with Simpson and Milton Frank at right and left half, respectively.

Simpson averaged seven-plus yards in 23 carries in his first game this year while Frank averaged a little over four.

Frank showed real promise against San Joaquin as he carried the ball only four times but gained 82 yards to lead the Rams in average gain per carry.

On the line the Vikes will give a little in the weight department, very little, and are a more experienced unit.

Diablo averages a couple of pounds less than the Rams' 226-pound line.

Ram Coach Dutch Elston's biggest worry is whether the offensive timing will come around for the conference opener.

THE DEFENSE, which held American River to 8 net yards, will be led again by Ralph Hodge (6-1, 230) and Allan Cowlings (6-5, 220).

The defensive secondary, which is having its usual early-season difficulties, must remain a large question mark as yet, but Calvin Booth is beginning to look solid in the defensive backfield.

The game will be only one of three home tilts for the Rams this year and students with Associated Student cards will be admitted free.

Decker Fills Advisership Position For Block SF Club

Curt Decker is now the new adviser of the Block SF, which is the society for athletes who have earned a letter in a varsity sport. Decker, also swimming coach, takes over the position formerly held by the college football coach, Arthur Elston.

Decker plans to have the first Block SF meeting tomorrow during College Hour. The major purpose of the meeting will be for him to meet the members and also to plan for the election of officers.

The major activity of the Block SF is to run concession stands at all sports events held either on the football field or in the gymnasium. This includes high school games played on the campus. Decker, with help from baseball coach Ernie Domecus and Norm Travis, plans to have the refreshment stands working in the very near future.

The members of the society also help run Sports Night, which is sponsored by the Associated Men Students. Included in this program are the intramurel championships for basketball and boxing matches organized by Coach Roy Diederichsen.

The two basic requirements for admittance into the Block SF are first to earn a letter in a particular sport and then pay a 50-cent initiation fee.

If an athlete earns a letter while playing for a non-championship team he may then buy a jacket for that sport and have the letter placed on it.

Eight, Nine, Ten For League Boxing

Boxing is "out for the count" and will never become a league sport again, according to Roy Diederichsen, boxing instructor here.

Working this semester with the boxing class is Don Chestra, a professional who has been on the same card with Eddie Machen and Bobo Olson.

During his 18 years at the college, Diederichsen has brought eight two-year college championships to the college, one Olympic game competitor, 20 Golden Gloves champs, and 11 boxers who have become professionals.

Every semester there is a boxing tournament during the Associated Men Students Sports Night. Out of about 100 students, eight finalists are drawn to compete that night.

Home Football Game Attendance Pitiful

RAMBLINGS

Friday Afternoon Bad Timing For A Game

By G. Frank Cooney

THERE must be something attractive about traveling. Take football attendance for example.

When home games are concerned, the spectator turnout is pitiful. But, when the team goes on the road, it's a full scale trek to see the champs play. Obviously the interest isn't lacking.

IF THE RAM football players can draw more than 4000 persons to a single game, as they did last year at the Prune Bowl in San Jose, then there must be some reason why the average grid turnout for home games is less than one-tenth of that number.

The reason cannot be that the Rams do not have a good squad to watch. Last season they brought home a Golden Gate Conference crown in nearly perfect fashion.

There must be another reason.

THE DEFENDING CHAMPS will open their 1966 football season at home against what stacks up to be the toughest competition they expect to meet all year, Diablo Valley College. If this were a high school there would be standing room only.

But don't plan to bring your folding chairs, there will be an abundance of seats.

Game time is Friday at 2:30 p.m.

Now just how many people in this institution have leisure time at that hour? Most students either have classes or jobs to go to about that time.

It seems, then, that the logical thing to do would be change the time of the games to bring the event to a larger number of students.

BUT NIGHT GAMES are out unless flashlights are in vogue for fans and players alike.

A quick glance at any other college football schedule shows that most games are scheduled for Saturday afternoons. Friday afternoons is when high school games are scheduled.

The Friday afternoon game time does seem more suited for high schools, since the majority of preps are not working their way through high school.

WHATEVER THE REASON fans stay away from Ram home games by the hundreds, the situation will not be remedied any sooner than it takes to schedule some games for either Friday nights—under some kind of lights—or Saturday afternoons.

Home basketball attendance, for example, dwarfs football's figures. But basketball games are almost always played at night.

City college's gymnasium, at least, does have lights.

Champ Cagers Begin Practice

The Ram basketball team, Golden Gate Conference champions last year, will begin working out in the men's gymnasium Monday, October 17. Coach Sid Phelan hopes to put together another outstanding team worthy of the college's basketball reputation.

Last year the Ram cagers finished the season with 30 wins and three losses to place second in California two-year college competition. They also established a first in conference history by being undefeated in league play, 14-0.

Only two of last year's first string players remain with the squad—Gene Williams, center, All-Conference last year, and Paul Batmale, guard.

Phelan feels that Williams can be the best player the college has ever produced if he can develop his full offensive potential. Nevertheless, both players should improve with added experience.

The remaining three starters, Charlie Parks, Ed Wilson and Willie Jones, transferred to Idaho State College upon completion of their sophomore years. Their positions should be adequately filled.

The competition should be tough this season with Merritt and Contra Costa, both noted for putting together strong teams, at the top of Phelan's list. He emphasized that it is too early to predict how the other teams will shape up, but feels that no team is a cinch to win the conference title.

Ramparts Editor Scheer To Speak On Vietnam

By Guiseppe Greco

The position of the United States in Southeast Asia will be discussed by Robert Scheer during College Hour tomorrow in the college theater.

Scheer who is presently the Foreign Editor of Ramparts Magazine, attended City College of New York and graduated from Syracuse University in New York with a B.A. in economics. He later taught at the University of California at Berkeley where he was awarded a Ford Foundation Grant in Chinese Studies.

DIANE LATIMER, president of the Associated Women Students, announced that selection of semifinalists in Best-Dressed Coed Contest will be held during College Hour tomorrow.

Scheer's criticism has pinpointed the essence of the problems about current issues in various occasions.

About the war in Southeast Asia he has stated:

"THIS WAR IS A racist war; not only in that it is contemptuous of the ability of the Vietnamese people to define and build their own society, but more significantly in that it places absolutely no political significance on their hopes, prejudices and aspirations."

On the free speech issue he has suggested that the House Un-American Activities Commission and its functions be abolished, along with the governmental agencies which investigate private political beliefs.

On the poverty problem his position has been:

"Here in America, people in the ghettos have only begun their fight to change an oppressive system—a system of poverty, joblessness and de facto segregation. They know, as do the Vietnamese, that no matter how large the aid from Washington, social change will not come as a gift from those presently in power. They know that the people must fight for what they believe in."

SCHEER HAS TRAVELLED extensively in Southeast Asia. During the past 12 months he has twice been in Vietnam; his views and observations were reported throughout the nation.

He has also travelled to Cuba where he gathered much information. Recently he was in Cambodia, invited there by Prince Sihanouk.

He is co-author of the book Cuba, Tragedy In Our Hemisphere, and author of Cuba: An American Tragedy, and How The U. S. Got Involved In Vietnam, which is considered to be one of the most complete documents of its kind.

SCHEER'S VISIT HERE was sponsored by the Faculty-Student lecture series of which Edward Taylor is the faculty chairman.

According to the series schedule, Stephan Possony will speak on American Foreign Policy And The World Crisis on Tuesday, October 18, in S-100.

Professor Possony, who is director of the International Political Studies Program, Hoover Institute at Stanford, advised Senator Barry Goldwater on foreign policy matters during the 1964 presidential campaign.

Tryouts Continue For Best-Dressed Coed On Campus

Thirty smartly dressed coeds were chosen in the initial tryout of the Best-Dressed Coed Contest held during College Hour, October 6.

Diane Latimer, president of the Associated Women Students, announced a second tryout to be held tomorrow in C-258 during College Hour. At this time 14 semifinalists will be chosen from the 30 contestants.

Criteria for selection of the coeds were poise, walking, general appearance and grooming. Elimination of the 60 participants was done on a point system by each individual judge.

Among the judges were faculty members Emmett Smith, Laura Light and Melia Furgis.

Former contest participants Barbara Huntington and Anita Davis competed the panel of judges.

The finalists are hoping to be among the 14 chosen to model in the semi-annual AWS fashion show and tea on Thursday, November 3.

At this time the Best-Dressed Coed will be chosen and presented with a trophy.

Special Election Fills Vacancies In Soph Council

By Bill Fritz

In a special election held last Monday, Student Council selected Paul Shuttleworth and Jim Ahearn to fill the two unoccupied seats on Soph Council.

Chosen from a field of two candidates, the new council members will assume the positions vacated by Mike Nygren and Katie Shypertt and will serve on Soph Council for the remainder of the semester.

Another special election, to choose two more councilmen to fill the vacant Frosh Council seats, will be held after first midterm examinations. First semester freshmen, if qualified, will be able to run for these posts.

ON MONDAY OF last week, council, by a vote of 8-0-1, approved a $94.50 supplementary budget request by the Forensics Club. In addition to this allocation, a $15 loan was voted to the club's sponsor with which to purchase debate handbooks.

This allocation was approved after little debate.

A supplementary budget allocation request by KCSF, which had been presented two weeks ago but had been removed from consideration until a study could be made, was once again brought up for deliberation.

A representative from KCSF, the campus radio station, explained that the antiquated broadcasting equipment had been renovated and modified over the summer and that the air time had been increased by two and one half hours a day, calling for more records to be purchased. He asked additional funds to cover the costs of these actions.

MANY AND VARIOUS objections were raised to this request. The most significant objection was made by Finance Chairman Lynette Wong, who reported that KCSF had already overspent its initial allocation and, as a result, had its budget frozen.

Once again the request was removed from consideration; and a four-member committee was appointed to meet with KCSF representatives to study the matter.

Also on Monday of last week, Frosh Councilman Ron Lent, at the request of Soph President Joe Parnell, presented council with the question of the legality of an unrecognized, off-campus club using the words "City College" in its organizational name.

AND LAST WEDNESDAY two representatives from the organization in question, "City College Students Against The War," appeared before council and questioned council's right, legally and under the AS constitution, to act upon the club.

After much quibbling and after little was said many times, nothing was decided. This matter was also removed from consideration until a definition of legality and rights could be made.

The News Media's Role In The Riots

By Viggo Petersen

All concerned with the recent race riots in San Francisco seem to be preoccupied with one basic question: who is to blame?

Among all the reasons that have been hashed and rehashed by this time, one aspect of the riots which has not been completely ignored but does not seem to get much attention, is the role of the news media played in the riots.

On Tuesday evening, September 27, the news began by describing the "race riot" that was occurring in the Hunter's Point area.

LISTENERS WERE TOLD in ultimate detail of the "roving bands of Negro youths roaming the streets throwing rocks, bricks and bottles at police and passing motorists."

All the cliches from previous riots were there—and then some: "It's quiet now but it's anybody's guess how long it's going to stay that way," was often heard.

"This is the worst race riot in the history of the United States since Watts," was a statement broadcast loudly and clearly into thousands of living rooms.

This was an obvious exaggeration.

CAMERAS WERE rushed to the scene; flashbulbs popped constantly; floodlights from TV and movie cameras not only illuminated but seemed to blind people and thereby hampered control operations.

The desire for publicity or a yearning to get in on the act in these kinds of circumstances can well be imagined.

The cameras consistently scanned the scene picking up any sort of disturbance—large or small. It appeared as if the cameramen were literally looking for trouble.

In listening to the news one could not help notice how the newscaster's voice would rise in intensity as he spoke describing the events taking place. They were not described in calm controlled tones of voice. Rather they were delivered in a sort of frenzied tone.

If one were to suggest at this point that the news media should practice moderation and restraint in situations where a continual and somewhat distorted description of events could incite others to commit unlawful acts, such a suggestion would undoubtedly foster cries of "suppressed news" belched from the rooftops.

SUPPRESSION OF information is a dangerous thing. And so is distortion of information.

What started as perhaps isolated incidents on that hot muggy Tuesday evening was, according to news broadcasts, a "full scale riot."

By Wednesday evening it did indeed deserve that label.

Some would contend that excessive coverage of incidents such as this is necessary.

In the words of one reporter from the Los Angeles Times: "Does it take a race riot to make people realize that discrimination, poverty, unemployment and dissention exist within the ghetto?"

VIP's Encore Here

The VIP's will perform at the Alpha Phi Epsilon informal dance this Friday between 9 p.m. and midnight in Smith Hall.

A College Hour rally at the Ram tomorrow is planned to publicize the dance, according to James Wyatt, assistant dean of student activities. The VIP's will also be at the rally.

All City College students with a Fall 1966 registration card and $1 are eligible. Couples will be charged $1.75. Wyatt explained that at least one of the couple must have a registration card. A guest card for the other is available from the Dean of Women's office, S-150, or from Wyatt in B-5.

The dance is scheduled as a fund-raising event for Alpha Phi Epsilon, a nonbudgeted campus organization. Part of the profits, Wyatt expects, will go toward some fraternity service project. However, the fraternity also stands to face a loss, if there is one.

Likelihood of cancellation is small, Wyatt said, referring to the cancellation of previous campus dances. They were "precautionary" cancellations.

The VIP are local group, members of the musicians' union, and previously played at the college. Wyatt also said that they have placed high in the battle of the bands and are quite popular.

Dean Of Students Hillsman Describes Job As Challenging

By Steven Hara

Although his new job isn't yet clearly defined, Dean of Students Ralph O. Hillsman describes his work as "challenging."

The former Dean of Men, Hillsman this semester has been given a wider job horizon. Last semester he doubled as the Dean of Student Activities, but this semester he is no longer involved in activities.

FORMERLY DEAN OF MEN, Ralph O. Hillsman is now Dean of Students at the college.

His major duty now is to siphon off a portion of the problems which plague the counseling department. He is the listening ear to the ailments and what-have-you of the students. He is, in fact, the father image to every student on the campus, coeds included.

"THE COORDINATOR OF Student Welfare, my immediate superior, has had it rough with a lot of disqualified students. Well, for instance, my job would be to take a bit of the pressure off him by handling some of those students," Hillsman said adding,

"I come into contact with any student who wants help or needs assistance with his job, education, teachers or maybe even his family. I provide what you can call a liaison between the student and any of these."

Speaking of parts of his old job, Hillsman said calmly, "I don't handle student activities any more which gives me more time to help individual students.

"IF AN ORGANIZATION comes to me asking for advice, of course I'll give them all the help I can, but Dean Wyatt is a capable enough man to take care of any problems which arise."

When asked how he liked working on a personal level with the students, Hillsman said, "I always was working on a personal level when I was acting in the capacity of Dean of Men.

"The only difference with this 'personal level' business is that women are included in my counseling schedule.

"I personally find working with individuals a very challenging job, though. When I was working with the student organizations, I got to know everyone. Any problems that occurred, therefore, were solved on a very friendly basis.

"Now I'm working with someone different every day, every hour. I may see this person only three or four times in the semester and yet, I'll try to solve this person's problems. It's very challenging."

AS DEAN OF STUDENTS, Hillsman will continue to work with attendance problems, interpretation of regulations, campus conduct and student morale.

When asked to define more clearly student morale, he cited this example, "Let's use long hair. There's no regulation against it and I feel that if a man student wants it, it's his right."

The extent of his responsibility isn't defined; even he doesn't know where it ends.

Thirty-Six New Instructors Join College Staff

Thirty-six new instructors have been added to the faculty of City College for the Fall semester of 1966.

President Louis G. Conlan today released their names and assignments.

New members of the English department include Stephen Levinson, Masha Jewett, Mary Tyson, University of California graduates; Mary Blair, Richard Phipps, John Caris, San Francisco State; Jacquelyn Wheatley, University of Missouri, and Margaret Boydstun and Don Peterson.

Four openings in the business field have been assigned to Henry Hatcher, U.C.; Marilyn Schnake, University of Cincinnati; Margaret Vota, University of Pittsburgh, and John Casey, University of Santa Clara.

Chemistry had three opening which were filled by William Satsos, University of Wisconsin; Stanley Furata, University of San Francisco, and Anne Thacher, U.C.

Eleanor Fahle and Gunther Antler, S.F. State graduates, filled the openings in the social science department.

Frank Cerrato, State, and Edward Walsh, University of Montana instruct mathematics.

Peter Baker, U.C., and Shirley Hoskins, University of Pacific, are assigned to life science.

Both Vern Jorgensen, U.C.L.A. and Ronald Rubin, University of Cincinnati, instruct accounting.

Phillip Brown, U.C.L.A., instructs radio and television. Arthur Samuels, in counseling and Susan Conrad in dance, graduated from S.F. State.

Frank Holden from University of California at Santa Barbara instructs data processing. Bettie Underwood is a certified dental assistant with work at San Jose State.

Three are Stanford graduates, Josephine Kennedy, instructing reading; Alan Eisan, instructing health and James Conley instructing physics.

Drama Auditions To Be Held Soon

Tryouts for Oscar Wilde's The Importance Of Being Earnest, will be held Monday, October 31 and Tuesday, November 1, James Haran, director, announced today.

Earnest, a classical comedy, will be the drama department's major production this semester, to be presented from December 14 through 17. The play is close-knit, and although it is purely farcical, it is lively and ingenious, with no solemn or sluggish moments.

There are parts for five men and four women, and any student who is interested in auditioning will be welcome, Haran said.

Computers Ease Registration But Cannot Cope With Drop-ees

COMPUTERIZED REGISTRATION will be initiated this coming semester, and the machine age is going to cut each student's registration time down to about a half hour, hopefully.

Although the IBM machine can eliminate the registration gauntlet, the problem of students' closing a class and then dropping out of it in a week or so still exists.

In the first three weeks of classes, 175 students filed leaves of absences from the college, and no doubt many more have just dropped various classes.

And so now space is available in some closed classes, but it is too late to fill that space with students who really want these classes.

Of course there is no way for the IBM machine to cope with this problem, except maybe to stamp a black spot on the punch card of the drop-ee. It will be up to each student to "take all he wants but to eat all he takes."

The Wish Of The People . . .

CHRIS COLUMBUS could be this country's greatest fall guy if only people would use him the way they use less popular persons for scapegoats. As Columbus is credited with finding this country, according to most historians, he can be blamed for all the problems of this land.

He could take the rap for starting riots, for lousing up the Vietnam crusades and for the lack of available student parking around this college. Some people just don't think.

Last semester there was no Columbus Day holiday either. The day off from instruction was transferred over to the 31st of December, probably because it was such a popular day for cutting classes by the students as they prepared for the New Year festivities, and so the wish of the people was the administration's command.

Is American Draft Unfair?

By Connie Skipitares

A PROCLAMATION, released through the command of Emperor Haile Selassie as the Italians invaded Ethiopia in 1935, reads:

"Everyone will now be mobilized, and all boys old enough to carry a spear will be sent to Addis Ababa. Married men will take their wives to carry food and cook. Those without wives will take any woman without a husband . . . Anyone found at home after the receipt of this order will be hanged!"

Ironically enough, a copy of the crisp edict hangs in the New York City headquarters of the Selective Service System, anything but depicting the American system of draft currently in use.

Yet, many an American young man who pauses to read Selassie's eye-catching message reacts in a manner reflecting that the system in which he has been "caught" is not nearly as fair as the emperor's.

TO INTERJECT a pathetically obvious understatement: America's Selective Service System has become so selective that the victimized draftee eligibles are not the only dissatisfied critics branding the method "unfair!"

This year's registrant has been enveloped in such intensified selectivity in America's numerously revised Selective Service System, that even with the Vietnam buildup, he has only one chance in six of being drafted.

But, therein is where dissatisfaction is born.

The individual who is that one in six is critically labeling the system "unfair" because he witnesses the neglect the draft board is seemingly exercising in the cases of his closest (and equally eligible) friends.

THIS ALLEGED misdeed of the unnoticing-eye and turned-back heightens complaint when the carefree ambition-less slip untroubled into America's affluent civilian society.

Then we have the deliberate and preconspired draft-dodgers: the football hero who feigns invalidity through a past and supposedly forgotten injury which suddenly becomes chronic...

At any rate, until recently, most American male eligibles found the best way to fend off the draft was to get and hold on to student status. Federal guidelines (used by the local boards) had suggested that a college freshman in the top half of the males in his class in a given school should be deferred.

But then the Selective Service System scheduled a series of qualifying tests last spring, supposing that the tests would give students ranking in the bottom half of their classes a second chance to obtain deferment.

CRITICS CONTEND that all the tests actually achieved was discrimination against just those students who stand to gain the most from higher education.

But it seems they accomplished a bit more than that when they supplied a "quick-buck maker" in the publishing business with a new gimmick: . . . for $1.95, "this vital book can help you to draft deferment."

Post-criticism immediately suggested that "there is something basically abhorrent in the idea that any man can help send his neighbor off to be shot at instead of himself by paying $1.85."

IS IT FAIR to stigmatize a young man because he is a little short of education or money?

Perhaps the answer to our perplexing problem is the initiation of the lottery. The system has been used before in America with the famous fishbowls of the two world wars.

Lottery justice may hardly be termed justice, but perhaps it would be fairer than the system used today.

Trapped Like A Rat

MANY ANALOGIES AND representations can be drawn here, such as the student and the draft board or the meek inheriting the earth. Actually it's the science department's own Betty Boa who, after shedding her skin (foreground), is getting her appetite back, a fact which is somewhat disconcerting to the visiting rodent, who is thinking that perhaps he is at the wrong place at the wrong time. —Guardsman photo by Richard Blakemore

Mother Of Eight Resumes Her Education After 31 Years

By John Janigian

Have you ever wondered who the statues in the court yard are? They're Thomas Edison and Leonardo Da Vinci. This is just one question that is asked daily of Opal Bailey, this semester's smiling face behind the information booth on the first floor of Science Hall.

Aside from answering questions at the college, Mrs. Bailey must be busy answering questions at home, because part-time information woman and full-time student Mrs. Bailey is the mother of eight children.

She lived with her family in Lincoln, Nebraska, where she attended school. In 1931 at the height of the depression her family migrated west and at the time it seemed school would have to wait. It did.

In 1932, Mrs. Bailey married. She is now the proud mother of two married children, one a 24-year-old sailor and the other a 22-year-old daughter who lives at the Bailey home with her one-month-old daughter while her husband serves a tour of duty in Vietnam.

THE OTHER BAILEY children are 17, 14, 13, 12, 11 and 8 years of age.

A year and a half ago, after being out of school for 31 years, Mrs. Bailey enrolled at Mission Adult High School, where she attended until June.

Although she had planned to be a librariay, upon graduation Mrs. Bailey felt boredom would result, so during registration she signed into the college's new teaching assistant program. This would allow her to work with underprivileged children under the poverty program.

MRS. BAILEY CARRIES 12 units and works about three hours a day at the information booth. The job was obtained through the Federal Economic Opportunities Program of which City College is a member.

In her job, Mrs. Bailey does everything from answering questions, helping with the work in the registrar's office, to taking telephone messages for instructors. During the first week of classes she gave directions, as well as maps of the campus to students who were lost.

● Shot Heard Around SF

Editor:

In your attempt to justify a San Francisco policeman's shooting of a youth, that touched off the recent riots in San Francisco, you took the position that shooting is a panacea for fleeing persons suspected of a criminal act.

Either you do not know the facts or you have let your prejudices obscure your logic.

You asserted that the policeman was using his last resort to apprehend a suspected criminal. Here you are putting the effect: the suspecting of the youth, before the cause: the flight of the youth, which is not a valid reason.

You yourself stated that the policeman did not know why the youth was running but he was suspected of being a criminal. But the fact is that the youth was suspected of being a criminal because he ran. What crime, was not known thus no crime at the time of the shooting.

It was only after the shooting that tangible evidence was presented concerning the criminality of the, then, dead youth. Before the shooting the only evidence, according to the officer, was that the youth ran. The officer did not know why.

In conclusion the youth was shot before tangible evidence was presented concerning the criminal act of automobile theft. From this it is clear to see that the officer was, at this time, not shooting at a suspected criminal because there was no reason to suspect.

Now why he shot I refuse to say but it can never be justified and would not stand in a court of law—only in the minds of prejudiced persons.

● Thought About Tot

Editor:

Who is Vu Van Thanh?

From his picture he looks like a 7-year-old boy, who may or may not be Vietnamese. From his letter he sounds like an American English teacher.

Granted, it was a translation but the "example of that expression" shown in The Guardsman leads me to believe that his education hardly needs any help from this student body.

If I were to give $15 of my money I would want to know whom it went to and if it did any good. So far, no communication has been received from a 7-year-old, poverty-stricken, Vietnamese boy.

Sidelights To Hunter's Point Riots

By B.T.

THE HUNTER'S POINT RIOTS make good copy. For a long time, stories about different incidents will be related from numerous points of view.

Some are being told about the two shopkeepers on Portrero Hill, one the victim of wasteful looting, the other, who was overlooked. The story goes that the victimized shopkeeper had been "mean" to a Negro child. He had "slapped a bottle of pop from the boy's hand," so the story goes. In retaliation, the looters wrecked his store.

The overlooked shopkeeper was wise. He put up a sign, "Welcome all soul brothers." The tale goes that his shop remains intact and that he is doing volume business today.

THEN THERE ARE the stories of heroism and compassion, of human sincerity and Christian endeavor, and some of these involve many students of this college.

For not all Negroes are rioters. It has been emphasized that the Negro is not to blame; it is the hopeless social situation that exists in the ghettoes of this great country.

Bob Hendriks, a veteran and history major, was one of the many Negroes, along with many others, who took the time and effort to help restore order in the riot areas. He participated in a group of veterans who felt that they would be "met with little hostility" when they approached the frustrated, hostile people who were bent on creating chaos.

"WE WORKED FOR six hours, up till about 3:30 a.m. We went into Potrero Hill and talked the youths into staying indoors. We heard about Youth for Service and other groups, so we wanted to help too," Hendriks related.

Ralph Hillsman, dean of students, reported that many students of all races were volunteers as emergency police and firemen, and they formed peace committees and cooperated with military and police agencies to set up patrols to help reach citizens, in an effort to get them to abide by the emergency regulations.

"The mood of the whole college was one of compassion. Different groups, in deference to those students who lived in the riot areas, even cooperated and cancelled their respective social functions for the weekend.

"They felt that some students, who lived in the riot areas, could not get out, because of the curfew, so they didn't want to enjoy themselves," he said.

* * *

OUTCRY: Potrero Hill shopkeepers have a few post-riot problems that are keeping them awake nights: The butchers are being harassed by people who order pounds of cold cuts and walk away from the counters with no intention of paying for the cut meat.

* * *

KEEPSAKE: Midterms are near. Here's a test of sobriety: Say "Bitty-Baby-Buzzy-Bumpers" ten times, and repeat it.

The Editor-In-Chief -At 1600 Pennsylvania

By Bill Fritz

"Were it left to me," Thomas Jefferson once said, "to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without government, I should not hesitate to prefer the latter."

However, it appears that the president has received the impression that the press is in desperate need of his editing; or, as I. F. Stone puts it, "Johnson sometimes seems to think the Constitution made him not only commander-in-chief of the nation's armed forces but editor-in-chief of its newspapers."

Admittedly, the president can be found almost every evening simultaneously viewing the three networks on his three television sets.

And when the high-performance engine in the machinery of a nation develops a little wheeze, Johnson the mechanic is Lyndon-on-the-spot. When The New York Review Of Books ran a scorching review of Johnson's Vietnam policy, a White House aide phoned the editors and suggested that in the future they have Vietnam reviewed by Joseph Alsop (a Johnson backer).

Indeed, though, some of the instances are comically pathetic. When THE WASHINGTON POST reported that the president planned to ask for a $4 billion cut in excise taxes, the then press secretary, George Reedy, stated that "that figure bears no relationship to any decision that has been made." The president recommended an excise tax cut of $3,964,000,000, which bears a relationship to $4 billion as 99.1 to 100.

And, yet, some of the deceptions have been a little less than comical. For almost a month, President Johnson stated to the public that it was being "misled" by reporters who said the government was considering widening the war in Vietnam.

The children's game of Blind Man's Bluff may be a lot of fun, and to play the game with the press may be necessary in a dictatorship; but in a democracy it is suicide.

The Observer

By William G. Pates

THE WHITE BACKLASH, so often feared but so nearly nonexistent and ineffective in the general elections of 1964, has erupted and spread across the nation from Love Point on the polluted waters of Chesapeake Bay in Maryland to Waukegan, Illinois, on the polluted shores of Lake Michigan and beyond.

In California, it may even sweep Ronnie Reagan all the way to the governor's mansion in Sacramento.

On the national scene Republican leaders have voiced their intention to put greater prominence on racial disorders as an election issue, while here Governor Brown and Reagan stated a reluctance to make the riots a political issue. Their stand will have little effect on the voters.

FOR THE BACKLASH is a formidable problem and is playing a big role in this campaign. It is a hindrance to the Governor and an advantage for Reagan even when nothing is said because of past stands in the field of civil rights by these individuals and the party in power.

The Rumford Fair Housing Act is a prime example. Brown backed it extensively in 1963 and it was voted down in 1964 by better than 2 to 1, while Reagan strongly opposed it. Last year the California State Supreme Court ruled that proposition 14, which repealed the Rumford Act, was unconstitutional and it was thereby reactivated.

Today, because he is fighting for his political life, the Governor advocates modification and revision of the act instead of outright support.

Applications for the test must be postmarked no later than midnight October 21, 1966.

According to Educational Testing Service, which prepares and administers the test for the draft boards, it will be to the student's advantage to file his applicaion at once.

By registering early, he stands the best chance of being assigned to the test center he has chosen. Because of the possibility that he may be assigned to either of the testing dates, it is considered important that he list a center and center number for each date on which he will be available.

STATEWIDE, 43 per cent of the people oppose the Rumford Act while 33 per cent support it outright. Partywise, nearly two-thirds of all Republicans oppose the bill while 43 per cent of the Democrats approve of it.

Of those who specify a preference for a candidate, only 16 per cent supporting Reagan were in favor of the bill compared to nearly half of those supporting the Governor. Reagan supporters oppose it by better than two to one.

As well, the Governor has supported all Civil Rights Bills brought up for consideration in Congress during his administration. Reagan on the other hand said he would have voted against them had he been in Congress.

REAGAN MORE OR LESS preys on the fears of the generally emigrated Midwestern conservative population of Los Angeles, Orange, San Diego and other counties by relating the attempts by the wild-eyed liberals to the north to bring equal rights to all our citizens, and they believe him.

Generally there is support albeit intermittent resistance to the drive for equality of opportunity in education, jobs, transportation and public accommodation. But there is great sensitivity regarding open housing.

Elsewhere, results in many of the states gubernatorial primaries have shown the extent of the backlash power with arch-segregationists eleeted in Maryland, Georgia, Alabama and Arkansas where it was believed race moderation was gaining support.

Apparently it is asking too much for Americans to . . . stop and examine their consciences on this and other similar issues . . . to meet their responsibilities and do what is right.

IT WOULD SEEM to be as in the late President Kennedy's words, that "Now the time has come for this nation to fulfill its promise . . . for . . . We face a moral crisis as a country and as a people . . . it is a time to act." This denial of equal rights and equal opportunities . . . "is an arbitrary indignity that no American citizen should have to endure."

Further injustice can be found in American defense forces. For when we send Americans to Vietnam, we do not ask for whites only. How can you expect American citizens to fight for the rights of others elsewhere when they themselves are not free to enjoy the privileges of being American.

And "This nation," as President Kennedy went on to say, "for all its hopes and all its boasts, will not be fully free until all of its citizens are free."

Americans are selfish of their rights and are fearful when others threaten to obtain equal stature, for despite the passage of three civil rights bills in the last four years, law alone cannot make man see right.

One typical Chicago resident summed up the typically American attitude in the resistance to equal rights and opportunities in seven simple words, "It's the American right to be prejudiced."

Mounting Costs Face Students

By Herb Dirlon

Have gumption and initiative gone the way of the Franklin stove and the hitching post? In the face of mounting costs can American students still work their way through college?

In the past 15 years, the average annual cost of tultion, fees, room and board at private American colleges has increased from $1480 per student to $2570 — 74 per cent.

During the same period the cost of attending public colleges has risen more than 50 per cent.

Thus college costs have been rising two to three times faster than both the cost of living and general wage levels — particularly the wages for the menial jobs traditionally performed by students.

Of course, there are other sources of income for needy students. The number of scholarships and loans has risen steadily in recent years. But so has tbe number of students: there are 5,526,000 in colleges today.

Aid is spread so thin that it averages only $550 per student receiving help.

Parents cannot always help take up the financial slack.

A job makes a student a good risk for a loan, for if he is employed he can usually borrow the difference between what he earns and what he needs.

Through the United Student Aid Fund, largest of the private nonprofit organizations which endorse low loans ranging up to $1000 a year for undergraduate study, up to $1500 for graduate study.

Is it easy to find a part-time job? There are enough jobs around. There are just two things needed to find them — the will to learn and the will to earn. Once you've got those, you can get a college education.

Applications For Draft Test Due For November Date

Applications for the November 18 and 19, 1966 administration of the College Qualification Test are now available at Selective Service system local boards throughout the country.

Eligible students who intend to take this test are expected to apply at once to the nearest Selective Service local board for an application card and a bulletin of information for the test.

Following instructions in the bulletin, the student is asked to fill out his application and mail it immediately in the envelope provided to Selective Service Examining Section, Educational Testing Service, P.O. Box 988, Princeton, New Jersey 09540.

Applications for the test must be postmarked no later than midnight October 21, 1966.

According to Educational Testing Service, which prepares and administers the test for the draft boards, it will be to the student's advantage to file his applicaion at once.

By registering early, he stands the best chance of being assigned to the test center he has chosen. Because of the possibility that he may be assigned to either of the testing dates, it is considered important that he list a center and center number for each date on which he will be available.

Campus Lineup: Frosh Ball Tickets On Sale This Week

Tickets for the Frosh Ball, to be held from 9 p.m. to midnight Friday, October 21, at the Sir Francis Drake Hotel, will be available this week at the Silver Pole in Science Hall or at the finance office, located in Smith Hall.

There is no admission charge, but it is necessary that those students obtaining tickets have an Associated Student card, one per couple.

The dance is open only to couples and there is a limit of 400 couples who will be able to attend.

CHESS CLUB: After being relatively inactive for the past five years, the club is being started up again under the sponsorship of instructor Wilbur McKenzie.

The club has had a hard time reactivating itself in the past; however, instructor McKenzie explained that this semester has been successful in enrolling students of all different levels, ranging from the beginner to the very advanced.

SPOUSE CARDS: An old policy allowing a married student to bring his spouse to Associated Student activities using only one AS card has been re-activated, according to Dean Jim Wyatt.

Following the second world war, this policy was started because of the influx of veterans. Later, as the number of veterans decreased, the policy was discontinued. Now, however, a recent increase in veterans and other marrieds has led to a number of requests for the re-activation of the "spouse card."

TOURING CLUB: Fred Reisinger, president of the Council of Organizations, has announced the formation of the City College Touring Club because he feels there is a tremendous interest in motor sports on campus.

The club's first meeting will be held tomorrow morning during College Hour in A-213 to draw up a constitution and elect officers. The club plans to promote auto safety and driving skills.

Technicians In Demand To Fill Needs Of Great Society

Ever since Nostradamus started pulling prediction out of the fireplace during the 16th Century, trying to peer into the future has been an alluring, if chancy, business.

Yet, in an age of rapidly developing technology and increased specialization, all chance has gone out of the prediction that more and more qualified specialists will be needed in the years to come.

"City College has definite commitments to the community," contends Louis F. Batmale, coordinator of technical-terminal education.

BESIDES OFFERING a tuition-free, lower division education to University-bound students, the college is expected "to provide training for employment in occupations requiring two years of specialized college preparation, such as careers in criminology, hotel and restaurant operation, and horticulture.

"It is also expected to turn out technicians to work on a team with engineers and craftsmen and to train students in the dental and medical auxiliary services."

Due, partly, to the advent of Medicare and pre-paid dentistry and medical aid, there has been an overwhelming increase in demand for qualified medical and dental assistants and dental laboratory and X-ray technicians.

"As it is, many doctors and dentists find their efficiency cut by as much as 30 per cent because they must answer telephones, keep the books, take X-rays and do other jobs which could be handled by a properly trained assistant."

IN TRYING TO fill the needs of the "Great Society," the college has opened additional sections in Human Anatomy to prospective nurses and medical and dental assistants and technicians. In the past, only the earliest registration time could guarantee a place in this required course.

Although many people view it as the downfall of the "well rounded man," specialization is here to stay. And the City College of San Francisco will continue to expand in order to provide the community and society, in general, with highly qualified and much-needed technicians.—W. R. F.

New College Yell Leaders Add Color To Campus Events

Around City College's campus for the first few weeks this semester there was an absence of officially appointed yell leaders for the football season.

The reason for the disappearance, according to Associated Student President Bruce Fisher, is due in part to the draft.

During the summer the first of the yell leaders left for Germany and has not been heard from since. The second was drafted at about the same time. Orientation day saw the appointed yell leader, Ernie Woodcock, reading his greeting from the draft board.

Occasionally in the past, yell leaders have not been able to fulfill their duties through reasons of prior and more imperative obligations, but this is the first time since World War II that the draft interfered.

The college has just had tryouts and the newly elected yell leaders are Stan Angel and Joe Fanuicchi and John Brandenburg as head yell leader. The men appeared in their new uniforms at the October 6 rally.

City College's song girls took a third at the Rally Clinic at Foothill College last month. At that time the yell leaders had not been selected and consequently they were unable to compete with the other two-year colleges.

It is logical to assume that City College's yell leaders in a routine aiding the song girls would have given them and San Francisco a substantially better chance for first place.

Long Lines At Book Stores Reflect Heavy Enrollments

The Rampourium felt the effects of a sharply increased student enrollment at City College where enrollment is up more than 3000 over last year's fall enrollment.

All the complications and waiting in line at the Rampourium, though taken as a matter of course, is a reflection of City College's increased student enrollment, from 8300 day students in the Fall of 1965 to in excess of 11,400 this semester.

When asked how increased student enrollment had affected the services of the Rampourium, Richard Main, manager casually stated "sales are up."

In addition to sales being up the store had run out of fewer books this semester than in previous semesters, thus serving more students quickly so they wouldn't have to wait for reordered books.

This, however, Main attributes to the fact that all available space had been filled with books and supplies in anticipation of a highly increased enrollment. The Rampourium's fall supplies were ordered to bring the store to full capacity. This included the working force too.

The workers in the Rampourium worked in shifts, non-stop during the regular class hours and often afterward during the first week of classes and well into the second week.

The lines were longer than ever and certain books were soon sold out because there was not enough room to store more.

Main also stated that the fall of 1968 will be the semester for the opening of the new Rampourium which will be much larger than the present bookstore, thus it will be able to accommodate more students.

When asked what would be the situation with the Rampourium between now and 1969 as far as accommodating students — assuming that the enrollment continues to rise — Main stated that the Rampourium would really be in trouble because the staff had utilized all available space this semester for the first time.

"What you guys are going to have to do," he said, "is to get in here and get your books early and get out so we can re-order, and," he added with a dubious smile, "I think Cal Book Company is in the same fix." — B. R.

The name for the city of Portland, Oregon, was decided by the flip of a coin in 1844. If the coin had fallen the other way, Portland would now be called Boston.

Plans Completed For Two Campus Building Projects

The plans for two new building projects at City College, the educational services building and the visual arts building, have been completed and groundbreaking is scheduled to take place before the turn of the new year.

According to Oscar E. Anderson, coordinator of educational management, a contract for one of the buildings, the educational services building, to be built on the west side of Smith Hall, will be put out for bid sometime before January 1, 1967, and construction will start at that time.

THE EDUCATIONAL SERVICES building will offer counseling quarters for the counselors presently housed in the lower floor of Science Hall.

This, in turn, will leave available office space for the instructional staff who are presently crowded three or more in very small offices on the upper floors of Science Hall.

Also in the services building will be the registration office, new and much larger book store (Ramporium) whose facilities will be more than double that of the present bookstore, enabling Richard Main, the Ramporium manager, to introduce many new articles for the students' benefit.

A large lecture hall-classroom also will constitute part of this new building and will be used not only for testing and lecturing of large classes, but for many uses that require a large seating area. The lecture-hall-classroom will seat 300 students.

STUDENT ACTIVITIES will be centered in the educational services building as well.

The second building project, the visual arts building, is to be constructed on the east side of Arts Hall.

These plans are at the State Capitol being reviewed by the State Department of Schoolhouse Planning.

Early Spring 1967 has been designated for the contract to be released for bid and construction to begin for the visual arts building.

The visual arts building will house laboratories and classrooms for the Graphic Arts Department, Photography, Advertising Art and Art.

THERE WILL BE six classrooms which will hold 45 to 50 students, one large lecture hall to hold 300 students and one medium lecture hall to hold 150 students, and a reading laboratory.

The completion of these building projects has been set for Fall 1968 and should be in use by then.

A third building project that was started first is the bungalow behind Cloud Hall. This is to house the new fire department educational facilities that will offer classes in fire fighting and prevention.

Uncle Sam Pays Veterans To Study

Ex-service men and women, totaling approximately 500, have registered at City College this semester under the new GI Bill and more are coming in everyday, remarked Robin Dunn, veteran counselor in relation to the educational benefits under the new GI Bill.

The bill, or what is properly known as the Veterans' Re-adjustment Benefits Act of 1966, was passed by Congress to provide educational assistance for veterans who served on active duty with the Armed Forces after January 31, 1955.

To be eligible a veteran must have served continuously on active duty for at least 181 days. His discharge or release from service must have been under conditions other than dishonorable.

The bill provides one month of educational assistance allowance for each month served up to 36 months (or the equivalent of four years of college).

This allowance is based on the number of units taken and the number of dependents the veteran has. It ranges from $150 per month on down. An average full-time single student will receive $100.

Even now, Dunn said, many veterans already attending college are not aware of these benefits. They should consult him in S-132, or Ruth Curtis in A-1201 or apply directly to the Veterans Administration Office.

Veterans who make any change in the number of units they are carrying were urged by Dunn to report it immediately either to Mrs. Curtis or him.

USC Football Scholarship To Snatch Simpson In February

By Mike Duggan

O. J. Simpson, probably the greatest athlete in the college's history, will be leaving for the University of Southern California on a football scholarship in February.

Simpson, who is now trying to lead the Ram football team to a possible Junior Rose Bowl bid, will head for the University of Southern California at the conclusion of this semester. He was actually headed there last year, after his record-breaking freshman season, but was a few transferrable units shy of making the grade.

John McKay, head football coach at the university, who lost Heisman Trophy winner Mike Garrett, now must wait another season to get the best two-year college halfback in the country. What was McKay's loss is certainly the gain of head Ram football coach, Arthur "Dutch" Elston.

SIMPSON INDICATED what possibly may have turned a good running back at Galileo High School into an All-American at City College. O. J. stated that it is all in the linemen who open the holes for the running backs. In high school, Simpson remarked that he was bigger than most of the line. Not so here at the college last year.

The entire Ram line of Mike Taylor, Rich Colombo, Mike Dunn, Dave Malae and Joe Ross were all named to either the All-Golden Gate Conference first of second units. This great line averaged well over 220 pounds per man.

Also, at Galileo, Simpson played fullback and had to use more power to ground out yardage. Last season, O. J. played halfback and was used primarily on sweeps so as to take better advantage of his superior speed.

IN FLORIDA IT'S orange juice, but at City College it's O. J. for Orenthal James Simpson, perhaps the best athlete to attend this college.
—Guardsman photo by Wiley Johe

TWO GREAT HIGHLIGHTS stand out in Simpson's mind. First, was on November 12 of last year when O. J. raced for six touchdowns against San Jose City College. The second memorable event was the Ram 40-20 victory over Long Beach in the Prune Bowl game.

Against San Jose, Simpson scored on runs of 88, 73, 58, 16 and 14 yards. His other score was on a 27-yard pass play. By scoring 36 points and rushing for 304 yards on only 18 carries, two national marks were set.

Against Long Beach, Simpson tallied three times in helping prove that the Rams were indeed a match for the powerful southern teams. O. J., naturally was named "Back of the Game."

Among his other honors were those of "Player of the Year" in the Golden Gate Conference and also First Team All-American by the J. C. Grid Wire and Los Angeles Times. Another national mark he set was to score 156 points in a single season.

In comparing last year's team with the one of this season, Simpson pointed out that the line is much smaller this season. O. J. feels that despite their size, once John and Mike Deschler, Ruby Jackson, Kevin Shea and John Monroe get experience together, they will be tough to stop.

SIMPSON BELIEVES that at this stage of the season, the 1966 Ram squad has more spirit than a year ago. He pointed out that the team is confident and can go on to enjoy a greater season than last year's mark of eight wins, one loss and one tie.

Ron Fassler, the great offensive and defensive star for the past two seasons is gone. Yet, Simpson has great respect for the ability of Milt Frank to keep the defensive from keying on himself.

Simpson will have to do quite a bit to near his phenomenal freshman season but has started off in the right direction. In each of the two Ram victories, he scored three touchdowns. Also this year, O. J. will play a bit of defense for the Rams. With his speed and agility, he certainly can't hurt the defensive unit, which didn't yield a touchdown in the first two games.

Since he departs in February, Simpson will be unable to run track for the college this year. Last year, he was the best sprinter in the conference for 100 yards until a fractured thumb slowed him down. Still, Simpson's 9.5 hundred is a conference record for dual meet competition and he holds marks in the 100, 220 and relays.

Simpson may find a little time for track at Southern California, but spring football practice coincides with track, and football is number one for O. J.

Slow-Starting Soccer Players Defeat SF State

By John Le Tourneau

The college soccer team, held scoreless for almost two periods, scored its first goal with seconds remaining in the second period, and then scored five times in the final period to defeat crosstown rival San Francisco State, 6-1, September 28 at Balboa Stadium.

In the first period SF State and the Rams both played strong defense that was dominated by numerous Ram offside violations.

As the second quarter started, things didn't change as the Rams kept driving for goals, only to have them stopped because of penalties.

THE RAM DEFENSE seemed to get stronger when led by Roger Sarria, Tom Sammuelson, Connie Shiskin and Goalie Nelson Ortega, who snuffed many State drives.

However, as the penalties for the Red and White continued to happen, the Gators kept getting closer to the Ram goal until finally one State booter kicked one past Ortega to give State the lead, 1-0, with six minutes to play before intermission.

The ball was kept out of both goals the rest of the period as both teams missed easy chances to score, until the last five seconds in the period when Mickey Dudevich passed to Rudolpho Nuresnou for the first Ram score to tie the game at 1-1.

WITH TWO MINUTES gone in the final quarter, Bob Rojas scored, but it was nullified by an off-side penalty. However, Rojas scored to give the Rams the lead, 2-1. Rojas scored shortly again to make the mark 3-1.

Pete Rossi scored unassisted to make the score 4-1. Raleigh Nederlof scored two straight goals to cap the Ram scoring.

Saturday the Rams host San Jose State at 2 p.m. at Balboa Stadium.

Last year the Ram booters were upended by the Spartans, 4-1. In 1964 San Jose was a NCAA semifinalist. The two teams always play as if the outcome meant the championship.

In last year's game the Spartans were led by goalie Frank Mangolia, who has since departed. This year's game should turn into another tight ball game.

Simpson Scores Four Times; Mullins Hits For 227 Yards

By Bob Ferrando

Halfback O. J. Simpson ran for four touchdowns, and quarterback Pete Mullins passed for 227 yards in leading the City College of San Francisco Rams to a hard fought, 36-21, decision over Diablo Valley College here last Friday.

Coach Elston's Rams, pre-season favorites in the Golden Gate Conference, ran up against tough opposition in the Vikings' as Diablo continually fought back from an early three-touchdown deficit.

THE RAMS hit the scoreboard first going 68 yards in 11 plays with Simpson going over from 1 yard out, the extra point failed, giving the Rams a 6-0 lead. Simpson ran for 29 yards in the drive as his 19-yarder to the Diablo 20 was the key play in the drive.

San Francisco proceeded to kick off to the Vikings only to have the Diablo club give up the ball on downs. Ed Roseborough punt was downed on the Ram 15-yard line where the Rams started their next drive. The defending champs drove 85 yards in 5 plays with Simpson going over from seven yards out, the PAT pass failed, to give the Rams a 12-0 advantage. Simpson's 18-yard run to the Diablo 8 was the key play in the Ram drive.

The East Bay squad, after taking the Ram kickoff, went 60 yards in 6 plays with fullback Ron Remington going in from 19 yards out, John Deistlorgion added the extra point on a kick, this cut the City College lead to 12-7.

With a burst of speed, Simpson went down the sidelines for an electrifying 85-yard kickoff return. Mullins passed to Dwight Tucker for the extra point to give the City boys a 20-7 margin.

AFTER a Diablo drive to the Ram 25, the Vikings were unable to make a first down and they gave up possession of the ball to the Rams. The Rams scored on a Mullins-to-Tucker pass good for 15 yards and a City College score. Mullins ran the extra point in to widen the Ram lead to 28-7 at the half.

The first was all San Francisco, as the Rams were continually in scoring range. A Ram drive was killed by the halftime gun as the clock ran out with the Rams perched on the Viking 2-yard line with a first down.

The third period was a defensive battle, as both clubs marched up and down the field with numerous penalties hindering Ram drives. Quarterback Ed Roseborough for the Vikings opened up the Diablo attack during the third and numerous Viking passes were intercepted.

The fourth quarter showed the Vikings taking a Ram punt and going 68 yards in 9 plays with quarterback Ed Roseborough hitting halfback Steve Sommer with a 34-yard TD pass. The PAT kick failed with the Rams ahead, 28-13, in the opening moments of the last period.

The Rams came back to score again with Simpson taking a handoff from Mullins and running 12 yards for the score. Mullins passed to Steve Johnson for the PAT with the SFers enjoying a 36-13 advantage.

THE VIKINGS finished the scoring for the day, driving 47 yards in 9 plays with quarterback Roseborough sneaking over from three yards out. Wright added the extra point on a run to finish the scoring for the afternoon, 36-21, in favor of the Rams.

The Rams picked up 13 penalties for 175 yards for the game while the Vikings picked up 3 for 35 yards. Numerous infractions have been the downfall for many Ram scoring drives, as major penalties have been popping up all over the field against the Rams.

Mullins had himself a fine day as he completed 17 of 25 passes for 227 yards, he had no passes intercepted. Quite a day for the calm signal caller from Washington High. Simpson for the day picked up 100 yards in 21 carries as he scored four TDs raising his total to 10 in three games.

THE CITY College defense was given a good test for four periods as the Diablo offense had few problems moving against the Ram defensive unit. Quarterback Ed Roseborough, the former Lowell High School qb, completed 16 of 34 for 218 yards and one touchdown.

The loss was only the Viking's second this year, they were defeated by Fresno City College, 20-12, and they beat Santa Rosa, 26-12. The Rams' next game is against Foothill.

Foothill Hosts Ram Squad In Saturday's Tilt

The San Francisco Rams travel to Foothill Saturday night for an all-important Golden Gate Conference battle.

Game time is scheduled for 8 p.m.

Last season, Foothill's Owls were slight favorites going into the game with the Rams. Like other teams last year, the Owls were no match for the O. J. Simpson-led Rams, as the college handily won, 31-20.

This year, the favorite position is on the shoulders of City College. The Rams won decisively in each of their first two contests this year. After shutting out American River, 25-0, Arthur Elston's squad scored a 32-3 victory over San Joaquin Delta.

FOOTHILL BEGAN its season by beating that same American River team, 14-12. The following week, the Owls clobbered Cabrillo, 40-7, as fullback John Surbridge scored three times.

Owl Coach Bill Abey has 19 returning lettermen, but only three of these men were starters last year.

The loss of All-Golden Gate Conference quarterback Bill Lerch is definitely a big factor, but converted center Jimmy Miller is expected to fill in capably.

Lerch rewrote Foothill record books with his passing to ends John Callahan and Brock Dagg. Both these fine receivers are back again for the Owls. Callahan caught 34 passes for 440 yards while Dagg, former Fremont High star, snagged 25 for a total of 392 yards.

SURBRIDGE IS from St. Francis High of Mountain View and helps provide strong running for the Owls.

The only other starter returning from last season's squad is tackle Greg Winstead, who plays both offense and defense.

Ram coach Arthur "Dutch" Elston doesn't like to look too much into the future, and says "We play them one at a time." Elston does not pay any attention to the Rams' role as favorites. He feels it may pressure the players a bit, but knows that anything happen on any given day.

After Saturday's game the Rams travel to Chabot the following week for another important step on way to a possible Junior Rose Bowl bid.—M. D.

Intramurals Give Lapham Trouble

Jerd Lapham, Associated Men Student president, has admitted to having some difficulty in setting up the intramural sports program this semester, more than he anticipated.

Following his "No comment at this time," Lapham commented that the projected goal is 16 teams. Nine teams had already reported by October 5, and only about forty-five per cent of the plan is missing. With this vote of confidence, Lapham hoped to have the leagues set up by last weekend.

A schedule and lists of teams and leagues is expected to be ready for release today.

Basketball Team Tryouts Thursday

Tryouts for the Ram basketball team will begin at 4:30 p.m. on October 17, in the men's gymnasium. Coach Sid Phelan hopes to put together another conference winning team.

Last year the Ram cagers became the first squad in Golden Gate Conference history to be undefeated in league play, (14-0). They also ranked second in California two-year college competition with 30 wins and three losses for the season.

Only two players remain from last year's first string—Gene Williams, All-Conference center and Paul Batmale, guard. The other three positions, as well as the remaining roster, will be selected from the players who show up for tryouts.

Some of the promising cagers are Larry Gray and Bill Berger from last year's squad; Gary Bradford, All-City from Lincoln, Willie Allen, Polytechnic; Jeff Baker, Lincoln; Larry Dovings, Wilson; Mel Jones, Lincoln; Larry Norton, Balboa; Isaiah Pruitt, Wilson, and Tom Teague, Sacred Heart.

RAMblings

Preseason Promising But Long Road Ahead

By G. Frank Cooney

DESPITE ALL pessimistic inferences of impending disaster by Ram football coaches, the football squad came through the preseason games in far better fashion than did the highly praised champs of yester-year.

In mere scoring alone, the Rams tromped their nonleague competitors, 97-3, as compared with 1965's totals of 26-39, with the Rams on the short end.

THIS YEAR'S TEAM has won both preseason tilts, whereas last year's sixth nationally rated Golden Gate Conference champs started by losing their initial game, 26-0.

At this point last year the Rams were unrated by the Pasadena Grid Wire, but right now the undefeated squad is ranked No. 15 in the nation. The Rams are also receiving a lot of recognition in regard to the possibilities of competing in the Junior Rose Bowl.

And such publicity is certainly not uncalled for since No. 1 rated Cerritos was knocked off by unranked Phoenix College recently. This along with the fact that the next highest ranked California team, Fullerton, has already been held to a tie by Santa Monica.

THE USUAL prerequisite for entrance into the Pasadena Junior Rose Bowl is at least a clear slate in the current year's performances. This means no ties or losses.

And secondly, the Pasadena Junior Chamber of Commerce would expect to come out on top of the financial end of the bowl which they sponsor, so they usually pick Southern California two-year colleges to play the out-of-starters.

Only once in the history of the bowl has a northern squad been invited.

But there is a lot of commotion about 1966 being the second year for Northern California.

O. J. SIMPSON and company taught the southerners a lesson last year when the south's highly touted Long Beach City College, 1964 Junior Rose Bowlers themselves, came to play the Rams in the Prune Bowl and lost their respect, 40-20.

So this year the southerners took notice when City College announced the return of the best two-year college running back in the nation.

Simpson, by the way, is far ahead of his record-setting pace of last year. Big number 32 only tallied twice in 1965's preconference battles and going into last Friday's opener with Diablo Valley he had scored six times.

It only takes one slip, as both Cerritos and Fullerton have found out, and a trip to Pasadena is out. So the Rams still have a long-long-long road ahead of them.

Vietnam—The Nature Of War And Search For Peace

(Editor's Note: David Kleinberg was Editor in Chief of The Guardsman in Fall 1962, and left for Vietnam as one of five army combat correspondents on February 14, 1966. Presently he is editing the 25th Infantry Division's newspaper.)

By David Kleinberg

VIETNAM, Oct. 6: To try to describe in three inches what it is like for a G.I. to be in Vietnam is like trying to condense the Bible into ten pages, a project that even Reader's Digest might balk on.

In seven months in Vietnam, I have been fortunate to have seen the nature of America at war and the character of the Vietnamese searching for peace. Neither has had an easy road.

LAST MARCH, I WAS sent to Cu Chi, 25 miles northwest of Saigon and the present home of the Army's 25th Infantry Division. A month before I arrived, Cu Chi had been a 20-year Viet Cong stronghold, but it fell in less than 20 days at the price of approximately 50 American lives and another 300 wounded.

Yet eight months later, it is still unsafe to leave the Cu Chi perimeter, and less than two hours ago jets were strafing areas less than a mile from our outer circle.

And the bombing of suspected Viet Cong positions continues and continues. When I saw the area north of the division's base camp for the first time last March, I could hardly believe my eyes. What was once rich rice paddies and woods had been turned overnight into a land dotted with craters, an astonishing reminder of the American massive fire power.

AS YOU HAVE READ repeatedly, this is a different kind of war, with an enemy almost impossible to find. It is true. He appears out of nowhere, when least expected.

I can recall coming into a village 10 miles from the base camp in broad daylight when a VC sniper opened up with automatic fire, sending one bullet through the helicopter.

No one was wounded, but this is not always the case. About the worst sight to see is the "Dust Off" helicopters landing with the wounded. It is a grim sight, almost like something unreal, from a nightmare. The chopper lands and the men race out with the stretchers, holding tightly to their hats as the whirling rotor blades splatter the air.

From the helicopters, limp bodies, Americans, are dragged out and it makes you sick to your stomach. Indeed, the flower of American youth.

IN SAIGON, it is much different. Among the teeming mass of humanity, the whirling lights of the city's thousands of bars, it is at times difficult to remember there is a war going on—sometimes as close as just beyond the city limits. Sent to the capital to edit the division's newspaper, I had a chance to mingle with the people and pick up a little bit of the language.

Generally speaking, I believe the Vietnamese are happy to have foreign powers to help them, although, undoubtedly xenophobie after many years under foreign domination, I believe they will want America to leave as quickly as possibly when the war is completed, if that should ever occur.

SOMEDAY I THINK I would like to come back to this country, when there is no war. It is a beautiful country and there are many places I would like to visit. It is as strange, as exotic and as beautiful as you have ever read or imagined the Orient.

The peasants wearing conical hats and working with the powerful water buffalo in the green rice paddies leaves a lasting imprint in your mind. Unfortunately, so does war, and it's hard to tell which is the stronger.

Colonial Carrousel Theme Of Freshman Ball Friday Night

The Empire Room, Monterey Room and the Walnut Bar of the Sir Francis Drake Hotel will provide the atmosphere for Colonial Carrousel, the annual Frosh Ball, from 9 p.m. to midnight Friday.

Admission to the ball has been announced as free, provided one member of the couple is an Associated Student card holder.

Couples who do not have an AS card will be charged an entrance fee of $3. This rule also applies to students from other colleges, Chris Loo, Freshman Class President, declared.

All bids will be available at the door.

Highlight of the evening will be the selection of the beau and belle of the ball, more commonly named the Cutest Couple Contest. The winning couple will be awarded a trophy.

Loo urged all interested couples to sign up as soon as possible in Bungalow 5. The only stipulation concerning the contest is that one member of the couple must be a freshman.

Music for the evening will be provided by the Maury Wolohan Band.

Dress will be semiformal or formal. Either way will be in keeping with the theme of the evening.

The Franciscan Restaurant and the Red and White Fleet, Harbour Tours, Inc., will provide a dinner for two and a tour of the bay, respectively, for the winner of the Cutest Couple Contest.

Door prizes have been donated by Captain's Gallery, Pasqual's Pizzeria, The Old Spaghetti Factory Cafe, Bruce Bary, Family Billiards, The Committee, Ondine, L&L Castle Lanes, Inc., Playland and The Country Club Billiard, Center No. 1.

Nov. Draft Test Deadline Friday

Students who wish to take the College Qualification Test in order to improve their draft status are expected to register at their local draft boards for the test which will be administered on November 18 and 19.

At the time of registration, the applicant will be given a bulletin on which there will be information dealing with the test. The local draft board will also give the applicant a card which he is to fill out and mail.

The test that is given is prepared and handled by the Educational Testing Service.

Failure to apply early for the test may result in an inconvenient time and center for the applicant. Applications for the test must be postmarked no later than October 21, 1966, for the applicant to qualify for the test.

Address is Selective Service Examination Center, Box 988, Princeton, 09540.

Additional information pertaining to the test is available through John Brady, coordinator of student welfare.

Nadas, Bussotti In Piano Concert At College Hour

The duo pianist team of Istvan Nadas and Carlo Bussotti will perform during College Hour tomorrow in the Artists Series Concert in the theater, William Grothkopp, instructor of music, announced.

Tomorrow's program, the third in the Artists Series, is sponsored by the music department in conjunction with the Associated Students.

According to Grothkopp, the duo pianists will put together a 50-minute program composed of a Bach concerto and another piece of work by Busoni.

Nadas and Bussotti, a pair of experienced pianists, are also instructors and members of the piano faculty at San Francisco State College.

Nadas, a native Hungarian, received much of his musical schooling in Budapest. Several years ago Nadas executed a series of lecture-recital type programs on KQED television where he analyzed a well-tempered clavier of J. S. Bach.

Recently, he performed with the San Francisco Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler.

The second half of the musical duo, Bussotti, received his diploma from Luigi Cherubini Conservatory in Florence, Italy.

Together, the team of Nadas and Bussotti has toured the globe.

Commenting on the Concert Series, Grothkopp said, "The series is designed for the entertainment of and learning by students, and all those interested should attend them."

Mick's Mumblings Sell 'Message Music'

By Viggo Petersen

Interpreting rock and roll lyrics is fine, but nobody seems to say much, these days, about understanding rock and roll lyrics.

Take the Rolling Stones, for example.

They are that group of five young men from England which made the popular music scene shortly after the Beatles' arrival a few years back.

LED BY A WIDE-EYED lad by the name of Mick Jagger, whose rubber-legged antics have caused quite a stir among the teenie bopper set, the Stones are currently rated second only to the Beatles in popularity and have received some credit for contributions they have allegedly made to the current "message music" syndrome.

It is unfortunate that Jagger (who writes most of the Stones' material) might have some deep, mysterious message to deliver to the world, as well he might, because, unfortunately, not too many people will ever know about it. Not because his lyrics are hard to interpret, but because they are barely audible.

For anyone who enjoys rock and roll and rythym and blues type music, the Stones are probably foremost in being able to deliver a hard, fast, intense kind of beat that is probably staggering to the imagination of even the most ardent rock and roll fan.

THEIR CURRENT HIT called Have You Seen Your Mother Baby Standing In The Shadows? is an example of the kind of solid beat they seem to be consistently able to deliver in their songs.

Again, for anyone who enjoys that kind of music, it is the kind of sound that would probably make one with an inclination toward rock and roll music dash down to his nearest "Go-Go" establishment and go frug all his troubles away.

However, being able to understand the lyrics in Have You Seen Your Mother Baby Standing In The Shadows? is quite another story.

One would seriously wonder if sound technicians from Bell Telephone laboratories could decipher one iota of anything that resembles a word in that song except the title and a line which says: ". . . tell me a story about how you adore me."

ANY ATTEMPT AT delivering a message in that song will probably be lost forever in one big mass oblivion of noise. The entire song sounds like a continuous howl.

But the Rolling Stones are not the only group guilty of incoherency. A few years back a group known as the Kingsmen had a hit record in a song called Louie Louie. This particular song was banned back east by a congressman because he claimed the record supposedly made some references to sex.

As could well be expected, the record's popularity tripled upon announcement of the ban as many rushed to hear all the "good parts."

Many who purchased the record must have been disappointed because, although the congressman's judgment may have been pretty bad, his hearing must have been excellent. The lyrics to that song sounded like the incoherent babblings of an infant child with a teething ring in its mouth.

HOPE IS NOT entirely lost for the teen-ager on deriving meaning from rock and roll records. One can, with a lot of effort and the help of the printed word, uncover some of the lyrics from the Rolling Stones' recordings such as:

". . . and I swear the perfume
you wear
Is made out of turnip greens
And every time I kiss you girl
It tastes like pork and beans."

Or:

"You were still in school when you had that fool who really messed your mind
And after that you turned your back on treating people kind
On our first trip I tried so hard to rearrange your mind.
But after while I realized you were disarranging mine
You better stop . . . and look around
Here it comes, here it comes, here
it comes, here it comes,
Here comes your 19th nervous breakdown."

Although lyrics such as these may not be taken seriously, they are to some people, as Ralph Gleason recently noted in The Chroniele, "oddly perceptive."

$140,000 Computer Grant Still Indefinite As Deadline Nears

By Richard Kliski

Barring any further delay, the IBM 1401 computer system, scheduled for use during spring semester registration, will make its long-awaited appearance at City College sometime within the next two weeks, Harry P. Buttimer, dean of instruction, announced recently.

However, he added, although the computers are close to becoming a reality, the $140 thousand Federal grant, which was to finance their rental, housing, maintainance and operation, is not yet in sight.

The process involved in securing this grant was begun in early January. The original petition for this grant was submitted, in the form of a 40-page resolution to the San Francisco Board of Education.

Three months, and many committees later, it reached the California MDTA (Manpower Development Training Act of 1962) agency office in Sacramento. Shortly before Easter vacation, the petition was approved.

Unfortunately, at this time, the state of California had already used its allocation for this fiscal year. Hence, a request to the national agency was made.

UPON RECEIPT OF the needed funds, a contract was to be made between the college and the State Department of Employment, which would provide for 30 to 40 hours a week retraining courses at the college in computer programming and data processing.

However, according to Buttimer, the "needed funds" have not, as yet, appeared.

As an alternate course of action, the college turned to the Vocational Education Act for financial assistance. In addition to furnishing 50 per cent of the support needed to keep the computers in operation, this act will allow the college to open computer-oriented courses to the student body, as well as providing a source of part-time employment for those in need of personal financial help.

This second petition for assistance, however, has not yet been approved, and to add to this dilemma, the computers are on their way.

EVEN IF THE VEA doesn't come through, Buttimer stated, there is penty of work here for the computer, and the state board is ready to pay the whole hundred per cent.

The IBM 1401 system, he added, will probably be operational before the first of the year, although there is no activity planned for it until spring registration—when the program will move ahead, "full blast."

Aside from the present lack of funds, the only other immediate problem, anticipated by Buttimer, is that the computers might arrive before their accommodations are ready, since S-193 and -194 are still in the hands of the interior decorator.

Sorority Council To Hold Preference Hour

The Inter-Sorority Council will hold a coffee preference hour from 3 to 4:30 p.m. Sunday at the homes of the sorority members, Dean Mary Golding announced today.

During the coffee preference hour the rushees are given an opportunity to join one of the sororities, Phi Beta Rho or Theta Tau, Dean Golding said.

On the following Tuesday, October 25, all rushees are to sign up in S-150 for the sorority of their choice.

Any rushee who has attended two ISC rushing functions and is a full-time student with a C or above average will receive invitations, Dean Golding stated.

Accreditation Team Winds Up Three-Day Study

By Thomas L. Young

The Accreditation Committee for Junior Colleges in the Western Association of Schools and Colleges (WASC) today ends its three-day visit to City College.

The committee was welcomed by City College at a luncheon Monday held in the Statler wing, and was then given the "run of the campus" to interview all personnel from administration to student for information to aid in their evaluation of the college's curriculum.

The committee's purpose is to spend three days at each two-year college discussing programs with the administration, staff and students and then combining their individual reports.

This final account contains the accreditation team's combined findings of the college's various facilities and programs offered, evaluates them as to their quality and beneficial services to the student, community and state and grants accreditation.

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF the WASC accreditation to the student is that it aids him in the acceptance of transfer to out-of-state colleges and universities and recognition by the federal government to insure scholarships.

The Western Association aims, through the evaluation process, to encourage a diversified scope in a college's educational program.

"It also insures that a student is guaranteed a high standard of instruction and education.

Committee members attending the three-day session are:

Chairman, F. Parker Wilbur, president, Los Angeles Trade-Technical College; assistant to chairman, Franklyn Johnson, dean of instruction, Los Angeles Trade-Technical College, Oscar H. Edinger, Jr., president, Mt. San Antonio College, Floyd L. Younger, assistant superintendent - instruction, Cabrillo College; Royal Stanton, chairman, Fine Arts, Foothill; Lewis B. Mayhew, professor of education, Stanford University, and Foster Davidoff, president Compton College, consultant, Bureau of Junior College General Education.

The committee will not submit a report to City College on its findings at the end of its visit but may offer a suggestion or two as to improvement that can be made by the college in any one or more areas.

A FINAL REPORT will not be received by City College until the accreditation committee submits its findings to the WASC for full study, view and evaluation.

According to Lloyd D. Luekmann, coordinator of instruction here, the full, evaluated report will be received by City College January 15 and at this time the college will find out its accreditation standing.

City College has been given the full five years of accreditation each time it has been evaluated.

Unconventional? Don't Knock It If You Haven't Tried It

THERE IS A group of people living around the intersection of Haight and Ashbury streets in San Francisco that is markedly different from the other people who live in the rest of the city.

For one thing, these people around Haight street don't look like the rest of the citizenry, and the reason that they don't look like the others is because they don't think like the others, most of the time.

NOW THE NON-HAIGHT PEOPLE call them beatniks and earth mothers (and fathers) and other names too, and the earth people return the name calling, sometimes more so.

And of course there are some people in the ranks of the earth people who are there for selfish reasons, such as to take advantage of earth mothers who may have unconventional ideas about social togetherness, just as a for instance.

So it turns out that many people knock the earth group. The law watches them with a suspicious eye, the white-collar worker generalizes the entire earth population as uncouth, and runner-up in the Best-Dressed Coed contest snicker at the earth mothers, who in turn raucously laugh at the best-dressed coeds, sometimes.

WHAT THE GOOD FOLK of the land are doing is knocking something that they haven't tried; to wit, they are scoffing at a life in which a person can do whatever he feels like doing regardless of what someone else might think.

For instance, if a person went into the Sunset district and stood on a corner and watched the people go by, or if he got some friends together and they all sat on a curb and talked, quietly, it is highly probable that he and his friends would be arrested.

The only place in the city where a guy can sit on a curb is around Haight street, barring all curfew regulations. All this is assuming, of course, that a person wants to sit on a curb; he may want to do something else, like wear a lavender jacket, or a beard, or perhaps a pair of sandals.

Of course if a person never really wanted to do anything that might be considered different he may just as well stay at home, regardless of where it's at.

The Pill: A Behavior Catalyst

By Connie Skipitares

A Cambridge, Massachusetts, mother was arrested and convicted on charges of contributing to the delinquency of a minor because she gave her 16-year-old daughter a contraceptive.

The daughter had previously given birth to two illegitimate babies and showed no signs of altering her sexual deportment, so assuming the expected role of a concerned mother, the subsequently convicted woman took the unexpected course of action simply for the protection of the girl (and in the long run, for the protection of society).

How can we label this arrest? Is it a display of justice or of treason?

POPULATION EXPERTS have recently reported that since the birth control pill became available in 1960, it has been a major means of regulating fertility among the enthusiastic young American wife; but what about the extremely controversial question of whether contraceptives should be made available to the unmarried?

Government and Public Health officials contend that the availability of contraceptives to the unmarried would only encourage and stimulate promiscuity.

Yet, the withholding of contraceptives from the unmarried simply serves to increase the growing rate of illegitimate births which are the result of those unmarried people who are going to have sexual relations in any case and regardless of whether the U.S. Public Health Service denies them the pills.

IF AN ADULT has already made the decision to enter upon an illicit relationship, social harms cannot be increased by permitting contraceptive counseling.

Ever since a resolution was passed recognizing family planning as a legitimate form of social welfare, it has been the policy of many agencies to withhold contraceptives from all teenagers who do not have parental permission to obtain them.

But then, since it is not customary for young people to ask their parents for permission to engage in pre-marital intercourse, they are hardly likely to ask for permission to obtain contraceptives.

POSING A POSSIBLE dilemma for the Public Health Service, however, is the fact that the U.S. Armed Forces have made contraceptives available to millions of teenage service men.

Then there was a professor at Harvard who provoked a national furor by suggesting that girls above the age of puberty be equipped with contraceptives—which could afford an infinitely more effective protection against rape or seduction than the laws on statutory rape.

Although substantial numbers of Catholic women are using oral contraception despite the fact that the debate with the Roman Catholic Church on the moral question posed is not yet resolved, it is interesting to note the philosophy of a moral theologian, Dr. Joseph Fletcher:

"Someday an enlightened society may come to regard the withholding of contraceptive protection to any teenager as contributing to the pregnancy of a minor!"

Deep is the fountain of worship in human nature.

Year's Most Expensive Film

Hawaii Premieres At Coronet Tonight

By Steven Hara

Hawaii, which opens at the Coronet Theater tonight, is the most highly-touted and most expensive motion picture of the year.

Based on a single section of James Michener's best seller of the same name, Hawaii is concerned mainly with one man's effort to Christianize the islands in the period 1829-1857.

The movie tells the story of the arrival, the rise and the fall of an American fundamentalist minister named Abner Hale.

Feeling devinely chosen to serve on the then Sandwich Islands because of a picturesque speech given by an Hawaiian prince, Keoki, the devout and shy reverend spends the next six months with his bride traveling by ship to the heavenly, but heathen paradise.

Until the arrival of the Hales on the islands, the movie is sluggish and dull. But the odds facing Hale become evident, and the action of the story begins.

THE ISLANDERS HAVE a completely different type of culture that to a white minister is repugnant. Hale applies his Western culture and immediately runs into conflict with both the natives and the sailors who enjoy the wild ways of the islands.

For the rest of the film, Hale is a minister of the islanders' bodies, not their souls. He comes to learn why he is inefficient in the end, but the movie dwells upon his first ten years when his attempts at conversion are the most profound.

Max Von Sydow, who plays Abner Hale, presents an admirable image as the minister torn between the love for God and his love for his fellow man.

Von Sydow is properly aloof on the islands as he is white and a symbol of divinity. He plays his part so well that one has trouble feeling sorry for him for his role is largely a tragic one.

JULIE ANDREWS, who receives top billing, plays a secondary role as Jerusha Hale, a victim of her parents' conspiracy to have her married off to "someone proper." Torn between her love for another man and her marriage to Hale, she cannot love the islanders as she desires but still respects her husband.

All in all, Jerusha is a pathetic character in that she never escapes her conflicts or satisfactorily resolves them. This is a major fault of the movie.

Richard Harris plays a raucous whaler named Rafer Hoxworth who was Jerusha's lover in the States. He doesn't know at first that Hale has married his girl and is properly-chagrined at lessening her fate.

The cinematography is beautiful, as one would expect, for the Hawaiian Islands never photograph badly. The movie is worth seeing if only for a glimpse at the untouched and beautifully colorful backdrop to the story.

Breakthrough In Weather Study Affects Life

By Herb Dirion

Weather research has experienced a breakthrough in the past few years, and scientists around the world are rushing to develop what the National Academy of Science calls "this new and enormous power to influence the conditions of human life."

In the United States, the Environmental Science Services Administration and the Navy are now trying to find out if wind strength of hurricanes can be reduced by seeding their centers with silver-iodide crystals.

Russian anti-aircraft cannons regularly bark over the mountains of Georgia, and the hail-blasted steppes of Siberia, pumping silver iodide into the sky at intervals of 10 to 15 minutes until storms subside.

But before man makes significantly greater strides in influencing the weather, he must learn to predict it more accurately. Once man knows precisely what the weather is going to do and where, he can not only prepare for it but bring to bear his modern tools to try to dissipate its force, change its course or moderate its impact.

Now the question is not just how he can exert his influence but how far he should go in pressing changes whose consequences are still hidden.

Scientists are already using computers to set up atmospheric models on which the effects of man-made weather changes can be calculated in advance, but it will take another generation or two of more sophisticated computers for them to be certain whether the changes will help or hurt mankind.

Dr. Walter Orr Roberts, director of the National Center for Atmospheric Research, believes, in approaching weather control "a great deal of wisdom will be required."

SO MANY OPTIMISTIC students, in love with the American dream on prestige and wealth, choose pre-med as a major.

With this optimism and determination, they work hard; sometimes not at their studies, but in trying to convince themselves and others that this is it—they are willing to sacrifice everything in this one big guest—to eventually become a physician.

This type of optimism and drive is great, for out of many pre-med dreamers come the nation's best research scientists, teachers and workers in related fields.

BUT DOCTORS ARE not made of average students.

Many above-average students, once in the field of science, realize that medicine is not their "meat," so they change majors. Others cannot hope to become doctors because of their poor grades.

"I learned this too late. My mother is a doctor and surgeon, and I thought I could be one too, but I didn't want it badly enough, I guess. I spent most of my time in City College (1962-64) enjoying the social side of life," said Fay Yee, former student here.

"I barely made it out of City College. I was an average student. When I reached S.F. State College, I suddenly realized that I had wasted a lot of time. I had a C-plus average, and I needed A's and B's. So I started to study, and really learned a lot.

"I became interested in biology, and then became very interested in microscopic organisms, especially in the field of immunization. I put in more time with studies, and got a part-time job in the lab there," said Miss Yee. "Jobs are plentiful in science labs," she added.

HER YEN FOR microscopic bugs led her to earn a B.A. degree in microbiology in June, 1966, and she is now employed as a full-time supervisor in the microbiology laboratory at the college.

Miss Yee said that the "toughest course" here was a course in quantitative analysis. "When I look back, it wasn't so bad, compared to some of the stuff I'm taking to earn a Master's," she added.

She is a modest Oriental who is sincere when she says, "I'm an average student. At 23, I just happen to appreciate education, that's all. Gee, there is so much to learn. I really appreciate people who really know something. now. A few years ago, I didn't really care."

Publicity Committee Helps Communications

By Richard Kliski

Getting publicity for student activities at City College of San Francisco has never really seemed like an involved process, according to Andrew Archibald, chairman of the newly-reorganized campus publicity committee—that is, unless one has taken the time to think about it.

Prior to this semester, announcements of student activities were passed from the point of origination to the Associated Student office, where they were reviewed by anonymous personnel, signed, and then distributed haphazardly to the various campus publicity outlets for student consumption.

IN VIEW OF THE combined efforts of James Wyatt, dean of Student Activities, and Bruce Fisher, Associated Student president, all announcements will now pass directly from their respective points of origination to the publicity committee—where they will be reviewed, then passed on by the committee to the outlets stipulated.

In other words, the individual fingers of the campus publicity organ, which were previously diverse entities, have now been united into a single, omnipotent thumb, the sole job of which will be to press the proper buttons.

As outlined by Wyatt, one of the committee's organizers, the reason for this change in operating procedure is two-fold:

First, the committee will provide for a more effective organization through which the student body can be made aware of scheduled campus activities; and secondly, it will establish a unified group whose purpose it will be to foster and promote these activities.

OUTLETS WHICH ARE currently in operation and may be utilized for campus publicity include radio station KCSF, This Week, and the redwood bulletin board near the south exit of Cloud Hall.

In addition to these, several portable blackboards have been placed around the campus for this same purpose. One of these may be found in front of the first-floor entrance to Arts Hall; another is stationed near the Library entrance; and still another is located outside Cloud Hall, near the entrance to the instructors' offices. Also a slot-board is to be found in the lobby of Science Hall.

ANY STUDENT OR organization wishing to publicize the announcement of a campus activity is expected to submit a typewritten request, signed by the appropriate adviser, to the Student Activities office in B-5 before deadlines.

"DEADLINES ARE IMPORTANT," Archibald emphasized. Announcements which are intended for the bulletin-boards should be submitted by Friday noon of the week before they are to appear.

KCSF requires a 24-hour advance notice, and the deadline for This Week is noon Thursday.

The editorial board of The Guardsman asks that all announcements be in its office one week prior to the paper's publication date, and should reporter-coverage of an event be desired, two weeks advance notice is mandatory.

Hilliard-Hughes At S.F. Festival

Albert Hilliard-Hughes, former City College student and Guardsman columnist, has been selected by Henry Hart, editor of Films In Review, to represent the magazine at the 10th annual San Francisco film festival, October 20 through 30.

While at City College, Spring '64 to Spring '66, Hilliard-Hughes wrote the weekly program notes for the college film series.

Prior to his return to college, Hilliard-Hughes spent more than 20 years in exhibition and distribution of films in Dallas, Texas.

Hilliard-Hughes is a regular contributor to Films In Review, and he will have a short piece on Jack London to be published in the November issue. His extensive study of all known films on the works of Dostoyevsky will be published at a later date.

An acknowledged motion-picture historian, Hilliard-Hughes has sold several articles this year related to motion pictures. Among his material scheduled for future publication is Outlaw With A Halo, a study of the films on the legends of Jesse James.

The Observer

By William G. Petes

CALIFORNIA is a very strange state containing some rather strange people with some very strange political philosophies who have culminated their efforts in producing a typically strange California election campaign in a very strange election year.

Only in California can one realistically state that 60 per cent of the population and 100 per cent of the nuts live below the Kern County line in an entirely different world from the rest of the state.

There people are looking for Communists under every bed and conservative publications such as American Opinion report that the United States is 60 to 80 per cent under Communist control.

THIS IS THE NEW California—politically speaking—with the far out native-born liberals to the north and the emigrated midwestern-far-out conservatives in the southland.

Conceivably a candidate running for statewide office could carry 50 of the 58 counties and still lose. Los Angeles county of course is pivotal. Whoever carries it by a large margin will usually be the winner.

Voter registration is currently overwhelmingly Democratic, but there are more eligible voters unregistered—2,100,000—enough to constitute the entire population of the state of Kansas, and most of them would probably vote Democratic.

However, the state's political past has been primarily that of a Republican one-party state which was, as well, under the thumb of the Southern Pacific railroad machine for half a century until progressives under the leadership of Hiram Johnson, soon to be governor and later a United States Senator, broke it in the "revolution of 1910."

AS A RESULT OF the one-party domination, there have been only seven Democratic governors since the end of the Civil War and only two in the twentieth century — Culbert L. Olson, a throwback to the early days of the New Deal, elected in 1938 and Edmund G. "Pat" Brown, elected in 1958. And none of them except for the present governor was ever re-elected.

In the state legislature, the one-party trend paralleled the GOP hold on the governorship. After a long period in which the balance of power swayed between the parties, the Republicans gained control of the Assembly in 1933 and held it, except for the 1937 and 1939 sessions, until 1959. They held the majority in every Senate session from 1889 until they tied in 1957 and finally became the minority party in 1959.

ONLY IN CALIFORNIA can a district be 74 per cent Democratic and be considered "safe" for the Republicans. A district must be better than 63 per cent Democratic to be "safe" for the Democrats.

So the current anguish and lusting for power cries by the Republican leadership is somewhat comical. Why, they've only been out of the statehouse for eight years and the Democratic majorities in the legislature have been less than a comfort to the governor.

As previously pointed out, it is quite possible that the Republicans are voting for Reagan, despite his lack of experience and qualifications, because they want one of their own back in there so much they can taste it.

ONE OBSTACLE, HOWEVER, stands in their way. There are only two routes to the governor's chair. Through the lieutenant governorship after long service in the state legislature or as state attorney general after serving as a district attorney from a large metropolitan area.

Only one governor in this century has gained office without having held one of these offices and that was San Francisco's "Sonny Jim" Rolph who was mayor for 19 years.

Hiram Johnson and his followers brought this state into the twentieth century in the social and governmental sense. The present Republican leadership representing the new California seems to want to carry it back.

"Bring me men to match my mountains" is a plea for men of foresight, ingenuity and perserverance who are needed to meet the challenges of the state and its people. We have no such man in Sacramento at this time and neither do the Republicans.

But history will no doubt record that on November 8, 1966, the state of California elected to the office of governor an obscure movie actor and perished soon after, never to be heard of again.

Council Cancels Cravats, Asks Neat Dress At Dances

By Bill Fritz

With one quick ballot, Student Council last week dealt a death blow to an unpopular campus tradition.

By a vote of 8-2-1, council approved a resolution presented by newly elected Soph Councilman Paul Shuttleworth. The resolution laid to rest the requirement that all men wear ties to college dances and provided that all neatly dressed young men in school clothes be admitted" to these dances.

This action is sure to win popular approval but may pose problems when a campus dance with a more formal theme is desired.

COUNCIL APPROVED, also on Wednesday of last week, another Shuttleworth motion recommending that all incoming veterans be given first-day registration.

In argument for his motion, Shuttleworth pointed out that vets, due to late registration times, are sometimes unable to obtain the needed units required under the GI Bill.

A second resolution, which would allow council to decide on the amount of money to be paid to each individual speaker in the Student-Faculty Concert and Lecture Series, failed by a vote of 3-8-0.

ARGUING AGAINST the proposed resolution, Fred Reisinger, Council Of Organizations chairman, stated that political prejudices on the part of individual councilmen could have some direct bearing on the appraisal of each speaker's worth. And former councilman Fred Stewart questioned council's right to set policy for a budgeted organization just because council controlled the purse strings.

A reocmmendation by Frosh Councilman Ron Lent which would allow club presidents first-day registration, was sent into committee when is was learned that a one-day computerized registration is planned for the Spring semester.

Concerning financial matters of the Associated Students, council, on Monday of last week allocated $25 to KCSF Broadcasters for an application fee for membership in the National Association of Broadcasters.

ADDITIONAL ALLOCATION requests by KCSF for $70 to cover labor costs for renovation of broadcasting equipment and for $98.75, with which to purchase new records, failed to win approval. The matter of paying off debts incurred by KCSF, over and above its allocated budget, and the request for more records were, once again, placed back into committee for further study.

Election Commissioner Don Chiang reported that, with the election of Soph Councilmen Jim Ahern and Shuttleworth, voting membership on council has risen to 13. Another special election will be held to fill two vacant seats on Frosh Council.

Super At Opera

Melvin Beechman, actor and Guardsman reporter, and John Hunsaker, drama student, here appeared as supernumeraries in the Verdi opera Rigoletto, which was presented last Thursday night at War Memorial Opera House.

This year, Al Taylor, director of supernumeraries, for the San Francisco Opera Association, is using City College students for operatic productions. Walter Krumm, of the drama department, received a telephone request from Taylor and dispatched the number of students asked for.

What is a supernumerary? That is a long handle for a short walk-on role. Nevertheless, it is an excellent opportunity for student actors to be a part of an elaborate production and to observe the complexity of producing an opera.

The life of a super begins at 7 p.m., an hour before the curtain rises, when the supers report to the dressing room and don their black skin tights.

Next they put on frilly jackets with something resembling a miniskirt attached to it.

After the wardrobe-man hooks up the top, the next stop is the make-up room, where make-up artists apply pancake and eye shadow.

They then put on a renaissance type hat which fits on the left side of the head, pick up a metal piteher from the prop room and, voila, a well-dressed servant is ready to serve a beverage.

The supers have the option, either to stay in the massive basement of the opera house and play cards, or stand in the wings onstage and watch the opera.

Beechman, a veteran of musical comedy, was asked to compare the difference between the two media.

He remarked that the opera employs five assistant directors on stage, all trying to keep track of rapid changes which are being made by the staging director.

Furthermore, with all the chaos going on, it is amazing that the productions can come off successfully, Beechman added.

After the performance, they go back to the dressing room, take off their makeup and go home to wait for the next performance.

The supers are two dollars richer for their night's work, which incidentally gives them professional status.

SF Attorney Describes Local Negro Poverty And Despair

By Sally Dorety

Complete despair still continues to engulf the Negro communities in San Francisco, Attorney Don Warden declared in an address before the Negro Student Association here last Thursday.

As National Chairman of the Afro-American Association, Warden is actively involved in local community problems.

Citing the recent Hunter's Point disturbances as a glaring example, he strongly critized the current community action programs for being "too slow," not being effective in aiming at the "true problems," and for "promising too much without delivering."

Warden, who feels that the present solution must be concerned with providing jobs to improverished Negroes, emphasized, "What we need now is our own business, our own factories through which we can supply jobs."

The Afro-American Association has done so. Three corporations have been chartered under the name Dignity.

Dignity Clothes manufactures men and women's clothing. Dignity appears on the label of a recording company, and Dignity Homes, in addition to building homes at a retail cost of $5800 for farm workers, plans to develop tract homes in the Ilunter's Point area.

All of these industries will enable the Afro-American Association to offer a total of 300 jobs to Negroes within the next year.

Forensics Team In Four Debates

Members of the Forensics Society will participate in four intercollegiate debates this semester, the first this weekend at Stanford University.

The topic, which is chosen by the National Intercollegiate Debate Society and used throughout this college year, states, "Resolved: That the United States should substantially reduce its Foreign Policy Commitments."

Jo Kennedy, newly appointed debate instructor here commented, "The coaches don't know where to begin with this topic. It's the broadest subject ever approved for intercollegiate debate."

City College has been without a full-time debate team since Fall 1957. However, this semester found seven students eager to undertake the responsibilities of an organized club.

Second Reservoir Might Provide Parking

By Doug Boston

The problem of where to park at City College may be coming to an end shortly with the possibility of the second half of the reservoir across Phelan avenue being opened for parking use next semester.

This new area would provide room for an additional 700 cars. Campus Police, seeking the added space, reported today.

Legal parking continues to be a problem to City College students, and the Campus Police are informing the offenders by handling out parking tickets. The failure to follow the parking regulations is not necessary, police say.

Every day of classes, students manage to park their cars in various unauthorized areas, or simply do not have the necessary parking permit. An average of ten tickets each day is issued by the Campus Police to these offenders. All areas that are not open to students are clearly marked, in order to keep down the number of tickets given.

Parking places for students are marked as such. The main area for student parking is the reservoir, located across Phelan avenue. With the hope of the other half of the reservoir being opened, the parking problem would be improved greatly. The reservoir now in use contains parking stalls for about 1000 automobiles.

Behind Arts Hall, and between it and Judson avenue, is another parking lot for students. There is also another parking area along the men's gymnasium. All spaces which are limited to the administration and the faculty are labeled accordingly. The tickets that are given out are quite real.

Although tickets are issued by the Campus Police, they are the same as any citation issued by the San Francisco Police Department.

"SMILE, AND THE WORLD . . ." seems to be patrolman Ken Dyer's philosophy even if it appears that his "client" may disagree. This is just one example of what will be happening this semester with more frequency because of the additional cars on campus. According to Kevin Kelly, chief of the Campus Police, there will be ten tickets issued daily on campus for parking violations alone. There are 29 uniformed officers to meet the demands of 9000 day students on campus this semester.

Scheer Lectures On Involvement In Southeast Asia

By Giuseppe Greco

A speech describing how the United States became involved in Vietnam and how it might become disinvolved was given by Robert Scheer, foreign editor of Ramparts magazine, in the college theater last week before a capacity audience.

"When turmoil in the '30s took place in Vietnam," Sheer explained, "very few in America thought it important. In the '40s, when the Japanese moved into Indochina, nobody thought it worth saving. Nor was there much concern in 1945 when in Vietnam a clash of power took place between Ho Chi Minh and the French.

"The change of attitude," Scheer said, "began to appear in 1948 when the theory of communism took shape there, and the cold war began."

AMERICA BEGAN to look at Indochina as if it saw the danger of communism penetrating that country.

Scheer spoke of the French role in Vietnam, saying that the French, after WW II, made an effort to restore colonial rule.

"In that operation the U.S. paid 80 per cent of the bills in a war that cost the Vietnamese people over one million lives," he said.

But in 1954 the French revised its foreign policy and got out of Vietnam.

SCHEER POINTED OUT that he believes President Kennedy's policy was clear and sound, saying, "By sending to Vietnam 30,000 advisers, the U.S. was conscious of colonial hang over. Kennedy attacked the French and their previous policy as wrong.

"Moreover, he (Kennedy) held that the U.S. was willing to provide technical aid only for a limited period of time," and its aid "to prevent a colonial posture."

Scheer believes that with the fall of the Diem regime and with the death of President Kennedy, the American policy failed to work. "Indeed, from a political point of view it was a complete disaster," he said.

IN A SUMMARY conclusion, Scheer said that if there is an international communist movement, it should cease to exist, that there are hardly two communist countries that coexist, that communism is in truth a form of nationism and that practically speaking, "it does not exist."

As for what should be done about the U.S. and Vietnam, Scheer said, "American foreign policy should change, as well as the American economy, in regard to Vietnam. The cold war has become an institution, and almost no one belives in it anymore, while anticommunism has become some kind of a national religion."

Coeds Take Honors For Table Setting In Lenox Contest

Five City College coeds won fourth and fifth place prizes in the 1966 China-Crystal Annual Creative Table Setting Contest, sponsored by Lenox, which was held last spring.

Sue Bird, Sue Schwarzer and Janine Stepanicich were fourth place winners, receiving two place settings of Lenox China.

In fifth place were Marilyn Dong and Sherrie Levie.

Miss Dong won first prize in last year's contest with her Dinner For Two setting. She is the only City College student in the history of the contest to win such an award.

"Simplicity was the keynote of Marilyn's theme," according to Frances Lloyd, the home economics instructor who encouraged Miss Dong to submit an entry.

Mrs. Lloyd also noted that Miss Dong was the only entrant in the history of the contest to win twice — once as the First Prize Winner and now as one of 150 third place winners.

"Home economics students in high school, two-year colleges and universities all over the nation are eligible to submit entries," Mrs. Lloyd stated.

Of the 375,000 entrants, 178 were awarded prizes in this year's contest. City College entrants took nine prizes, including four honorable mention winners: Claire Crizer, Rosemary Casdin, Kathleen Fairlamb and Mary Pye.

Booters Smother Vikings, 9-1, Tie Stanford

By John Le Tourneau

The City College soccermen remained undefeated as they smothered Diablo Valley, 9-1, October 5. The following Saturday, October 8, the Ram booters tied a rugged Stanford team, 2-2.

Against Diablo Valley, the Rams put everything together as they had a strong defense and excellent offense. Coach Roy Diederichsen said, "Any time you score nine times and only give up one goal you are playing an exceptional game."

Leading the way against the Vikings was little halfback Tommy Sammuelson who scored three times on well-executed shots. The six other goals were equally distributed among the Ram front line.

SAMMUELSON'S THREE GOALS were all the team needed, as it was defense that told the story. Goalie Nelson Ortega played an excellent defensive game. Also sharing defensive honors were Roger Sarria, Pete Rossi and fullback Connie Shiskin.

The win over the Vikings put the Rams 2-0 in league play.

In the Stanford contest the Rams led throughout the whole contest on two goals by Bob Rojas early in the game. In this game it was some sticky defense by both squads and numerous penalties by the Rams.

Throughout the contest the team had good shots at the Indians' goal but had them nullified by off-side penalties. Diederichsen pointed out, "We were too inconsistent with our attack so that we were somewhat baffled by the way we played our offense."

Diederichsen experimented with his defense, and that is where the two Stanford goals came from. "Our defense was excellent against Stanford, and since it was a practice game, I thought I'd experiment some new defenses," Diederichsen added.

AGAIN LEADING THE defense was goalie Ortega, Shiskin, Sammuelson, Sarria and Rossi.

In the last four games the Ram defense has given up only four goals, as compared with the four they gave up to Merritt in the first game. "If we keep up this defensive work we should be very tough to stop since a good defense is the key to a good team in any sport," Diederichsen commented.

Chabot Tests Champs Friday

League's Two Undefeateds Will Use Running Attacks

By Mike Duggan

The powerful Ram football team will face the fine running attack of the Chabot Gladiators starting at 8 p.m. Friday at Chabot.

Chabot Coach Ed Hart welcomed back 12 lettermen, eight of whom were regulars from last year's squad. The Gladiators' 46-man roster also includes a letterman from 1962.

Returning linemen include guard Mike Aro (6-1, 205), center Rich Sheridan (6-2, 235), and tight end Ron Sousa (6-2, 200).

PICKED BEHIND Diablo Valley and Foothill as the likely teams to dethrone the Rams as champs, the Glads seem to be the largest stepping stone remaining for the Rams. The Rams have already faced Diablo Valley and Foothill in their first two league contests.

After their first three games of the season, the Gladiators are unbeaten. Chabot knocked off Yuba in their opener and then came back to defeat Sacramento City College. In the league opener on October 8, they narrowly beat Merritt, 13-7.

Ram Coach Dutch Elston pointed out that Chabot has a fine running attack. The Gladiators proved this against Merritt by rushing for 245 yards. The Gladiator aerial attack, however, netted only 29 yards in that particular game.

Quarterback Paul Berry gives the Rams a double threat to try and contain. He rushed for 94 yards on only nine carries against Merritt.

THE REMAINING BULK of the rushing duties goes to running back Rich Lockwood, who picked up 75 yards on 13 carries in their league opener.

This game could be an ideal one for the Ram defense. Somewhat weak against the pass, the Ram front wall yielded close to nothing on the ground in each of its first three contests this season.

With such men as Ralph Hodge, Jerd Lapham, Mike Streich and Allan Cowlings up front, the Gladiators may be quick to change their style of running with the ball so much.

Linebackers John Morello and Greg Pedrin have continually been on the spot if a ball carrier has been fortunate enough to get by the front line.

IF RAM DEFENSIVE backs George Rush, Calvin Booth and Mike Carter can do their job of stopping the passing game, the Gladiators will be in for a long night.

Also in the defensive backfield are Craig Johnson and a fellow named Simpson. Johnson looked great against Diablo Valley as he picked off two enemy passes and ran one back almost 50 yards. Simpson also intercepted one against Diablo Valley, but he is still better known for his ability as an offensive threat.

Last year, City College beat Chabot, 41-6, as O. J. Simpson scored three touchdowns, and since he's back, a repeat performance seems very likely.

Offense And Defense Work In 47-13 Win Over Foothill

By Bob Ferrando

LOS ALTOS HILLS—The sturdy offense and defense units of the City College of San Francisco pushed and pounded their way to a 47-13 rout of Foothill College before 4500 fans at Owl Stadium last Saturday night.

The Rams were paced by brilliant quarterback Pete Mullins. He completed 9 of 14 passes for 230 yards and four touchdowns.

Dutch Elston's Rams were contained during the first half as the Owls continually stopped Ram drives.

O. J. Simpson, the Rams' all-around halfback, was contained slightly during the first half as the Owls stopped the J. C. All-American halfback. Because the Owls were concentrating on stopping Simpson, this left both Milt Frank and Glenn Baker free to find running room.

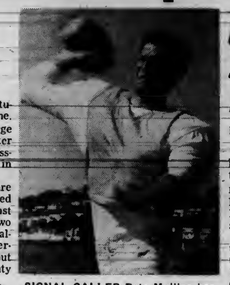
THE RAMS took the opening kickoff and drove 56 yards in seven plays with Mullins hitting Dwight Tucker with an 8-yard scoring pass, the PAT kick failed, giving the Rams a 6-0 lead.

Both teams played good defensive ball throughout the first half. Only Foothill's passing game caused the Rams trouble. Coach Bill Abbey's Owls mixed signal-callers throughout the contest, as Jim Miller, their first club quarterback, was injured in the second period and had to leave the game.

The Owls went ahead in the game with 3:42 left in the half, when Ray Tollner hit John Callahan with a 23-yard TD pass. Mike Ivers added the PAT kick to put the Rams behind for the first time in the season, at 7-6.

The Rams, not to be outdone, drove 66 yards in four plays with Simpson taking a Mullins pass good for 44 yards and the score. Mullins threw to Tucker for the two-point conversion.

SAN FRANCISCO'S defensive line of Mike Streich, Jerd Lapham, Ralph Hodge and Allan Cowlings continually threw the Owls for big losses. The Rams had a hard time containing the Foothill passing, as Tollner and Tom McConnell hit their receivers with great accuracy.



Both teams throughout the game displayed crisp tackling, as many hard players were shaken up. Penalties were again present in the Rams' side of the ledger, this problem has been the biggest thorn in the Rams play.

With Simpson and Frank leading the way, the Rams went 55 yards in eight plays, Simpson's 21-yard run set up the score. Frank went over from four yards out, the extra point kick failed.

The Rams, showing why they were rated sixth in the J.C. ratings, going 86 yards in one play with Mike Carter taking a Mullins pass and streaking all the way for the score. Mullins hit Tucker with a two-point conversion pass.

THE RAMS SCORED three more times. The scores came on a Mullins-to-Carter pass, good for 14 yards and a TD. Baker's 37-yard bolt up the middle of the field set up the next Ram score, with Baker going over from one yard out. The final Ram score was a 39-yard Simpson run down the sideline, running the score to 47-7.

The Owls, showing that never-say-die attitude, went 66 yards in six plays with Ray Tollner hitting John Callahan, the former Cubberly High School ace, for a 35-yard TD toss, with the final score 47-13 in favor of the Rams.

SIGNAL CALLER Pete Mullins has launched eight touchdown passes this year and hit for 68 per cent against Diablo.

Undefeated Grid Squad Ranks Sixth In The Nation

By G. Frank Cooney

City College's defending championship football team received the highest early season national rating ever bestowed upon a Ram team when Grid Wire, out of Pasadena, placed the powerful team sixth on last week's national charts.

This marks the first time since 1948 that a City College team made the top ten before the season's end. In 1948 Ollie Matson ran wild for City College and talk was spreading of San Francisco's chances of getting into the Junior Rose Bowl.

When it got down to the choosing, Matson, Burl Toler and company wound up playing second fiddle to Compton, led by some aspiring youth named Hugh McElhenny.

The Rams' sixth national rating this time is due in no small part to another sensational halfback, namely Orenthal James Simpson, known to a great number of college scouts as O. J.

Surprising though it may be, Simpson outdistanced Matson's scoring and rushing records in the middle of last year. And he is still going.

It so happens that Simpson is again flanked by another superior left halfback this year who may only be known in future time as "the other back."

Golden Gate Conference Back-of-the-Year 1965, Ron Fassler, was the first to be destined to be remembered as "the other back" when he flanked Simpson during the latter's record-breaking freshman year.

And again this year a rugged Milton Frank, team leader in average yards per carry, is going to fall into that category.

Incidentally, the Rams perhaps feel, the pressure of this year being probably the last year for the precious Junior Rose Bowl.

The California Coach's Association recently reintroduced a bill which, if passed by College Presidents when they meet in Los Angeles on October 25-27, will reorganize this State's two-year college football setup.

Instead of the minor bowls, such as the Potato, Prune, Lettuce and the Empire, there would be small and large college playoffs—one in Northern and one in Southern California—followed by a state championship game between the winners of each playoff.

Wise Returns To Ram Cagers After Semester At USF

Willie Wise, one reason why the Ram cagers were so successful last season (30-3), has transferred back to this college after spending a semester at University of San Francisco under the extension program there.

Wise is expected to add more scoring punch to the team with his great ability as an outside shooter.

Last season, as a rookie, Wise racked up 225 points, second only to Charlie Parks who ranked sixth in Golden Gate Conference scoring with 234 points and barely edged Willie for team honors.

Wise, who stands 6 fect 5 inches, played forward, center and guard for the Rams, though he was mostly placed in the latter position.

Now that Wise has returned to the roster, the squad will have three players who were on last year's first string —Gene Williams and Paul Batmale being the other two.

The Ram cagers had only two veteran starters on their team last year when they staged the most successful basketball season in Golden Gate membership, so Coach Sid Phelan and his cagers went into their first practice session last Monday under favorable circumstances.

Practices are held in the men's gymnasium on all week days, and Coach Phelan invited anyone interested to turn out.

Intra League To Start October 25

The semiannual Associated Men Student-sponsored Intramural basketball tournament has reached its goal of 16 teams, according to AMS President Jerd Lapham.

The full schedule has not yet been released.

Teams will be two leagues, the Club and the Independent-Fraternity leagues. Actual play will begin next Tuesday night, October 25, with two games going on at the same time, one in the men's gymnasium and one in the women's gymnasium.

Each team will play each other once, and the winner of the respective leagues will vie for the overall championship in January.

Lapham is extremely happy with the turnout as the goal of 16 teams was easily reached. Lapham is trying something new in regard to scoring. "Each team will have a scorer who will keep score in the other gymnasium instead of for his own team," Lapham said.

The games will be supervised by Jack Gaddy, men's physical education head. All scores will be reported to him and then given to Lapham.

Lapham is optimistic about the players showing up for the games. "Last year the intramural program was plagued by forfeits and double forfeits, and this year we expect to have all teams playing on the scheduled dates," he said.

Refereeing will be handled by Roy Diederichsen's physical education 7 class; if they are not available, Gaddy will assume charge.

Some of the teams that entered are the old reliables, such as Club league champion Newman Club, Campus Police, Negro Student Association.

Monterey College Hosts Sports Day

The Recreation Association will have a Sports Day Saturday at Monterey Peninsula College, the RA's first Sports Day of the semester.

All students going to Monterey for the day must be at the women's gymnasium by 5:30 a.m. Saturday morning where a chartered bus will be waiting. The trip to Monterey takes about three hours. Lunch will be served at Monterey College.

Seven sports are being offered for the day: coed archery, badminton, bowling, tennis, volleyball, golf, chess and recreational swimming.

All students interested in the RA Sports Day at Monterey are expected to sign up in the women's gymnasium by noon Friday. The list is on the bulletin board directly across from the receptionist's desk. Men will sign up there too.

The bus will return to this campus by 5:30 p.m. Students are expected to provide their own transportation from here.

City College Coaches Lead Charmed Lives

By G. Frank Cooney

CITY COLLEGE coaches have been leading charmed lives.

It's wasn't enough that they just about made a clean sweep of every Golden Gate Conference championship in 1965-66, but they are establishing themselves as strong favorites to do it all over again.

This all started when fabled All-American halfback O. J. Simpson made it clear that he would attend this college for a second football season.

Right away opposing coaches started wondering how the heck they could put up with the San Francisco winning ways for a second straight year. Among some of the more practical suggestions one called for shortening the Rams' number of downs to two per set, another cutting the playing time in half to avert a repeat of last year's massacres.

AWED COACHES HAD hardly a chance to accept the fact of another Ram-dominated year in football when basketball coach Sid Phelan added charm number two.

Undefeated in 1966, Phelan's Ram cagers were led by Willie Wise on offense and Gene Williams on defense. Both made All-Conference and both are here, ready and practicing for 1967. This is to say nothing of tricky Darling Thomas or returning Paul Batmale.

We would imagine that the first item on the agenda of the next conference coaches meeting will be how to get City College of San Francisco into another league, or something.

SAN FRANCISCO—"The City that knows how"—is an expression that is more than trite.

It's false.

At least as far as physical education progress goes, the San Francisco way of doing things was outmoded before it began. And things have been retrogressing ever since.

For the umpteenth time in the last couple of semesters, let's use the San Francisco pool system for example.

Or rather the lack of a pool "system."

Maybe somebody figures that since San Francisco is bounded on three sides by water, there is no reason for putting any more aqua pura within her boundaries for such uses as teaching youngsters how not to drown.

Sure someone saw fit to construct several shrunken, hard to get at pools in a spattering of neighborhood parks, but what about the child who doesn't have the freedom to go wandering the streets in search of one of these pools.

THESE POOLS SHOULD have been built on high school campuses in the first place so that every youngster who goes through San Francisco's physical education system would get a first-hand crack at learning how to keep his head above water.

It's really not such a unique idea, it started about 30 years ago in most high school systems in California. As a matter of record, fewer than 20 per cent of this state's high schools have no swimming pools.

Newly appointed "swimming coach"—a somewhat fictional position most of the time at this college—Curt Decker recently made a survey of all California two-year colleges.

His results only confirm what most San Franciscans just do not realize. City College of San Francisco is just about the only large two-year college in this state of 78 two-year colleges that neither has a pool nor has plans for building one in the near future.

Two of the best athletes ever to attend City College of San Francisco, Dwight Tucker and O. J. Simpson are first cousins.

State Students Discontented With Instructional Methods, Start Experimental College

By Viggo Petersen

A somewhat abstract concept in education, known as the experimental college, was established at San Francisco State College last year. It was created because of the restiveness at the college about the general education courses required for graduation.

As most students are well aware, San Francisco State College, as well as other four-year colleges, require that a student complete a certain number of general education courses known as "breadth requirements" in order to graduate.

The restiveness about the breadth requirements at State was caused not so much by the courses themselves, but by the way the courses were taught.

STUDENTS SIMPLY felt that they weren't learning anything during the usual process of buying a text book, memorizing parts of it and attending lectures. So they formed their own version of what they felt an institution of higher learning should be like.

The sponsors of the college felt that the student should play a far more significant role in his education than he now does. They felt that a student should be able to choose not only what he wants to learn, but how he wants to learn a subject, and what the criteria should be to determine if he is learning anything.

A person who enrolls at the experimental college can organize a class on anything. A class may be organized by anyone and may be concerned with any subject. All that is required is that the person organizing the class knows what he wants, can communicate his ideas to others and that he be able to devise a systematic program for conducting the course.

The course is added to the curriculum if a significant number of students support his idea by enrolling in the class.

EACH CLASS AT the experimental college is conducted differently, according to the decisions of the instructor and the students in the class. Reading material, class time and various methods of conducting the class are all agreed upon. The classes may be conducted as seminars or as lectures.

There are 70 courses offered at the experimental college. One fourth of these are accredited by San Francisco State.

The curriculum includes such courses as World View Without War, The Search For Identity, Cybernetics And LSD, Contemporary Revolution, From Protest To Radical Politics, and Ways Of Life And Means Of Livelihood, naming a few.

THE EXPERIMENTAL college was not intended to deviate from present methods of instruction as many suspect. As Charlotte Gaines, executive secretary of the college, said "The college was not intended as an alternative to the present education system. We established it because of the very fact that we like the courses offered at State; we just don't like some of the ways they are taught."

Miss Gaines pointed out that a number of students from City College are participating in the program.

The college was formed last fall when an upper division student organized a group of students for the purpose of discussing the problems of modern education.

It was during this discussion that the discontent with State's general education program was brought to light.

Super Mench Plus Bunny Combo Spark Hillel Costume Ball

In an effort to help contribute to the spirit of Halloween, the Hillel Club is sponsoring the Super Mench Costume Ball Saturday, from 9 p.m. to midnight at the Saint Francis Episcopal Church parish hall, on the corner of San Fernando way and Ocean avenue.

Music for the dance will be provided by Br'er Rabbit and the Briar Patch. The price for bids is $1.00 per person for members of the club and $1.50 for nonmembers.

There will be a door prize and prizes will be awarded for the best costumes. One condition, though, costumes must be homemade. The judges for the contest will most likely be the officers of the club, according to Ron Leeser, publicity chairman for Hillel.

The Super Mench, Leeser added, will make a special appearance as a mystery guest.

Proceeds from the costume ball will go to the club and possibly to the B'nai B'rith Jewish organization, Leeser stated.

Leeser emphasized the fact that all students are invited to attend the dance.

On Halloween night, the Hillel Club will sponsor a march for the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund.

Drama Tryouts Start Monday

Tryouts for Oscar Wilde's The Importance Of Being Earnest, will be held next Monday and Tuesday, according to James Haran, director.

Earnest, a classical comedy, will be the drama department's major production this semester and will be presented from December 14 through 17.

The play, first produced in 1895, is an example of wit and cynicism fashioned with what critics call "glittering insolence." The advantage of reviving Earnest, Haran said, is that the theme is contemporary and can still be appreciated by modern audiences.

There are five male roles and four female roles open to those students who wish to audition, Haran stated. The play is a very challenging one, he added, but when perfected, offers a rewarding experience to the actor.

After Earnest is cast, the theater lab productions, slated for future College Hours, will be announced, lab director Walter Krumm said. Scenes are being perfected, and Krumm announced he is pleased with the progress being made.

Moscone, Walker Debate Issues In C-Hour Tomorrow

By Giuseppe Greco

George Moscone and James Walker, Democratic and Republican nominees respectively for the office of State Senator, 10th district, will debate city, state and national issues and will define their political positions and platforms during College Hour tomorrow in the college theater.

Moscone, 36, was graduated from St. Ignatius High School and attended University of San Francisco and the University of the Pacific where he took his degree in sociology.

He received an academic scholarship at Hasting College of Law where he graduated in 1956. He opened law practice in 1957 with the firm Morgan & Moscone; from 1959 to 1963 he taught law at Lincoln University.

MOSCONE IS AT the present time a member of the Board of Supervisors and also a member of the Board of Directors of the Recreation Center for the Handicapped.

During the past two years, Moscone served on the Supervisors' Finance, Governmental Services and Transportation Committees. As supervisor he was also chairman of the Education, Park and Recreation Committee and a member of the Judiciary Committee.

Moscone favored an increase in the city's contribution to the Actor's Workshop, a contribution which permitted this company to survive. Moreover he led the fight on the board to save the Golden Gate Park Panhandle from becoming part of the Golden Gate Park freeway, a route he believed would destroy the park itself.

WALKER, A NATIVE of Nebraska now a San Francisco businessman, came here in 1929. He attended public schools in Los Angeles and the University of Hawaii in Honolulu.

Walker has been involved in the import-export business for more than 20 years.

He was a founding member of The Guardsman of San Francisco, a member of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, a worker for the United Bay Area Crusade, and a past president of the San Francisco Caledonian Pipe Band.

He belongs to the Commonwealth Club, University Club, American Legion and Marines Memorial Club. He also belongs to the United Republicans of California and the California Republican Assembly.

Walker serves as director at large for the RA and is a member of its Labor-Management Committee.

Moscone's and Walker's discussion is part of the Faculty-Student lecture series.

CHRISTOPHER HOLLIS, specialist in social sciences and literature, will discuss The Phenomenon Of Orwell during next Tuesday's College Hour in the theater.

Lloyd D. Luckmann, coordinator of instruction, will preside.

Twenty College Delegates To Attend Area Conference

Twenty delegates will represent City College this Saturday at the Area Six Conference sponsored by West Valley College in Campbell, James C. Wyatt, assistant dean of Student Activities, said today.

Resolutions adopted at this conference will be brought before the California Junior College Student Government Association statewide conference being sponsored by City College this year in December.

There are 79 two-year colleges that make up CJCSGA. These are geographically divided into eight areas which meet, approximately one month prior to the statewide conference. City College is the northern-most college in Area Six.

Delegates to represent this college are chosen on a volunteer basis. Those selected so far are Bruce Fisher, Tom Csekey, Shirley Short, Percy Jones, Marsha Taylor, Kathie Daugherty, Shirley Brown, Penny Birdman, Pat Fiuren, Irene Quintero, Mac Rose Albert, Jerry Vanger, Stan Angel, Helen Ferentinos and Chris Loo.

Seven secretaries from the business department will also be attending this conference. They will be practicing and observing in preparation for the state conference.

"It is an all-day affair, Wyatt indicated. The conference will be made up of workshops, and the discussions and decisions at these meetings will produce the ideas and topics of general interest to the association as a whole as well as the individual colleges.

Five City College students tried out against representatives of other colleges for workshop chairmen of the conference. They were Linette Wong, Dave Hohman, Ron Appel, Angel and Csekey. Csekey was selected and will be chairman of the workshop on Philosophy And Function Of Student Government.

College To Host State Convention

James C. Wyatt, assistant dean of Student Activities, and the Associated Student Government at City College are in a hub-bub of activity now, preparing for the California Junior College Student Government Association convention.

The convention will be held at the Hilton Hotel in San Francisco December 1, 2 and 3.

The statewide convention will be hosted by City College. It will be attended by 600 delegates representing 79 two-year colleges. This accounts for the unusual amount of activity in Bungalow 5, according to Wyatt.

The objectives of the convention, Wyatt stated, are to set up workshops which will, hopefully, aid California two-year college students in attacking more successfully, problems which range from philosophy and science to student welfare and to make resolutions and recommendations to be carried out throughout the year

Nuclear Power As Deterrent Key To Security—Possony

By Sally Dorety

Nuclear power, used as a deterrent, "is the key to future national security." This, combined with a ready state of military preparedness, "will continue to insure the safety of America."

Dr. Stephan Possony, director of the International Political Studies Program, Hoover Institute at Stanford, made the statements when he spoke here October 18 on American Foreign Policy And The World Crisis.

BEFORE A CAPACITY crowd, Possony emphasized the importance of United States military preparedness. "The U. S. holds a balance of power in today's world," he said, "and we would be placing ourselves under a dangerous threat of World War III if positions should ever be reversed."

Possony declared, "It is necessary to increase our nuclear power, to develop new technological advances if we don't want to be caught as London and Paris were in 1939."

Each year more countries develop nuclear power, Possony said, and warned, "If the United States suddenly stopped advancing its modern warfare, someday another country would be in a position to dictate to us."

Possony emphasized that whenever a government speaks of increased spending there are the opposing views. He cited the morality issue as one, that is, whether it is right to continue developing weapons which have the power to kill millions of people.

CHARGING THAT Congress often thinks more of the national image than national security, Dr. Possony said, "Test ban treaties are very nice; they give us a good image overseas; however, in order to further develop our strategic resources, it will be necessary to test in the air. It is inevitable that someday, some country will break the treaty."

On the morality issue, Possony said, "Killing people is only a last resort. Our nuclear power is meant to be a deterrent, not a killer."

Asked to give his opinions on Vietnam, Possony replied, "I would turn this into a large scale war, and pour everything we've got into it in order to end the fighting as soon as possible. Then we could concentrate more fully on building our power at home."

Football Queen Pageant Set For Tomorrow's College Hour Rally

The annual Football Queen Pageant, along with a car parade, will be held during College Hour tomorrow at the Ram as a prelude to Friday's City College versus Merritt football game, James Wyatt, assistant dean of student activities, announced.

The pageant, a traditional festivity of the college, has been adequately furnished with candidates, with each organization of the college nominating its respective representative, Wyatt added.

Today, at 2 p.m. in B-5, a panel of approximately ten judges, composed of administrative members, faculty and students, appointed by the Council Of Organizations, will meet and interview each candidate.

After this period of interview each judge will make his own selection of queen. The names of the five finalists, however, will not be disclosed until tomorrow, Wyatt indicated.

The decision of the judges will be announced at halftime of Friday's City College Merritt football game, Wyatt said.

A car decoration contest will be sponsored by the Inter-Fraternity Council.

"Those organizations providing queen candidates will be asked to supply a decorated car for the purpose of escorting their respective candidate in the procession, in the event she is chosen as a finalist," Wyatt remarked.

Also, each car, despite the fate of its candidate, will be eligible for rating in the decorated car contest. Prizes will be furnished to the top three cars.

The five finalists of the queen pageant and the winners of the car contest will be announced during the rally.

Al Collins, radio personality, may be master of ceremonies.

'High Performance' Safety Is An Excursion Into Semantics

EVERYBODY should remember the hula hoop; it was a fad. The latest fad, although a long time coming, will probably be around longer than the hoop. Today's gag is, of course, auto safety.

The college's Associated Men Students were caught up in the safety trend when they proposed a safety check for those members of the student body who would volunteer their vehicles, and this program could be beneficial to those who take advantage of it.

IT IS INTERESTING to note that after many years of automobile production, the manufacturers only recently let the word 'safety' share the same ad space with 'luxurious, economical, powerful, stylish' and 'different.'

However, there is a conflict as to the definition of safety. Ford's High Performance owner's manual (a pamphlet that is inserted into the glove compartment of such special automobiles) says that a high performance car is safer because of the car's ability to pass other cars on the road. That is, the HP vehicle is not exposed to oncoming traffic for as long a time as a slower vehicle would be in passing, hence it is safer.

The California State Automobile Association, a most reputable insurance firm, in a back issue of its magazine, Motorland, claimed that it would no longer insure a High Performance automobile. Such an auto was defined as any vehicle that has a 10:1 or less ratio of total weight to engine displacement. The reasons for this ban on high performance cars were the unfortunate results that many such vehicles produced when they were in the hands of low-performance drivers, many of whom were teenagers.

THESE HIGH PERFORMERS apparently drove too safely, according to Ford's "high performance" standards, for too long, and too many just ran out of road.

Maybe the two organizations will sit down and have a Semantics Symposium, which will iron out all misconceptions about performance safety. One group might say that what it meant was "Kinetic Vehicular Safety" (KVS, while the other group might stand behind "Potential Maldirectiveness of Volumetric Efficiency" (PMVE), or some such double-talk.

Until that time, high performers would do well to abstain from "all-out" safety ZOOM.

Halloween—A Mystic Shadow

By Connie Skipitares

DESPITE the objections of the discontented 'children-haters' and the kill-joy merriment-disapprovalists (no doubt, those neighborhood scoundrels who feign deafness with each doorbell ring), Halloween will once again overwhelm us with its reckless wizardry and mystic masquerade as it has managed to do for the last four centuries of our history.

As a prelude to Monday evening's predicted carousal, youngsters all across the country have probably spent days creating gruesome pranks and cleverly concealing guises (we cringe to think of the overplay Batman and the Superhuman set are going to get this year), while their half-crazed parents experience a defeat of the pocketbook as they surrender to the monopolizing whim of the confectioner in preparation for the annual event.

TRULY A HOLIDAY to be celebrated exclusively by the young-at-heart, Halloween can also be assigned the identification of perhaps the most opportune time to distinguish the good guys from the bad guys on your block —no doubt by the nature of the treats that are distributed.

Viewing the holiday strictly from a commercialized eye, it is obvious that the "trick-or-treating" practice was not born with the legendary Halloween tradition, although its distorted variation today may have stemmed from the frolic's origin, along with the unwelcome mischief-making that has been so highly popularized.

RUMORS HAVE IT that the goblins, witches and evil spirits are supposedly a Christian contribution, whereby it was believed that on the night of October 31 these creatures roamed the earth, wild with glee, at the return of their season of winter and darkness. They tormented the poor mortals, who, in turn, paid them bribes of food and delicacies to ensure the safety of their homes and persons.

Strange noises and outlandish tricks attended their appearance, and often as not, one or several humans would join their train if for no other reason than self-protection.

It is easy to see, in these beliefs and practices, the source of our own Halloween customs—the Jack-O-Lantern, masked figures, "trick-or-treat," bonfires—all of which seem to be a combination of fiend and fire.

Possibly the origin of today's traditional Halloween games such as "apple-on-a-string" and "ducking-for-apples" was a direct derivation of the November 1 feast of the Goddess Pomona, patroness of gardens and orchards.

HALLOWEEN JUST wouldn't be Halloween without that famous "apple-distribution center" established on each block by some compassionate neighbor who cared enough about his "customers" to protect their stomachs from the confectioner's refuse with this age-old panacea's magic.

Suspicion leads us to believe the most fervent "apple-enthusiasts" to be revengeful teachers whose "elephantine" memories have all but ceased to let them forget the barrels of rotten specimens bestowed upon them my flunking students.

Trick Or Treat

WHEN THE JACK-O'-LANTERNS spread their toothy grins about the neighborhood on that mystic night that is officially designated as Halloween, or the evening preceding All Hallowd or All Saints' Day, it's time to be prepared. Trick-or-treat is here again next Monday night.

A Need In Education

Fire Science Program Offers Job Opportunities

By Thomas L. Young

Today's need for advanced technology in the vast fields of employment leads but to one thing. The need for education.

City College, recognizing this need has hastened to establish new programs to afford the public the opportunity of employment training such as is exemplified in its new fire science technology program that was launched this semester.

The program has its headquarters in the rebuilt bungalow just being completed behind Cloud Hall.

AS COORDINATOR OF this new field of academic studies, Captain A. A. Potter, of the San Francisco Fire Department, expressed his great enthusiasm in the unexpectedly high enrollment in the new department.

He said, "In the two sections of the department, we had expected only 20 students to enroll in the pre-employment section and started with 65 instead, and in the in-service section we expected approximately 100 to start and instead 329 enrolled.

The first section, the pre-employment program, is for students who wish to study fire science as the criminology students study law enforcement and are students with no previous experience in the fire science fields and wish to establish a working understanding of the various intricacies of the field.

THE PREEMPLOYMENT program leads to an Associate in Arts degree in Fire Science Technology and prepares the students for Civil Service work with the City Fire Department, as Fire Science Engineers, or in associated occupations in private industry.

The second, the in-service program, is composed of persons in the field of fire protection or associated fire science categories who want beneficial knowledge which they can use in furthering their competence.

This group is made up of personnel of all ranks of the fire department and they attend classes at City College on a voluntary basis with no insistance from their place of employment.

THE IN-SERVICE program also leads to an A.A. degree in fire science technology.

Because of the odd or irregular hours firemen work—(twenty-four hours on duty and forty-eight off) the classes are scheduled as follows:

Classes are on Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays of each week with three courses given in the day and three courses given in the evening, and these same courses are given each of the three days.

The curriculum is designed to cover the entire fire protection field.

THE FIRST SEMESTER at City College had an enrollment larger than the other two-year colleges in the area put together.

According to Louis F. Batmale, coordinator of Technical-Terminal instruction, who was instrumental in establishing the program, "The enrollment in the program is the second or third largest in the state."

Chabot, Diablo and City College of San Francisco are the colleges in the Bay Area offering this program.

Football Just Part Of Grind For Fullback

Glenn Baker, number 47, is the fullback on City College's football team.

But his gridiron play is not the whole story. Baker is also a husband, father, student and full-time worker. He is enrolled in ten and a half units, which is quite a task, even for this 185-pound strong-boy.

He resides, with his wife Connie and son Glenn, Jr., in the Richmond district, when he has a spare moment, that is.

The "day" of Glenn Baker begins at midnight, at Cala Foods, where he works as a grocery clerk. At 4 a.m. he grabs a quick lunch and tries to study either sociology or life science. He leaves the job at 7:30 a.m. to report for his 8 o'clock class.

At 1 p.m., Baker is free for two hours. He eats his lunch, studies for an hour, and then takes a little nap in his car. He is then ready for football practice where he bumps "heads" 'til 5:30 p.m., and then returns home to his lovely wife and future fullback —he hopes. He eats and is in bed by 6:30. He is up at 11:30, and is then ready to start the whole grind all over again.

Baker has scored two touchdowns already this season and is considered invaluable as a blocking-back.

Asked how he feels about his busy schedule, Baker, glassy-eyed, retorted, "tired." It is quite obvious that he would be rather fatigued, but he admits that it is a lot of "fun" to be occupied.

AMS To Sponsor Auto Safety Control Program This Fall

The emphasis is on safety this year. Not only is Detroit spotlighting safety, but so is City College.

The Associated Men Students have brought about an auto safety control program for all students at City College, which will be held in December.

Heading the program are Ron Appel, representing the Associated Men Students, and Jeff Alcorn, assistant deputy chief of Campus Police. The safety check program will run from December 13 through 15 from 9 a.m. to approximately 3 p.m. at Cloud Circle, where checking statons will be set up.

At the checking stations students' cars will be checked by a mechanic for functional operation—brakes, lights, steering, horn and so on.

It will not be necessary to have an Associated Student card, since this service is free, Appel emphasized.

The Campus Police is encouraging all students to use this service in December. The holiday season is coming up, and, the officers say, what better time is there to have a car thoroughly checked.

One of three sponsors will oversee the program next month, and, according to Appel, the sponsor will be either the California Highway Patrol, the San Francisco Police Department or the American Automobile Association.—H. D.

Black Power? Uninformed Will Shudder

By B.T.

MANY OF US seek the meaning of "Black Power," for the very mention of it makes the unknowing citizen shudder. He wonders if it is a new movement to annihilate white people. He wonders if "Black Power" means direct force and eventual chaos.

Just what is Black Power?

According to Bridges Randle, political science major, the words are often misunderstood. "People think it means to hate the white man. It doesn't. It just means to retaliate if the Negro is treated like a dog. Use self-defense in the form of boycotts.

"WE CAN STOP RELYING on white bureaucracy. We can vote and help ourselves by getting an education, and help others. We can organize, and get ourselves into office.

"We have to make economic and voting blocks. We must seek equality and try to live in harmony, and the best way is through boycotts and denying votes to those who are prejudiced against us.

"The difference between the Black Muslims and us, advocates of black power, is that the Muslims favor segregation. People think they are the black Ku Klux Klan. Actually, they just have a deeper conviction and a deeper distrust of whites."

RANDLE CAME HERE from the deep south, where he worked to help register Negroes. He was beaten, clubbed and kicked for participating in a library sit-in. Although his appearance belies his philosophical attitude, Randle feels that nothing is gained by Martin Luther King's doctrine of passive resistance.

"I don't think this turning the other cheek helps solve many problems. We can't kneel down and pray, and seek spiritual means of dealing with the Negro problems. We have to help ourselves," he said.

Randle discussed the dangers of communist infiltration in this move to help the Negroes organize "black power." He said that the communists will always exploit something like this, but the "whole concept of black power is against the grain of communism."

"WE LIKE THE AMERICAN way, but the American way must be true. Nonviolence is VERY IMPORTANT, but at the same time, black power is needed badly. The key word is 'Organize,' for the Negro can better himself only by his own efforts," Randle emphasized.

When asked why he moved to San Francisco from Mississippi, Randle said, "I agree with Dick Gregory about San Francisco being the most liberal of all west coast cities. I myself believe it is, because it is so close to the Berkeley campus—people are aware of the whole situation."

Randle believes that most people are advocating black power, even if they are not verbal about it.

"We just want the white people to get off our back!" he cried.

The Observer

By William G. Pates

LYNDON Baines Johnson's fabled consensus has gone the way of all flesh, and if present election trends continue, the 90th Congress will revert back to the deadlocked sessions that were prevalent before the advent of the Great Society.

In this offelection year, there are 35 governorships, 35 Senate and 435 Congressional seats up for grabs. At present the ratio is 295-140 in the House, 67-33 in the Senate and 33-17 in the gubernatorial seats, all in favor of the Democrats.

INFLATION, THE CONFUSION over Vietnam and the white backlash are major issues in the campaign, but the Republican leadership has been emphasizing to a certain extent the battle for the survival of the two-party system in America.

The GOP leaders generate fears that two-party system, and the Republican party in particular, will disappear from America if the voters do not thwart the serious proposition that one party may hurdle the last remaining obstacles to full and complete power and control. They cite the control by the Democratic party of the White House and the vast and powerful federal bureaucracy; their two-thirds majority in the Senate and the House and their domination of more than 60 per cent of the nation's governorships and State legislatures.

THEY FAIL, OBVIOUSLY, however, to mention, at least with regard to the Congress, the coalition of Old Guard Republicans and Dixiecrats who combine forces to stifle attempts to pass most social legislation.

Had it not been for the 48 freshman Congressmen elected in the Johnson landslide, an overwhelmingly majority of the Great Society programs would not have seen life. They were passed, with very small margins considering the apparently gargantuan size of the Democratic majorities, in the 89th Congress.

However, since the birth of the modern political era in 1932, the "outs" have averaged gains of five and 28 seats in the Senate and House respectively. President Johnson prefers to look much farther back into the political past. He has calculated that the average loss by the OUT party since 1890 is 41 seats. This is typical of the Johnson manner of viewing things political.

THEREFORE HE CAN LOOK on any Republican gain in the House of less than 41 seats as a victory for the Democrats in general and the Great Society in particular. Normally the out-of-power party can count on a minimum gain of at least one score seats in the House. Minority Leader Everett Dirksen has predicted a gain of 75 seats while one party insider estimates only 15 to 25 seats.

On the other side, Democrats believe a loss of even 25 seats would be a major blow to the party. The GOP sees a turnover of less than 38 of the 48 normally Republican districts now in Democratic hands back to the fold a disaster.

The midterm issues of 1942 were literally the same that exist today. Early polls showed Democratic gains and this rapidly depleated to the point where the Democrats were beseiged with warnings of impending danger and foreseasts of heavy losses, particularly in House seats won by very narrow margins two years before.

THEN AS NOW the President and others were complacent and the result was a Democratic disaster. However, with the present complexities of the campaign issues and America's social ills, any gain by the "outs" is a plus for the Republicans.

Americans are frustrated and they want to alleviate their problems or at least put them out of their minds. Stalemating action in Congress through election of conservatives is as good a way as any. Unfortunately, this type of action will only delay the alleviation of the country's problems in the overcrowded school systems, housing ghettos, crime, jobs, pollution, civil rights, transportation, natural resources and all the rest. The American people themselves are the real losers.

NORMALLY RELIABLE sources led us astray in an analysis in this space last week, and several mistakes were made and they need rectifying.

It was said that only one man since 1900 had been elected Governor without having first been Lieutenant Governor or Attorney General, where it should have said "since 1910" and that there were "two men, not one." Governor Culbert Olson, who served in the Senate in Utah and California, is the second man.

The Brothers Rivera

THE BROTHERS RIVERA, Bill, Bernardo and Tyrone (from left), will provide the music for the Filipino-American Club's dance, A Touch Of Magic, to be held Friday from 9 p.m. to midnight in the Statler Wing of Smith Hall.

ADMISSION TO THE dance has been set at $1 per person for non-members and 75 cents for Filipino-American Club members. Campus dress will be the proper attire for this function, according to club President Cesar Del Rosario.

THE BROTHERS, with Bernard, a College of San Mateo graduate with an A.A. degree in music acting as leader and playing rhythm guitar, Bill on drums, and Tyrone on bass guitar, along with Fred Mana, make up the popular and talented group which has provided songs and sounds at many Bay Area engagements.

Lack Of Space Poses Large Problem For Library Staff

By Richard Kliski

Although many of the sundry problems concerning the operation of the City College library are in the process of being solved, a lack of space is still considered to be one of the major enigmas facing the library staff, head librarian Harold Korf announced last week.

"As it stands now," he explained, "the library is just too small to accommodate the number of students currently enrolled at the college, and unfortunately, no arrangements have been made as yet to solve the problem."

While space—in this instance, the lack of it—may be his biggest headache, Korf has refused to let the apparent dilemma act as a stumbling block in the path of progress.

"Although many of our problems have been lessened," he said, with a broad smile, "we are still working toward a goal of maximum efficiency."

HAVING ALREADY initiated the first step toward this goal, a revision of the library's old time schedule, Korf's second step appears to be toward stronger library-faculty coordination.

"We want the library to be an information center in regard to instruction," he explained, "not just a place where students come to check out books."

In an effort to emphasize this point, Korf related an incident which occurred earlier in the semester, when an anonymous student approached the front desk and requested a book of poems, which was thought to be entitled, The Red Ship.

NEVER HAVING HEARD of that particular title before, Korf confessed to the student that he was at somewhat of a loss. However, after a lengthy question and answer session, during which time the student became even more confused, it was discovered that the book he wanted was not "The Red Ship," after all—it turned out, instead, to be the Rubaiyat of Omar Khayyam.

"Although this type of mix-up is the exception, rather than the rule," Korf explained, "there is no reason for it."

To determine what supplemental texts and reference materials will best serve the individual's needs, as well as what books students are interested in reading, Korf has requested that instructors supply him with a list of books which pertain to the various courses being offered by the college. It is hoped that this system will prevent any future mix-ups.

By way of expanding the library's book collection, Korf pointed out, the college has purchased a series of reference books entitled 20th Century Views (Prentice Hall), which contains a collection of critical essays on more than 70 contemporary authors, such as Hemingway, Faulkner and Fitzgerald.

In addition, another series entitled Library Of Social Sciences (McGraw Hill), a collection of essays which illuminate the field of social sciences for the prospective student, has also been purchased.

Foreign Students Meet Doubles In Computer Match

Meet Your Double is the combined effort of the Red Cross and the Associated Students to help foreign students feel more at home in America.

James C. Wyatt, dean of student activities, explained it as "an attempt to match an American student with a foreign student with the idea of helping the foreign students become a more integral part of America."

IBM machines do most of the work, he remarked. Upon entering City College, students were requested to list their personal interests. These interests of students wishing to participate in this program will be punched on IBM cards. The machine will then match American students with foreign students according to like interests.

A Tea And Session will be held around mid-November at the Red Cross Center where pairs will meet.

As Dean Wyatt put it, sports-minded people might attend games together or walk along the beach, those interested in culture and the fine arts might visit the different museums, others might stroll around the city sight-seeing, or perhaps just sit and talk over coffee.

Students interested in signing up for this program will find tables set up in Smith Hall, Science Hall and Bungalow 5. "The better the sampling," Dean Wyatt said, "the better the match."

Student Council Amends Resolution Governing Men's Dress At Campus Dances

By Bill Fritz

On Wednesday of last week, Student Council reconsidered its previous decision and ammended a resolution governing men's dress at campus dances.

The original legislation, which had allowed for "all neatly dressed young men in school clothes" to be admitted to dances, was altered so that sponsoring organizations could specify what dress is appropriate for each dance.

In further legislative action, council by a vote of 9-4-0, passed a resolution allowing legislation to be introduced by the presidents of the Associated Men Students, Associated Women Students, and Frosh and Soph Classes.

This action is meant to be a time-saver and is expected to prompt more legislative initiative on the parts of these organizations.

COUNCIL ALSO APPROVED a resolution submitted by Soph Councilman Paul Shuttleworth which would allow council to recommend to the San Francisco Board of Education a name for the college's football field.

Also under the heading of New Business, former councilman Fred Stewart, now coordinator of the City College Tutorial Program, presented to council a six-page proposal and explanation in which he requested $750 of Associated Students funds.

As stated in the written proposal: "The City College Tutorial Program was started last spring to provide an on-campus agency through which City College might become involved in community work. During this semester the City College Program has been working in conjunction with the SF State Tutorial Program. In this way, City College students are gaining experience as tutors and administrators in a program that has operated effectively for three years.

"HOWEVER, NEXT SEMESTER, we feel that City College would benefit by having its own tutorial program—separate and distinct from SF State.

"Most students at City College must supplement their income by working part-time or full-time, and thus cannot volunteer the 20 to 25 hours work per week required of a administrative or supervisory position.

"Because the program cannot grow and become a workable community service program without these vital staff positions being filled, the Tutorial Program is requesting 10% ($750.00) of the funds necessary to pay these staff members for 15 of the required hours of work per week. The remaining 90% ($6750.00) of the money would be obtained under the provisions of the Economic Opportunity Act. A proposal for these funds has already been submitted to the Federal Government."

Consideration of this proposal was scheduled to begin at last Monday's council meeting.

GOING FURTHER with financial matters, Frosh Councilman Ron Lent, chairman of the Supplementary Appropriations Committee, reported on a study into a budget allocation request made, some weeks ago, by KCSF, the campus radio station.

In his report, Lent emphasized that KCSF was not in debt, as had been previously announced, and that the radio station does need the additional funds in order to continue serving the college.

Acting on this report, council, after much debate and questioning, allocated $70 to cover the costs of technical assistance and maintenance of the station and $75, which is needed to supply new records required by the increase in broadcasting hours this semester.

Campus Police Start Recruiting To Bolster Force

The Campus Police have begun looking for new recruits early this year, instead of waiting until next semester, Kevin Kelly, chief of the Campus Police, announced recently.

This is the first time in their history that the Campus Police have started looking for new men so early. Kelly reported that he would like to have a force of 35 men, compared to a present total of 29.

Application, for those who are interested, may be picked up in the Campus Police headquarters and filled out there. At the present time a total of ten applications have been filed.

There are various qualifications which must be met in order to be accepted on the force. Most of the students who become members of the Campus Police are majoring in criminology. Specific requirements which must be met include completion of Criminology 57 and Health 14.

Two other courses which are recommended but not required are Criminogoly 55 and any one of the sociology courses. The final requirement is that the applicant must pass an oral interview with Kelly and another officer. No written examination is given.

Those who do become members of the Campus Police will have to purchase certain articles. They have to buy two light blue shirts, along with a belt, key holder and star case. This will cost between $15 and $20. The dark blue shirts, handcuffs and clubs are provided by the college.

When asked about how student cooperation has been, Kelly stated, "So far this semester, the attitude of the students toward the Campus Police has been quite favorable."

14 Finalists In Fashion Contest

Fourteen coeds were selected as finalists in the Best-Dressed Coed Contest during College Hour on October 13.

In The Swing Of Things is the theme of the Associated Women Student Fashion Show and Tea in which these coeds will model fashions, courtesy of Stonestown Merchants Association.

All women students are welcome to attend this event on Thursday, November 3, in Smith Hall, AWS President Diane Latimer emphasized.

Local high school seniors and their advisers will also be attending.

The Best-Dressed Coed finalists include Edie Alley, Karen Anglin, Lynn Battaroni, Barbara Briscoe, Sheila Brown, Katie Difani, Jill Ferguson, Cynthia George, Cheryl Grantano, Joanne Marvomatis, Janet Ottone, Alfreda Smith, Tim Wong and Susan Astaff (alternate).

Pledge Week Activities Begin Next Monday

Inter-Fraternity Council and Inter-Sorority Council are actively preparing for the college's Greek-letter Pledge Week festivities set to begin next Monday and continue through November 4.

Since the beginning of the semester the various fraternities and sororities have held different activities affording City College students the opportunity of becoming familiar with each group through activities such as smokers and dances.

According to Dean James Wyatt, the fraternity Pledge Week activities are scheduled as follows:

Monday will be the meeting of the various rushing master chairmen with Wyatt in S-136 and the Statler wing activities customarily carried on between regular fraternity brothers and the pledges.

Tuesday will feature the IFC games such as egg toss, three-legged race, and tug-o'-war, all to be held in the stadium during College Hour.

Wednesday will see more of the Statler wing activities, while Thursday Beta Tau will present a rally during College Hour featuring the entertainment that will provide the music for the dance Beta Tau is hosting Friday night, November 4, to top off the Pledge Week festivities.

The sorority pledges will only participate three days, Monday, Tuesday and Friday, in the Pledge Week frolics on campus, according to Grace Ameral, president of ISC.

Miss Ameral disclosed that invitations will be issued to all full-time women students earning 12 units or more with a grade average of C or better. Time of distribution will be between 7:30 a.m. and 12 noon Friday.

Those women desiring to accept the invitation to pledge will attend a preference dinner of the sorority of their choice to be held on Saturday. Theta Tau's dinner theme is Hawaiian (or luau) and Phi Beta Rho's theme is Italian (or spaghetti).

Thursday, November 3, all sorority pledges will serve at the Associated Women Student Fashion Show and Tea to be held in Smith Hall from 3 to 5 p.m.—T L Y.

Rams Rally To Down Chabot, 34-19

Patented 'Four-Score' Quarter Does The Trick

By G. Frank Cooney

City College's undefeated football team rebounded from a 6-13 halftime deficit with another one of its patented four-touchdown quarters to down a tough Chabot team, 34-19, last Saturday night on the Gladiators' new field.

The Ram 28-point outburst in the third quarter started when fantastic All-American halfback O. J. Simpson ran for a thrilling 85-yard touchdown behind the blocking of Dwight Tucker, who accompanied Simpson most of the way.

Chabot coach Ed Hart was pleased with his team's showing, and well should be, since the Gladiators kept control of the Rams in all but one quarter. But that was enough.

HART TOOK TIME from praising his own team to issue an understatement during a post-mortum, "Simpson was the difference," he appraised.

And indeed Simpson was the difference, carrying 22 times, the most he ever has for the Rams, and picking up 262 yards, scoring touchdowns of 32, 85, 6, and taking over a two-point conversion.

Strange as it seems, the two-pointer was another Simpson first. He now has a whopping lead in national scoring again with 92 points in just five games.

At the very beginning it looked like it was going to be just another one of those days for the Rams, who have not lost a game in their last 14 outings, when John Deschler caused, and then picked up a fumble following the opening kickoff.

SIMPSON QUICKLY capitalized on the situation by taking the first play from scrimmage into paydirt from 32 yards out after only 57 seconds had ticked off the clock.

But a Ram romp never came about.

Chabot hung in tough from there on and was really never out of the contest until the game was nearly over.

At one point, after Gladiator halfback Dave Barry was injured on a kickoff return, it looked as though Chabot gained the impetus to win the contest early in the third period.

BUT RAM defensive halfback Craig Johnson stopped the Gladiators cold with a 66-yard interception return for a touchdown, to start the Rams on their scoring spree.

John Deschler played an outstanding game, causing and picking off two fumbles, while his brother Mike sat out the game with an injured leg.

As a matter of fact, one reason for the Rams' trouble might have been due to the fact that many players from the first string sat the game out.

Sixteen Intramural Teams In Practice Games This Week

The Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural basketball league went into action yesterday when four Independent teams played four Club teams in practice games.

The remaining eight teams meet tonight in practice games.

Jerd Lapham, AMS president, announced that the reason the practice games were scheduled was to get the teams organized before actual competition begins.

Each team will play each member of its own league, to a total of eight games counting the practice games.

Lapham disclosed that the Club and Independent leagues have been mixed up a little. "I tried to balance out the teams the best I could, and it should work out," Lapham said.

He also noted that perennial contender Negro Student Association is not having a team this year.

In the Club league the teams to beat seen to be defending champion Newman Club and past runner-up Felony Squad, formerly Foley's Flashes of the criminology department.

Lapham also made another change in the program that should help the organization of the league. All Club league games after the practice games will be held on Tuesday nights and the Independent league games will be held Wednesday nights.

Tonight in the second night of practice action, the Filipino-American Club plays the Bearded Crusts, the second game in the men's gymnasium sees the Newman Club play Hotel and Restaurant.

The women's gymnasium will be the site for the Felony Squad and the Irish to tangle, followed by the Chinese Students versus the Red Mountaineers.

Everyone Wants Into A Football Hero Act

By G. Frank Cooney

EVERYONE around these parts seems to be pretty content with City College's All-American halfback, O. J. Simpson.

And these same people think that his many rushing records are here to stay.

However, don't tally your yardage 'til the referee places the ball.

A case in point: One high school youth named Stan Brown led his team —the Salesian Chieftains of Richmond —back from a 7-40 halftime deficit to a 54-42 win over Tracy, after which the scoreboard promptly blew a fuse.

This particular five-foot-ten, one-hundred and seventy-five pound speedster carried the ball 21 times and scored one out of three times he handled the ball.

Seven touchdowns.

But one would expect Brown to hit paydirt every so often if he traveled 447 yards in that game.

And he didn't make any goal line dives either, tallying on runs of 35, 50, 55, 16, 10, 3 and 47 yards, flukes none.

To our knowledge Brown's performance rates as one of the most outstanding ever accomplished on a Bay Area gridiron.

He was also leading in Northern California scoring after five games with 20 touchdowns, about 120-plus points.

Let's see, is Salesian in Contra Costa's or Merritt's area?

* * *

GRID WIRE, a football rating publication for two-year colleges, recently rated City College of San Francisco high on its list.

Some people, however, do not think that the Grid Wire is fair since it is based in California and therefore west-oriented.

But it's really a matter of either going by Pasadena's Grid Wire or the National Junior College Coaches Association.

This is actually no choice at all since Grid Wire is nonpartisan and rates according to apparent achievement whereas the Coaches Association votes only for member institutions.

As a result, the association picked California's only member as sixth on its "national" charts.

The Grid Wire barely made room for the mediocre Taft team down around 16th, a much better appraisal in our estimation.

Also, the association is forced to rate teams with 4-3 in the "nation's top 20."

This, of course, is crazy since such teams don't even finish in the upper division of their leagues.

Therefore, there is only one real "national rating publication" at this time for two-year college football, the Grid Wire from Pasadena.

It's by no means perfect, but it does the job a far-sight better than its only competitor.

And that's how we rank the raters this week, from one through two nationally, naturally.

Unbeaten Gridders Rank Third In National Rating

City College's undefeated, defending championship football team received the highest national rating ever given a Ram grid squad when Pasadena's Grid Wire ranked San Francisco third among the nation's two-year colleges, last week.

This puts the Rams on top of all Northern California teams for the first time this year. College of Sequoias dropped from third to fourth. Santa Monica, number two at 3-0-1 is the only California team ahead of the Rams, while Kilgore, Texas, tops the list with a 5-0 record.

High-Scoring Rams Host Merritt In Homecoming Game

The high-scoring City College of San Francisco football team faces Merritt College here at 2:30 p.m. Friday.

Merritt Coach Jim Swan welcomed back 11 lettermen, seven of whom were regulars on last season's squad. Gone are All-Conference stars Curlee Robinson and Sam Germany, but fullback Jim Boulde (6-0, 195), and quarterback Bill Schmitz (6-1, 198), are progressing rapidly.

The Ram linemen will meet some big men when they go against Merritt. Tackle Everett Flowers (6-3, 256), guard Tom Mulr (6-1, 225), and Elgin Reeder, who weighs 242 pounds, anchor the Merritt line.

THE MERRITT THUNDERBIRDS opened their practice season by being defeated by Citrus College, 7-6. The following week saw Merritt drop another tough game to Shasta by a score of 13-6.

In their league opener, the T-Birds were edged by Chabot, 13-7.

The next week saw Merritt make a great comeback and tie College of San Mateo by a 20-20 score. The T-Birds trailed 20-0 at the half.

Ram Coach Dutch Elston is not taking the winless Thunderbirds easily. He knows they are a fine, evenly-balanced ball club, and they have not given up many points. Elston said, "They could have easily won those two conference games if they had just gotten a couple of breaks."

CITY COLLEGE SHOULD be able to run against Merritt. While playing against the Thunderbirds, San Mateo running back Al Namanny rushed for 208 yards and three touchdowns. With the Ram line leading the charge, one wonders what O. J. Simpson and Milt Frank will be able to accomplish against Merritt.

The Ram squad seems to be in fine shape, as they have shown against Diablo Valley and Foothill. Mike Deschler, starting guard who was injured in the Foothill encounter, is expected to be back soon. Coach Elston described Deschler's injury as a minor knee bruise.

Kevin Shea, star center, required surgery to his knee following the Rams' victory over San Joaquin Delta and is not expected back for the remainder of the season. Mike Streich (6-5, 260) is the new center for the Rams.

THE RAM PASS defense continues to be the only faulty point of an otherwise outstanding team. Against Foothill, the Owls moved the ball through the air, and end John Callahan broke a conference record by catching nine passes against the Ram secondary.

The Ram line more than makes up for weak pass coverage. Linemen Allan Cowlings, John Deschler and Dwight Tucker were unstoppable in allowing Foothill minus rushing yardage.

Ruby Jackson should be commended for his ability to beat Frank and Glenn Baker down the field on their long runs against Foothill.

Last year, the Rams whipped Merritt, 34-0. The way Pete Mullins has been passing, and with backs like Simpson, Frank and Baker behind him, the Rams are favored to defeat the T-Birds.

Phelan Reconstructing Championship Team

By Marc Clarkson

While the Ram football and soccer teams are heading toward conference championships, the basketball team is hopefully preparing for one.

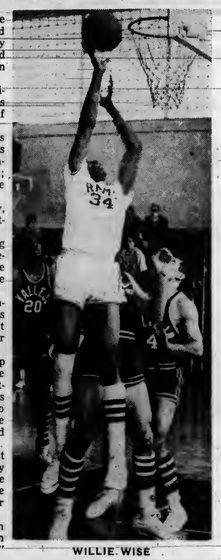
Coach Sid Phelan has started his reconstruction program for the 1966-67 season that will include games in the 29th annual Modesto Junior College Tournament and the 12th yearly Bakersfield Tournament.

A daily average of 26 players have shown up for the practices. The squad will be trimmed to approximately 18 players sometime this week and eventually to 15 by the preseason opener, December 4.

Of those 15 cagers, 12 will participate in league games, while the others will give Phelan insurance in case of any emergencies.

SOME OF THE impressive players in practice were last year's starters Willie Wise, probably the most versatile player on the team last season; the heady Paul Batmale and defensive ace Gene Williams.

Other standouts were Larry Gray, Bill Berger, Bill Locke, Girard Chatman and Gary Bradford.



Phelan believes that "the returning players have an early advantage because they are familiar with practice routines—once the others play more they should improve."

The squad consists of talented athletes and includes three first-stringers from last season, so Phelan should not have much trouble in building another winning team.

PHELAN WOULD LIKE to come up with more than a winning team. In the 11-year span as the college's basketball coach, he has directed Ram teams to seven league championships, two second and one third-place finish. He would like to come up with a squad comparable to last year's.

The Ram cagers had their "finest hours" last year under Phelan. They were 14-0 in capturing the Golden Gate Conference title and wound up the season as the second ranking two-year college in California.

It remains to be seen how the team will ultimately develop, but as Phelan said, "The practices seem impressive."

Booters Extend League Record To 4-0, Defeat Menlo, Merritt

The City College soccer team ran its conference record to 4-0 last week with impressive wins over Menlo and Merritt, but the most outstanding feat was accomplished when the Rams tied West Coast power University of San Francisco, 2-2, October 13 at Balboa stadium.

Against Menlo the Ram booters were held scoreless until the third period, when they broke through for three straight goals. Menlo used a straight defensive game and used eight men in the goalie's box to stop the Ram drives.

The strategy worked until Bob Rojas kicked one through the net for the Rams' first goal.

After that the Oaks had to play catch-up to the Red and White, their defense opened up and Tom Sammuelson and Mickey Duzdevich scored in succession.

With the Rams leading, 3-0, Coach Roy Diederichsen cleared his bench, and subsequently Menlo scored twice to make the final score 3-2.

Against USF the Rams put on by far their best performance. "We played superbly throughout the entire game, and they put together the most complete game of the season," Diederichsen commented.

It was a defensive battle throughout the first period as both teams were held scoreless. With three minutes left in the second period, Ben Baykanyo kicked one in from his inside left position. The Rams led, 1-0, throughout that period, but in the opening minutes of the third period Raleigh Nederloff booted one through the nets to make the score 2-0 Rams.

However, the Dons weren't about to lose their pride as they scored two quick goals in the final two minutes to tie the score.

The game, which was a last-minute scheduling, brought up the Rams' spirit when they tied nationally ranked USF.

Decker Dreams Of Pool Prospect

Newly appointed swimming coach Curt Decker has come up with somewhat of a puzzle. He has measurements for an Olympic-size pool but is lacking the funds, land and a go-ahead for the construction on the campus.

Decker recently sent questionnaires to all the two-year colleges in California which asked for the measurements of their pool, if they had one. The results came back that there are 20 two-year colleges in this state that do not have pools.

Most of these, however, have plans for installing a pool in the near future.

Decker would like to see an Olympic-size pool built, measuring 55 yards long, 25 yards wide and ranging from four to 14 feet in depth.

A pool of these dimensions could be used not only for conference swim meets but also could be rented by local organizations, since it would be one of the few Olympic-size pools in San Francisco.

The swim team has six Golden Gate Conference dual meets and a big conference meet.

The team has already started practicing once a week at Balboa pool. Decker is not entirely pleased with this practice setup because two other teams share the same practice time with the Rams.

Spring Registration—Few Will Remain Unscathed

By Richard Kilski

With the approach of spring registration, students and many faculty members at City College of San Francisco are due for a first-hand glimpse into some of the minor complexities of the Computer Age.

Although the initiation should be a relatively mild one—it is doubtful that many of the participants will emerge from the experience unscathed.

One deterrent factor in the battle for peaceful coexistence between man and machine, and probably the most disheartening to both student body and faculty alike, manifests itself in the form of a registration packet, currently being issued to new and returning students by their counselors.

TO THE FIRST OBSERVER, the thin sheaf of papers—which consists of a class schedule request form; a course roster, including course titles, section and code numbers; a faculty roster, with names of individual instructors and their code numbers; a short-form entitled changes and additions to course roster, and a numbered list of supplemental directions—appears to be harmless enough.

However, to the second and more sophisticated observer, after several minutes of severe concentration, the packet soon becomes a veritable maze —an ordered arrangement of numbers, letters (some of which spell words), and an intricate placement of minute dotted-lines, some of which are green and some others of which are blue.

ACTUALLY, THE KEY to the whole dilemma lies in the examples, which are illustrated on the blue side of the class schedule request form.

However, as it was pointed out by Registrar Gertrude Somerville to a group of 20 counselors and technical advisers, during a preregistration briefing last week, an attempt to decipher the packet should begin with a thorough examination of the enclosed supplemental directions sheet, since it will answer any questions left unanswered by the IBM form.

Once the student has consumed, assimilated and thoroughly digested the aforementioned directions, he is ready to test himself with the pencil-work involved in completing the class request schedule for eventual processing by the 1230 Scanner, which hopefully will match his requests.

WITH A SOFT-LEAD pencil, preferably a number two, and using the temporary study guide, which will be furnished him by his counselor, he should begin by indicating the courses he desires to take next semester, both by name and code number, in the block marked "primary requests."

In addition, the student must remember to block out the numbers, the ones intersected by the minute dotted-lines, which run horizontally across the field of the large blocks and correspond to the code numbers of the courses listed vertically in the little blocks on the left.

At this point, the student is free to move on to the section marked "special requests," listing alternate course selections in the blocks adjacent to his primary requests, or in the event a particular instructor is desired, listing the name and code number of said instructor in the block adjacent to the course taught by that instructor.

PROVIDING HE DOESN'T need a brain transplant, the student, if he still wants to be one, must next fill in the blocks marked "Student Identification Number," and "Counselor Code," in a manner similar to the one previously described.

Also, if he expects to be working during the hours when classes are normally in progress, the student has an option to fill in the block marked "Hours Available for Class Attendance."

Last—but by no mean coincidence least—the student must return his attention to the top of the form and attempt to deal with the block labeled "Physical Education," which provides spaces for a choice: "men, women or coed," and includes four clauses, provisions of a State Law, for the peaceful settlement of the whole problem—exemption.

Once the class schedule request has been completed to the satisfaction of the student, he is then free to take it to S-117, between the hours of 8 a.m. and 5 p.m. daily, where it will be inspected to the satisfaction of whoever happens to be on duty at the time and returned to the student if it is found deficient. If accepted, the form will be filed for processing.

With respect to the problems foreseen in computer-registration, it was concluded by Miss Somerville at the briefing, most students have very little difficulty with the forms.

Tougher Standards Set For Two-Year Colleges In State

By Viggo Petersen

According to new regulations set down by the State Board of Education, getting an education in a California two-year college is going to get tougher.

The regulations, which go into effect next fall, will require that students maintain a 2.0 grade-point average each semester in order to graduate.

The new regulations state that if a student does not maintain the 2.0 average, he is to be placed on probation and will be required to make up inadequate grade points.

THE NEW REGULATIONS also will demand that any student who does not maintain a grade-point average of 1.75 for three consecutive semesters will be disqualified from further attendance.

If, for any reason, a student is disqualified from a two-year college, the new regulations will not allow the student to be readmitted to the college until one semester has passed.

While discussing the new regulations, John Brady, coordinator of Student Welfare at City College, said that the new regulations will not place an excessive strain on City College students since "the college already has stringent academic requirements."

A 2.0 AVERAGE IS already required for graduation from this college, he said, but he explained that the ruling requiring probation for less than C average students would be new to City College regulations.

He said that such a ruling would place a substantial burden on the counseling services of the college readmissions board.

Brady said that last semester, 1265 students were not readmitted to the college because of poor scholastic performance, and he expects this number to double when the 2.0 rule goes into effect.

Brady expressed doubts as to how the college will be able to cope with the increased disqualifications.

ON THE BRIGHTER SIDE, however, the state board set another regulation which will protect students who are failing in university parallel courses, but are doing well in vocational pursuits.

A new rule will allow a student who has done poorly in a university parallel course of study to change his major and thereby erase all his previous grades.

If, for example, a student who is studying Cal parallel engineering finds he is doing poorly, he may decide to change his major to a two-year course of study such as criminology.

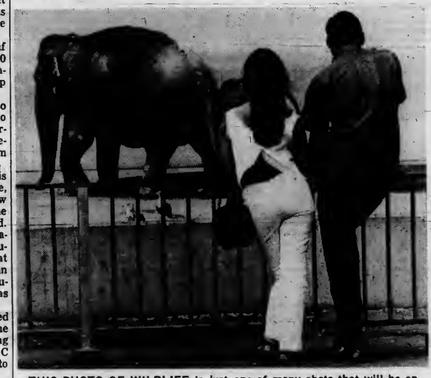
In so doing all his previous grades in engineering will be stricken from the college record.

The new statewide two-year college regulations, which appeared in a recent newspaper article, will be established because of increasing demands for high scholastic standards of the state colleges and universities.

Forensics Society Meets At Stanford

Approximately 300 students, all members of the Northern California Forensics Society, crowded onto the Stanford University campus October 21 and 22 for a two-day debate and oral interpretation workshop.

Representing City College were Larry Crain and Jim O'Donnell in debate, and Jenna Wong, who entered and took honors in the oral interpretation division. Miss Wong is a drama major at City College.



"Although the debate team didn't win its contests, we did glean some idea of what to expect in the future," Jo Kennedy, debate coach, commented.

Zoo Photos Due In Cloud Hall Gallery

THIS PHOTO OF WILDLIFE is just one of many shots that will be on exhibit at the Cloud Hall Gallery beginning Monday. The works of Madison Devlin include photographs of the Sigmund Stern Grove summer concerts and Arthur Fiedler, as well as Fleishhacker Zoo.

Recent Works Of Madison Devlin Go On Display

Madison Devlin, head of the audio-visual department, started taking pictures as a hobby when he was in Alaska, and he's been shooting photographs ever since.

An exhibit of Devlin's most recent works will be on display in the Cloud Hall Gallery beginning next Monday, November 7, Emmett Smith, who is in charge of the gallery, said.

The photographs, all taken within the last six to eight months, have such subjects as animals from the Fleishhacker Zoo, the Sigmund Stern Grove summer concerts and Arthur Fiedler.

DEVLIN HAS BEEN the head of his department since its planning in 1947. He is now in his twenty-fifth year at City College, where he was originally a music instructor.

He received his Bachelor of Arts degree from the University of California at Berkeley and his Masters at the University of Southern California.

Devlin studied photography at the Art Center School in Los Angeles and privately with such world-famous photographers as Ansel Adams and Dorothea Lange.

In his professional career, he has taken upwards of 15,000 photographs of the various sites he has visited.

HE HAS SOLD HIS pictures to such magazines as Motorland and Sunset and has credits for pictures placed in textbooks. He is a member of the exclusive American Society of Magazine Photographers, of which there are only about 350 members in the United States.

In his role as audio-visual head, Devlin coordinates the designated showing of films as requested by instructors at different times of the day either in the classrooms on campus equipped for motion picture projection or where such equipment can be set up.

Devlin, in addition to scheduling the showing of films, is also constantly aware of the films available from the 67 film libraries in the Bay Area.

About his photography, though, he is in an enviable position. "I'm in the position now where I can take pictures when I want, where I want and if I want," he said.

COO Talent Show Signup Due Now For November 14 Audition

Signups are now being taken in B-5 for those interested in appearing in the talent show scheduled for Friday, November 18, James C. Wyatt, assistant dean of Student Activities, announced recently.

The official auditions, to determine the contestants for the show, will take place on Monday, November 14, Wyatt said.

The talent show, sponsored by the Council Of Organizations, is expected to feature an appealing range of talent.

Wyatt explained that acts for the show can include entertainers from the outside, as long as at least one City College student is a participant in the act.

"At the present time we have a few group combos and individual singers signed up for the program, but we're looking for comedy and novelty acts to add variety to the show," Wyatt indicated.

A psychodelic approach will be the innovation of the show. This combined with the top talent the college has to offer should make "the best show yet," Marty Watten, vice chairman of COO, declared.

So far COO has received quite a few applications from students planning to sing folk songs, classical music and do skits. There is always a need for more and better talent, Watten said, urging anyone interested to petition now.

Wyat also emphasized that the student organizations on campus should try to sponsor a piece of talent for the show.

In addition to the prizes given to the three best performances in the show, trophies will also be given to the organizations which sponsor them.

At a recent COO meeting, a suggestion concerning the "atmosphere" of the show was proposed. There is a possibility, COO reported, that liquid projections focused on the walls may be used as a special effect just prior to showtime.

UC Chancellor Invites College To Charter Day

City College's faculty and students received a special invitation from the chancellor of University of California at Berkeley to attend Charter Day activities there Saturday, November 12.

Charter Day activities will begin with a general orientation at 8:45 a.m., and students attending will be given name tags and the opportunity to purchase special tickets, price $1, to the California-Army football game that afternoon.

The second event on the agenda for the Charter Day is a welcoming address by Chancellor Roger W. Heyns. There will also be a special program at that time for parents attending.

Following Heyns' welcoming address will be organized tours of the various academic department facilities. There will also be guided tours of the entire University of California campus beginning at 11 a.m.

Lunch will be served from noon to 1 p.m. in the Student Dining Commons located next to the union.

For the California-Army football game a special block section of bleachers is available to those persons who have purchased tickets at the orientation.

Correct Address Factor In Reg

If computer registration is to operate satisfactorily next spring, students must submit their correct home addresses to the registrar's office, Gertrude Somerville, registrar, warned today.

The addresses will be fed into the computer, and Miss Somerville emphasized that it is important that each student insures that the registrar's office has an accurate and up-to-date record of his home address by December 16, the last day of classes before Christmas vacation.

Miss Somerville explained that the addresses are needed so that final grades can be mailed immediately after the final examination. In this way students can make changes in their programs, if necessary, a day before registration.

Bees Hit Campus

By Herb Dirlon

Spring isn't here yet, but the bees are, and they are on the rampage.

The Student Health Service of City College has been swarming with bee sting cases the past two weeks or so for no apparent reason. There has been an average of two or more cases of stings daily being treated by the Student Health Service.

Other than the menace of the winged invaders, there have been no other unusual cases reported to date except for the usual complaints—colds, stomach aches and sore muscles.

The Student Health Service offers health counseling and guidance, first aid, and it offers recommendations for medical care as the need arises. In addition, physical education classifications are made on recommendation of a student's doctor. Oral medications are not given (including aspirin) because of ruling by the San Francisco Unified School district.

Health records are kept on each student attending day classes, consisting of a questionnaire answered by the student and a medical report by the student's doctor. Each of these records is reviewed by the Student Health adviser prior to a student's admission to City College.

Passage Of Proposition 4 Will End Minority Control Of Bonds

THE SAN FRANCISCO Public Schools System, of which this college is a dependent, has experienced unusually good luck with school bond issues.

Other school districts have not had such luck with the passage of their bond issues because, in part, of the procedure for tallying school bond votes. Under the existing system, one "No" vote is equal to two "Yes" votes, and this is what passage of Proposition 4 will try to equalize.

PROPOSITION 4 WILL LOWER the vote requirement for passage of school and library bond issues to 60 per cent, if passed in the November general election.

In case anyone has not heard, California is growing at a Hurculean rate. This means that everything has to be increased in the state, including governmental services, used car dealers, sanitariums, recreational facilities and dog kennels.

THE PEOPLE OF SAN FRANCISCO were aware of increased needs for educational facilities and came through with school bonds. Berkeley, however, lost four consecutive bond issues, although three of them had received more than 65 per cent of the affirmative votes and the fourth got a 61 per cent yes.

Sociologists might explain that Berkeley residents live in closer proximity with their students and, therefore, might be somewhat more stoic about expanding educational facilities for them than the San Francisco voter citizenry; but whatever the reason for the marginal majority vote, the majority was denied.

WHEREVER A ONE-THIRD MINORITY thwarts the other two thirds' wish, a democracy cannot exist, not on paper, anyway.

California is one of five states with the two-thirds requirement. Thirty-two of the 50 states require only a simple majority rule.

According to the California Teachers' Association, the drop to majority rule is not enough to encourage fiscal irresponsibility. But it's probably enough to keep a small minority of the uninformed or the indifferent from denying young people the chance to prepare themselves for a useful, productive life.

Cigarette Smoking And Teens

By Connie Skipitares

AMIDST an aura of "younger generation" rebellion, no doubt influenced by such exploits of the conformity-conscious mind as "escape alcoholism," bold pornographic literature, and psychedelicly-flavored "happenings," America is passively witnessing an eruption of a somewhat lesser evil likewise induced by repercussions of "new morality" breeding.

This so-called "evil" is revealed most profoundly by statistics reflecting the teenager's over-indulgence in cigarette smoking, a growing problem which this country has been attempting to cope with for the last three decades of our culture's existence.

Perhaps "evil" is too drastic a label for this pattern of widely accepted behavior that has undoubtedly enveloped our society, but the rapidly increasing rate of the American teenage smoking habit deserves an attentive seeker geared to an honest appraisal.

STARTLING FACTS relate that about half of this nation's teenagers are currently hooked on the nicotine habit—and some 4000 virtually innocent experimenters join the ranks of the tobacco-totlers every day.

United States Public Health Service experts recently revealed that most youngsters first experiment with tobacco at about age 12. Subsequently, in continuation, the victims are generally hooked by the eighth or ninth grade and unavoidably slip into an habitual pattern throughout high school.

First-hand experimental results actively tested by the laboratory researcher disclose evidence that the earlier a youngster takes up smoking, the more deeply he inhales, the more strongly he becomes habituated, and the more serious the hazard to health.

In addition, the experts say that more often than not, smokers come from families who smoke. They have lower goals, less ability and lower achievement than other teens.

THE ADVENT of the relevance of these vast discoveries has greatly influenced the prejudice heavily weighing against the risk with which teenagers are treating their lives by excessive and reckless tobacco smoking. By these standards, it doesn't appear a bit difficult to accuse the initiation of today's young smokers as inciting tomorrow's most probable lung and cardiac victims.

But then, a teenager consciously about to embark upon the nicotine habit is often blinded by delusions of overwhelming social acceptance and refuses to adhere to the facts.

The "in" crowd's doing it; what else can a teenager do but conform to the whims of his generation?

"I smoke to loose weight," claims a slightly overweight coed who additionally contends that she is infatuated with the physical lift as well as the "relaxing" effects of the nicotine.

CONFIRMING THE TRULY rebellious spirit of the age most susceptible to gullibility and conformity are the recurring cries, "Everybody's doing it," and "My parents forbid it!" What better reason could there be?

Television, newspapers and other mass media are a great help in recruiting the young smokers with advertisements depicting smoking as glamourous and adult—definitely the activity of the sophisticated set.

In some school districts, officials have gone as far as urging their teachers to smoke "out of sight" of students so as to avoid influencing the youngsters to follow suit.

ALTHOUGH THE NUMEROUS reasons cited as explanations for the now well-instilled norm have been hashed and re-hashed, there's no escaping the fact that they all have a common denominator of significant bearing—but we can't stop at the mere statement that "this is the era of rebellion among the 'young generation'!"

As long as there's a 'young generation' they'll rebel—in some way—but they'll rebel. They did it 50 years ago and they'll do it 50 years from now.

The only prerequisite for rebellion is the spirit of survival, and that is something which we doubt very much can be drained out of any young soul.

The greatest thing in this world is not so much where we stand as in what direction we are moving.

The Legend Of Charley Hall

Former Student A Victim Of Bandits

By B. Takeuchi

In a remote little village in the Philippine Islands, on the island of Cebu, there is a new legend being told today. It is the legend of Charley Hall, a friend of all the natives of Toledo.

This summer a band of fierce international bandits ambushed and killed Hall, in the most unspeakable fashion. His body was brought back here and buried, but his friends in Toledo still remember him and sadly speak of him.

For Hall was the big American mining superintendent who worked hard to double the output of a copper mine in that primitive area. He was friendly with the natives, and they called him "Chuck."

HALL'S EXISTENCE in this tropical area lacked the glamour of a movie epic, except that the mining company did build him a big house that was entirely paneled with Philippine mahogany.

There were servants who spent the days just polishing the wooden panels, but there were in addition hot weather, mosquitoes, head hunters and those bandits.

There are about 50 of them—malcontents left over from World War II, who traveled by stolen boats, from island to island, looting the villages and terrorizing the people. These were the international bandits who posed the greatest problem for the copper miners.

THERE WERE LABOR problems, strikes; and the usual demands of wage increases, but none of these worried Hall too much.

As usual, he returned to America to learn new mining techniques. This year, he brought his Mongolian wife and two children back with him, and returned alone to Toledo.

His return was met with labor troubles. The strike made it impossible for him to get supplies for the copper mine, so he piloted a private plane full of necessary items into Toledo.

When he landed, he was killed.

Mrs. Hall and the children, Grace, 5, and Susan, 3, were spared. Fortunately, they were still here in the Bay Area, awaiting passage to the Philippines.

GEORGE GREEN, retired City College geology instructor, and old friend of the Halls, visited them in Toledo last year. "On a round-the-world trip we stopped off to see Charley.

"We had a close call with those bandits. It wasn't until we returned to Manila, and were casually reading the newspaper, that we learned that the bandits had raided the village we had just left," he said.

Hall was an active member of the Pick and Hammer Society (geology) when he attended this college from 1947 to 1948. He transferred and was graduated at University of California with a degree in mining. He served as a lieutenant in the Korean conflict, and returned to Cal to earn his master's degree.

Cutest Couple Chosen At Ball

Chris Sundborg and Steve Marigan were each awarded a trophy as photographers snapped their picture in the winners' spotlight of the Cutest Couple Contest at the Third Ball October 21.

Miss Sundborg, a San Rafael high school student, and Marigan, a freshman at the college, won a dinner for two at the Franciscan Restaurant, a Harbor Cruise of the Bay Area and four tickets to see The Blue Max.

GI Check And How To Spend It Problem

By B.T.

THERE'S ONE WAY to retire young, and still enjoy it. That way is: Survive the armed forces and return to college.

The veterans, who regularly receive a check from their Uncle Sam, are getting paid for each midterm pressure, for carrying 14 units, yet some "protest" (as in too much) every penny, all the way to the bank.

Yet they are being paid, in an educational sense, for what they themselves gave of themselves. So why do some apologize?

"Money really isn't everything," says veteran Lori Pittman, who is existing on $100-a-month from her "Uncle." Miss Pittman, a freshman, served in the United States Army from June, 1962 to June, 1965.

"I worked in personnel and finance as a specialist, but I find office work boring. There's more to life than that routine. But I do need a car, and the check is not enough for my needs," she said.

Then there is the other side.

ONE VETERAN BOUGHT a brand-new shiny motorcycle so he need not ride the crowded Muni bus to college; another saved his marriage with that monthly check. His wife felt that he was at last "contributing" to their marriage.

That wonderful punched card has even enticed a few veterans out of the labor market. A few have returned to college, hoping to "further their scope."

A few, but very few, also have outside jobs and therefore might seem to have "checks to cash, money to burn."

It is interesting how G. Greco, a foreign student from Italy, feels about this and recently revived source of income. "Money? I don't know what I'd do with it," he said. "I even refuse help from my dad. I prefer to work at a boring job downtown," he added.

"It's only money, and there's more to life than money," said one veteran —who is counting the days until his next check.

MORE HAWAIIANA: Niihau, (Knee-ee-how) is one of the islands in Hawaii that is almost an enigma to tourists and kanakas alike. The island belongs to two old men called Robinson. They bought it a long time ago, and continue to impose a strict segregation of the Polynesians there.

Some are allowed to leave the island but cannot return with outsiders. The people live in a happy, don't-know-any-better state, and are very loyal to the Robinsons.

There is almost no communication with the outside islands, and the Robinsons "watch over" the population like mother hens. Writers and researchers find their efforts futile; the Robinsons absolutely refuse to cooperate.

ONE FULL-BLOODED Hawaiian who was raised on Niihau claims that the Robinson brothers are "good to the people," and agrees with his policy of strict segregation, "because the modern world is easily corruptible, and the Hawaiians are happy."

However, he feels that sooner or later "progress" will come to Niihau, because there are no Robinsons left to continue this policy.

"Since Statehood came to Hawaii, the syndicates on the mainland would like to exploit Niihau and the Hawiians, and Robinson is doing the best thing by not letting them in," he added.

Educational TV In Classrooms Expands In Use

By Mel Beechman

The utilization of closed circuit television in the classroom is rapidly expanding to aid students and faculty, claims Henry Leff, director of the radio and television department here.

Leff, who inaugurated the program in 1961-62, is proud of the progress being made. From July 1, 1965 to June 30, 1966, 832 hours were used by different departments. This semester, an increase of one-third more hours over last year is seen.

Presently, there are 32 TV sets located in various classrooms. The college closed circuit system uses channels three and eleven, with 13 also available. The more active users are health education, communications and reading classes.

A new participant this semester is the hotel and restaurant division which has a self-contained, remote control TV setup with cameras and monitors assembled in their small amphitheater.

New in Science Hall is the addition of two mobile consoles and two 25-inch professional monitors which can be moved from room to room. These are used mostly by the dental, X-ray and chemistry departments. Plans are being made to equip science 100 and 136 with TV units.

Some instructors are taping their lectures in the radio-television studio, so they can be shown repeatedly, to reach more students. The production of the taped lectures is handled by the radio-television students, under the guidance of Leff.

A problem is arising in the television-radio department, as space is getting smaller, and with a swarm of requests, there is a need for more students. The course is wide open for anyone interested in learning the intricacies of broadcasting and televising shows.

Medical Assisting Students Test Basic Steps To Cleaner Hands

Students in the field of medical assistance are probably healthier than those in other fields. Why?

Because more than 70 per cent of all communicable diseases are spread through dirty hands, and medical assisting students learn, as part of their curriculum, the little-known art of proper hand-washing.

Perhaps others could profit from this valuable lesson given by Harry-Jean Tiesselink, medical assisting instructor here.

A student must first get her hands wet, then liberally apply soap. Holding her hands under hot water, she vigorously scrubs both hands and wrists.

She lathers a second time to clean under fingernails and around her cuticles—again with hands under hot water.

Now, to insure that no leftover germs descend from arm to hand, she flexes her wrists so that all fingers are extended upward, thus enabling excess water to drip off.

Patting rather than rubbing, to eliminate chaffing, she begins to dry hands from the tips downward—again not once, but twice!

As a final tip, Mrs. Tiesselinck reminded her students to apply hand lotion generously after each hand washing. The results for this are pretty obvious, according to many a TV commercial.

The Observer

By William G. Pates

ELECTION DAY in America is one of the peaceful days of the year.

Across the nation on the second Tuesday in November every other year, millions of citizens of every conceivable racial, ethnic, religious, economic, professional, political and social class group from rural hamlet to metropolitan center quell their hostilities temporarily and go forth to participate, however briefly, in the greatest traditional sport in America, that of casting a ballot for those who are to represent them.

IN SOME PARTS of the country even the dead still vote.

Next Tuesday, November 8, 1966, these same people will open up their minds and let it be known to their neighbors, their local, state and federal government representatives and their fellow Americans as a whole just what they think, just where they stand on the issues of the day by voting for one or another individual running for various different offices.

The issues are great in number and complex in their diversity. As well, they are both international and statewide, national and local. However, there are some which are foremost and prevalent in the minds of the average voter. These are simply Vietnam, inflation, Negro unrest, taxes, crime, schools, housing, help for the aged, roads, pollution, conservation, and government spending, be it federal, state or local.

The one thing that is consistent, however, with all of these issues, is that they are not simple.

THAT DECISION made by the voter in the privacy of the voting booth can end long and glorious political careers and begin new ones. This year, that decision will either repudiate or condone the actions taken by the 89th Congress, the programs of the Great Society and decide the future of the two-party system in this country.

The results of this election could conceivably desecrate the Republican or the Democratic Party for that matter, depending on the results, for some time to come.

Ex-Congressman, Senator, Vice President, and Republican Presidential and California gubernatorial candidate Richard Milhaus Nixon believes that the Republicans have made the breakthrough and will come up with "the greatest comeback of any political party in this century" on November 8.

Needless to say, that would be quite an accomplishment, but it is quite doubtful that the Republicans will be able to achieve it. For the Grand Old Party has had two years to rebuild, to unite, to modernize, to present sound counter-proposals to the administrations as the Democrats did in the Eisenhower years. They have failed for the most part to do so and much of their gain next week will be due to the failings of the Democrats as much as anything that they have done themselves.

NO MATTER WHAT HAPPENS next week, the two-party system will survive if for no better reason than mere habit. Both major parties have encountered equal if not greater opposition landslides to the 1964 debacle and managed to come out of it without disappearing from the face of the earth.

During the New Deal years the Republicans were dormant but managed to pick up 72 Congressional seats in 1938. As well, the Democrats were literally nonexistent in the Reconstruction days of the 19th century and came back.

Only the final tabulation of votes can possibly determine who was the victor and the vanquished on these questions. But, even then, the answer is so vague, so abstract that no one can be fully sure of what the end result of any one individual's vote represents truthfully.

IT ALL BEGINS—that what is to some an almost God-given right to engage in the process of voting—in the old, largely Protestant and overwhelmingly Republican hamlets in the wooded, snow-covered hills of upper New England, and once it begins nothing can be done about it.

For the people were voting, their myriad philosophies, impulses, intuitions, educations, heritages, fears and hopes molding the answer. And as Theodore H. White said in his The Making Of The President 1960, the answer, the result ". . . was unpredictable . . . invisible, as always."

What effect these actions by the citizenry will have on the future of the United States or of each individual only time can tell.

Candidates For State Post Take Opposing Views

By Giuseppe Greco

George Moscone and James Walker, Democratic and Republican candidates respectively, for the State Senatorial post of the newly-created tenth district, took opposing stands on issues discussed by them in a debate here last Thursday.

"I am going to do something about my country," said Walker, opening the round. "I am not afraid of guys like Moscone who are backed by political machines."

The Rumford Fair Housing Act, Walker cited as unnecessary, because it is an obvious matter of civil rights. People are created equal and therefore any person, no mater what the color of his skin, "ought to get any house in any district without any difficulty," he said.

Stressing the fact that he is not afraid of any political machine, Walker emphasized the point that education needs more attention, more money and new changes. "We need more schools and new programs.

"Let us get new teachers who are really dedicated to their job and let us pay them more money."

"I am disappointed that so few students are present here today," said Moscone as soon as he reached the speaker's platform, "since they represent the future of politics in California.

"Today," he emphasized, "we need people in state government with legislative experience. We have done more in the Board of Supervisors for the City today than ever before."

In the field of social welfare, according to Moscone, California is way behind. About transportation, Moscone declared that the only solution to such a pertinent problem is the freeways and the Rapid Transit.

Moscone favors the creation of a commission to study the garbage problem even though at the moment he does not have an answer for it.

Walker also does, but refrained to be explicit about it.

Last Day To Drop That Big Hang-Up

Good Grief! All this preoccupation with the Great Pumpkin let Charlie Brown forget that today, November 2, 1966 AD, is the absolute last day to drop a class honorably, that is, without a bi-wing grade.

Ace students who may want to sit out a particular scholastic mission should report to their counselors today or take their chances on being shot down over enemy territory.

Intramural League Begins First Week With Fine Turnout

The Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural basketball league got underway in fine fashion last week when 14 out of the 16 teams entered showed up to play in the tournament's first round of action.

Jerd Lapham, AMS president, was on hand both nights.

Tuesday night's action of the interleague practice games saw some close games and some runaways. In the men's gymnasium, the Knobs rolled over Alpha Phi Epsilon, 32-12.

The next game of the night saw Hillel edge Alpha Sigma Delta, 37-29, behind Mike Vogel's 19 points.

Mike Duggan scored 16 points to pace The Guardsman to an easy 53-35 victory over Phi Delta.

The evening's only forfeit saw Charlie Brown's Gang pick up a victory over the Beta Bums.

In Wednesday night's games the same pattern followed the preceding night in fairly good order. Independent league favorite, Bearded Crusts, started the evening with a 48-27 rout of the Filipino-American Club.

Also Club league favorite Newman Club got off on the right foot with an easy 59-25 win over the Hotel & Restaurant team.

In the closest game of the two nights of action the Felony Squad edged the Irish, 51-49.

In Wednesday night's only forfeit, the Chinese Students won by default over the Red Mountaineers.

AWS Fashion Show Gets Into The Swing Of Things

City College women students can get a preview of the "In" fashions for campus activities this winter when the 14 Best-Dressed Coeds model apparel furnished by the Stonestown Merchant Association at the AWS Fashion Show and Tea from 3 to 5 p.m. tomorrow in Smith Hall.

The Swing Of Things will emphasize party dresses and ski attire, according to AWS President Diane Lattimer, who also commented that "pretty models, smart fashions and delectable refreshments will all be part of the program we have been planning for many weeks."

BOBBIE GOLDENBERG from the Town and Country Village in Marin County is to be the commentator for the show in which the following coeds will model:

Eddie Alley, Karen Anglin, Lynn Battaroni, Barbara Briscoe, Sheila Brown, Katie Difani, Jill Ferguson, Cynthia George, Cheryl Grantano, Susan Hong, Joanne Mavromatis, Janet Ottone, Mifrieda Smith and Linnette Wong. Susan Astaff is an alternate.

Results of large scale preparations will be 30 gallons of orange juice, 500 lemon and orange cookies, 400 cream puffs a la George, 300 small Danish pastries, 400 petit fours glacee, 400 brownies, 400 macaroons and 200 small canapes.

Taking their cue for ideas from the theme of the day, members of the modern dance classes, with Marshalene Taylor soloist, have choreographed a routine for the entertainment segment of the program which will follow the fashion show.

HIGHLIGHTS OF the afternoon will be the introduction of the Best-Dressed Coed and the freshman coed who achieved the highest grade-point average for the first midterm period.

The Inter-Sorority Council will present the scholarship award.

Laura Light, Gloria Dunn, Margaret Voita and Susan Conrad will assist with the distribution of refreshments to the anticipated crowd of 1000.

Twelve members of the Stonestown Merchant Association have cooperated with the AWS in presenting tomorrow's fashion part of the program.

College Custodian Retires After 20 Years Of Service

By John Janigian

A surprise party was held for Otto Mueller last Thursday by the Faculty Association, when the retiring custodian was honored upon completing 20 years and two months of service to the college.

"A real surprise," Mueller said. "I had no idea there would be a party."

"You are the ideal definition of an administrator, Warren White, president of the Faculty Association told Mueller; "you do your job well—so that we may do ours."

White later said, "We are honoring Mueller because he does his job quietly and efficiently.

"We are doing honor to one of our staff. He has been here longer than most of us, and we are all going to miss him."

Mueller, who will soon be 70, was awarded with a sum of money and a plant by the association.

Mueller was eulogized as one of a staff of men who devote their lives so that the college will always be neat and orderly to those who enter its doors.

With no hobbies to speak of, Mueller leads a quiet life in, what might seem to be, a glorious solitude. Because Mueller is a bachelor.

Living by himself, his major outside interest is working in a small wood shop. To repair and to build items for his personal use and for the use of the college brings a slight smile to Mueller's worn face.

"Those who have worked with Mueller will miss him, especially those of the faculty who turned out to honor him." That, in essence, was what the party "said."

Canadian Fuzz To Police 'The End' This Friday Night

The Canadian Fuzz will police the entertainment at The End, which is the theme of Friday night's dance scheduled in Smith Hall from 9 p.m. 'til midnight.

The End tops off Pledge Week festivities and is hosted by Beta Tau, according to Rich Heintz, the fraternity president.

Tomorrow's College Hour rally is also hosted by Beta Tau, and will spotlight The Morticians. The purpose of this rally, in addition to supplying entertainment for the students, will be to push the Friday night dance.

Advance ticket sales for The End will be held at the Silver Pole in the first floor of Science Hall for the rest of this week; tickets will also be sold at the door Friday night, Heintz said.

Tickets are worth $1.50 for singles and $2 for couples; all students are invited to attend, Heintz emphasized.

Fraternities participating in pledge activities are Beta Tau, Zeta Phi Sigma, Alpha Phi Epsilon, Phi Beta Delta, Alpha Kappa Rho and Alpha Sigma Delta, not necessarily in that order.

During yesterday's College Hour, pledges representing the six fraternities were having fun and games in the stadium (football field) in the form of three-legged races, pie-eating contests, egg-throwing contests, and other such standard fraternity games.

Fisher Vetoes Proposal, Blasts 'Mediocrity'

By Bill Fritz

In taking the first major executive counteraction of the semester, Associated Student President Bruce Fisher, on Monday of last week, imposed his veto on a bit of Student Council legislation.

In explaining his action, Fisher pointed out that council, in passing Resolution No. 5 two weeks ago, had acted beyond its restrictions under the AS Constitution.

The resolution in question, presented by Soph Councilman Paul Shutleworth and approved by a 9-4-0 vote on October 19, provided that the Presidents of the Associated Men Students, Associated Women Students, Frosh and Soph classes be allowed to introduce legislation in Student Council.

AS INTERPRETED BY Fisher, the resolution was a constitutional amendment, and should have been introduced as such. In concluding his remarks on the matter, Fisher recommended that if council feels this question is important enough to be reconsidered, the resolution should be rewritten and resubmitted as a proposed constitutional amendment.

Following last Wednesday's meeting, Fisher, in an "off-the-record" statement of discontent, made it very clear that he is "getting quite tired of the mediocrity of the work being turned out by Student Council."

And in a recommendation directed at council and cabinet, Fisher asked that "if student government is just one unit and two hours of work a week, then turn in your resignations."

IN LEGISLATIVE ACTION council unanimously approved a $750 budget allocation to the City College Tutorial Program. The funds, according to the Program's Student Coordinator, Fred Stewart, will aid in setting up a program completely independent of the San Francisco State Tutorial Program, with which the college has been affiliated this semester.

And acting upon a report by Recommendations Committee Chairman John Rhoten, council, by a vote of 1-11-0, failed to pass a recommendation to allow all presidents of approved, on-campus clubs preregistration beginning with the Spring, 1967 semester.

The recommendation, intended to eliminate class conflicts for club presidents during College Hour, was defeated mainly because council recognized the fact that anyone qualified to be the president of a club or organization should have a high enough grade-point average to guarantee early registration.

Radio Disc Jockey Collins Emcee At Grid Queen Contest

By Doug Boston

Al Collins, radio personality and comedian, was a guest master of ceremonies at the Football Queen Pageant and car parade held in wind and fog during College Hour last Thursday.

Collins, who has a daily radio program on KSFO, was invited to the college by Ron Appel, Campus Activities coordinator, and personal friend of Collins.

Collins, who has been working in San Francisco for the last six years, said that he really enjoyed coming to the college but he doesn't make these appearances often, because of his busy schedule. He called his appearance a "special occasion."

Before Collins began working in San Francisco, he worked for the National Broadcasting Company in New York. Collins said that he has been in radio and television work since 1941.

Besides being a well-known radio personality, Collins has also appeared on television. He also did the Tonight Show, working between the Jack Paar Show and the Johnny Carson Show.

Collins said that he became interested in radio and television while attending the University of Miami.

Collins emphasized that he really enjoyed coming to City College and, if anyone wanted to talk to him, he could be found "in the pneumonia ward of the nearest hospital."

Rams Butt T-Birds, 48-24, Take Over First Place

By G. Frank Cooney

City College's football powerhouse gained sole control of first place in the Golden Gate Conference and became California's prime candidate for the Junior Rose Bowl by clobbering a weak Merritt, 48-24, in a homecoming game here last Friday.

The Ram win, coupled with several crucial losses throughout the state, left them as one of only two California Junior Rose Bowl hopefuls with a perfect record.

It started out like it was going to be just another Ram massacre, and that's the way it ended. In spite of the fact that a winless Merritt piled up 24 points against the Nation's No. 1 team, the game was never even close.

CITY COLLEGE'S OFFENSIVE supermen hit paydirt the first three times they got the ball and that probably would have been enough had not Coach Dutch Elston decided to empty the bench late in the game.

Fortunately, by the time Elston did let everyone play, the game was well out of Merritt's reach, 48-6. The third stringers then proceeded to make Merritt look like the Nation's No. 1 team, giving up 18 points in the last two minutes.

But until that point, San Francisco pelted the Thunderbirds with everything, and everything worked. The Rams drew first blood on two ground play scores and then went to the air for two more.

Leading the way, both on the ground and in receiving, was All-American halfback O. J. Simpson, who added another 18 digits to his national scoring lead which now totals 110 in just six games.

SIMPSON, WHO PLAYED LESS than half the contest because he was bothered with the flu, high stepped his way for 100 yards in a dozen carries and caught two passes—both touchdowns—totaling 104 yards.

The Ram defensive front wall—Allan Cowlings, Mike Streich, Ralph Hodge, James McEldry—ruffled the T-Birds' feathers for minus yardage 11 of the 30 times Merritt tried the ground route. As a result, the Oaklanders netted a mere 69 yards on turf.

Not only Simpson, but every Ram running back, scored, fullback Glenn Baker on a 2-yard plunge and left half Milton Frank on a 4-yard trot. Two San Francisco ends also added points, Mike Carter on a 66-yard pass from Mullins and Bruce Rosenberg on a 12-yarder from Bill Price.

Win Over Chabot Moves Rams Up To Top Spot

City College's great undefeated football team became the first Northern California two-year college to be ranked No. 1 in the nation when Grid Wire out of Pasadena gave the Rams that position last week.

The rating, which determines which teams compete in the Junior Rose Bowl to be held in Pasadena December 10, moved the Rams up from their previous third-place ranking on grounds of their 34-19 win over highly-touted Chabot.

Contra Costa, whom the Rams play here Friday, is the only other conference team on the list, at No. 19.

Brenda Brooks Wins Football Queen Contest

By Rich Heintz

Brenda Brooks was introduced as the winner of the college's annual Football Queen contest last Friday between halves of the game against Merritt College.

Miss Brooks was representing the Negro Students Association.

The winning car decoration, selected at a football queen rally the day before the game, was entered by Alpha Sigma Delta fraternity, who has won the contest four consecutive years.

The four runners-up, or princesses, are Judy Good, representing Beta Tau fraternity; Dale Eisenberg, Hillel; Marianne Wolbertus, Phi Beta Delta fraternity, and Sheila Brown, Associated Men Students.

While Alpha Sigma Delta took a first, the Ram Ski Club came in second and the Newman Club third in the car decorations.

Judges of the queen contest were Fred Reisinger, chairman of the Council Of Organizations; Bruce Fisher, Associated Students president; James Wyatt, assistant dean of Student Activities; Arthur Samuels, sponsor of the Rally Committee and faculty member, and Melia Furgis, a faculty member. Miss Brisco, last year's queen, took part in judging but did not vote.

Council Of Organizations sponsors the annual queen contest, asking for petitions from all those who enter, while the Inter-Fraternity Council sponsors the car-decorating contest, judging cars which have entered a queen contestant.

Trophies were awarded by COO to the winning queen and her princesses, while IFC awarded the car trophies.

As a sidelight, the AMS entered its queen in a "cable car on wheels," bell and all.

Other entries included Linda Styles, Alpha Kappa Rho fraternity; Linda Harris, Alpha Phi Epsilon fraternity; Cheryle Ulrich, Alpha Sigma Delta; Susan Astaff, Associated Women Students; Barbara Fabela, Deseret (Mormon Club); Linda Pittman, Executive Council; Barbara Pittman, Freshman Class; Marty Whiting, International Relations Club, and Betty Clancy, Newman Club.

RA Wins Second Place For General Excellence

Forty-six students in the Recreation Association brought home a trophy for second place in the all-around participation department. This was the first time that City College of San Francisco won this honor.

Among the other honors received were first place in volleyball, and a second place in bowling.

Members of the volleyball team are Bill Matsy, Charles Cortez, Brenda Lee, Larry Pascal, Maria Gonzales and Linda VanLaak.

The bowling team was second with a 2046 series. Members of that team are Mark Tarlin, Stan Angel, Joe Barbarena and Sharon Harris.

The high games for men and women saw Francisco Aquillo, 231 men, and Miss Harris, 200, take the honors.

Tennis was represented for a third place by Shirley Brown.

Maracana Municipal Stadium, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, is the largest indoor basketball arena, seating 35,000.

Rojas Scores In Final Minutes For Booter Victory

Bob Rojas scored two goals to pace the City College soccer team to a 3-2 victory over San Mateo in the season's most important win for the Rams at Balboa stadium October 21.

The Rams were not in top shape for the Bulldog game as goalie Nelson Ortega and inside right Henry Meijia have slight muscle pulls in their kicking legs. Meijia's injury did not hamper him completely, and he scored the second Ram tally in the third period.

Both defenses played brilliantly throughout the entire game, and the contest was scoreless until Rojas shot one past the Bulldog goalie late in the first period.

Early in the second period San Mateo star Arnie Lygssand tied the score with a shot from his center forward position. Throughout the period both defenses played heads-up soccer, and at intermission the score was tied, 1-1.

It looked as if this important clash was going to end in a tie. However, Coach Ron Diederichsen and Rojas had other ideas. With less than three minutes left, Rojas crashed the net.

The Ram defenders, led again by Tom Sammuelson, Roger Sarriz and Connie Shiskin, held off any San Mateo scoring threats in the final minutes, and came out the victors of a very hard-fought battle, 3-2.

Coach Diederichsen had praise for all his men and didn't single out any outstanding man as the hero. "This was a team effort all the way; the offense and defense played very well together." The Ram mentor also had praise for San Mateo: "San Mateo is one of the fastest teams in the area, and it took some doing to defeat them."

THE BOOTERS MOVED a step forward toward the title as they defeated Menlo on October 25 for the second time this year. The win boosted the Red and Whites' record to an undefeated 6-0.

Coach Diederichsen had praise for the team's defense at this game. "The defense has not given up more than two goals in a game since the Rams gave up four against Merritt in the first game," Diederichsen added.

"We scored three goals against the Oaks, and I think we should have scored a few more, if we had had a few breaks," the veteran coach added.

Meijia was not in tip-top shape as he still is slowed down by his leg injury. Diederichsen is optimistic about Meijia's and Ortega's injuries however, and thinks they will be back for the Rams' next game.

Rugged Contra Costa Club Bent On Upset Here Friday

By Mike Duggan

Ranked first nationally, according to the latest Grid Wire release, the Ram football team meets 19th ranked Contra Costa at 2 p.m. Friday on the Ram field.

The stage is set for the final home game of the year. The highly-ranked Contra Costa Comets will be looking for an upset over the Rams and hope to take over first place, a position shared by the two teams after three weeks of league play.

If the Comets' dreams of knocking off the Rams are possible, they must stop All-American O. J. Simpson. He hasn't been stopped yet, and neither have the Rams. The great halfback scored 92 points in the first five games this year. That is good for better than 18 points a game, a total some teams would be happy with.

THE COMETS, like the Rams, had three victories and no defeats after three weeks of Golden Gate Conference play.

Contra Costa has beaten Chabot, 25-0, Foothill, 26-6, and Merritt, 28-18. They held Chabot and Foothill to a total of only six points. Against those same two teams, the Rams yielded a total of 32 points. The Comets had four wins and one loss overall, for they were beaten by Sacramento, 25-18, in a practice game.

Comet Head Coach Vince Majorana has 15 lettermen returning from last year's squad. Linemen Lee Becker, Mike Alcott and Bill Leone lead the Comet forces up front, but the Rams must worry more about the dangerous Contra Costa backs.

The quarterback is former DeAnza High ace Butch Whyburn, who stands 6-4 and possesses a fine throwing arm. He lets his runners do most of the work, and they have two of the best.

HALFBACK LLOYD MADDEN has the moves and speed to break loose at any time from any place on the field. Despite his size (5-9, 165), Madden is bringing back memories of the great Travis Williams to Comet fans.

Williams held most of the conference records for rushing and scoring until last season when O. J. Simpson broke every record in the book.

Against Merritt, Madden had touchdown runs of 77, 5 and 1 yards. He played his high school ball for Richmond High, and must rank second only to O. J. Simpson as the league's most dangerous break-away threat.

The other running back is McKinley Reynolds (6-3, 215), formerly an All-State basketball player for the Comets two years ago. He has made the switch to football, and already has an 85-yard kickoff return to his credit.

RAM COACH DUTCH ELSTON says that the Comets, right now, are as good as any team in the league. Elston remarked that any team can go from good to bad in the matter of a week and vice-versa, and also stated that the Rams cannot afford to take any team lightly.

Elston had some rather bad news when he commented that two of the better defensive players in the league would be seeing limited action for the Rams.

Morello is defensive signal caller, and is one of the top linebackers in the conference. His spot may be taken by John Deschler, who was the outstanding lineman in the Rams' victory over Chabot, or else corner backer Gred Pedrin will move over to the middle.

Pedrin, former All-City star at Washington High, has teamed up with Morello to form two of the league's best defenders at the linebacking position.

Hodge, besides doing the kicking off for the Rams, is definitely an All-Conference possibility at the tackle spot. His agility, speed, and size make him hard to handle for opposing teams.

Cagers Get Serious With Battle For First String Spots

The attitude of many basketball players is getting very serious partly because the roster has been trimmed to 16 players and mainly because they are battling for positions on the first string.

Last year's returning first-string players, Paul Batmale, Willie Wise and Gene Williams, seem likely to find starting positions on the team.

Batmale has shown good judgment in ball handling and seems to have seasoned over last year. Wise has retained his fine shooting ability of last year. He was the leading scorer during practices and had the highest percentage from the floor.

Williams, though, isn't progressing as rapidly as Coach Sid Phelan had expected. "So far he hasn't shown much of his fine speed and defensive abilities," Phelan said, but he feels that Williams' slow start may be due partly to illness, and he believes Williams can regain his form of last year.

The competition is keen for the other starting berths. Larry Gray, Bill Locke, Gary Bradford, Paul Berger and Mel Jones have shown a lot of hustle and seem resolved to make the starting team.

Phelan is in need of a statistician who can attend all Ram games.

The person may be either a man or a woman, he said, but must be eligible for the student work program. It is possible to earn up to $80 monthly, and transportation will be provided for many road games. Further information is available at the placement office, S-188, or through Phelan.

RAMBLINGS ...But Talented Line Makes It Possible

By G. Frank Cooney

QUITE a bit of attention has always been given to City College's speedy halfbacks, "jumping" ends and dead-eye quarterbacks.

Let us not kid you, but there are others on the team with talent.

Take, for example, the offensive talents of tackle Ruby Jackson, whose 6-5, 285 frame has yet to meet its match while opening those gaping holes through which the Ram halfbacks run to glory.

Opening holes, however, has not always been the main task of City College tackles. As a matter of fact, it is due to the offensive talents of one former tackle that the Rams still have their undefeated string intact.

ONE, JOE ROSS, whose 6-5, 265 mass of muscle has departed the San Francisco picture, should be remembered as City College's highest scoring tackle.

Perhaps a few still remember Ross' 11-yard touchdown reception over the muck at Diablo Valley last year.

The play was made possible by lining up the players in such a way as to leave the left tackle dangling on the end of the line, thus, an "end."

ANYWAY, THAT 11-YARD touchdown saved face for the cocky Ram club, which, despite all its potential, was being bested by cellar-dwelling Diablo Valley.

Ross' touchdown made the score 18-18, where it would be when the final gun ended the conference season.

And it wasn't the first time for "tackle-eligible" Ross, either.

Back in 1964 Ross made a dozen yards look like 20, but he did the job on the receiving end of a Henry Scott touchdown pass that helped the Rams slaughter the Bulldogs, 46-12.

* * *

ALTHOUGH THIS year's linemen may not have the pass-catching grace of Ross, they certainly know how to do a good day's work, lineman style.

Push, push, push, and usually something has got to give, like the opponents.

Two of the Rams' tough linemen are perhaps this year's smallest, the Deschler brothers.

Between them they average, say 200 pounds, and they make their 240-pound opponents believe it. It's purely a case of knowing how to use what one has.

We say that John and Mike Deschler are small, but this is, of course, comparative. The rest of the line is made up of monsters, comparatively.

On the defensive side of the line, the space between the ends averages something like 240-plus poundage.

DEFENSIVE STARS Allan Cowlings (225) and Ralph Hodge (230) did the bulk of tackling on Foothill's minus-23 net rushing type Owls. Able assistance did come from Mike Streich (260) and also James McEldry (260).

The linebacking chores have been well done by tough John Morrello, who was an offensive specialist in high school.

Unlike Ross, these guys may never be called "Mr. Touchdown," but if it weren't for their efforts perhaps there would be no touchdowns.

Football A La Femme

Is it too late to halt the mounting wave of feminism?

Is there no way to focus the spotlight back on the softer and more delicate aspects of a woman's behavior?

Is there no place where a woman may take out her frustrations other than on a football field?

It seems not.

Highlighting Bay Area sports activities this Saturday will be a gridiron battle pitting a representative group of City College's feminae against an always-tough assemblage of College of San Mateo women students.

This first annual San Francisco-San Mateo Powder Puff football game will be held immediately following the scheduled league tilt at San Mateo's Stadium.

The eager Ramettes, coached by former track star, James Wyatt, known, in his more serious moments, as Assistant Dean of Student Activities, will attempt to maintain the winning tradition of Ram grid squads.

Leading the spirited fans and providing a pleasant distraction will be Head Song Boy Bouncing Bruce Fisher, and reigning over the proceedings will be a yet-to-be-chosen Football King.

It's bound to be a grand day for the ladies, provided Max Factor can cover up bruises and facial abrasions and provided that the rosy hue of blood doesn't clash with the campus color coordinated fall fashions—W.R.F.

New Rule Prohibits Teams From Bowl Game Action

Beginning next season, California two-year college football teams will be prohibited from playing in post-season invitational bowl games. This decision was reached at the Annual California Junior College Association Convention October 27.

Held in Los Angeles, the convention decided that instead of using the existing set-up, playoff games would be conducted, under the supervision of the association, to determine state champions in two categories: large and small colleges.

City College, represented by President Louis G. Conlan, Coordinator Oscar Anderson and Dean James Billwiller, voted in favor of the proposal. "Our physical education department wanted to see it passed," Conlan said.

Approval of the new plan sounded the death knell for some ten two-year college bowl contests in the state starting in 1967.

With a two-thirds majority required, the voting was extremely close. Of 83 colleges, the balloting went 57-19 in favor of the proposal with two colleges abstaining and five not represented at the convention.

This yearly conference, where all the state's two-year colleges' administrators meet to discuss problems and proposals, did not specifically affect City College except in the case of this proposal. City College's football team stands a good chance of being invited to its first and the last Junior Rose Bowl game this year.

"Of major importance to all the two-year colleges, and an issue which was debated and is still unresolved, is the proposal of the formation of a state board which would control the policies of all two-year colleges.

"It met resistance because many of the colleges think that their local autonomy would be lost. They are in favor of the formation of local boards," Conlan said.

"Many of the agreements passed can be easily assimilated by the college so there isn't too much of a problem," he explained.—S.H.

H&R HONORS FOOTBALL TEAM

The gridders will be honored by the cafeteria staff tomorrow with special lunches and items to meet the theme of the day.

Students are welcome to come down and meet the team members, who will be dressed in civvies. Although it may be difficult to distinguish the players without their numbers, there will be programs at the Junior Rose Bowl.

Negro Revolution Topic Of Hayakawa Talk Tomorrow

By Giuseppe Greco

Samuel I. Hayakawa, professor of English at San Francisco State College, will speak on the topic The Immediate Tasks Of The Negro Revolution during College Hour tomorrow in the theater.

Professor Hayakawa is also founder and editor of ETC: A Review of General Semantic, a quarterly magazine.

Hayakawa was born in Vancouver, Canada, and attended public schools in Calgary and Winnipeg. He was graduated from the University of Manitoba and received his M.A. in English from McGill University, Montreal. He obtained his Ph.D. in American Literature and Linguistics at the University of Wisconsin.

HE HAS TAUGHT at the Illinois Institute of Technology, at the University of Wisconsin and at the University of Chicago. He has been at San Francisco State College since 1955.

In 1959, Hayakawa lectured at the University of Montreal; in 1960 he toured Europe and lectured in Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Germany as an American Specialist sponsored by the U.S. State Department.

In 1961 he was an Alfred P. Sloan Visiting Professor at the Menninger School of Psychiatry in Topeka, Kansas.

Professor Hayakawa has written many books. Among them are Language In Action, Language In Thought And Action, Symbol Status And Personality, and The Use And Misuse Of Language.

ABOUT HIS BOOKS on language, Professor Hayakawa feels that "everyone needs to have a habitually critical view towards language—his own as well as that of others—both for the sake of his personal well being and for his adequate functioning as a citizen."

His study of semantics has led him outside the field of linguistics and into the social sciences such as mass communication, anthropology, psychoanalysis and psychology.

Hayakawa is secretary-treasurer and former president of the International Society for General Semantics, is a fellow of the American Psychological Association, the American Association for the Advancement of Science and the International Council of Psychologists.

He is also a member of the Society for the Psychological Study of Social Issues, Modern Languages Association, American Dialect Society, American Sociological Association and the Speech Association of America.

SAMUEL I. HAYAKAWA will lecture on The Immediate Tasks Of The Negro Revolution at College Hour tomorrow in the theater.

Educators Rate Most Two-Year Colleges Higher In Teaching Than Universities

By Viggo Petersen

The quality of education at a two-year college is better than that of a university because the two-year college "instructor's primary job is to teach."

This was the contention of a number of California educators who recently surveyed the achievements of two-year college students who transferred as juniors to various institutions around the state and nation.

THE EDUATORS conducting the survey found that, compared to students who have entered four-year institutions immediately after high school, the two-year college transfer does as well, if not better, than his peers at the four-year state college or university.

This, the educators believe, is because the two-year college instructor does exactly what he is paid to do—to teach.

The university professor, they said, is often distracted from his teaching responsibilities by research projects, such as the vast amount of scientific research which is conducted at the University of California. Therefore, he is not as effective an instructor as is the two-year college instructor who devotes all his energies to instructing.

MANY FRESHMAN and sophomore classes at universities are turned over to teaching assistants, usually graduate students, who are earning their way to higher degrees through teaching.

The freshman or sophomore enrolled in a class conducted by such an assistant does not receive the benefits of qualified instruction.

The survey found that the best students are those who were eligible to enter a college or university after high school, but instead of going directly on to that college, enrolled first in the two-year college.

This finding was based on an overall average of transfer students' grade-point averages and memberships in honor societies.

Also the educators praised the two-year college for its ability to assist students who were ineligible to enter the university after graduation from high school.

ALTHOUGH THESE students do not do as well after transfer as other university students, the educators praised the two-year college for giving the ineligible student a chance to make up inadequate grade points. And in many cases the educators said, while attending a two-year college the ineligible high school student has recovered from insufficient grades in high school and been able to go on to earn a degree.

Of the students interviewed during the survey, a high percentage indicated they were satisfied with their two-year college experience and "would do it again."

Area Six Proposes Quarter System For Two-Year Colleges

Conversion of California two-year colleges to the quarter system was among the three resolutions adopted at the Area Six Conference in Campbell on October 29 by the various delegates representing colleges in the area.

Another resolution made at the conference is to exempt two-year colleges from the law which forbids secondary schools in California to sponsor fraternities and sororities on campus.

TWO-YEAR COLLEGES at present are governed under the secondary school system, thus making fraternities and sororities illegal on campus unless they meet certain provisions.

The resolutions will be presented before the California Junior College Student Government Association statewide convention of which this college will be the host on December 1, 2 and 3.

Bruce Fisher, Associated Student president and one of the CJCSGA delegates, stated that if passed at the convention, the resolutions will be brought before the organization of two-year college presidents and then on to the California Legislature.

EXISTENCE OF BOARDS composed of an equal number of faculty members and students to act in an advisory capacity to the administration was the third recommendation also made at the conference.

One other point proposed at the conference is that at least two units of credit be granted to those students holding a student government office.

The recommendations, however, will not be passed on to the convention.

The delegates representing City College at the statewide CJCSGA conference to be held at the Hilton Hotel include Jim Soletti, state president; Judy Guild, state secretary; Helen Ferentinos, information chairman; Percy Jones, Chris Loo, Paul Shuttleworth, Joe Parnell and Fisher.

Cynthia George Wins AWS Best-Dressed Coed Title

By Lori Pittman

Cynthia George and Lorraine Malaspina received the honors at Our Fairest Ladies Fashion Show and Tea sponsored by the Associated Women Students last Thursday in Smith Hall.

Miss George was selected as Best-Dressed Coed at City College. She is a graduate of Balboa High School where she participated in student government and Girl Scouts. This is her third semester here. A pre-med major, she plans to continue her education at the University of California.

CYNTHIA GEORGE, winner of the Best-Dressed Coed contest last Thursday, also was a model at last spring's fashion show.

The Inter-Sorority Countil award for the best grade-point average of an entering woman student was presented to Miss Malaspina mid-point during the tea for her 3.7 first mid-term average.

Miss Malaspina is a graduate of the Immaculate Conception Academy. In high school she was Girls' Athletic Association President.

The Best-Dressed Coed was selected by a panel of judges composed of faculty members, a member of the previous semester's fashion show and a student. She was selected on a point system based on her personality, poise, walk and smile.

Edna Pope, a member of the faculty, presented the 13 finalists and Miss George with certificates and pins.

Besides Miss George, the 13 finalists included Edie Alley, Karen Anglin, Lynn Battaroni, Barbara Briscoe, Jill Ferguson, Sheila Brown, Katie Difani, Cheryl Grantano, Joanne Marvomatis, Janet Ottone, Alfrieda Smith, Linette Wong and Susan Astaff.

AWS will also sponsor a beauty seminar on the "natural look" to be held during College Hour tomorrow in S-200.

A representative from Yardley of London will speak to women students concerning general grooming.

Student Council Votes To Change Name Of Ram Field

The college football field, unofficially known as Ram Field, may soon be christened with an official name, stated Paul Shuttleworth, student councilman.

A resolution formulated by Shuttleworth to have a committee select several names for the field and to have the student body vote on them has been passed by Student Council by a 10-1-1 vote.

Since the field belongs to the City of San Francisco, a delegation from the college will place the selected name before the Board of Education which must approve the title before it is adopted. A favorable response is expected from the board because the name will have been chosen by a majority of the students, Shuttleworth said.

One of the names suggested is John F. Kennedy Field. "Kennedy had a strong influence on our generation, and this would be a living tribute to a great man," Shuttleworth stated. However, he said he was informed that "such a prominent name in politics was bound to offend someone and would not pass the board."

Ram Field has also been suggested for the official name of the field because it has been known by that title and because the title has no political implications.

Computer Needs Correct Address

The correct addresses of all students are needed for the computer registration system since all residence cards must be sent downtown to be keypunched during Christmas vacation, Gertrude Somerville, registrar, said today.

The keypunch process takes two weeks to be completed and must be done by a specialized company, Miss Somerville explained.

Since residence cards are not allowed out of the registrar's office except during vacation, it is important that accurate addresses be on record before the start of Christmas vacation, Miss Sommerville emphasized.

How Many More Will Have To Be 'Remembered' Next Year

SURVIVORS of Labor Day and other past three-day weekends will get another chance this weekend, when Friday will be a day off from instruction at the campus.

The reason for the shutdown this Friday is Veterans Day, and some thought should be given to the nation's vets, as well as to those in the making over in Southeast Asia, and how to get them out.

But it's pretty hard to knock the Asian crusades when someone breaks out Old Glory and lets it dangle from his window and speaks of "Our boys out there fighting Communism" and "fighting for world peace."

And yet, although one doesn't want to seem un-American, one can't help witnessing the troop shipments and the death tolls and juxtapositioning this data to progress made and wondering. How many more will there be to be "remembered" Veterans Day, 1967.

So what's the point of Veterans Day. Is it a convenient time (this year) for a three-day weekend, are the citizens honoring the former soldiers of the land somehow, or is it a good time to replay some John Wayne films on television. Who knows?

Originally it was Armistice Day, which was a time to commemorate the end of the First World War, November 11, 1918. Veterans Day should be a time for reflection as to why there are such persons as veterans and is there any way to cut down on the need for creating more veterans in the future.

Does He Or Doesn't He?

By Connie Skipitares

FOR ALMOST three decades now, America has witnessed the pants (otherwise known as slacks, capris, or stretch) worn by women, but only recently has attention been focused on an equally awe-stirring emergence of a reversal in trend—specifically, the exploitation of the beauty cosmetic market by glamour-seeking men!

Skin creams, body creams, masks, moisturizers, home hair coloring, and hair spray for men are no longer being treated with improbable humor as their popularity spreads.

TV commercials and the press are saying that men's stylists are besieged by customers begging for the packs, dryers and such that hither-to have been sold exclusively to the ladies.

RUMORS STILL HAVE it that Sam Huff, the Washington Redskin linebacker, got a spray set before a game, and that Governor Otto Kerner of Illinois was given "a sort of bouffant hairdo" for a campaign appearance.

To top them all off, a beauty salon for men in New York (which caters to virile types like Frank Sinatra and Anthony Quinn) has a $50 treatment that includes a hair wave sprayed with a scented set, an eyebrow tint, and a "sudden-youth facial!"

Is all this proof suggesting that our nation has turned foppishly effeminate overnight?

If anything, perfume sales alone can attest to it!

The boom in male cosmetics is sweeping the country at such great speed that manufacturers are finding it extremely difficult to meet the demands of their impatient customers.

THE MEN HAVE literally stolen feminine cosmetics and beauty aids in a desperate attempt to get even with the female, so now, after years of being the target of embarrassing chit-chat, it's the women's turn to ask those loaded questions:

Does he or doesn't he tint his hair?

Is it or isn't it a hair-piece parked atop his cranium?

What is that fragrance he spilled all over himself this morning?

On hair tinting, there are some obvious clues. He probably tints if —his 5 o'clock is salt and pepper stubble and his thatch is black. Also, watch for his white roots. These show when he's due for a cut-and-dye session at the beauty works.

HAIRPIECES CAN be easy or difficult to detect, depending on how much the male with thinning hair or bald pate put out for his beauty aid. Inexpensive ones are most easily spotted. Usually, these look like a cap of hair. The real giveaway: even in a wind, every hair stays in place.

The more expensive hairpieces almost defy detection. There are crew cuts, long stringy silhouettes and curly locks. Hair around the edges, carefully and cleverly styled, looks amazingly natural.

The truest test of all, however, is revealed in the manner with which the victim attacks an itch of the scalp.

In the fragrance department, a woman would probably never guess some of the wild names manufacturers have assigned to their numerous creations. Such colognes as Milkman's Magnificence, Meter-Reader's Blush, Bus Driver's Delight and Steelworker's Fire have become a "must" in every man's primping cabinet.

The manly fragrances are about as overpowering as smoke from big black cigars. But, perfume and cologne are not the only types of fragrances that give away a suspected cosmetic-addict.

THE SCENT MIGHT be from his powder (to conceal bags under eyes); from his superscented shave lotion; from his hairspray (yes, "he" is using that staple from "her" beauty chest, too); or even from his clear nail-polish (seems in nailpolish were designed for "her" but that doesn't bar men from taking advantage of the development, does it?).

It seems as if it's only a matter of time before men start carrying purses in which to hold their vast array of beauty items!

Again, we repeat: Has this nation turned foppishly effeminate? Is America's newest minority group comprised of only those adult males untouched by rejuvenating lotions, fragrances and dyes?

One upholder of the traditional masculine stance thinks not, contending that the men buying these cosmetics are ordinary businessmen, tough, and aggressive about getting ahead. They think that youth is the vital ingredient in the competition for jobs and for customers, and they regard every furrow and gray hair as their mortal enemy.

To them, statistics revealing that one half of America is under 25 is cause enough to run to the hair-dresser for "a shot of instant youth!"

AS MUCH AS old age and uselessness are feared in our society, a regression back to youth only serves to point up a general dissatisfaction with life. A man should not only be proud of his age and his profession—he should "smell" of it!

If he is a banker or a lawyer, he should smell of bills and briefs; if a doctor, of antiseptic solutions, and if a teacher, of chalk and clapped erasers.

The smells, like the marks of middle age are proof that these men have been looking at life, not at the mirror!

Football Queen Brenda Brooks

Brenda Brooks (right), this year's Football Queen, is in her first semester here.

Originally from Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, she transferred to City College from Temple University, a business administration oriented college in Pennsylvania.

A major in accounting, she works part-time for the State of California.

Miss Brooks was very active in high school. At Dobbins Technical High School in Philadephia from which she was graduated with a B average, she was treasurer and participated in YWCA activities and cheerleading. Her favorite subjects are mathematics, English and typing.

The coronation of Miss Brooks as Football Queen took place in ceremonies held between halves at the football game against Merritt College October 28. She was sponsored by the Negro Students Association.

Peace Corps Success

Volunteers Gain Base For Decisions, Contribution

By Richard Kilski

Some men view the ascent toward world peace as hopeless; others could care less about even making the attempt. Yet, there are a few men who possess an unveering faith in Man's struggle to live at peace with all nations and, even more important, are motivated to do something about it.

One such man was the late President John F. Kennedy, who envisioned a Peace Corps—an organized body of young men and women, who would willingly volunteer two years of their lives in foreign service —as an expedient in achieving this goal.

In speaking of the objectives of the Peace Corps, Gerald McMahon, a graduate of City College and four-year veteran of Peace Corps service in Colombia, pointed out that the corps was not established with the sole intention of helping others:

"One aim of the Peace Corps," he stated, "is to help us help ourselves, to give us better understanding of our own society, so we can help others."

ALTHOUGH the Peace Corps has been in existence for well over five years, and its membership presently consists of close to 12,000 volunteers, many of whom are scattered over 48 countries of the world (a total of 13 million square miles) it is still battling with the same old enigmas it encountered in the beginning.

Ironically, one of the major problems, as stated by McMahon, who is presently serving with the Peace Corps training staff at San Francisco State College, seems to begin here on the home front and generates itself through "a general lack of understanding of national events among the American people."

Posing a possible solution to the problem, he suggested the American people should begin by "breaking the misconceptions we have concerning foreign countries" and by "taking an interest in world conditions."

IN OPPOSITION to the popular contention, held by some critics, that the Peace Corps is merely "an extension of the American Foreign Policy arm," McMahon stated that, if anything, the corps is "apolitical."

"Although we do have some effect on politics," he added, "change is determined by the people."

Having been invited to join the Peace Corps shortly after graduating from City College, McMahon commented on the corps, with regard to the two-year college student:

"To the student with no real sense of direction, no understanding of the opportunities of the world," he said, "the Peace Corps offers a foundation on which to make decisions. Also, it gives him a chance to make a contribution."

As it says in the Peace Corps recruiting pamphlets, "As a Peace Corps Volunteer, you won't change the conditions of the world, but you may be able to help improve them."

tutorial program recognizes that the profound educational needs of some children of San Francisco can no longer be ignored," Leighty said.

The City College independent program will start, hopefully, in the Spring semester of 1967 and will continue for 22 weeks. Further information on the program and its workings can be obtained at Bungalow 5.—S.H.

College Aims At Independent Tutorial Plan

Anyone concerned with the complexity of problems facing this city and nation usually concludes that the final solution in every case must be education.

But it happens that the people directly affected by these problems find it almost impossible to remove themselves from the cause.

It is the aim of the City College Tutorial Program to, in its own small way, break the vicious cycle of poverty which leers over many sections of the city.

During this semester, the program has operated in conjunction with the San Francisco State College Tutorial Program, started last spring. Next semester, however, City College will have its own tutorial program, separate and distinct from State's.

An independent program would allow the tutorial staff at City College to operate without being bound to policies set by State; it would allow a more harmonious operation and would give student leaders on campus fixed responsibilities in determining policy.

About the program itself, said Howard Leighty, a tutorial staff member, "Everything in the program revolves around the needs of the tutee. If he needs something, we try to provide it for him."

The program centers around those children who are in need of assistance and who come from low income families, the ones who come from crowded or broken homes, the ones who lack motivation or interest in schooling.

"We in the program want to instill a sense of incentive and enthusiasm for education that might otherwise never come to the student. We want to make our tutees anxious for the chance to expand their knowledge and feeling of hope. If we can do this, it's worth all the time we spend," Leighty emphasized.

The program now has about 30 students working as tutors. When the college starts its own program, Leighty said that he hopes for 60.

The tutor must expect to sacrifice at least six to eight hours a week with a child—in two-hour sessions twice a week and a field trip every second or third week.

"We want students who are willing to commit themselves to their tutees," Leighty declared, and "what we don't want are those students who'll drop the program the minute the going gets tough."

City College is the only two-year college in California with a program of such ambition and scope. "The

Around The World With David Smith

By B.T.

SINK or swim, college just isn't for everybody. But then, some people are real daredevils.

David Smith, 28, has made at least nine attempts at college from here to Paris, France. He attended this college in 1957-58.

Now he realizes that there is really nothing wrong with his occupation-hobby of being a long-distance swimmer. At the moment, it is doubtful whether he returns to the college circuit again.

Olympic swimmers compete in contests that end in minutes. Smith swims for hours and hours, and sometimes, under very odd conditions.

HIS MOST RECENT feat was that of swimming for miles in a 12 by 16-foot wire cage. The cage was five feet deep and pulled by a boat. It protected Smith against sharks while he swam the Gibralter Strait.

Smith began his career as a swimmer, without realizing his potential, when he swam from San Francisco to Marin County, for a $200 wager. From there he swam 63 miles down the Sacramento River, and 30 miles up the Russian River, and from Aquatic Park to Candlestick Park.

He swam from Capri to Napoli, from Morocco to Asia, the Suez Canal, and broke the world's record at the Olympic Club here in 1965, by swimming 2142 laps, or 40½ miles, in 24 hours.

Smith holds the Moroccan long-distance record. He swam 30 kilometers in 8 hours and 30 minutes. "I swam in the fog in Moraeco, and accidentally, right into the Moroccan Army's target area—that was very frightening," Smith said.

"IT'S NOT SO EASY. On the Capri-Napoli race, helicopters had to shoot sharks near me. It is painful work. After five to seven hours, my joints ache, I'm cold, and by the end of the swims, I'm exhausted, and sometimes, I need hospitalization," he explained.

Smith was recently on the television production, To Tell The Truth. He appeared as the real David Smith, the long-distance swimmer. He has been offered a job in London to make movies in Madrid, but has not considered the offer yet.

In February he plans to tour Argentina, Canada, North Africa, Spain, Yugoslavia, India and the Orient.

"I WANT TO GO into bullfighting. In Spain I was invited to learn how to fight bulls. One afternoon I had instruction, went into a bull ring and lasted 10 seconds.

"That was the moment of truth. I was thrown in the air, and needed an operation on my knee. That bull gored me! I think I'll stick to swimming. It's a good way to get around the world.

"However, something compels me to return to the bullring," Smith said.

MORE HAWAIIANA: More about the tiny island of Niihau, Robinson's Island—There are no telephones on Niihau, for pigeons are the only means of direct communication from the island from Kauai to Niihau.

Aylmer F. Robinson, the owner of Forbidden Island, must be notified weeks in advance before school and health officials are allowed to inspect facilities on the island.

Occasionally, an ambitious reporter would sneak over by means of a small boat. Robinson soon learned about it. The loyal Hawaiians would release a homing pigeon to him with the message—an intruder.

The Observer

By William G. Pates

IT'S ALL just a matter of waiting—waiting and hoping.

This is how it is Election Night for the voters as well as the candidates when the polls finally close and the tabulating begins. Hopefully, as far as the candidate, his campaign manager and his supporters are concerned, all that could possibly have been done toward achieving his election has been done and there is nothing more to do—for there is nothing more that can be done.

VOTERS WAIT SERENELY, privately or en masse, to see if their candidates, those in sympathy with or in support of their views and political philosophy, have been elected by their fellow voters thereby upholding the integrity of their beliefs. Meanwhile each candidate waits and hopes that he is the recipient of the people's greatest gift—besides taxes—their votes.

For they hold the key to power and whether or not the privileges of power are to be retained by one individual or another, or a transition is to take place.

Yesterday it all began, as it always does, at midnight in the ol' woods of New Hampshire and from there across the Appalachian mountain country to the Tennessee and Mississippi River valleys and beyond.

Americans vote, or more emphatically those Americans who do vote will do so anytime, anyplace, anywhere. Others, in fact nearly 40 per cent of those eligible, never vote anytime, anyplace, anywhere. There is seemingly a great deal of injustice involved here, for there are many who would like to vote but can't, while there are at the same time many who can but do not.

THERE ARE THOSE apparently who are complacent enough and willing enough to let others make the decisions for them in the elections, to elect Governors, Senators, Congressmen, State Legislators and pass propositions that will affect their lives and the lives of the rest.

Of course this peculiar reluctance to participate in one of the functions of a supposedly free society is not completely self-imposed. For instance in 1961 the Virginia political machine, under the control of the late Senator Harry F. Byrd, was so successful in discouraging registration and voting through retainment of the poll tax and other devices that only 17 per cent of the state's voting-age population cast ballots in the gubernatorial election.

VOTE AND THE CHOICE is yours. Don't vote and the choice is theirs. So often this simple now almost cliched statement is used to convey to people the necessity to take part, to realize that one vote does make a difference.

The mere fact that over-all in the 1964 general election alone, one out of every nine candidates for the House, one of every five candidates for the Senate and one of every four candidates for Governor, won by less than 52 per cent of the vote, should be enough to convince skeptics that one vote does make a difference.

You can be sure that it made a difference last night too. Across the country in the snow, rain, fog and cold they went, those who cared, to schools, libraries, churches, post offices, firehouses and town halls to cast the one ballot that would make the difference, not only in the election itself but in their own ability to carry on the responsibilities of an American citizen.

IN PRESIDENTIAL election years there are key precincts, key geographical regions which are indicators of a national trend or tide that could or would be conceivably thought to be sweeping the nation. There are no such indicators in off-year elections thus providing a greater mystery, and in many cases greater anxiety, as to the outcome of the races and what "meaning" the results will have on both the future of policy and achievement in the nation and the states as well as any one "political animal," whether they be favorable to the individual or not.

Voters are continually searching for "the man who" that could be molded into the best Swiftian expostulation of a national leader . . . "that whoever could make two ears of corn, or two blades of grass to grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before, would deserve better of mankind, and do more essential service to his country, than the whole race of politicians put together."

They searched last night. We wonder if they found him.

Fisher Reveals Plans For Better Student-Faculty Communication

South Reservoir A Second Pit?

By Steven Hara

Some students haven't heard much from the Associated Student President Bruce Fisher. They've heard so little, in fact, they are beginning to wonder whether he really exists.

Yes, Virginia, there is a Bruce Fisher and whether you know it or not he is working for the benefit of the students although he is facing a good number of problems.

"One of the thinks I'd like to do is revise the present structure of the student government. It's a problem to try to do anything when the government is so complex that red tape slows work to a standstill," Fisher said.

"Still," he added, "one of our functions in student government is to encourage student participation in the workings of college government, so by necessity our organization has to be large to accommodate the numbers. And yet, because of the sheer number of participants, efficiency is lost."

FISHER IS WORKING on a student-faculty program where students and instructors could meet informally and discuss problems or issues of the day.

"A good relationship like this is essential to stability and unity in a college of this size, he said.

Work on this project is being processed carefully because a shaky program is worse than none at all.

"If we work out one well-thought project that lasts, I should certainly think it better than, say, 15 slipshod programs that fold in one semester," Fisher commented, adding,

"Whatever we work out, you can be sure it will be very informal in nature. Maybe something in the way of a picnic or a student-faculty hour."

ASSOCIATED STUDENT President Bruce Fisher does really exist and is working on the good number of problems facing student government.

THERE HAVE BEEN questions as to the possibility of opening the second reservoir for student parking. Fisher has an answer—it will be opened, but not right in the near future.

Two new permanent buildings will be constructed. One of them will be a lab and classroom structure near Arts Hall.

The other will be a student services building adjacent to Smith Hall.

While all this construction is going on Cloud Circle will be closed to all parking. It will undergo a facelifting with trees, grass and a walkway. To compensate for the loss of parking space, the second reservoir—or pit—will be opened.

On the other hand, Fisher said, all on-campus student parking will be prohibited.

A STUDENT UNION has been suggested more than often but has been stifled. "The college used to have a student union. It was before my time, but as I understand it, it was closed because the students didn't take care of it.

"Take a look at the Statler Wing any day and you'll see what it must have been like. Even so, I'd like to see one on campus; the students could really use it. The problems here are where it could be built and how it could be policed," Fisher pointed out.

Fisher has been accused of quite a few things, among them charges that he attempts to evade the public eye and the issues, and that he is trying to be a "dictator."

THE FIRST CHARGE is answered by the formal statement that a public letter is being drafted to state Fisher's policies and goals. It is to be released this month.

The second complaint has "as many holes as a sieve."

"Councilmen want things done, but they get mad if I tell them to do something. Students complain that things aren't as they should be but don't give any constructive help," Fisher said, adding,

"I don't claim to know everything, and I do appreciate any constructive suggestion that I'm given. But students seem to have some sort of phobia about walking through the bungalow door and officially complaining.

"THERE'S ALWAYS someone here who can help the peeved student. If no one complains or offers advice, I assume I'm doing the agreeable thing.

"When you come right down to it, what else can I think?" he asked pensively.

Policies, Goals Statement Soon

Past Member Of Parliament Speaks On Life Of Orwell

By Sally Dorety

Famed author and social critic George Orwell's life was sketched last Tuesday in a lecture here by Christopher Hollis of London.

A noted journalist and author, as well as a member of the Board of Punch and a former member of Parliament, Hollis was also a schoolmate of Orwell, whose biography he has spent the last few years writing.

"Orwell's life was fascinating," Hollis commented, "but you will see the difference in his attitudes as time wore on. Like the rest of us, as young rebels we tend to modify our views by the time we're as old as I."

In Such Were The Joys, Orwell described conditions at his boarding school. Claiming that he was mistreated because his parents were poor, Orwell wrote such a scathing account of his life there, and of the punishment inflicted upon him by the headmaster and headmistress that the book has never been published in England.

AT THE AGE OF 13, Eric Behr (later changed to Orwell) spent four years in another "snob school," where he again accused everyone of disliking him. According to Hollis, Orwell's accusations are grossly exaggerated.

"Everyone I've interviewed concerning George Orwell's life has remembered him as 'that tall good looking popular young man,'" Hollis said.

Upon graduation in 1922, Orwell was urged by his instructors to spend some time in the world and learn from experience rather than continue his studies at the university. This he did, beginning his worldly pursuit of experience on the Burma Police Force. From this, Hollis commented, he learned that perhaps discipline and force were necessary in this world.

ORWELL PUBLISHED Down And Out In Paris And London, an account of his years as a tramp, when he was 25. "He was a tramp purely from a spiritual point of view," Hollis said; "financially, he was very well off."

Orwell also spent a number of years in Spain during the Civil War. He reminisces, in Coming Up For Air, that there were three separate 'loyal forces' against Franco . . . Communists with Moscow's sanction, Communists without Moscow's sanction, and the anarchists . . . who were the only organized group."

Hollis' on a month-long United States lecture tour, revealed some hitherto little known points about the author most remembered for his books 1984 and Animal Farm.

Talent Show Auditions Slated For November 14

Auditions to determine the contestants of the November 18 talent show "will probably take place next Monday evening, November 14, in the theater," Marty Watten, vice chairman of the Council Of Organizations, announced.

According to Watten, musical ensembles currently headline the roster of approximately 15 acts. Last week James Wyatt, assistant dean of Student Activities, disclosed that COO hopes to add several acts.

Employers Taking Applications For Christmas Jobs

Employers are now taking applications for Christmas jobs, Joseph Amori, student placement director, said last week, adding "Again there are more people looking for jobs than there are jobs available."

Amori said that students who intend to work for the post office are required to take examinations. Interested students must apply in person to the office of the U.S. Civil Service Commission, 450 Golden Gate Avenue.

Amori also pointed out that all applicants must be citizens of the United States, and be at least 18 years of age. He emphasized applicants should not apply at the post office because it will only be a waste of time.

For the post office jobs the examination is three hours long and includes the following: verbal ability, numerical ability and clerical ability. The pay for all post office jobs is $2.59 per hour plus a 10 per cent differential for any time after 6 p.m.

Alpha Phi Omega Tops Fraternities In Games

The outcome of the Pledge Week competitive games held during College Hour November 1 at the stadium saw Alpha Phi Omega come in first over the other fraternities in the contests.

Alpha Phi Epsilon placed second and Beta Tau placed third.

The IFC is hosting a rally during College Hour tomorrow at the Ram. At that time IFC leaders will relate to students the future programs being planned by the various fraternities.

Preparations for a car rally being organized by the IFC for the near future is an example of a combined effort by the College's fraternities. The IFC is hoping for a large degree of student participation in their campus activities in which all students are invited to take part.

Other IFC plans include the spring blood drive which will coincide with next semester's College Week activities, April 13 and 14, according to Rich Heintz, rushing chairman of the IFC.

Other activities and future plans of the fraternities will be announced tomorrow, Heintz said.

Marigan, Macias Fill Vacancies In Frosh Council

By Bill Fritz

In two special elections held last week, Student Council elected Steve Marigan and Bernice Macias to fill the vacant Frosh Council seats, unoccupied since early in the semester.

From Soph Councilman Paul Shuttleworth came a motion of appeal from decision of the chair. Shuttleworth contended that his statements, by decision of Associated Students President Bruce Fisher, were omitted from the Council Minutes and, by matter of principle, should be added to the official records.

Fisher argued that Councilman Shuttleworth's statements were out of order, even though he did not rule them such at the time, and should not be included in the minutes.

The vote was called for, and by a vote of 11-0-1, council upheld Shuttleworth's appeal.

And in the only legislation of the week, Council passed a resolution commemorating the 10th anniversary of the Hungarian revolution of 1956 and honoring the patriotism of the Hungarian Freedom Fighters who died attempting to liberate their country.

Riordan Releases Artistic Tensions On Reservoir Wall

By Tom Graham

Every year, during football season, some enthusiastic students and alumni from Riordan High School publicly display their school spirit by painting the slogan, Beat The Bells, on the south wall of the reservoir.

This year isn't any exception. In fact, this year they not only made the south wall into a poster, they also exhibited their artistic talent on the west wall.

It is quite possible that there may have been two groups out there with the same intention—not knowing that the other was also busy with paint brushes. This would exlain the two signs: one saying Beat The Bells and the other a rather crude pictorial account of how Riordan will take the Catholic Athletic League championship.

The reason for their behavior is a somewhat legitimate one. First of all, in the history of Riordan's varsity football teams, they have never been successful in defeating Bellarmine, a football team finally broke out of the slump by defeating the Bellarmine frosh with the hair-raising score of 19-18. The varsity finally did it 13-10 last Friday!

Second, City College of San Francisco shares the use of the reservoir parking lot with Riordan High School.

IT MUST BE a kind of homing device that fantastic All-American halfback O. J. Simpson uses to find paydirt. Simpson, who led the nation in 1965 with 156 points, is shown here after scoring on a 43-yard draw play against Merritt.

Comets Succumb To Rams, 40-20

Cousins Simpson, Tucker Lead Scoring In Grid Rout

By G. Frank Cooney

Some might have thought it was a family grudge against Contra Costa after seeing O. J. Simpson and his cousin Dwight Tucker bully the Comets' highly touted football team to a 40-20 defeat before about 1500 fans here last Friday.

That pair kept most of the Ram scoring in their family by scoring two touchdowns each.

SIMPSON STARTED THINGS poping by busting his way around left end with only three minutes elapsed in the game and then breaking two near tackles enroute to a 47-yard score.

Not only did he immediately add the two extra points, but he also drew next blood in a 14-yard dance five minutes later which gave the No. 1 ranked Rams a 16-0 lead in the first quarter.

And that might have been the story all day had not Contra Costa's feared offensive backfield gone to work pushing the big Ram defensive wall up and down the field.

But the defense didn't take their punishment lying down.

Tucker quieted an exuberant Comet rooting section in the third period when he killed a Comet drive by stealing a Butch Whyburn pass on the Ram six-yard line and then set a Golden Gate Conference record by sprinting 94 yards to paydirt. The old record was an 87-yard return by San Jose's Bill Pollock against Diablo Valley in 1963.

IN LENGTH, Tucker's romp is topped only by two others in Golden Gate Conference history.

Earlier, Ram defensive tackle Jerd Lapham got the first score of his career when he pounced on a Whyburn fumble in the end zone for six points. The lanky, 6-4 Whyburn rolled out into his own end zone from the 2-yard line and Allan Cowlings and Lapham hit him when he stood up to try and pass.

But the Ram defense didn't keep the San Pablo team in check all day as Comet fullback Ken Reynolds, All-State basketball player two years ago for Contra Costa, led all rushers with 171 yards in 20 carries.

At one point Reynolds appeared to be headed for paydirt after blasting over right tackle and picking his way to the sidelines. But the 9.8 sprinter was caught by a not-so-slow Greg Pedrin on the Ram 20-yard line after going 61 yards, the longest gain of the day.

RAM QUARTERBACK Pete Mullins got his pitching arm back in tune by hitting 10 of 15 passes for all of City's 129 air yardage and two scores.

While Ram end Mike Carter didn't get on the receiving end of a pass in the game, he quarterbacked the last play and threw a 20-yard bomb to Larry Harrison, a Comet who ran the interpection back 15 yards. Well, back to the line for Carter.

Guardsman Team Leads Intramural Basketball Action

The Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural basketball tournament continued to roll along in fine fashion as last week's action saw only two games forfeited.

After one week of league action there were no big upsets, as most games went along as anticipated. However, the big game in the Independent league turned out to be a forfeit.

League favorite, Bearded Crusts, failed to show up and gave up a victory to The Guardsman. The win for The Guardsman now pits them as the team to beat.

Other Independent games last week saw the high contending Irish knock over Hillel, 69-56, behind Rich Rolandson's 26 point effort. The Hotel & Restaurant squad used a balanced attack to notch a 36-27 win over Charlie Brown's Gang. In the closest game of the night, Anthony Rodrigues scored 14 points to pace the Red Mountaineers to a 33-28 win over the Knobs.

On November 2 there were three games and one forfeit in the Club division. Again in the big game of the night saw division favorite Newman Club notch up a victory over the Beta Bums.

In the only rout of the evening, Phi Delta clobbered the Filipino-American Club, 45-29, behind Carson English's 19 points.

Division contender Felony Squad used a balanced attack to whip Alpha Sigma Delta, 47-39. In the closest game of the evening it was Alpha Phi Epsilon, 31-27, over a very determined Chinese Club. Alpha Sigma Delta-Beta Bum game is a toss-up.

In tonight's games in the Club league the Newman Club plays Alpha Phi Epsilon in the evening's crucial.

The Felony Squad is favored to make it three in a row when they take on the Filipino-American Club. Also in the favorite roll will be Phi Delta as they are pitted against the Chinese Club.

Both the Newman Club and the Felony Squad seem to be looking ahead toward playing each other in the last game of the season.—J.L.

Bulldogs Pose Threat To Ram Undefeated Title

By Mike Duggan

The powerful Ram football team travels to San Mateo to take on the dangerous Bulldogs at 1 p.m. Saturday.

Ram Coach Dutch Elston knows it was not by luck alone that San Mateo upset previously unbeaten Contra Costa last week. Elston respects every team in the conference, and it can be surely assumed the Rams won't be taking the Bulldogs lightly.

Quarterback Rich Quadra heads the list of returning lettermen from last season's squad. Quadra has had a fine year thus far and must rank as one of the top three quarterbacks in the league.

LINEBACKER Johnnie Jenkins leads the defense for the Bulldogs. He was a second team All-Conference choice last year.

San Mateo Coach Cliff Griffin has a fine crop of freshmen on his team this year; they are headed by Al Namanny, Marty Kreidt and Ed Green.

Namanny, a fullback from Jefferson High, is currently ranked second in the conference in rushing, behind only O. J. Simpson of the Rams.

In six games, Namanny has rushed for 674 yards and eight touchdowns. In one game alone, he rushed for 208 yards in 26 carries. This was the individual high for the season until O. J. Simpson set out against Chabot for 262 yards. In their last game, the Bulldogs upset Contra Costa by a 31-24 score as Namanny rushed for 158 yards.

KREIDT, A HALFBACK, had his big day as the Bulldogs lost to Diablo Valley, 31-27. He picked up 152 yards in 20 carries. Along with Namanny, Kreidt may cause some problems for the Ram defense.

Green has impressed more with his size than his ability thus far. He stands 6-6 and weighs 295 pounds. Maybe he will provide Ruby Jackson with someone his own size to have to worry about.

So far, after six games, College of San Mateo has a record of 3-2-1. The Bulldogs are a small team in comparison with the Rams but provide both a strong running attack and a fine passing attack for the Rams to worry about.

The Bulldogs have a habit of giving up a lot of points and the Rams have a habit of scoring many points. It should be interesting to see what happens when the two teams get together.

ONE BULLDOG in particular may give quarterback Mullins some headaches. Bill Sopjes, who stands 6-4 and plays defensive back, intercepted four passes against Contra Costa to set a Golden Gate Conference record.

The nationally ranked first-place Rams haven't had too much trouble with any opposition yet this year, and the Bulldogs' rather weak defense will have to come up with a super performance to even give the Rams a battle.

Rossi, Campana Pace 7-0 Booter Win Over Diablo

By John Le Tourneau

Pete Rossi scored three goals, and Sal Campana added two more to pace City College to a 7-0 win over Diablo Valley October 26 at Balboa Stadium.

The win boosted the Rams' record of 6-0, one game ahead of San Mateo.

The Vikings were just out-played by the Rams, as they gave up seven goals and couldn't muster one across the Ram goal. This was the first shutout for the Red and White, and it was a good tune-up for the second-place Bulldogs.

Coach Roy Diederichsen was pleased with his men, and he shifted them around so that everyone got to play.

"Each man played equally, and there was no let-up between the first team and the second squad," the coach said. "I thought the men might be looking ahead toward San Mateo, but they played as hard as if Diablo Valley was in first place," the veteran mentor added.

Diederichsen moved left halfback Rossi to center forward and he played an excellent game as he scored three goals and led the offensive attack for the Rams. Diederichsen also praised halfback Campana who not only hustled his way for two goals but played a fine defensive game as well.

In the defensive part of the game, the Rams were flawless as all players played brilliantly. Two defensive stars for the Rams, halfback Tommy Sammuelson and fullback Connie Shiskin, were chosen to play in the West Coast trials for the 1968 Olympic Games.

Today the Red and White travel down to San Mateo to play the second place Bulldogs. San Mateo is one game behind the Rams, and a Ram loss would knot the lead that was the Rams' all season.

Diederichsen naturally is fearful of an upset. "They have been scoring a lot more points than we have, and our defense will have to be strong," the Ram coach commented."

Potential Mermen Try For Ram Swim Team

Sign-ups are now in progress in the men's gymnasium for all interested men who want to try out for the 1967 City College swim team.

Curt Decker, the new Ram swim coach, is hoping to have a good turnout for this year's squad.

In the past years lack of enthusiasm has plagued the Ram mermen and killed any chance of contention in the Golden Gate Conference.

Still a main factor for the team's chances, men or no men, is a pool to practice in.

Forsberg Injury Causes Further Spiker Upset

By Marc Clarkson

The Ram cross country runners are having another disheartening season.

They lost their first three meets, then started to show promise by beating the defending champs, but thereafter all hope for a respectable season was lost when the team's best runner injured himself.

Although the team started off poorly by losing to Diablo Valley, 28-26; San Jose 32-25, and Merritt, 30-22, the Rams began to show encouraging possibilities when they defeated Foothill College, the defending conference champions, 25-30.

Fred Forsberg, the fastest runner on the squad, suffered a sprained ankle when he stepped into a hole while warming up for the next meet at Chabot. The ankle injury will force the freshman runner from further league participation.

With Forsberg spearheading a team including Roger Gribble, Robert Aanestad, Roy Henderson and Richard Cuadra, the local tracksters seemed destined to climb up in the standings.

Now cross-country Coach Lou Vasques believes "the team probably won't win another meet. The league competition is more balanced than last year when Foothill dominated the conference and the drop of talent beyond the five best runners is considerable."

Twenty athletes were on the roster last year. The team finished last in the Golden Gate Conference standings and seventeen in the league meet.

Cage Standout

RETURNING All-Conference basketball star Gene Williams shows his jumping ability here as he goes half an arm length above a regulation ten-foot-high basket. Six-foot, five-inch Williams was a defensive standout for the Ram Golden Gate Conference undefeated champs last year, blocking an average of eight shots a game.

Fourth String Squad Gets Crack At Fame

RAMBLINGS

By G. Frank Cooney

Miscues, Fumbles Top The Pigskin Puns

CITY College's athletic programs were purposely designed with the student in mind.

As in the case of football, anyone who goes ont for the team "makes" the team. Of course some individuals don't play unless the situation gets ridiculous with the Rams tromping their opponents by six or so touchdowns.

WHEN HAPLESS Merritt ventured here recently, the first string made it possible for the third and fourth stringers to get into the game by running the score to 36-0 before Merritt could get oriented.

Thus, all the stars left the field and were replaced by some guys who we had truthfully never seen handle a pigskin.

And although the results were terrible, with miscues, fumbles and whatnot dominating play, it was indeed a memorable experience for those chaps who finally got into their first game.

After all, those fourth stringers practice just as long and just as hard as the starters. And if such an occasion arises, as it did versus Merritt when the game was actually already decided, there is a two-fold reason for substituting the untried players.

PRIMARILY, IT GIVES the coach a chance to see some of the men he will be depending on next year. And those players who finally made it into a game are not only getting their "chance" to show how well they hold up under fire, they are also experiencing something they will probably never forget.

Someday a couple of dozen years hence, one of these ex-Rams will be saying to his son, who is trying out for the Pop Warner team, "Back in 1966 I played for City College's Junior Rose Bowl team."

Well, anything is possible and Pasadena is not really very far.

* * *

FOR THE PASADENA Junior Chamber of Commerce, 1966 has been a bad year.

Not only is it highly possible that this will be the year that their prized Junior Rose Bowl may have to concede to Northern California supremacy, but also this is the last year for that bowl game.

To say nothing of the Prune and other Bowls. They're all dead.

We think this move to do away with the Bowls and replace them with a playoff system is a boon to two-year college football.

IN 1967, EVERY two-year college in California can start out the football season with an equal chance of getting into the state championships. Up till now, only southern teams could feel confident of their chances of getting into a "championship game," known as the Junior Rose Bowl.

ONLY ONCE IN 21 years has Northern California been represented in that Bowl, Hartnell in 1953. Surely more than once in that period of time has a Northern state team been worthy.

Doing away with the Bowl games also does away with other injustices.

Like running up scores in order to get recognition by various chambers of commerce. While this has never been done here, some teams keep the first stringers in even if they are leading by six or seven touchdowns. The purpose is to make the team look great via a 75-0 massacre.

This is not good for several reasons, one being the fact that not only is the game an obvious mismatch and detrimental to the losers' morale, but also the nonstarters on the winning team will probably turn in their uniforms pretty soon. Then where will the coach be when come mid-seasons' numerous injuries?

Ram Blushes As Edison, Da Vinci Go Psychedelic

Artists, or maybe just dilettantes, invaded the college sometime last Wednesday night or early Thursday morning.

"Who painted the Ram" were words heard repeatedly on campus Thursday as students passed the college's redwood Ram, wooden symbol of its mascot, dressed obnoxiously in a pink and brown coat of paint.

This was the first time in several years that the Ram has been the target of outside invaders.

But daubers did not stop with the Ram. Mr. Edison stares with his bluegreen eyes—painted that color one year ago—down a long yellow stripe on his nose. His cheeks are dotted with yellow and he has gained, at this late age, a moustache.

Leonardo da Vinci, the courtyard statue headed south, though not terribly marred, has a yellow beard.

No one seemed to know who the invaders were, perhaps no one was willing to disclose the information. However, a high school football game was played on campus Wednesday afternoon.

THE LAST TIME THE RAM was attacked with an unwelcome paint job it took seven students all day to restore the "beast" to its original color. After more than a two-year moratorium, the Ram has received an unwanted coat of paint, this time in pink and brown.

Hayakawa Cites Reading As Basis For Individuality

By Guiseppe Greco

Professor Samuel I. Hayakawa, in his speech on The Tasks Of The Negro Revolution last Thursday in the theater, said that communication is the basis for individuality.

As a necessary premise, Hayakawa identified himself as a true friend of the Negro population, referring to the six years spent in Chicago where the Negro community there regarded him as one of them.

"Civil rights motivation has always interested me," he said to the large audience.

"When the civil rights movements started in the '60s, I asked myself why they hadn't started years before. The answer," Hayakawa believes, "was lack of communication, which in effect is the answer to today."

HAYAKAWA POINTED out that reading is part of this revolutionary communication; it is the basis of individuality. "Reading," he said, "is a private vice. By reading any man can develop personal ideas."

About the advent of television, Hayakawa said that TV does not stimulate individuality, even though it literally brings the world to people. It bypasses literacy since even the illiterate Negro of Alabama and Mississippi can understand and form an opinion. TV is also extremely friendly and is not controversial.

TO THE YOUNG generation of the '60s, brought up in a television era, TV told them that no matter what their social condition they could enjoy all satisfaction that life could bring and told them how they were members of the national community.

"TV therefore accelerated the Negro demand for opportunities," Hayakawa said, and declared, "the Negro senses of his own frustration."

Professor Hayakawa said that there are alternatives to riots, and that more can be accomplished through something like labor unions, transportation and public service. Another alternative is to go to Harlem and the Negro ghettos and confiscate all the TV sets.

HE SAID THAT the Negro people as a minority group has to face problems. A Negro has pressure to worry about, since there is always demand that he work for his own group, and if he wants to improve and advance in society he does not possibly have time to dedicate to his community.

"Whatever communication is used," Hayakawa emphasized, "the result of it should be a better understanding between the Negro and the white."

Drama Production In Rehearsal For December Shows

The Importance Of Being Earnest, the drama department's first major production this semester, is in rehearsal for its December 14 through 17 performances, James Haran, director, announced today.

The cast includes veteran performers Margaret Calhoun as Lady Bracknell, John Pantoleon as Dr. Chasuble and Blanche Richardson as Miss Prism.

Newcomers to the City College stage are Kathy Wright as Gwendolyn, Ellen Castor as Cecily, Bill McCall as Jack and Ron Bianco as Algernon.

The success of the theater lab's scene presentations on November 3 inspired Director Walter Krumm to stage Albert Camus' Caligula January 13 and 14.

Caligula, written in 1938, first bore the subtitle The Meaning Of Death, making this existentialistic drama quite a contrast to The Importance Of Being Earnest and giving the City College audience theatrical variety.

The principals in the cast of Caligula are Terry McDermott in the title role, Cheryl Willis as Caesonia, Vann Mitchell as Scipio, John Hunsaker as Cherea and Paul Brown as Helicon.

The sets for both plays are being designed by Paul Crowley, veteran set-designer whose work in past productions has drawn praise.

This semester there are many new faces in the drama department; and on the strength of their theater lab performances, it is appropriate to mention Kathy Wright in an excellent and moving monologue from Mother Courage, Terry McDermott and Vann Mitchell in a provocative duet from Caligula.—M. B.

Band Stages Jazz Concert In College Hour Tomorrow

The City College Stage Band will present a concert of Big Band Jazz during College Hour tomorrow in the theater.

Under the direction of Art Samuels the band will play some of the actual arrangements of Count Basie, Stan Kenton and Woody Herman.

Blues '66 will be another segment of the program. Some combo jazz will also be played.

Samuels, former head of the music department at Mission High, is now a full-time counselor here at City College.

"Last semester the band was a big success with a concert at Monterey Peninsula College," Samuels said.

Korf Will Revise Library Filing

College Librarian Harold Korf has announced his intention to completely revise the filing of all books and catalogs to make texts more available.

Another purpose of this project will be to determine the number of books available, and their location.

Korf also announced that the library will be open from noon to 7 p.m. on Friday, November 25 (a holiday). He added that the library's Christmas vacation hours, December 19 through 23 and 28 and 29, would be from noon to 7 p.m.

'Morning Only' Program Risks Loss Of Classes In Computer Registration

Students will be taking the chance of obtaining only a partial program with fewer units than expected for the Spring semester if they limit themselves strictly to a morning program, Lloyd D. Luckmann, coordinator of instruction, announced today.

"As I look over the applications which have come in thus far, I notice with some alarm that an unduly large portion of the students have limited themselves to a morning program," Luckmann stated.

"The computer, which now deals with all applications, first tries to give an applicant the courses he desires within his designated time block. If the initial requests are not fulfilled, the computer will then proceed to the student's alternate choice, which may or may not fit in his time schedule.

IF THE SECOND requests are not fulfilled, Luckmann added, the applicant is left with an incomplete schedule.

"When the student picks up his program on registration day he'll find himself anywhere from two to nine units short, and though he might have a chance to pick up any open class that's a prerequisite, he may find it closed," Luckmann said.

According to Luckmann, this dilemma will concern many students making the unwise choice of limiting instruction solely to the morning, especially those students comprising the second two-thirds of the student body.

"Under the new system of computer programming a student whose program can be only partially filled comes at the very end of the line in choosing an alternate course beyond the limits of his time block," Luckmann warned.

LUCKMANN SUGGESTED that students can avoid this danger by filing a program request without the morning-only restriction.

Also, students who have already filed may file a substitute program removing the time restriction.

Counselors have been made aware of this problem by Luckmann, and students interested in their own educational welfare can discuss the advisability of such a program with their counselors.—M. A.

Procedure Slows Action, Voting In Council Meetings

By Bill Fritz

The principal purpose of parliamentary procedure is to provide order to meetings and to expediate legislative process.

Of late, however, Student Council has been more hindered than helped by Robert's Rules of Order. And it appears that parliamentary order has become the end rather than the means.

As a result, much valuable time is being wasted in rewording motions, debating the decisions of the chair and interpreting procedure which is written down in black and white.

ASSOCIATED STUDENT President Bruce Fisher has the right, as council chairman, to demand adherence to proper procedure; and the members of council should, by this time, be able to understand and properly use parliamentary order. But council is naturally hindered if meetings are turned into "classroom drills."

Despite the time-consuming hangups, council, last week, approved a last-minute emergency allocation request of the Forensics Club, the newly reorganized debating club.

Since they were not an active organization last semester, the debaters were not given a formal budget by last semester's council. Therefore, Forensic's representative Sally Dorety came before last Wednesday's council and requested $197 to cover fees and expenses for a Northern California Forensics Society meet in Stockton. The request was approved by a vote of 13-0-2.

IN FURTHER LEGISLATIVE action, Frosh Councilman Ron Lent, on Monday of last week, introduced a resolution whereby the Associated Students would sponsor The Big Brothers of America Program on campus and would set up an information table in the main courtyard during College hour.

The motion was amended by Soph Councilman Paul Shuttleworth to read "endorse" instead of sponsor. The motion passed, but was placed into the Resolutions Committee by Chairman Fisher, due to some confusion in the wording.

ON WEDNESDAY of last week, Council Jim McIntire, head of the Resolutions Committee, reported that it would be best to have Hillel, an on-campus club, sponsor the program and have the program endorsed by the Associated Students. The recommendation was included in the resolution and accepted.

At that point, Soph Councilman Shuttleworth brought up the question of whether or not this would set a precedent by which other on-campus organizations could demand a table set up to distribute information on an off-campus program.

Petitions For AS Election Due November 28

Petitions for candidacy in Associated Student elections for the Spring semester are now available in Bungalow B-5.

Political parties must be registered along with each candidate's roster and material by Wednesday, November 23 with Don Chiang, election commissioner. Campaign fees will also be due on this date. All petitions for registration of candidates are due by 1 p.m., November 28, and Chiang said they should be given to him as election commissioner in Bungalow 5.

Any candidate not completing these forms by the specified date, or not following the rules of the election, will forfeit his candidacy, Chiang stated.

The election, which will be held on December 14 and 15, will be preceded by a candidate's rally on December 8.

For the students' convenience, four voting machines have been ordered for the college elections. They will most likely be placed in Smith, Cloud, Science and Arts Halls.

30 Students Form Anti-War Group

By Viggo Petersen

A lavishly decorated "peace truck" with numerous anti-war and anti-LBJ leaflets plastered all over it was noted around the campus area recently.

The truck was sponsoring a "mobilization" to picket the president on his then anticipated visit here.

It was sponsored by some 30 City College students known as the "City College Students Against The War," which was organized last January.

THE GROUP HAD planned a demonstration against President Johnson who was supposed to arrive here between November 6-8. His visit to California was off with the announcement of his imminent surgery, and demonstration plans had to be cancelled.

Usually the group meets once a week and plans its activities. Whatever it plans to do usually takes place on the weekend.

ALTHOUGH THE GROUP was engaged in some activities last summer, the LBJ "mobilization" was the first major campaign the group has tried to organize.

According to Ron Henkel, a member of the group, there are no immediate plans for demonstrations against the war in the near future.

The group at the present time is not allowed on the campus of City College because state law forbids any "unrecognized political organization" to appear on a two-year college campus without official approval.

DISTRIBUTION OF leaflets or campaigning on this campus has been forbidden, but Ralph O. Hillsman, dean of students, has said the group would be "perfectly welcome" on campus if it appeared as part of the Contemporary Affairs Forum or some similar organization.

The group gave no indication it plans to do this.

The organization is opposed to the war for much the same reason as are other anti-war groups. Said Henkel:

"I don't think we should trade lives for dollars. Vietnam should be allowed to solve its own problems, and we shouldn't be over there risking a war with China."

The organization is planning a number of benefit dances but no immediate plans are set at this time, Henkel said.

Outside Critics Denounce An Instructor's 'Guest Speaker'

A FACULTY MEMBER invited a controversial personality to his class and some people on the outside didn't like it; this is the skeleton of the phenomenon after all proper nouns are removed.

If this basic formula is followed, it stands that influential, or maybe just noisy, groups will determine just who or what the students at this institution will see, hear or study, which takes us back to the time of the Inquisition.

AN INSTRUCTOR MAY THINK it beneficial to his class to observe a certain personality, but perhaps what the instructor wants the class to notice is the personality's rhetorical style or psychotic personality and not so much his subjects or beliefs.

But whether the instructor invites Superman or Green Lantern, no outside source should be given the right of official pontification upon the instructor's motive.

If a parent does not want junior to be exposed to the philosophy of the Green Lantern, that parent may advise junior not to attend that particular class, but this parent should not advise all the other juniors in the class.

SOMEHOW THE ASPIRIN BIT at public school infirmaries got out of hand just this way, where some parents didn't want their children to take aspirin; presto, no child gets aspirin.

So students who get headaches—yes, "junior" college students get headaches too, from various sources—cannot get an aspirin at the student health service. Hurts, doesn't it.

'Acid' Needs Research, Control

By Connie Skipitares

THE SKYROCKETING abuse of the wonder drug LSD and other dangerous "psychedelics" is spreading at an alarming rate, breeding new contempt for the law, and dragging along with it, a mounting number of psychotic breakdowns, suicides and accidents which are directly attributable to the exploitation of the "mind openers."

An ex-medical student, charged with stabbing his mother-in-law to death, asked the police, "Did I kill my wife? Did I rape anyone? What have I done? Man, I've been flying (high on LSD) for three days."

Another user threw a lighted match into a wastebasket and then stuck his hands in these flames, claiming they represented the "fires of hell." (Setting fires is popular in the psychedelic realm.)

Numerous victims are literally found in the middle of the street completely out of their minds, incoherent, rambling, and dangerously prone to violence toward themselves.

THESE ACTIONS (rather "reactions"), in representing symptoms of the narcotics user, are simultaneously reflecting one of America's newest subcultures—the "acid head" experimenters—(a conformity 'must') presently oriented toward the "discovery of self" through hallucinatory expansion of the mind.

The fad or cult of taking LSD or other illegal psychedelics is notorious on campuses like Harvard and the so-called drug mecca Berkeley, but Dr. Timothy Leary, whose dogmatic and incautious advocacy of LSD got him fired from Harvard, must bear some responsibility for the spreading cultism.

Dr. Leary, having been twice arrested and once heavily sentenced on charges involving marijuana, now believes the abuse of LSD to be out of hand and has renounced his own use of it "as a gesture of conciliation until the legal status of psychedelics has been clarified."

Even Ken Kesey, much jailed and bailed author and high priest of the local LSD dream world, is warning graduating audiences of "LSD bummers" that acid is not only "a dangerous drug, but something to go easy on for awhile!"

AT A RECENT conference on drug abuse in the student community, it was reported that 85 juvenile drug arrests alone have been made so far this year in Berkeley, as compared with only 21 in the more than 60 years since Berkeley's incorporation. Berkeley's problem, no doubt, results from nonresidents who migrate on hearing that the city is a drug mecca, creating, in turn, a greater need for the influx of narcotics to supply the new users.

A regrettable incident has been the decision of the Sandoz pharmaceutical company, discoverer of LSD and its sole licit source in this country, to cancel all distribution. Sandoz has been supplying some 70 research projects that have been cautiously exploring LSD for good and evil, but now it is converting the market for one of the most remarkable of recent medical discoveries to bootleg. And, some say, it is almost as easy to make as ballistic gin!

Is now the time for the U.S. to apply a lesson learned from Prohibition? Will prohibition quell the rising narcotics statistics? It triggered opposite reaction in the era of the eighteenth amendment.

INSTEAD OF harassing a would-be martyr to the "sacred biochemical," society would do better to figure out how law can best control it!

The first effort of government should be to get respectable LSD research moving again. Too many doctors have been frightened away from the useful work of controlled experiment.

State legislatures should propose legislation establishing treatment and rehabilitation facilities for men and women who have problems with drugs other than the opiates.

At any rate, lectures to the young narcotics users just won't do the job (they never have) because students are tired of listening to parents, teachers and the community. There has to be a two-way communication.

Likewise, planting fear in their minds is not the answer. As a medical doctor once pointed out, "You won't get to first base until you convince people it's a phony name for a phony conception."

Letters To The Editor

RAM'S HORN

● Possony Edification

Editor:

After hearing the political viewpoint presented here at City College recently by Professor Stephan T. Possony, of The Hoover Institution On War, Revolution And Peace, I wrote to him for further edification. I should like to share with your readers some of the following thought and wit which were included in his lengthy 15-page reply.

"The nuclear test ban is, psychologically speaking, a flight from reality. Hence it is not a venture of idealism but of illusionism.

"In conclusion, let me remind you that it is not enough to deplore the human condition. Exclusive concern with the reality of things may breed cynicism, but idealism which does not recognize facts and which is not applied to problems as they are, must remain futile.

"Numerous utopias have been written, none has been realized. The task is not to reiterate, time and again, the wishdreams formulated several centuries ago but to make real progress through small but practical steps. Alas, I have the impression that the current crop of college students needs utopias, just like babies need nipples and pacifiers."

● Rockwell On Campus

Editor:

Dr. Luckmann, because he gave George Lincoln Rockwell permission to speak on campus, has received adverse comments from parents, students and faculty. I, and many other students, cannot see any justification for this censure.

To all those people who think the American Nazi was too controversial, and who further believe he should not be allowed to speak because of his beliefs, I submit this: Climb out of your ivory towers and face the realities of life. Rockwell and his kind do exist; they have always existed; and you cannot hide them or "wish" them away!

Moreover, by denying him the right to speak, you are, ipso facto, denying all speakers the right to voice their beliefs—good or evil—on this campus.

This uncalled-for emotional outburst of protest (for it is clearly not a logical and intelligent one) is an indication of the narrow-mindedness which is manifest in so many people on this campus.

Supers Pace Market

Cartoonist-Illustrator Finds Rare Comic Books Profitable Investment

By Marty Arbunich

They soar through the heavens like supersonic angels, accomplish astonishing feats of incredulous strength, run faster than the speed of light and bend and stretch like human rubber bands.

Do they sound like freaks? How about super good guys? Add a story, some artwork, color and two staples and you've got a comic book.

Let it sit in that dingy, cob-webbed corner of your cellar for about 20 years, and you could possibly swap it for a crisp 100 dollar bill.

SOUND BELIEVABLE? Ask Bill Dubay of San Francisco, 18, cartoonist-illustrator, and prominent specialist in the most bizarre craze since the rollicking heyday of the hulahoop, comic books.

"A few years back I had almost 20,000 comics, dating from 1939 to the present, but once the craze turned on full speed, I sold nearly 16,000 of them," the tall, thin, curly-haired artist admitted, while clutching one of the 4000 remaining specimens from his domain, a copy of the rare second issue of Superman, dated Fall 1939.

"This comic here can pull in $30 easily," he casually added.

"I used to be an avid collector of the comics, but not any more. I find it more fun selling and drawing them," Dubay remarked with a slight grin of delight.

Aside from slowly exhausting funds out of his last 4000 reserves, Dubay recently found another easy way of making money when he entered the professional illustrating ranks, sketching tales similar to the ones which captivated his mind and emotions just a few years earlier.

"This is one business I've been striving to break into for years, and I'm glad I've found a home" when the going is good.

"But I'm going to give college a try, too," the youthful illustrator said. He plans to enter City College in the Spring semester.

IN HIS ENTIRE 18 years of existence he's only had two semesters of art training, and that came in his senior year of high school at Balboa.

"Art and journalism are my favorites. I think I'll give them both a try," Dubay emphasized.

When asked what makes a comic book valuable, Dubay replied, "It's the age of the book, its condition, the characters it contains and, in some cases, the popularity of the artist who draws a particular comic strip."

Nowadays, it's the word 'super' which also makes a comic valuable. Any comic which features a super goon who possesses exotic powers usually secures a collector demand with a corresponding premium.

Look at Superman, the Man of Steel, possessing an invulnerable physique and unmatchable powers; the Human Torch, a flying, flaming inferno; the Batman, a caped do-gooder, highly developed physically and mentally; and Plasticman, the slimy, stretchable hero of elasticity.

THEY'RE ALL 'SUPER,' and they're all 'hot' in the cash category.

"There's thousands of nutty kids who read and horde comics, and their ever-increasing desire is the key to a comic dealer's prosperity.

"The adults, for the most part," Dubay added, "and this includes the college students, collect comics as a means of escape literature to bring back their childhood past."

Dubay also inferred that there is now a third echelon of 'collectors.' These are the artists, Dubay is one, who buy contemporary panelology solely to see what their illustrating competitors are doing.

DUBAY BELIEVES that even comic history can and will repeat itself.

"The popularity of the Batman and the Green Hornet, a pair of television favorites, will pass on too, but will someday return to the screen in their rotating cycle," he said.

So ends a tale of a pop artist and his trade, an entertainment industry whose products harvest unlimited financial maturity.

A word to the wise: 12 cents spent today may reap 1000-fold tomorrow.

"SUPER-COLLECTOR" Bill Dubay is pictured here holding five comic books estimated at a value of over $100, and that's just part of the wealth.

To Crib Or Not, That Is The Question

By B.T.

OVERWORKED INSTRUCTORS who spend hours grading bluebooks are occasionally provided comic relief by a few students.

The instructor reads bluebook after bluebook, some filled with choice chuckles, literary styles that are really camouflages for ignorance, multiple choice errors, and blank sheets.

One can imagine one science instructor laughing out loud whenever he thinks about the answer a student gave on chemical evolution: "It is comprised of two types—one WITH chromosomes and another WITHOUT chromosomes!"

Well, this student received an F—without chromosomes.

AN F IS NO JOKE, especially to the student who has never received one. Even the uninterested, overly-confident, diligent and clever cheaters dislike F's.

Some students cheat their way through college. Others prefer to earn their D's and F's.

One wonders whether repression of conscience and desperate cheating would pay. Students are not blind to cheating; they see many forms of cheating. One F could be the turning point and tempt them into crime.

THE MOST OBVIOUS form of cheating is to look over at another student's test sheet; another is to be told about the course, provided with old test sheets and notes by a former student.

That is if some sneaky instructor does not change quizzes and tests, for if he does, somebody is in trouble. One girl admittedly made a perfect score in one test, but learned that it was the wrong key!

One student admitted to copying his math equations on a piece of gum, and chewing up the evidence afterwards. Another used his watch band. He kept looking at the time.

SOME INSTRUCTORS are fully aware of wholesale cheating. Those who teach auditoriums full of students say that there are students who think teachers are blind to their tactics. Cheaters sit in earlier classes and steal certain pages of tests.

There is one story of a student who had a secret plan for his English exam. She was caught, naturally. This test was rigged for deceitful scholars. No one, in the history of this college, had ever made such a perfect score.

Some students plagiarize by submitting term papers that have been written by their friends who are safely out of college.

Woe to the student who is caught cheating, and woe to the students who do not cheat. An F is a zero, in any class.

Beowulf Spaniel Says Sociology Favorite Class

By Doreen Ng

Despite tougher standards set for the coming year at all California two-year colleges, City College has increased its enrollment by one small, brown and studious spaniel.

His busy schedule includes an occasional visit to the library where he joins City College students in a quiet study period. After browsing around for a table, he makes himself comfortable lying next to one.

But he finds that no matter how hard he tries to concentrate, he is constantly being bothered by glances made by curious students, petting from head to tail and thoughtless actions of many fellow classmate.

One attempt was made by a student who tried to stir him from his comfortable floor position into a chair, which he rejected immediately.

Getting lost around campus is not unusual for a new student. Having gotten himself into the coed locker room one day he had trouble finding the exit. Adding to the confusion were several coeds who let out screams.

Sociology is perhaps his favorite subject since he is reported to have joined one class for several days.

Lunch hour for the new student is spent by giving innocent glances at fellow classmates with the biggest lunch bags.

The Observer

By William G. Pates

GOLLY GEE—California is a strange state!

Ronald Reagan has taken another step forward toward completion of the show biz takeover of California government. Californians have overthrown experience and accomplishment for glamour and complete inexperience. Since the turn of the century the average experience in government of any man elected to the Governorship has been 11 years. Reagan is only the second man since 1900 to be elected to the state house without any applicable experience.

CALIFORNIA, it can be said, will survive four years of Ronald Reagan as Governor just as it survived eight years with Edmund G. "Pat" Brown as Governor, but California certainly won't be the same. The real question is will Ronald Reagan survive four years as Governor of the number one state in the Union.

There has been a continual strain through his campaign to bring the common-sense answers to solve California's problems. That in itself is the big problem, for their are no simple, common-sense answers. California—its government, its problems and the means by which to solve them—are so very complicated and complex as to defy such solutions.

THE CITIZEN-POLITICIAN now elected as citizen-governor has a basic dislike for centralization in power and government, rising crime, the welfare burden, high government spending, taxes, bureaucracy and a fear of liberal social legislation—open housing, equality in jobs and education. He has called for a return to morality and integrity in government.

Unfortunately, this citizen-politician knows what the issues are but he doesn't know all about the issues. When questioned, his favorite answer is, "Let's not get mired down in specifics." During the campaign when reporters began to plump his opposition to the Rumford Act, he showed greater interest in escaping an explanation than letting his stand be known. When they continued their prodding Reagan commented, "At this point of the day I am not sure of what I am talking about, I am so pooped." (It was 3:30.) "You are boring in, aren't you. You're boring in because you know you have me caught so pooped I don't know what I'm doing."

IT SEEMS IMPROBABLE that California would be content to have a Governor so lacking in knowledge of the state and its problems.

It is hoped that once Reagan moves into the H Street Executive Mansion in Sacramento he will discover the whereabouts of the Marysville Dam and the Eel River, both of which he found hard to locate during the campaign as well.

Brown has served the state for 23 years as San Francisco district attorney, state attorney general and governor. When asked how he would like to be remembered as governor, Brown said, "I'd like to have them say that he (Brown) was a compassionate governor. I'd rather have them say that than anything." If nothing else, Brown was a compassionate governor.

Quite simply, the balance of power in California has moved Southward and a bit to the right. The Assembly, which was dominated by the more populous South becomes even more dominated by way of reapportionment. The California State Senate, formerly under the control of the less populated Northern Counties, will, like the Assembly, go under control of the South.

As far as the Republicans are concerned, the campaign for the 1968 Republican Presidential nomination began in earnest on the morning of November 9, 1966, for all those except Richard Nixon. He has been running for six years—Romney, Percy, Reagan, Rhodes, Hatfield and Brooke oppose him to name just a few.

Republicans picked up a number of those 48 freshman Democratic house seats lost in the Johnson landslide as well as picking up many swing districts throughout the country. Depending on whose figures you are looking at, they made the greatest comeback in this century—or they made just an average comeback.

Looking back on the disaster of 1964, there was no place they could go in the House, Senatorial, Gubernatorial, state legislative and local offices but up. They picked up a few more House and Guberntorial seats than expected, for a normal comeback following such a debacle.

'Trip' Planned For COO Talent Show Audience

Liquid projections focused on the walls accompanied by music distortion reverberation prior to show time will give the audience of the Council Of Organizations' talent show a "trip" sensation, only without the fuel, starting at 8 p.m. Friday night in the theater.

According to Marty Watten, vice chairman of COO, talent will range from national to international, from American folk to rock, from classical to jazz, and from blues to comedy. The abundance of variety and the psychedelic approach, Watten stated, should make this "the best show yet."

In addition to the contesting talent in the variety show, there will also be a few professional acts.

Bebe Burt, a professional banjo player who is also a student, will perform at the show. A Latin jazz quartet from the Philippines and some other well-known recording artists will entertain for entertainment's sake and not for prizes, Watten said.

Trophies will be presented to the top three performances as determined by the judges, with all decisions being final. Organizations sponsoring the top three taients will also be awarded trophies.

Advance tickets are on sale now in Bungalow 5, they are worth $1 without an AS card or 50 cents with an AS card. Tickets will be sold at the door, availability permitting.

Watten expected such a turnout that he planned to seat two people per seat, but fire regulations took the worry out of being close. Hence, there are only 350 tickets available for this show. Refreshments will be served (like Coke and that sort of thing).

CAF Symposium Features Mead

The third and final part of the White/Black Violence Symposium sponsored by the Contemporary Affairs Forum, will take place in College Hour tomorrow in S-136.

Featured at this third part of the symposium will be Eugene Mead, sociology instructor here, who will speak on The Economic Influences On Minority Group Behavior. Also, Neal Henderson, a student here, will speak on the topic, The Revolt At Hunters Point.

The three-part faculty-student symposium was designed by Lawrence Lazore of the Contemporary Affairs Forum to focus on the factors relating to the recent incidents at Hunters Point and the Fillmore areas.

The symposium started November 8, with a lecture by Gerald Mullin, history and humanities instructor, on the Impact Of Slavery On The American Negro Culture.

On November 15, the second phaze of the White/Black Violence Symposium was presented when sociology instructor William Y. Bell discussed The Police: Upholder Of Social Order. Lazore also spoke, discussing Some Aspects Of White Violence.

Professionals Ride Tonight

Saga Of 4 Bad Hombres

By Steven Hara

The Professionals, opening tonight at four theaters, is one of those old-fashioned shoot-'em-up westerns.

A group of four men has been hired by a rancher to retrieve his daughter who has been kidnapped by a band of Mexicans. Each of the four men has a special skill—a trend which seems to occur in all the new movies these days.

The four men are Lee Marvin, in his first role since Cat Ballou; Burt Lancaster, toothy grin and all; Robert Ryan, at his leering best, and Woody Strode, an oft overlooked Negro actor.

Lancaster, who shares top billing with Marvin is the group's demolition expert. He can do anything with explosives, it is presumed, as heroes these days of this type usually can.

Strode is the quartet's fastest gun.

Marvin is the leader of the group. He is resourceful and crafty and a bit out of place at first. Anyone who has seen him in Cat Ballou won't believe his performance, although it is top notch.

The four set out to rescue Claudia Cardinale and run into, as one would expect all kinds of trouble. It is here that the four shine in their coordinated efforts.

Unlike most of the new westerns, there is no moral to the story and there is none of the questioning over killing that commonly appears, because each of these men is a professional at his work. In this respect, the movie is much like a 1940 John Wayne flicker. Its popularity is based on its action.

If one of the enemy gets in the way, he is shot and there is no crying over the action. Perhaps this is what makes the movie such a refreshing break from such pseudo-westerns as Nevada Smith and The Return Of The Seven.

Marvin follows up his Oscar performance admirably, and he makes the movie worth seeing if for nothing else, including Miss Cardinale who is a show in herself.

French Alienation Result Of Self-Interest Policy

By Bill Fritz

The United States is continually disheartened by French foreign policy. France seems bent on destroying NATO and damaging the Western Alliance.

The strangest phenomenon of all, however, is that the United States, in France's stead, would probably do the same thing.

Consider, for example, this statement from Jacques Vernant, Secretary General of the Administrative Council of the Center of Foreign Policy: "Because, in a general manner, policy is not a matter of ideology. In the world of nation-states, it is a function of realities and possibilities, taking into account the national interests of the state . . ."

FRANCE, THEREFORE, is basing her foreign policy on self-interest. And what does this mean? It means that relying on a foreign ally three thousand miles away is only for second-rate powers. And to believe that the world's greatest power will risk nuclear warfare over the fate of your nation is naive.

Particularly when the United States refuses to share conrtol of her nuclear arsenal.

This insistence on unilateral control over the nuclear trigger is an indication of U. S. distrust. If the United States is not willing to share nuclear control, why should France believe that an attack from any quarter on her will be met with nuclear retaliation from the U.S.?

A FURTHER REASON for the present French alienation lies in the developments to the East. Russia is no longer considered a serious threat. (In fact, no one would seriously maintain that Russian aggression is likely anywhere.) Thus, this reason for U. S. presence in France has also disappeared.

France, and the rest of Europe, can now safely act with self-interest as the basis of their foreign policy. They no longer need remain lackeys of America. And they are bound to discover that NATO has outlived its usefulness.

It is strange to think that in an era when we are learning that Communist countries act on the basis of self-interest rather than ideology, and when we are adjusting our foreign policy accordingly, we cannot accept the fact that Western countries act the same.

It is a strange world where former "enemies" may do as they please while our allies are expected to toe the line.

Campus Lineup: French Film, Mr. Hulot's Holiday, Due

By John Janigian

Mr. Hulot's Holiday, a 1954 French film released in the United States by GBD International, will be shown in the college theater tomorrow night.

Mr. Hulot's Holiday is a visual comedy, mostly pantomime, starring Jacque Tati (who is also the producer and director), Natalie Pascaud and Andre Dubois. It is a hilariously funny story about a bungling but gentle bachelor who keeps things in a turmoil at a French summer resort.

● MERIONETTES: The San Francisco Merionettes, synchronized swimming team, is at Balboa pool this month.

Because of the extra seats and other refurbishings at the pool, public as well as City College swim classes have been cancelled for November.

The Merionettes will perform the aquacade and a combined City next weekend, November 18, 19 and 20. Admission for the event, located on San Jose avenue near Ocean, is $1.50 for students and $2.50 for adults.

● RECREATION ASSOCIATION: Tomorrow is the day to witness the Recreation Association's coed volleyball game at College of San Mateo. All members of RA are invited.

Students driving to San Mateo for the activities will leave from here at 4:45 p.m. There will be no bus transportation provided for this outing.

After the games, dinner will be served at College of San Mateo.

All Recreation Association members who are planning to attend the coed volleyball exchange can obtain further information from Sue Morton, Carlos Cortes, students, or Edna Pope.

● SAFETY-CHECK: The Associated Men Student-sponsored car safety-check has been cancelled.

According to Ron Appel, AMS public relations director, local insurance companies advised AMS that City College would be liable for any damage to property or person due to a mechanical fault in a car which had been cleared through the safety check.

● ENGINEERING SOCIETY: Ticket sales for the semiannual William Mayo Scholarship Dinner, sponsored by the Engineering Society, will be held this week and continue through December 2, the date of the dinner.

Paul Stark, vice president of the Engineering Society, announced that the purpose of the dinner, to be held at the Lazy V Restaurant in San Bruno, is to raise funds for the $50 scholarship to be awarded.

Wallace W. Wells of the Engineering Department will speak on his recent trip to Nova Scotia.

Tickets may be obtained from Dean James Wyatt in Bungalow 5 or from engineering students.

● THE DESERET CLUB: The Deseret Club is for students of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints who are attending the College.

The next event is a Thanksgiving banquet for members only. Details can be obtained by attending a meeting of the club.

On the weekend of October 14, 15 and 16, 140 officers of the club met at Asilomar, Monterey County, for a workshop and conference. On October 29, The Deseret Club held its annual Fall Festival. This year's theme was Autumn Gathering, and more than 400 students attended.

Special H&R Program Honors Gridders

By Doug Boston

The Ram football team, whose possible Little Rose Bowl journey has caused great commotion, was honored last Thursday in a program organized and conducted by the hotel and restaurant department.

An exchange rally, held during College Hour, was directed toward the football squad, presently ranked number one in the nation.

Performing at the rally were the cheerleaders and song girls from the College of San Mateo. Music was provided by the Friendly Strangers who appeared at the college once before.

The whole program was presented in recognition of the football team. The cafeteria was filled with posters and signs referring to the gridders' records established so far this season. Other signs were directed toward the team's possible Little Rose Bowl invitation.

The City College versus College of San Mateo game featured the fight for the Tom-Tom trophy, awarded each year to the winning team. In the 26 years this trophy has been awarded, San Francisco has earned it 18 times, while San Mateo has won seven contests.

State Convention's Primary Purpose Exchange Of Ideas

Little recognition is given to the California Junior College Student Government Association by students here, Jim Soletti, state president of the CJCSGA, charged last week.

Apparently, he said, students do not realize that through the CJCSGA there is a way for them to voice what they want. At each area conference, resolutions are adopted and assembled, together with the resolutions made at other area conferences. California is divided into eight areas.

In turn the resolutions are passed on to the statewide CJCSGA conference where all areas meet to discuss whether the resolutions should be adopted.

"The primary purpose of the conference, however, is not to discuss resolutions but to exchange ideas freely and to understand the campus as fellow student leaders," Soletti said.

"We do get things accomplished," Soletti emphasized, citing as one example the modification in the football bowl games system.

"Under the present bowl game system, it is not possible to find out which college football team is the best team in the state, since participation in the bowl games is on an invitation basis. Top teams may be exempt from participation because they have no invitation, which is unfair," Soletti explained.

Under the new system which will go into effect next year, statewide championship games will be played to determine the top team.

City College will host the coming CJCSGA statewide conference on December 1, 2 and 3, when delegates from 80 two-year colleges will participate in the exchanging of ideas and resolutions.

The keynote speaker will be Nevitt Sanford, Professor of Psychology at Stanford, who will also be at City College on Thursday, January 11, 1967 during College Hour. An invitation has also been sent to Mayor John Shelley but no reply has yet been received.

City-Wide IRC Dance Here Friday

The International Relations Club of the college will attend the seventh annual city-wide International Tea Dance from 4 to 7 p.m. Friday.

The dance will be sponsored by the Red Cross and the San Francisco Rotary Club, and will be held at Smith Hall.

All foreign students attending colleges, universities and adult schools in San Francisco are invited. American students are also welcome so that they may meet the students from other countries. The consuls of the countries represented have been invited.

The Ray Hackett Orchestra will play for the dance and refreshments will be served by the Red Cross. There is no admission charge.

The International Relations Club was founded in 1953 by Joseph Jacobsen who is sponsor of the club, with just a few members. The club now has nearly 60 members. Each year since its beginning the club has sponsored an International Fair on campus, with the exception of last spring semester when Jacobsen was on leave.

"The whole concept of the club is to meet and exchange ideas with the foreign students of San Francisco," Jacobsen said. At the dance there will be students from many countries and their respective consuls.

Explosive Rams Beat Mateo, 40-13

Victory Clinches 2nd Straight League Title

By Mike Duggan

In a game which was much tighter than the final score of 40-13 relates, the City College Rams clinched their second straight Golden Gate Conference championship Saturday at San Mateo.

The No. 1 nationally ranked Rams were given a big scare by a fired-up College of San Mateo Bulldog team. San Mateo led by 13-12 late in the third period until fullback Glenn Baker plunged over from two yards out to put the Rams ahead 18-13. Quarterback Pete Mullins, who hit on 12 of 20 passes for 144 yards during the afternoon, then connected with Dwight Tucker for an all-important two-point conversion.

THE TURNING POINT of the game came early in the fourth quarter when Tucker, Allan Cowlings, and Ocie Williams charged in and blocked a Bulldog punt on the 16-yard line. Williams picked up the loose ball and ran it back 12 yards to the 4-yard line. Two plays later, O. J. Simpson leaped over a pile of tacklers to score, and the Rams were on their way to another romp.

The next time they got the ball, it took the Rams only one play to score as O. J. Simpson streaked over left tackle for a 49-yard touchdown run. Simpson, the country's leading scorer and rusher was contained throughout most of the game by a determined group of San Mateans. He still managed to rush for 147 yards in 18 carries and had two pass receptions for 47 yards despite being double teamed. It was the keying on Simpson which left the middle open for Dwight Tucker to enjoy one of his finest games.

TUCKER CAUGHT five passes for 67 yards including one touchdown. He also scored four points on two conversion passes from Pete Mullins. Defensively, he recovered two fumbles along with helping block the punt which ended any chances of a possible Bulldog upset.

Following the opening kickoff, the Bulldogs appeared to have scored first, as quarterback Rich Cuadra hit end Gary Fleming, who broke into the open. Running all alone, the ball suddenly popped out of Fleming's hands and despite recovering the fumble, the Bulldogs' threat was stopped.

Following a fine San Mateo punt, Calvin Booth climaxed an 85-yard drive by racing 58 yards for the only score of the first quarter. A bad wrist prevented Booth from returning to action, and Milt Frank was pressed into service although he was still bothered by a sore ankle.

THE RAMS APPARENTLY had a 12-0 halftime lead following a Mullins-Tucker touchdown pass but the Bulldogs came up with a freak play for a touchdown with only five seconds remaining in the half.

The entire offensive line, minus their center, shifted over to join end Gary Fleming, leaving only the center and quarterback Cuadra in the center of the field. The Ram defense was completely confused as Cuadra took the pass back from center and fired the ball out to Fleming in the "flat," and escorted by six blockers he made it into the end zone from 36 yards out very easily.

Soccer Team Locks Up Fourth Straight Conference Crown

By John Le Tourneau

The City College soccer team downed San Mateo for the second time this year, 5-2, to wrap up its fourth straight Northern California Junior College Soccer Conference title. The win, played November 9 on the losers' field, enables the Rams to play the Southern California champion for the state title.

Previously, the soccer team had lost its first game to a tough University of Pacific, 4-3, November 1, and bounced back with a victory November 3 over Santa Clara, 3-1, in a pair of practice games at Balboa stadium.

In the Pacific game, a key injury to Roger Sarria occurred on a play when he and two UOP players collided, and as a result the ball dribbled into the Ram net for what turned out to be the winning goal.

COACH ROY DIEDERICHSEN called the Bengal game the worst the team has had all year.

"It was not that we lost, it was that our offense and our defense did not click at all," the Ram mentor commented. The game was actually even until the last few minutes when Sarria suffered his eye injury that required six stitches, and the Tigers scored the decisive goal.

Also a key break in UOP's favor was a missed penalty kick late in the final period that could have tied the score for the Rams. The booters were sluggish throughout the entire game and it didn't seem as close as the score indicated.

"UOP was a good team, but if we played up to par we should have beaten them easily," Diederichsen added.

AGAINST SANTA CLARA the Ram play improved some, but the offensive punch is still lacking. The front line was getting the ball down to the Bronco goal, but only could push it over three times.

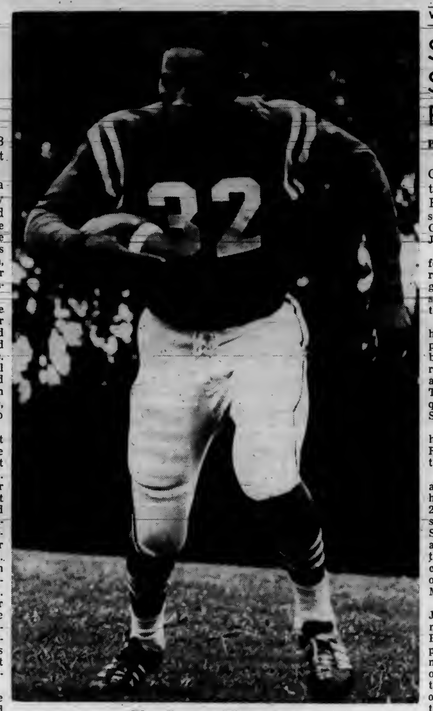
"We got down very well, but once we were there a bad pass or off-side penalty would kill the drive time and time again," Diederichsen said; "we are scoring three goals when we should be getting seven and eight," he added.

However the defense was outstanding in the Bronco tilt. They were led by halfbacks Tommy Sammuelson and Pete Rossi and left wing Mickey Duzdevich, who held the Broncos to only one goal.

G'man Crushes Brown's Gang, 67-27, As No Forfeits Mar Intra Schedule

For the first time in a long while the Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural basketball league went through a week without a single forfeit, as the Independent division and Club division games went on as scheduled November 8 and 9.

In Tuesday night's action in the Independent league, the powerful Guardsman massacred Charlie Brown's Gang, 67-27. Mike Duggan poured in 31 points as he outscored the losers by four points. Harm Fanfelle, John Franicevich and Jerry Calgero also were instrumental in the scoring.



In other Independent games, the Irish got a scare from the Knobs, but paced by Rich Rolandson's 21 points, squeaked by with a 43-39 margin. Anthony Rodrigues' 14 points led the Red Mountaineers to a 44-32 win over Hotel & Restaurant. In the final game of the night the Bearded Crusts used a balanced attack to nip Hillel, 43-39.

In the Club league, all games went along as planned as there were no major upsets. However, the undefeated Felony Squad barely edged Alpha Phi Epsilon, 40-38.

Co-favorite Newman Club ran past the hapless Chinese Students, 65-42, behind Ron Elliot's 21 points. Club division contender Phi Delta rolled over the Beta Bums, 45-22, behind Gene Ahern's 18-point output.

In the final game of the night, the Filipino-American Club picked up its first win of the season by easily defeating Alpha Sigma Delta, 39-19.

In tonight's action in the Club league all three contending teams seem to have relatively easy games. The Newman Club plays Alpha Phi Epsilon, the Felony Squad plays the Filipino-American Club, and Phi Delta is favored over the Chinese Club. In the other game, Alpha Sigma Delta plays the Beta Bums.—J. L.

Six-Score Simpson

San Jose Next Stop For Little Bowl Express

By Mike Duggan

The Golden Gate Conference Champion Ram football team tries to secure a possible Little Rose Bowl bid in the regular season finale against San Jose City College at 8 p.m. Friday on the Jaguars' field.

The game will be no light touch for the powerful Rams. Against Merritt, the Jaguars put everything together and scored the most impressive victory of the year by trouncing them, 51-14.

San Jose head coach Jim Wheelehan relies mainly on his offense to produce the winning punch. Quarterback Bob Pera has filled the shoes of record-breaking passer Bob Toledo and is considered a pinpoint passer. Toledo, a second team All-Conference quarterback last season, is now at San Francisco State College.

PERA HAS TWO fine ends to throw his passes to. Tommy Davis and Jerry Rovero are the receivers who help the aerial attack.

The Jaguars are now 3-4 overall and 2-3 in conference action. San Jose holds victories over West Valley, 21-12; Foothill, 9-7, and Merritt. Their setbacks have been to Fresno, 48-18, San Mateo, 44-27; Diablo Valley, 34-19, and Chabot, 22-7. Despite these losses, the Jaguars may have suddenly become a threat to the Rams by virtue of their overwhelming win over Merritt.

The Rams can't afford to take San Jose lightly, for victories alone do not produce a bid to the Little Rose Bowl. San Jose isn't considered a power, and therefore the Rams must not only win, but win big to hold onto their position as number one team in the nation. The Rams took over the number one position after their victory against Chabot three weeks ago.

IT WAS REPORTED that members of the Little Rose Bowl Committee witnessed City College's trouncing of Contra Costa by a 40-20 score. This victory margin of 20 points is impressive when noting that Contra Costa gained nearly as much net yardage than the Rams.

The ability of the Rams to score from anywhere at any time during a game is one of the greatest assets of this year's powerful team. Just when Contra Costa was threatening, Dwight Tucker took an interception 94 yards for six points and a conference record. Another quick strike came when the Ram defensive wall caused a fumble in the end zone which was jumped on by Jerd Lapham for a touchdown.

The Ram team is definitely loaded with talent. Pete Mullins can throw as far and as accurately as any quarterback around, and with receivers like Tucker, Mike Carter and O. J. Simpson, no team can concentrate on stopping the running attack.

Speaking of Simpson, he had quite a day last year against San Jose. In a mere 17 carries he rushed for 304 yards and scored six touchdowns. His scores came on runs of 88, 73, 56, 16 and 14 yards. His other score was on a 27-yard pass play.

THIS YEAR HE IS being used more often as a receiver to try to create one-on-one situations, which makes it hard for the defensive player to stop due to O. J.'s speed. He has caught four touchdown passes so far this year.

Despite splitting duties as a runner and receiver, Simpson has found time to roll up more than 1000 yards on the ground. He passed the mark against Contra Costa, a game in which he scored 14 points and rushed for better than 90 yards in the first quarter alone.

THIS GREAT RAM team has other stars to go along with Simpson, Tucker and Mullins. Linemen like John Deschler, Ruby Jackson, John Monroe and Mike Deschler have done great jobs all year.

The defensive line has been tough also. Allan Cowlings and Ralph Hodge seem to spend more time in the opponents' backfield than seems fair. Also Lapham, James McEldry, John Morello and Greg Pedrin have been giving fits to the opposition all season long.

Little Bowl, Playoffs Might Merge Forces

By G. Frank Cooney

THE "DOOMED" Little Rose Bowl isn't dead yet.

Despite all implications, the 21-year-old Pasadena two-year college football classic still breathes, though ever so slightly.

The one chance held out for the annual "championship bowl," is to alter the sponsors' outlook a bit. Instead of fighting the now real playoff system, which goes into effect in 1967 and "kills" all California bowls, the Pasadena Junior Chamber of Commerce might as well join the bandwagon.

There is much to gain on both sides.

FOR THE SUPPORTERS of the playoff system, Pasadena's 60,000 capacity Rose Bowl stadium would be an ideal place for the annual California two-year college championship. And if such a large stadium seems too large, then take a look at how well the Little Rose Bowl officials have done filling it.

In the 20 years that bowl game has been in existence, the average attendance has been more than 45,000 per year. The best single crowd to see the Little Rose Bowl was 60,000, a full house.

Obviously somebody has been doing some effective promoting of two-year college football in that area. And to our way of thinking, it would be a waste of two decades of promotional work if Pasadena just slipped out of California's two-year college football picture.

IF THE LITTLE Rose Bowl Committee is in tune with the State Athletic Committee, then perhaps the former could impress the latter by jumping the gun on the whole state championship situation and putting California's two best teams in the December 10 game this year.

Since having a California team play some out-of-state team again will have no real future in it, then it seems to us that Pasadena has nothing to lose and quite a bit to gain.

Such a game could be completely justified too.

So far, it seems pretty obvious that the nation's two best teams are in California this year. In our book a certain City College of San Francisco must rate as the nation's best with Santa Monica City College close behind.

Therefore, if the Rams were to play Santa Monica's Corsairs when comes this December 10, we could call the clash a "natural."

WHODUNIT DEPARTMENT — Bob Lee, Ram quarterback in 1965, was doing a fine job as University of the Pacific's signal caller until he ran up against Utah State. A certain defensive back on Utah's team intercepted one of Lee's aerials and ran it back 94 yards. Lee couldn't muster up much of an offense the rest of the game and eventually tossed another 60-yard interception score later in the contest.

It says here the defensive chap's name who did all the damage in Utah State's 49-7 clobber of Lee's Tigers is Henry King. Now that wasn't very hospitable of King, since he too is an alumnus of City College. However, our memory tells us King was somewhat more of a standout as a basketball player than a gridder.

"General Robert Lee," as one local writer referred to the former Ram signal caller and Guardsman sports reporter, is having a year very similar to the one he spent here. He started the season as a second stringer, worked his way to the top of the heap, and then led his team to three straight wins.

First Come, First Served Only Rule For Christmas Employment

By Herb Dirion

With the advent of sleigh bells, the gallop of Dancer and Prancer and old St. Nick merrily chuckling as he comes down the chimney, one finds that Christmas is just around the corner.

Christmas is also a time for the advent of extra employment for many, and this year will be no different from others with the clamor and rush of prospective employers seeking part-time and temporary help in their businesses for the holiday season.

The student placement service, in S-189, is now taking applications for students interested in Christmas employment. Already recruitment teams representing several large employer groups in San Francisco have begun their holiday season search for qualified college students for the coming Thanksgiving and Christmas seasons.

Foremost is the San Francisco Post Office which is the largest single employer of seasonal workers in the Bay Area.

City College has worked closely with the local post office over a period of years and has established itself with the administrative heads to the point where Christmas would not be Christmas in the post office without several hundred students from the college holding down jobs there.

Pay has been set at $2.59 per hour with a ten per cent differential for time worked beyond 6:00 p.m.

Sales job openings will be found in department stores, specialty shops, and confectionery firms have placed orders for workers. Since most of these jobs openings are in sales, appearance is highly important. While previous experience is preferred, outstanding candidates in appearance, grooming, personality), will be considered. Pay ranges from $1.50 to $2.00 depending upon union affiliation and experience. These jobs are open to both men and women.

Men students with truck-driving experience who have a thorough knowledge of San Francisco are needed for many delivery jobs. Students with traffic violations (moving) need not apply since all driving records are checked by the employer with the California Division of Motor Vehicles. Driving jobs range from $1.75 to $3.25 per hour.

With a few exceptions all hiring for the holiday season is accomplished many weeks prior to the actual rush. All applicants are recruited, screened, tested and given specific job assignments in November.

Apparently the inflationary spiral has affected the prospective employers, since it seems that there will be no Santa Claus this year, not even Elves.

Well at least the student placement service doesn't have any job orders for the jolly old fellow or his helpers.

Turkey Day Menu

The hotel and restaurant department will once again have a special menu in store for the Associated Students in Smith Hall today in the traditional celebration of Thanksgiving at the college.

Pierre Coste, executive chef, who has been arranging this annual Thanksgiving treat for the past several years, said that there will be no significant changes from previous years. Coste added that students have indicated that the present holiday procedure is quite adequate.

The special menu will consist of roast turkey and dressing, peas, candied sweet potatoes, and bread or rolls, along with a choice of either mince or pumpkin pie for dessert. The entire meal will cost 65 cents. This entree will be served from 11:15 a.m. until 1:15 p.m. in the cafeteria.

There will be no special changes in the regular cafeteria schedule or procedure. Regular meals and snacks will also be served as usual.

Coste, who was a former chef at the Mark Hopkins and St. Francis Hotels, said that the Thanksgiving celebration always leaves everyone on the cafeteria staff quite tired. He stressed the fact that this "simple program" will require a great deal of work on the part of the students in the hotel and restaurant program.

According to Coste, some of the students will be at work in the cafeteria from 7 a.m. until 3 p.m. Coste said that he is sure that cafeteria manager John Dunn and his staff will be very busy serving the roast turkey meals to the estimated 1000 students who will order them. If everything goes according to plan, some 400 pounds of turkey will be distributed among the AS.

Simple decorations will be located in the cafeteria pertaining to the theme of the day.—D. B.

College Dropouts—Some Seek Identity; Others Make Excuses

By Viggo Petersen

Quitting education is a problem which even the most serious and energetic student probably has contemplated at one time or another.

Financial troubles, work, the draft, parental, marital and personal problems and sometimes apathy are a few of the more "popular" types of obstacles he must face at one time or another.

With the course of his life literally hanging in the balance, the student at times is forced to grope for an answer to the question—to quit or not to quit.

What happens to students who quit classes? Is it a bad idea?

There is the oft-told story of the brilliant high school senior who upon entering college is highly disillusioned with the "system" and feels there is more to life than what is taught in the classroom.

AS LEGEND HOLDS IT the disillusioned young man quits and embarks upon a number of private adventures in an attempt to "find himself."

The adventures usually consist of "riding the rails," or touring foreign countries or just "bumming around" meeting people.

Although these kinds of adventures are somewhat legendary and overromanticized, nevertheless many feel that much is to be said for this kind of "searching."

Observers have found that the most mature students are the ones who drop out and return later. Persons at the University of California interested in observing college dropouts described the "identity-seeking" type of dropouts as being "complex, flexible, realistic people, humane and tolerant toward others who value sensation and variety of experience, have an active imagination and high intellectual and esthetic interests."

IN CONTRAST to this they found that ones who remain are usually less mature, somewhat more conservative, conventional, complaint to authority, task-oriented and ambitious."

The findings of these observers, while perhaps given to over-generalizations, did not indicate which were the better students academically; the findings appeared in an article in the San Francisco Chronicle.

It has been noted that taking a leave of absence has a tendency to give one a keener awareness of the values of an education.

In contrast to these theories, John Brady, coordinator of Student Welfare at City College, advanced perhaps some more realistic ideas of his own:

"I don't really think a person is exposed enough to be able to decide what he wants just by going out and working. He can't learn what his aptitudes are by going from job to job. He would probably be better off taking a vocational test here at the college."

BRADY, IN CITING bad grades as a reason for some students wanting to quit, said: "It's their own fault. Most of the students I've come into contact with are quite capable of doing the work but they simply don't apply themselves.

"Some students make a lot of excuses for themselves," he said, "but the simple fact is they just don't want to pick up a book."

He cited the main problem among women students with bad grades as being an imagined and sometimes real problem with parents at home.

"In some cases a real conflict will arise at home where overprotective and overly restrictive parents will cause the student to become hostile and bad grades many times are the result. In cases such as this it would probably be advisable for the student to take a leave of absence and resolve difficulties at home," he said.

AMONG MEN STUDENTS, Brady indicated the problem was often very real—the draft.

"Often the student feels 'why should I study when I'm going to be drafted any time,'" Brady said.

In discussing the idea of quitting for the sake of work, Brady pointed out that a number of students are attempting full-time work and college, and Brady strongly emphasized the fallability of such attempts.

"THE FACT IS," he declared, "academic requirements are getting tougher and students are going to be confronted with more serious study. Full-time work isn't going to allow full-time study. Students are going to have to give up one or the other."

When asked about the advisability of students quitting because they are uncertain of their academic interests Brady said: "I would say that 75 per cent of the students who enter City College really don't know what they want to do; but I would strongly advise them to stick it out and make the best of it."

While indicating periods of uncertainty during his own years in college, Brady said:

"At least the uncertain student can complete his general education courses required for graduation while making up his mind about what major he wants to study."

It's The Pasadena Snub—So Rams Go For National Crown In Prune Bowl

By G. Frank Cooney

Snubbed for the second—and last—time in Little Rose Bowl history, City College of San Francisco transcended Pasadena's impractical picks by accepting a bid to play Oakland's Laney College for the National Championship in the Prune Bowl, December 3.

The Prune clash, to be held at San Jose State's Spartan Stadium, has already been acclaimed the best two-year college bowl in the nation by numerous state officials and coaches.

Ranked No. 1 and No. 4 in the nation respectively, San Francisco and Laney represent the only undefeated-untied teams in the nation and rank as the country's top offensive squads.

PASADENA, BY THE WAY, has reconciled itself to host, in the words of State Athletic Committee member Dr. Louis F. Batmale, "a nothing game." The final Little Rose Bowl picks gave the Rams a good old-fashioned "home towning" and chose Pasadena City College — a big fish in a little league — to play 1965 Little Rose loser Henderson of Texas.

Also snubbed in the ridiculous selections was a very impressive Santa Monica, which rang up an 8-0-1 tally against some of California's best teams. It was hoped that San Francisco would clash in the Pasadena classic with Santa Monica and thus demonstrate that city's ability to pull off an intra-state tiff.

BUT LACKING FORESIGHT, the Pasadena bunch chose to prance along in the old established pattern of selecting the top out-of-state team to play the best California squad. That is, they tried to make it look that way. Actually, they have neither the best California team nor the best out-of-state team. It's a real "nothing."

Meanwhile, back in the Bay Area, the somewhat disillusioned Rams are trying to get up steam to play very tough Laney. According to Eagle Coach Don Kloppenberg, "Our guys have been eager to trounce the No. 1 team in the nation for a long while and I am very glad that they will get the chance in the Prune Bowl."

The prestige of the Little Rose Bowl was further battered when Santa Monica and 1965 Little Rose champion Fullerton elected to clash in the Potato Bowl at Bakersfield. This, too, will definitely be a better grade of competition than will be presented in the doomed Pasadena fiasco.

Council Approves New Revised Election Rules

By Bill Fritz

With semiannual Associated Student elections just three weeks away, Student Council, last week, went about the task of considering and approving the newly-revised election rules.

However, the five-page outline of campaign procedures and regulations, submitted by Election Commissioner Don Chiang, was not immediately approved.

The first amendment made to the rules increased the number of posters for candidates for presidential offices from six to eight and from four to six for all other candidates.

ARGUING FOR THIS amendment, Frosh Councilman Ron Lent expressed his opinion that the small number of posters was not adequate to publicize the candidacy of someone "fairly unknown on campus."

For the first time this semester, AS President Bruce Fisher turned over the chair to AS Vice President Percy Jones so that he, Fisher, could take an opposing stand on this amendment.

Fisher argued that he and the Election Commissioner had agreed on this provision because neither wanted to see the campus cluttered with posters and both wished to shift the emphasis onto quality rather than quantity. The amendment passed, 9-4-1.

A SECOND AMENDMENT was proposed by Soph Councilman John Rhoten which did away with the limitation placed on the number of hand-out and throw-away campaign literature.

Rhoten argued that this type of literature has a very low percentage of effectiveness, and a limit of 1500 for presidential candidates and of 1000 for all other candidates and for political parties is not sufficient to reach the nearly 8800 day students at

Stanford Professor Is Keynote Speaker At State Convention

By Lori Pittman

Dr. Nevitt Sanford will be keynote speaker at the California Junior College Student Government Association state convention to be held the first three days in December in San Francisco at the Hilton Hotel.

Once the Professor of Psychology at the University of California in Berkeley, Dr. Sanford is now associated with the School of Psychology at Stanford and is the Director of its Institute of Study of Human Problems.

This statewide CJCSGA convention is being hosted by this college with the assistance of the College of San Mateo, Menlo and Foothill Colleges. Government Through Communication is the main theme.

"It is an opportunity for two-year colleges of the state to get together to discuss various problems, exchange ideas and pass resolutions in hopes of obtaining needed changes," James Wyatt, assistant dean of Student Activities, said.

THERE ARE 24 resolutions to be brought before the state convention this year, President of CPCSGA Jim Soletti explained recently. These are carried forward from the different area conferences throughout the state.

A redistricting of two-year colleges in southern California for CJCSGA purposes is one of the primary points to be discussed at the convention.

The draft is another big problem faced by college students. This will be the topic of the Campus Currents Workshop. "We hope to come up with resolutions showing how two-year colleges feel about the draft," Soletti said, "and to submit these resolutions on to higher authorities."

IN ADDITION TO the general assembly the convention will be divided into five workshops. John Given will speak for the Presidents Workshop, Dr. John Burdick for the Philosophy And Function Of Student Government, Dr. Dale Tillery on The Role Of Campus Organizations, Richard Gott on The Changing Student and Terrence Cullinan on Campus Currents.

Three of the six state offices are held by students of this college.

Soletti is the president, Judy Guild is the state secretary and the office of information is held by Helen Ferentinos. Other delegates to represent this college at the convention are Bruce Fisher, Percy Jones, Chris Loo, Joe Parnell and Paul Shuttleworth.

AWS Helps Register 174 Delegates To Convention

Members of the Associated Women Students from both City College and College of San Mateo will act as hostesses and registration assistants at the California Junior College Student Government Association Conference, December 1 to 3, at the Hilton Hotel.

In preparation for the 174 delegates who are expected to attend, the AWS members are preparing "information packets" which will provide information on the convention and sites to see in San Francisco.

AWS is also in planning for the Awards and Recognition Assembly, January 10.

Candidate Petitions Due For Filing Today

The deadline to file a completed petition for candidacy in elections for Associated Student Spring semester officers is 1 p.m. today in the registrar's office, S-121, according to Don Chiang, election commissioner.

Petitions and campaign regulations, which contain information regarding campus political parties, campaign procedure and expenditures, and poster and banner rules can be obtained in B-5.

A total of 20 AS positions is set for a change. The six chief seats are the AS Presidency and Vice Presidency, the Associated Men and Women Student Presidencies, and the Frosh and Soph Class Presidencies.

The remaining 14 offices are Student Council seats, composed of an equal number of Freshman and Sophomore representatives.

Morning-Only Program Gamblers May Wind Up Watching Sunset

SOMEHOW, word has leaked out that registration for the next semester will be handled by a computer and that final grades will be sent to the students through the mail.

Well now that the cat's out, those who heard about the innovations will probably realize that, in order to acquire a genuine final grade slip through the mails, they must have their present address on record at the registrar's office—and before Christmas vacation.

ALSO, IT HAS PROBABLY DAWNED on those in the know that there will be an absence of that past kind and interested guidance that was always so available at the manual registration process.

This means that when a certain class is closed by the machine, a student's alternate class will be chosen automatically. However, if that student crams his entire program into the morning hours, as 7000 students have done before him, his alternate class may also be closed.

Bearing these possibilities in mind, then, it should occur to a student with a four-digit reg number that perhaps he should put some alternate classes into the afternoon hours.

Naturally many people have their mind set on a morning program and they are not about to risk an afternoon class. They'll let George take the afternoon classes. They may end up with six out of twelve units too.

FOR THOSE STUDENTS WHO need a certain number of units, such as people who are draft conscious or are drawing G.I. Bill money or who would like to get an AA inside of five years, it would be highly advisable for them to include generous alternate courses and times in their programs.

Now The Organization knows that there are going to be some students who will be completely impervious to these pearls of wisdom and are going to take morning programs with little or no alternates and are going to wind up with very few classes. They just know it. And so there will be a post-machine registration (PMR) re-registration for losers.

Obviously, at that late date, all prime hours and classes will be taken by George, and the loser will be able to watch the sunset from his seat at the window in his 1A class.

'Gluttons Anonymous'

By Connie Skipitares

SOME PERSONS are members of the Metrecal - For - Lunch Bunch. Others belong to the Diet Pepsi Generation. Still others join the Sucaryl Sweetheart Society.

Whatever the league, echoes from every corner of the "Great Society" (literally) are blaring evidence that second only to eating, America loves diets.

In the face of such a declaration, would it be too offensive to the present administration to convert that label to the "Overweight Society?".

The term alone has provided the impetus for such wild inventions as the Stone Age Meat Diet, the Rockefeller Diet, the Champagne Diet ("Wine, dine, and grow thin"), the U.S. Air Force Academy Diet (the Academy is mysteriously denying all connection with it now), the meat and mushroom diets, the apple diets, the ice cream diets, and the "eat-all-you-want"-diets (namely Mayo Clinic and Drinking Man's).

PROBABLY THE FIRST clue justifying serious resignation to any of these diets becomes most apparent when you can clinch a job as a department store Santa Claus without finding it necessary to use the traditional paddings to sell yourself in the character role.

What we need is a "Gluttons Anonymous!"

But would this solve the 'face-stuffers' problem? Most dieters (the ones who could stand to lose the most) would like to keep their condition anonymous, yet some, for obvious reasons, just wouldn't be successful at the concealment at all!

A LESS EMBARRASSING means of curbing the appetite has been cited by results of a research project successfully conducting that feeding by machine helps to reduce weight.

The experiment goes that fat persons can keep track of their calories and lose weight by using a machine feeder that monitors food intake electronically.

The machine dispenses single mouthfuls of a liquid diet formula, delivered by way of a mouthpiece when the dieter pushes a button. A timer shows the exact time of eating.

ONE 400 POUND patient went down to 275 calories a day without discomfort. He said he could not take more food because he felt that the machine was "watching" him. When he was allowed to pour the formula into a drinking glass, his daily intake increased to 575 calories a day.

Another diet enthusiast, a Dr. George Bach, prescribes as his reducing cure "imaginery eating." "I'm constantly hungry," he says, "and I've found that it works if you think about food." Dr. Bach's office, therefore, has pictures of food to keep his mind off the real thing (?).

Finally, the Pray Your Weight Away Diet.

"Ask God to show you why you eat too much, ask God to attend each bite, ask God to help you exercise and ask God to help you face this hard fact: All your life you'll be fat-prone."

U.S. Student In Europe

American Characteristics Confuse Europe; Mixed Feelings Greet Travelers

American students—they're irresponsible, giggly, materialistic, cliquish, unknowledgable and highly critical, yet very friendly and outgoing. At least, so they say in Paris, Rome, Vienna and Madrid.

Because of the exodus of numerous American students to various European centers of culture, the foreigner has been given an excellent opportunity to see and judge American youth. For us, the reciprocal opinion is out of the question due to the unreasonably small number of foreign students studying in our universities.

This past year, as usual, many Bay Area students studied abroad. For the most part, they came to know the people well. Impressions were made. Ideas were exchanged.

THE EUROPEAN HAS strong, paradoxical views about his contemporary American. On the one hand he will say we are immature and ignorant, and on the other, he will say we are likeable and dynamic. Most probably this is due to the fact that the American student one sees and the American student one knows are essentially two different types. The former is criticized objectively, while the latter is regarded subjectively.

The American student one sees is undoubtedly unique. He is the student who goes to Europe "to get some culture." Therefore, the minute he arrives he either buys or rents a car, so that he can see every last historical monument and museum.

This sightseeing he does between classes and on weekends. The free time remaining he spends calculating which medieval town he will invade next. Naturally he takes all his friends with him for security.

After spending five minutes running around the most beautiful Gothic cathedral in the world, he wastes an hour buying postcards and souvenirs. If he can't find a guide book, he ends up amazing some poor native by asking, "What's Gothic mean, anyway?"

AND, OF COURSE, he'll never forget the time he caused a scene in church. It might have been the bright red shirt, yellow slacks and white tennis shoes he was wearing. Or was it all the noise he and the guys were making trying to find Giotto's mural during the middle of the services.

To a certain extent this picture is true of all American students abroad, and it is easy to see why it creates a bad impression. The European is a person with a very rich cultural heritage which he knows well. His economic condition is generally poor and frugal. Seeing the American student flaunting his money along with his stupidity is, therefore, offensive.

On the other hand, the American student the foreigner gets to know is a pretty nice guy. He meets his host on an equal footing. They talk, they criticize each other, yet they become friends.

The American student comes to the sudden realization that maybe there's more to Europe than its culture, like perhaps the people and their funny ways are worth some attention. Once he understands this, he begins to love the native Europeans for their uniqueness.

He finds beauty in their customs and reason in their thought. He finds a close kinship with a heritage and history not his own. He may even find himself a happy ex-patriot.

State, Campus Aid In Training Handicapped

By Lori Pittman

Walking up and down the stairs, reading a book or even seeing the sun or a blade of grass are things that an average person takes for granted.

Not all students at this college have these abilities. Approximately 15 students on campus are handicapped in some way. Some are totally or partially blind; some are in wheel chairs; others have tuberculosis, epilepsy or heart trouble, and a few have had slight adjustment problems.

How do they do it? Howard Schoon, counselor for the rehabilitation students, has a great admiration for these students. Though employed by the college, he explained that he is also working with the California State Department of Rehabilitation.

These students receive a certain amount of financial aid from this state department to assist them with their education. It really isn't much, but it gives the handicapped person a chance to become trained and independent. It helps him to make something of himself, to build up his self-image and respect.

As Schoon put it, "A blind person doesn't consider his blindness a handicap but more as a nuisance." Even this does not really hinder their enjoyment of life. Many play golf and water ski. Some have their own televisions, and there is even a bowling league here in the city.

How do they do it? Schoon asked one blind student how he could find his way around in the patio between Science and Cloud Halls. The student answered that it was no problem at all. He would merely listen for the sound of the flapping rope on the flag pole. Its direction from him would give him his bearings.

Another blind student commented to Schoon about what a sunny day it was, and then explained that he could feel the sun on his cheek.

Harry Cordellos, a graduate of this college in the spring of 1962, was an excellent reporter and photographer on The Guardsman staff. He was one of the sightless.

The initial effort on the part of City College to aid these students began in the early sixties when ramps were installed on some of the stairways for wheel chairs. Keys for elevators are now issued to some of the students who need them, a few small rooms are set aside as studies and some tapes are made of some of the lessons.

A Book About Fat And How To Lose It

By B.T.

WHY CAN'T A FEW more vending machines, stocked with diet liquids, be added to this college's collection?

Millions are being made from the nation's weight-watchers. The students can benefit, for the end product of the diet industry is really money.

Peter Wyden's book, The Overweight Society, discloses numerous methods in which the public purchases a dream—of an easy solution to losing weight. The book has no moral tone, except that the American public should be aware of the countless gimmicks and lies.

JACK LA LANNE, the exercise zealot, is a tireless crusader for physical fitness. This SF State college dropout has amassed a fortune from his side business of selling advice and health products.

According to Wyden, LaLanne sold too much, and when food and drug investigators found that his labels were not exactly truthful, they seized thousands of brochures and cans of instant liquid breakfast, and forced LaLanne to modify the labels. Annual sales "slumped 75%," but LaLanne still grossed over one million dollars.

However, the public is not always the victim of exaggerated advertising. Vic Tanny, the gym tycoon of the 1950's, lost money to his advertisers and finally ended up managing two small gyms near the east coast.

WYDEN WROTE THAT Tanny's downfall came when he oversold—his television and advertising costs proved too costly.

This book tells of organizations such as the Button Busters, Bulge Shedders, Zipper Rippers, Food Addicts, Thick 'N' Tired, Invisi-Weighs, Waist Aways, Inches Anonymous, Shrinking Violets, (SOS) Slim Our Selves, (TNT) Take No Treats, Do or Dieters, Carrot Crunchers, Pound Pushers, and Tummy Tuckers.

In one chapter, Doing It By Osmosis, Wyden tells of a jovial, overweight professor and his wife who successfully cater to Very Important Persons in their expensive health resorts in Mexico and in the U.S.

HE GIVES THE patrons reading material on philosophy, and feeds them health foods that are grown on his own "fat farm." Wyden points out that "the Professor has his points. He is so sure of himself. He knows human nature. He is without pretense. And he rarely leaves anybody confused. How many counselors in his field can say the same?"

Candy, Quacks and Magic Couches; Coming Soon: The New Non-Foods; Starvation, Champagne and Prayer, and The Thorn Of Plenty are but a few of the chapters included in this entertaining book.

Wyden concludes that a happy medium cannot be achieved within the diet industry unless "the best combined efforts of parents, physicians, educators, researchers, industrial interests and Government guardians over our health and food" can be achieved.

THANKSGIVING KEEPSAKE: "The worship most acceptable to God, comes from a thankful and cheerful heart." —Plutarch.

South Reservoir Used For Crime Demonstrations

Ever handcuffed a friend in jest, then lost the key for real?

This could only happen to one of the 35 members of the Criminology 55 class while practicing for but another of the numerous tests of skill required in the rigorous training of becoming a good "cop."

For the college's criminology department, concerned with launching an apparently new technique of instruction, the initiation of the south reservoir for demonstrations in frisking, handcuffing and vehicle control afforded the Campus Police as a part of the course's curriculum, will greatly satisfy the need for experience for the young rookies.

Just as a great deal of practice is necessary to achieve the characteristics essential for commendable policemanship, so is the actual circumstance and locale created in the performance, basic to its effectiveness, as only a regularly enrolled member of the Criminology 55 class can relate.

Garbed in the entire battlements of silver-badged uniforms, handcuffs and billy clubs, the neophyte policemen divide themselves into two groups to take turns participating in the two distinct phases, which the program offers.

One group, under the direction of Chief Kevin Kelly (of the Campus Police Force), re-enacts its version of an actual speed chase, employing two plain-clothed students as suspected robbers; while the other, supervised by Deputy Chief Bob Brien, organizes itself into sets of pairs to give the men an opportunity to practice handcuffing one another.

Last week was only the second trial run of the duo-functional demonstration and already its instigators are convinced of its effectiveness in illustrating the importance of quick thinking and action in actual cases in point.—C.S.

The Observer

By William G. Pates

THREE YEARS have now passed since the martydrom of John F. Kennedy, and the legend has all but obliterated the image of the man.

The legacy of the New Frontier and the President's place in history will be based less on the tangible achievements—though there were important ones—than on the quality of the man, his statecraft in managing foreign affairs—though there were errors in judgment—the clarity and persistence with which he articulated the needs and purpose of the nation.

Therein lies the basis for the legend.

IN THE CAMPAIGN of 1960 Kennedy initiated his call to "get this country moving again," and ". . . to light the candle that can guide us through the darkness to a safe and sane future." Such rhetorical utterances brought verbal attacks on him for running down the United States from his opponent and others.

But Kennedy believed that the country and its leaders were in a period of stagnancy, mediocrity and complacency, that we as a nation "were lying in the harbors," and that these were critical times that demanded invention, innovation, imagination, decision and courage.

He saw the 1960's as a frontier of unknown opportunities and perils, of unfilled hopes and threats holding out the promise of more sacrifice instead of more security.

MANY RESPONDED to his message, but his election was so close as to block any full-fledged attempts to mold the United States in the idealist visions of the New Frontier overnight. The President realized therefore that he had no mandate from the American people and with members of past generations holding the power in the Congress it would be difficult to pass legislation, and he tempered the administration's efforts in the Congress with shrewd awareness of the possible.

Like most of his predecessors, President Kennedy grew in office. He realized that the problems were more difficult than imagined and that there is a limitation upon the ability of the nation to solve the problems. However he devoted every effort of mind, spirit, imagination, courage, perseverance, vision, dedication, responsibility, will, commitment, grace and integrity to achieve his goals even if the Congress and others didn't reciprocate.

MUCH WAS ACCOMPLISHED, however, in other fields than solid legislation. There were brought forth new hopes for peace, elimination of nuclear testing in the atmosphere, abolition of nuclear diplomacy, new politics toward Latin America, reordering of American defenses, a revolution in national economic policy, concern for poverty, stimulus to the arts, and a fight for reason against extremism and mythology in achieving or completing the American promise.

At the time of his death, even so most of the major legislation offered for passage to the Congress was stalled in committees in both the House and Senate.

Overall the Kennedy administration imagined and planned far more departures in American life and national policy than it would ever have the opportunity, possibly even with a willing Congress, to undertake. The President himself stated declaratively that this would be the case when he said that all his hopes and aspirations "... would not be finished in the first one hundred days, nor in the first one thousands day nor even in the lifetime of this administration . . . but let us begin."

Kennedy taught mankind that the process of rediscovering America was not over. He transformed the American spirit to a new day. The energies he released, the standards he set, the purposes he inspired, the goals he established hopefully will guide the land he served for years to come.

Campus Lineup: Dental Assisting Seeks 'Guinea Pigs'

Dental Assisting students will begin testing the demand for their services next week when Dr. Catherine Geissler and her three classes of apprentice technicians launch their semesterly campaign to recruit "guinea pigs" on which to practice the fruits of their learning in X-ray technique.

Not only will the service (usually a costly one) be offered by the Dental X-ray department free-of-charge, but volunteers will be able to submit the developed X-rays to their own personal dentists as valid referral material for their toothy case histories.

The X-ray process itself will absorb approximately one hour of the patient's time.

Students interested in volunteering for the program can submit their names, addresses, phone numbers and free hours to Dr. Geissler in S-222.

Past semester recruitment has demonstrated that the service has always attracted more men volunteers than women, according to Dr. Geissler, who is anticipating "more of the same reaction to the present program's announcement."

CONCERT SERIES: Sylvia Jenkins, the noted recitalist and piano soloist, will play in an instrumental concert in Arts Hall, Room 152, in College Hour Thursday, December 1, as part of the Artists Concert Series.

Miss Jenkins, an American pianist, received her training at the San Francisco Conservatory of Music, the Music Academy of the West, and the Accademia Chigiana in Italy. She has played and traveled extensively in both Europe and the United States.

She has received many awards for her playing, such as, the Pierre Monteux San Francisco Symphony Award, and she has recorded several albums on the Music Library Label. Her latest recording is Sylvia Jenkins Plays Mozart.

GUARDSMAN: A First Class rating was given to The Guardsman for volumes 61 (Fall 1965), and 62 (Spring 1966) by the Associated Collegiate Press.

During 50 semesters of membership with the ACP, The Guardsman has received 32 All-American awards and 18 First Class awards.

The ACP All-American Newspaper Critical Service is located at the University of Minnesota and judges college newspapers and rates them in four categories: All-American, First Class, Second Class, and Third Class. The Guardsman has never held a rating below First Class.

Editors for volumes 61 and 62 were Don Patten and Mike Smith, respectively. Patten is now a student at San Jose State College; Smith is at San Francisco State.

• Hard To Criticize

Editor:

Three cheers for The Guardsman! The college newspaper finally has grown up. One cannot help but be greatly impressed with the journalistic excellence of the newspaper this semester.

Of special quality, I think, are the mature and thought-provoking columns being written by Miss Skipitares and Mr. Pates on highly controversial topics of interest to all.

Also worthy of praise are the front-page news stories on important cultural events on campus authored by Mr. Greco and other staff members.

If I have any criticism at all, it would be directed toward the rather bland editorials of The Guardsman. Though some have been thoughtful and provocative, the newspaper still lacks the quality of hard-hitting, crusading journalism that makes any newspaper truly great. Aren't there enough problems about campus this semester for The Guardsman to launch any crusades?

Milady Takes A Break

LED BY CENTER-MIDDLE guard, "Cathectic Cathy" Dougherty (shown above disengaging a few teeth from the mouth of a College of San Mateo blocker), the eager and talented Ramette line made short work of any San Mateo hopes for an offensive attack in the first annual San Francisco-San Mateo Powder Puff game.

Highlighting the 16-0 rout by San Francisco's campus queens were the able signal-calling of dual quarterbacks "Crafty Chris" Scales and "Dynamic Dianne" Lattimer and the dazzling running game of Pat "Cryptic Cricket" Fluren.

ONE MSU SCOUT had nothing but good things to say about Miss Fluren's flashing speed and agility and proudly announced that she "is expected, by Coach Duffy (Gongales), to play a big part in Mini-Skirt Union's '67 title quest."

Much praise goes to Coach James Wyatt for transforming a rag-tag bunch of young hopefuls into a rag-tag bunch of young winners.

And for his spirit-inducing sideline antics, Head Song Boy Bruce Fisher has been unanimously voted Seventeen Magazine's annual "Pink Parasol" Award.

AFTER RUNNING AWAY with the honors at this game of games and climaxing an undefeated, uncored-upon season, the gracious gridders appeared content to rest upon their laurels. But there's no rest for the wicked, and the lauded ladies are preparing to answer a San Mateo challenge to do battle on a hardwood court during the coming basketball season.

Scholarships Available For College Of The Seven Seas

By Tom Graham

A new development in higher education is afloat today with the main objective of combining book learning with look learning.

It is known as the Chapman College Seven Seas Division of International Education's floating campus.

Chapman College offers a $1200 scholarship to a qualifed City College student to enable him to enroll in the Spring semester cruise.

Any full-time student with a B average is qualified to file an application by December 1 with Dean Mary Golding, who emphasized that candidates must be chosen by Monday, December 12.

The unique 107-day voyage of discovery will take 410 students to 17 ports around the world on Holland-America Line's SS Ryndam. This sailing will mark another year of operation for Chapman College's sea campus.

THE FLOATING CAMPUS offers course work designed to meet the needs of most undergraduate and graduate liberal arts students in modern classrooms, laboratories and studios.

Facilities include 14 classrooms, a modern science laboratory, an oceanography laboratory, 280-seat theater, modern audio-visual equipment, an especially selected and continually growing library and a completely staffed hospital.

IN-PORT ACTIVITIES include specialized field trips, lectures by foreign experts in economics, religion, literature and other subjects, visits to museums and art galleries, conferences and panel discussions with students and faculties of universities, and, where possible, home-stays with families.

Students aboard the floating campus this semester from City College are Lois Frediani, a sophomore English major; Jaylayne McCune, a sophomore sociology major; Kenneth McKaye, a sophomore majoring in biochemistry; and Diana Zora Smith, a sophomore pre-law major. Karen Carlson and Craig Minefee were "aboard" last spring.

The spring semester voyage, also 107 days, departs from Los Angeles February 7, bound for Caracas, the island of Trinidad, Salvadore, Buenos Aires, Montevideo, Rio de Janeiro, Lagos, Dakar, Casablanca, Cadiz, Lisbon, Rotterdam, Copenhagen, London, Dublin and Galway before returning to New York May 25.

G'man Staff Observes Thanksgiving Holiday Too

City College's four-day Thanksgiving break will be starting tomorrow, with students not having to return until Monday, when midterms are scheduled to be staring them in the face.

The second midterm period ends Friday, December 2.

Because of the break the next issue of The Guardsman will be published Wednesday, December 7.

The Guardsman staff observes holidays too.

Council: Election Rule Change

the college. This amendment passed.

The final amendment, which raised the maximum expenditure by a political party from $150 to $200, was proposed by Paul Shuttleworth, Soph Councilman. Shuttleworth contended that this restriction would be unfair to candidates relying on party support and who, through lack of funds, are unable to conduct a proper campaign themselves.

The amendment passed unanimously, despite the fact that Chairman Fisher expressed opposition.

UNDER THE HEADING of New Business, the names of three new clubs, the Veterans Club, the Bridge Club and the Sports Car Club, were submitted by Council Of Organizations Vice Chairman Marty Watten for ratification by council as on-campus organizations. All three were quickly ratified, upon Watten's recommendation.

FRIDAY, AFTER THE budget session, Fisher and council held a closed "group therapy" session to try to work out grievances amoung council members and between council members and Fisher.

Soph Councilman Shuttleworth presented a report from the Stadium Name Committee that two names—Ram Stadium and The John F. Kennedy Field—have been chosen to be included on the December 14 ballot.

Voting students will have the somewhat dubious privilege of choosing one of the names which will be presented to the San Francisco Board of Education as the students' choice for official designation of the campus stadium and football field.

ON MONDAY OF last week, council approved a thrice-amended resolution allowing Hillel Club to set up a table at the silver pole during College Hour on Tuesdays and Thursdays with the purpose of dispensing information on the Big Brothers of America program.

Resolutions Committee chairman Jim McIntire, who, with his commitment, amended the resolution, recommended approval of this bit of legislation with the stipulation that council carefully consider matters of this nature in the future, so as to avoid conflict with the office of Dean of Students and with Board of Education rulings.

Doris Hernried Wins France's Top Teacher Award

By Melvin Beechman

Doris E. Hernried, instructor of French here, was awarded the French government's highest possible honor to a teacher, the Palmes Academiques, at a meeting of the American Association of Teachers of French held at Dominican College, November 5.

M. Edouard Morot-Sir, cultural counsellor at the French embassy, flew from New York to make the presentation, the Palmes Academiques, which was established in 1808 to "recompense university merits," is but rarely given to a non-Frenchman, seldom to a woman, and never before to someone as youthful as Miss Hernried.

MOROT-SIR IN announcing that Miss Hernried was the recipient of the award and now a Chevalier of the Order of the Palmes Academiques, reminisced over their first encounter in Paris when Miss Hernried was a Fulbright student and he director of the Fulbright commission.

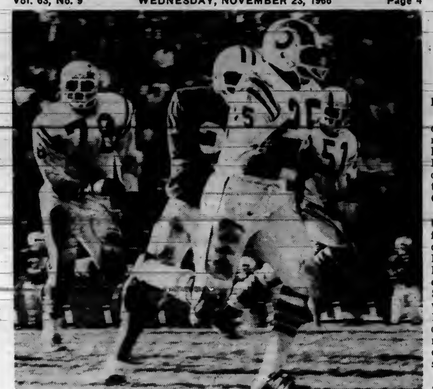
Miss Hernried, much to Morot-Sir's surprise, was able to earn her doctorate from the Sorbonne in one year, marking the beginning of the attention he centered on her career.

Morot-Sir said that her career was divided into two parts; first, he cited her literary activities. She published works on French dramatic authors, such as Lenormand (whom she studied under while at Mills College) and Becque, and then published a book on Perspectives de la Literature Francaise.

SECONDLY, HE STATED that she is a teacher. Teaching at Purdue University during summer sessions for the past ten years, Miss Hernried accomplished remarkable work in the training of teachers of French in an effort to improve their teaching methods.

The endeavors of an American teacher who knew admirably how to study certain aspects of French literature, and for brilliant pedagogic qualities, were thus recognized in the name of the prime minister and the powers conferred on Morot-Sir, the award and an embrace.

In a moment of real emotion, Miss Hernried declared that in her career as a teacher, she had reached the summit by receiving the Palmes Academiques, and she wholeheartedly thanked Morot-Sir and the French government.



MISS HERNRIED, who has taught here since 1946, has degrees from here, from the University of California, and from Mills College. She was awarded her doctorate Summa cum laude from the University of Paris.

Co-author of a popular text, Perspectives de la Literature Francaise, Miss Hernried has for several summers served on the staff of the NDEA institute in French at Purdue University.

She is a member of the following honor societies—Phi Beta Kappa, Pi Delta Pi, Alpha Mu Gamma and Alpha Gamma Sigma; she has also been a member and an officer of the American Association of Teachers of French, of the Philological Association of Northern California, and of the Modern Languages Association.

It's Simpson Again With Five Touchdowns

By Mike Duggan

O. J. Simpson scored five touchdowns and topped some of his own records which will now stay for a long time in leading the undefeated Ram eleven to a thrilling 46-34 win over a determined San Jose Jaguar team Friday night before a San Jose City College Stadium crowd of 4500.

Simpson was "Mr. Clutch" as he broke a 34-34 tie midway in the fourth period with a tremendous catch and run play on a pass from Pete Mullins for a 30-yard touchdown. Minutes later, following a key interception by lineman John Deschler, Simpson put the game out of reach with a dazzling 15-yard scoring run. It as a sweep left and O. J. stepped over tackler after tackler before reaching paydirt for the fifth time during the game and 27th time this season.

THE HIGH-SCORING CONTEST started out in just that manner as Ram back William Alfred took the opening kickoff 83 yards for a 6-0 Ram lead. Only 25 seconds had ticked off the clock and the Jaguars led 7-6 as speedy halfback Ed Fairley raced 81 yards with the Rams' ensuing kickoff.

Before the quarter ended the Jags scored again as Alfred slipped and left end Tom Davis all alone for a 46-yard pass from record breaking San Jose quarterback Manny Gonzales. Gonzales broke records for total offense, passing yardage, and number of completions during one season.

A conversion pass from Mullins to end Mike Carter enabled the Rams to tie at 14-14 following a 3-yard Simpson touchdown run on a fourth-down play.

After Al Richard had tackled Ram Mike Deschler in the end zone for a safety, the Jags proceeded to score again on a pass from Gonzales to the leading receiver in the conference, Jim Heckendorn.

TRAILING 24-22, and time running out in the half, the Rams had to get on the scoreboard before intermission. With only 30 seconds left Mullins gave it to Simpson, who until then had a mere 9 yards in seven carries. From 44 yards out, Simpson made a beautiful cut and out-raced four defenders to the end zone making it 20-20 at the half.

Craig Johnson's sixth interception of the season set up the first score of the second half. Milt Frank bumped in from nine yards out to put the Rams out on top. Dwight Tucker caught a record-setting seventh conversion score from Mullins to make it 28-22 Rams.

The Jaguars were then forced to punt by an inconsistent Ram defense, and the ball went out on the two-yard line. Two plays later O. J. Simpson broke some tackles and then sprinted to a 97-yard touchdown run. It ties the co-longest run of Travis Williams, Contra Costa.

SIMPSON'S SPRINT made it 34-22, but the fighting San Jose team wouldn't let up against the stronger Rams. The Jaguars battled back with two scoring drives to tie it up at 34-34 early in the final quarter. The tying score came on a seven-yard pass from Gonzales to Heckendorn on a ball which was deflected by Ram defensive back Johnson and then fell into the arms of Heckendorn.

The Ram defense was not at its best as the Jaguars mounted many long drives. An upset might have occurred except for one O. J. Simpson. Simpson finished with 198 yards in 16 carries and became the first player in conference history to rush for over 1000 yards in the seven league games.

In two years of play, Simpson has now scored 53 touchdowns and 322 points. The second all-time scorer is far behind as Travis Williams tallied 124 points at Contra Costa.

G'man Blasts Mountaineers To Capture League's First Place

The Guardsman, playing with only five men, put on a second-half blitz to defeat the Red Mountaineers, 56-32, and gain sole possession of first place in the Independent league of the Associated Men Student-sponsored intramural basketball tournament.

In the battle of the undefeateds in the Independent division, Harm Fanfelle paced The Guardsman team which was playing without two key men, John Casey and Tom Graham. However, it was Fanfelle's brilliant play on both offense and defense that led to the win.

John Le Tourneau led all scorers with 15 points, while teammates Mike Duggan and Jerry Calgero scored 12 each and Fanfelle added 11 to boost the journalist score.

In the second big game of the evening, the Irish knocked off a determined Bearded Crusts, 72-51. The Irish, led once again by Rich Rolandson who scored 16 points, had all five men in double figures, and overshadowed Frank O'Malley's 20-point effort. In the next game of the evening, the Famous Examiner and the morning Chronicle—has given City College of San Francisco more than one front page sports story.

And it doesn't end there.

VIRTUALLY EVERY television station in the area has featured the outstanding Ram football team this year. One station in particular, KRON (NBC's channel 4), has had three separate features on the Ram champs. Another station, KGO (ABC's channel 7), covered the City College-Contra Costa tilt showing segments of the action on Sports World West.

In light of the fact that southern California's two-year college games are televised, some of these accomplishments may not seem impressive. But it must be realized that such advances in the North State are large advances and a step in the right direction.

Team support, as well as community support, has been tremendous.

The Rams have been setting various stadium records almost everywhere they go. At College of San Mateo they packed more than 5000 in the Bulldogs' 4200 "capacity" stadium.

Attendance figures have been snowballing—due in no small part to All-American O. J. Simpson—and those who come out once are usually hooked to come again each week.

Booters Win Fourth State Crown Over Victor Valley

The Ram booters captured their fourth straight California State Soccer Championship Saturday when they defeated Victor Valley College, Southern California conference winner, 12-0, at Balboa Stadium.

This was the Rams' fourth shutout over Victor Valley who has won the southern title as many times. Previous San Francisco victories have shut out Victor Valley, 4-0, 8-0, 14-0, successively.

Victor Valley was the Southern Conference winner with an 8-0 record, while San Francisco boasted a similar 8-0 conference record.

Previously (November 9), the Rams played by far their best all-around game of the year when they defeated conference second-place San Mateo, 5-2, and by virtue of the win, took the Northern California Junior College Soccer Conference title for the fourth straight year.

The San Mateo game catapulted the Rams into the State title clash with Victor Valley.

Against the Bulldogs, Coach Roy Diederichsen's charges put everything together to stop the high-scoring San Mateans. "This was by far our most outstanding game of the year, and we needed to get good performances from every player to beat San Mateo," Diederichsen commented.

Diederichsen praised the play of fullback Marshall Granger, halfback Pete Rossi, reserve inside right Pete Gong who scored an important goal, and Henry Meijia who scored an all-important two goals. Rudolf Masonas scored an important goal before he was thrown out for kicking a San Mateo player. However, Gong came in and did a fine job.

The win over the Bulldogs for the second time was very significant because the Bulldogs were charging fast on the Rams' lead and were scoring many more conference points than the Red and White, who seemed to be in a scoring drought. The Ram win saw the booters finish with an undefeated conference record and leading the league by two games.

Rams Picked As Top Team By Mateo Coach

By G. Frank Cooney

CITY COLLEGE of San Francisco can beat Santa Monica City College.

And nobody knows more about that subject than the man who made the statement, Cliff Griffin. As College of San Mateo football coach, he is the only person whose team has played the nation's two top-ranked teams.

He said this after the Rams' 40-13 rout of the Bulldogs on November 12.

Earlier this year, San Mateo dropped a preseason game to Santa Monica, 26-56, but it was more a case of San Mateo's losing than Santa Monica's winning it.

BULLDOG QUARTERBACK Rich Cuadra did not make the trip because of a sprained ankle, and his stand-in tossed three interceptions and fumbled twice, setting up five Santa Monica touchdowns.

And five touchdowns proved to be the exact difference in the game.

Even after the southerners got a 48-0 halftime lead, they nearly gave it away by allowing San Mateo to rack up 26 points in the second half.

But when the Rams played the Mateans, Cuadra was his menacing self and the battle was in the winning, not the losing.

And do not discredit San Mateo's ability with Cuadra at the helm either, as the tricky little signal caller threw two touchdowns that gave the suburb squad a 13-12 lead late in the third quarter.

Then Ram end, Dwight Tucker, a standout all day, blocked a San Mateo punt and it was all over for the persistent Bulldog bunch as the Rams ran away with the contest and another Golden Gate Conference crown, 40-13.

MAYBE THE NORTHERN California Football Writer's Association voted University of the Pacific's Doug Scovil as the Coach of the Year, but we are sure City College has a more worthy candidate.

Coach Art "Dutch" Elston has done even more than lead the No. 1 nationally ranked Rams to two straight conference crowns in undefeated fashion.

He has also revitalized Northern California's interest in two-year college football.

For the first time in memory, coverage of two-year college football has been widespread and comprehensive.

Each of San Francisco's dailies—the afternoon Examiner and the morning Chronicle—has given City College of San Francisco more than one front page sports story.

And it doesn't end there.

VIRTUALLY EVERY television station in the area has featured the outstanding Ram football team this year. One station in particular, KRON (NBC's channel 4), has had three separate features on the Ram champs. Something's Got To Give—14 Vie For Cage Spots

The Ram basketball team continues its battling for starting positions on the team.

All 14 players on the team figure in the competition.

The guard and forward positions are being fought over by Willie Wise, Bill Locke, Paul Batmale, Gary Bradford, Larry Gray, Mel Jones, Ray Hearne and Larry Lovings. All of these players are capable of winning a starting job at any of these four positions.

However, Wise will win a starting position as either a guard or forward. He has league experience at both positions and also is needed because of his offensive abilities.

An equally tough battle for the center position is being staged.

Gene Williams, Bill Berger, Darling Thomas, Girand Chatman and Isaiah Pruitt are represented.

Big Berger (6-5, 230), was one of the better subs on last year's championship team and this season he could win the postman position. Most certainly Berger could make the starting team at any of the other posts.

Berger has great offensive skill, whereas Williams is known for his defensive abilities. Last year Williams blocked an average of eight shots a game.

Basketball Coach Sid Phelan said, "The team this season will be defense minded as it was last year." Only 840 points — low for the league — were scored off the Rams last year when they won the conference title.

They were fifth in scoring.—M. C.

RA Schedules 3 Social Events

Three events are scheduled for the Recreation Association in the immediate future, with all activities open to anyone in the recreation association.

The first event is a social dance on November 29 from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. in the activities room of the women's gymnasium.

On December 3, a sports day will be sponsored by Diablo Valley College and Merritt College. It will be held in Concord.

Five sports will be offered: volleyball, bowling, badminton, tennis and archery. There will be two volleyball teams and two bowling teams.

A bus will leave City College at 7:45 a.m. and return by 4 p.m., and lunch will be served at Concord.

Everyone in RA is invited to attend the sports day.

There is a sign-up list posted on the bulletin board in the women's gymnasium.

A folk dance social is scheduled for December 6. This will be in the activities room of the women's gymnasium from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m.

Return Of Parties Marks Upcoming AS Elections

By Marty Arbunich

The upcoming Associated Student elections, scheduled for December 14 and 15, will be highlighted by the restoration of student political parties after one full year of absence.

United Students for Action and Change, the two campus political parties, are represented by 33 of the total 39 candidates who have filed petitions. The remaining six campaigners are running on independent tickets.

THE THREE NOMINEES for the AS Presidency are Joe Parnell (USA), Sophomore president; Percy Jones (IND), AS vice president, and Bert Wechsler (CHG.).

The AS Vice Presidency is also being sought by three candidates. They are Helen Ferentinos (USA), Sophomore vice president; Marsha Taylor (IND), vice presidential secretary; and Roland Young (CHG).

There will also be three uncontested offices on the ballot when election time rolls around.

Ron Lent (USA), currently a member of the Freshman Council, is the sole candidate for the Associated Men Student Presidency.

CANDIDATE RALLY TOMORROW

The Associated Student election Rally, a prelude to next week's elections, will take place during College Hour tomorrow at the Ram, Don Chiang, election commissioner, reported today.

The purpose of the event will be to introduce the candidates for the AS offices, Chiang remarked.

Candidates for AS Presidency and Vice Presidency, and possibly nominees for other offices, will present brief campaign speeches.

In the event of rain, the rally will evade postponement by moving indoors to the men's gymnasium, Chiang indicated.

The Associated Women Student Presidency, another of the unopposed offices, is headed by Linette Wong (USA), AS finance chairman.

THE SOPHOMORE CLASS Presidency is also being pursued by a single candidate. She is Diane Lattimer (USA), present AWS president.

Since these three offices are uncontested, each candidate must receive one vote over 50 per cent of the votes cast to achieve victory, according to election regulations.

Vying for the office of Freshman Class President are Steve Marigan (USA) and Fred Cox (IND).

The Freshman and Sophomore Councils, composed of seven members each, received 28 petitions, 14 filed in each category.

Those who filed petitions for seats in the Sophomore Council are Judy Barling (USA), Ron Bianco (CHG), Marvin Campbell (CHG), Rich Christensen (CHG), Tom Crenshaw (CHG), Robert Easley (CHG), Chris Loo (USA), Bernice Macias (USA), Jim McIntire (USA), Ron Mellander (CHG), Lynne Pozza (USA), Paul Shuttleworth (USA), Rudy Vance (USA) and Marty Watten (CHG).

Those who applied for candidacy in the Freshman Council are Brenda Brooks (IND), Glen Butler (CHG), Shelley Dayton (CHG), Pat Fuiren (USA), Eldrage Hudspeth (IND), Ken Jones (USA), Howard Leighty (CHG), Nancy Luscia (USA), Bill McQuaid (USA), Irene Quintero (USA), Shirley Short (USA), Andre Sobieski (CHG), Jerry Vanger (USA) and Cheryl Wong (IND).

THERE IS A possibility that a few of the candidates will be forced to withdraw from the election after the second midterm grades are released this week, Don Chiang, election commissioner, indicated.

In accordance with the constitution, a student must hold a 2.0 grade point average to qualify for political candidacy.

"We're hoping for a turnout of about 2500 student voters for next week's elections," Chiang remarked.

Photography In Fine Arts Topic Of Bernhard Talk Here Friday

Ruth Bernhard, an internationally known proponent of expressive photography, will show some of her works and present her special philosophy when Photography in the Fine Arts is discussed in an Art 51 class, S-100, at noon Friday.

Immediately following the regular class period a special discussion will be held in C-246 during which time Miss Bernhard will answer questions about the material presented regarding her private classes in Seeing and Awareness and Posing the Nude.

Miss Bernhard has recently added another honor to her collection. In the annual search for photographs worthy to be classified as Fine Art, one of her pictures has been selected.

Photography in the Fine Arts is sponsored and shown by the New York Metropolitan Museum and is publicized by The Saturday Review.

Miss Bernhard, whose work in photography is already rated with that of Charles Weston, Ansel Adams and other photographers of similar high caliber, will receive wider recognition as a result of this inclusion in the next P.F.A. traveling exhibition.

According to Emmett Smith, of the photography department, the Art 51 class, attended by both beginning and advanced majors in advertising art, graphic arts and photography, is conducted by William Davis, head of the advertising art department, and features visiting lecturers.

"Because of her association with her art director-brother and her father Lucian Bernhard, the famous poster artist and type designer," Smith related, "Miss Bernhard is especially knowledgeable in the range of interests covered in the class."

THE NEW YORK Metropolitan Museum honored Ruth Bernhard's photograph of Shells as Fine Art.

AS Receives Second Letter From Vietnam Foster Child

A second letter arroved here last week from Vu Van Thanh, the 7-year-old Vietnamese boy who was adopted by the Associated Students through an act of Student Council several months ago.

The letter reads as follows:

"Dear Parents,

"I take this opportunity to inquire after your health.

"I was very glad to receive your supplies composed of VN $935., 10 meters of cloth, and two cakes of soap. I thank you a lot for such support owing to which I can continue my schooling. I am now following the first grade, and in school during the break, I usually play top or jump, and how happy I feel! While at home, I often help my own parents do odd jobs.

"On my part here, I am fine as usual. Before closing this, I thank you a lot for your great benevolence.

(Signed) Vu Van Thanh

The first letter from the boy caused some comment because it sounded to some as though it had been written by an English major. An excerpt from an information sheet sent to the Associated Students by the Foster Parent Agency in New York explains the formality in such correspondences:

"Vietnamese literary style is apt to be formal, flowery and full of analogies. For most children, letter writing is a new experience and only after the exchange of several letters is a child likely to express himself in a more informal manner."

This Christmas will be a happy one for the boy. Last month, a Christmas fund was sent to the Foster Parent Agency by the Associated Students for him.

A contribution of $5 each was made by the Hillel Club, Chinese Student's Club, Horticulture Department and Alpha Gamma Sigma Scholastic Society. Other contributions were made individually. The total sum of contributions was $33.

Draft, Tuition, Drug Laws Are Semiannual CJCSGA Conference Major Topics

By Lori Pittman

The draft, tuition, drug laws and student activities took top priority in the agenda at the California Junior College Student Government Association semiannual statewide convention hosted by this college at the San Francisco Hilton Hotel last Thursday, Friday and Saturday.

The resolution for modification of current Selective Service statutes and administration policies with the interest of creating a more equitable and just criterion for the selection of manpower forces received a high vote of approval by the delegates at the convention.

ONE RESOLUTION passed is to be forwarded to President Johnson's advisory committee on the draft. It entails the formation of a Governmental Commission to determine qualifications of other national service organizations as alternatives to military service.

The proposal that draft boards send to the students, upon request, copies of all information pertaining to the students' standing and explaining the students' classification carried a unanimous vote.

CJCSGA delegates voted in favor of lowering the voting age to 18. The reasons presented were that many persons under 21 are interested in political issues and campaigns and most are capable of intelligent analysis. Also, persons above the age of 18 are liable for the draft. It received a very close vote in the final session.

LEGISLATIVE REVIEW of the present drug laws to cope with change in attitudes and the emergence of new scientific data was also supported by the convention.

Since the two-year college's purpose is designed with the transfer student in mind, the delegates were in unanimous approval of a program to be worked out in a united session of the tri-partite system of higher education. This is in the area of transferrable credit, course numbering and equivalent course content.

CJCSGA also went on record in favor of each governing board having representatives of the student body on any team investigating the feasibility of instituting the quarter system.

Of further interest to transfer students is the approval by the convention opposing any and all legislation proposed with the intent of establishing a tuition system of the California university and the State College level.

A "declaration of rights," reported by the press to be a major resolution, did not materialize.

AT THE HALF-WAY POINT of the session, Merritt College announced its intention to withdraw from the CJCSGA. The prevailing opinion of the college was that the organization does not answer to the specific problems of Merritt College.

Delegates of Merritt College explained that the convention, "did not serve the interest of the individual student as only a select group of students was represented."

Jim Soletti, President of CJCSGA and also a student of this college, received a standing ovation by the delegates at this final session of this convention for his duties as chairman.

The session was then adjourned, and the advisers and delegates proceeded to the final banquet of the convention.

Earnest To Begin Four-Night Stand In College Theater

By Melvin Beechman

The drama department production The Importance Of Being Earnest opens a four-night engagement next Wednesday, December 14, in the Theater, James Haran, director, announced.

Earnest, written in 1895, immediately gained popularity, while ironically, playwright Oscar Wilde's reputation became infamous when he was convicted of being a homosexual.

The play, considered a classic by drama critics, is a tightly constructed satire on the austere British upper class. The contemporary and biting dialogue still has great appeal to the modern audience.

HARLAN, IN STAGING Earnest for his second time, said that the successful execution of the play depends on the delivery of the lines, whereby, he is emphasizing the use of good, clear elocution to his cast.

The importance of watching Earnest is to listen carefully to the sharp and clever lincs and really absorb them.

The two sets, one a parlor scene and the other a garden scene, were designed by Paul J. Crowley, and constructed by his drama 19 class under his direction. Crowley calls the set design "chaotic British" inspired by the cartoons of Ronald Searle and his own personal touch.

Anne Crichton who has played leading roles in former productions is the stage manager, and Marilynn Whiting is in charge of the props. Miss Crichton was stage manager of last semester's presentation of Thurber's Carnival.

RONN HANSON, newcomer to the drama scene, but active in outside theater will have the intricate job of make-up artist. He will have the task of making a stuffy old lady out of beautiful Margaret Calhoun who is playing Lady Bracknell.

The cast, besides Miss Calhoun, includes Ron Bianco as Algernon, Bill McCall as Jack, Ellen Castor as Cecily, Cathy Wright as Gwendolyn, Blanche Richardson as Miss Prism, Dave Sommers as Merriman and Terry McDermott as Lane.

Incidentally, McDermott has the title role in the Walter Krumm production of Caligula which is currently in rehearsal for a January 13 and 14 presentation.

The Albert Camus play, written in 1938, is considered a definite contrast to The Importance Of Being Earnest because of its existentialist nature.

It originally bore the subtitle, The Meaning of Death.

D-Day At Arts Hall

By Richard Kliski

The enemy lay hunched on the cold ground, poised for action—his ears pricked, his body taut with excitement, his eyes riveted on the mound of freshly dug earth several feet away.

On the cement ramp nearby, a body of official observers stopped and moved closer to the guardrail, each waiting with bated breath for the attacker's next move.

BELOW THEM ON the battlefield, not leaf nor a blade of grass stirred.

Time, too, seemed motionless.

A silent moment passed.

A portion of the earth moved, heaved up, and the enemy advanced on all fours. He stopped, staring, as is bewildered by the sudden, unexpected counter-attack, and then moved ahead. A hole opened up in the ground, and he pounced on it, stomping dirt down into it with his feet. Satisfied with his own counter-attack, he retreated a few feet and resumed his silent vigil.

Another moment passed.

THE EARTH MOVED again, and the enemy attacked. A small, gnarled hand thrust itself out, blasting rocks and dirt before it, and then disappeared, leaving a small hole behind. Cautiously, the attacker scampered around his objective, his eyes fixed on the small aperture, his breath coming in short gasps.

Again he advanced on his objective, more cautiously this time, his whole body tuned to any sudden sight or sound of movement. Gradually, gaining more courage, he launched a second attack, pouncing with ferocity onto the hole and tramping it with his feet. A gasp of approval issued from the string of observers nearby, and the enemy retreated to his own lines, several feet beyond the hole, where he crouched.

A second delegation of observers gathered and, before long, had encircled the battle-site.

Another moment passed, and the observers tightened the circle, straining for a better vantage point.

Suddenly the gnarled fist broke through the surface again, scattering dirt and pebbles over the area, then a head appeared, followed by a muscular pair of shoulders.

THE ENEMY struck.

In an instant, the form disappeared. The attacker stood dazed for a moment, shaking his head, and then went about the task of tamping the new hole in preparation for the next assault. Finished with his work, he returned to his position and waited, his eyes scanning the field for any tell-tale signs of movement.

Actually, the "life and death" battle, which raged for nearly an hour recently near the southeast end of Arts Hall, resulted in a victory for neither side. The small, reddish-brown dog, Phideaux, although he held an upper-hand throughout, was unable to gain the needed edge which might have proclaimed him victor. On the other hand, his adversary, an unidentified gopher with a sizable amount of guts, had neither the weight nor the strength with which to overpower his attacker.

THE BATTLE ENDED, however when a bystander tossed a glazed donut onto the field and distracted Phideaux's attention, long enough for the gopher to beat a strategic withdrawal.

A faint, seismic rumbling, somewhat reminiscent of eynical laughter, followed his hasty departure.

Pasadena's 'Selection' Hurts Pasadena More Than The Rams

BACK IN 1948 this college had an outstanding football team, rather like the one the Rams have this year. Pasadena, even back in '48, was the host to "Best in the West" football.

But back in 1948 Pasadena neglected to invite San Francisco to the big game. Dirty guys.

Anyway, after this Saturday all this state's two-year college bowl games will bite the dust; they will be replaced, so to speak, with a series of regional playoffs and a final state championship game. Speculation has it that under such an arrangement the top-ranking teams will be invited to the games.

THE SHAME OF IT ALL is that the college was again, eighteen years later, snubbed by Pasadena and was not invited to this last Little Rose Bowl game that will be played Saturday.

So in concluding 21 years of hosting bowl games, Pasadena picks fifth-ranked Pasadena City College to skirmish with fourth-ranking Henderson of Texas. Bon voyage.

Undoubtedly some Northern California colleges are wondering who is going to host the new two-year college championship game. Here is where Pasadena's inept selections have hurt Pasadena. That city was in line to host the championships but after such a run-around, it has alienated itself from Northern California and many other observers.

THE GUARDSMAN SUGGESTS Kezar or Oakland stadium for the new championship game or, if accused of partisanship, the southern polo grounds at the New Rochelle civic park; anyplace but Pasadena.

The Guardsman herewith takes this opportunity to congratulate the Ram football championship squad. A special tip of the hat is due to a trio which didn't make All-Conference, Head Coach Arthur "Dutch" Elston, Line Coach Alex "Poppa Bear" Schwartz, and Assistant Coach Ernie Domecus.

Also deserving a special note of gratitude is a certain Orenthal James Simpson.

And not to be forgotten is two-way All-Conferenceman Dwight Tucker, O.-J.'s cousin. Between these two athletes there have been more than a dozen records set in the last three semesters.

Finally, congratulations to Laney College, its football team and Coach Don Kloppenburg. Laney's victory over San Francisco in the Prune Bowl establishes the Eagles as the nation's number 1 two-year college grid team—Southern California notwithstanding.

Sex Education Misinterpreted

By Connie Skipitares

THE necessity of the school's role in the involvement of administering educational counseling in the "gist" of sexual behavior (as well as its reflective ethics) has been the subject of a ceaseless bout between parents and educators for probably as long as the learning institution has been in existence.

And apparently no arbiter is willing to be named or blamed for engaging in even respectable 'intercourse with the subject.

Ever since fact-hungry students began sticking out their academic tongues at administrators in abhorrent disapproval of the currently existing programs offered in what they term "pseudo-sex" health courses, the need for revision, or at least appraisal of the system has mushroomed into necessity.

THE FAST THUS remains blatantly obvious that some kind of prescribed sex education should exist in our institutions of learning, and righteously so, it does in most—the kids are getting it. So reaction to the present crisis is not a result of the choice between "Should we have it or should we not," but what kind, how, when and where?

Sex education begins at birth, by what parents communicate about themselves as sexual beings. Then, unavoidably subjected to a constantly changing environment in encountering life, it falls victim to the ill-formed impressions of friends and the misplaced "glamour" of advertisements.

It is the manifestation of this face of public's objective attitude toward the "facts of life" that causes parents to appeal to nature's logic in seeking the answer to their dilemma: "Should we take sex out of the bedroom and put it behind the cold, external classroom desk?"

THE PLEA, directed toward the present-day program-advocates is being reciprocated by outmoded films and textbooks whose creation dates back to the era when the word "sex" itself incited a "three-letter word" controversy. (A possible ancestor of today's "four-letter word" FSM platform.)

In essense, behavior has probably not changed since then, but our attitudes now and to accept more readily the practice of that great morality-arouser, premarital sexual intimacy. What was done by a female in 1925 acting as a rebel can be done by a female in 1966 as a conformist.

Surprisingly enough, illegitimacy rates among the young have not gone up, although they have risen in the 35 to 35-age groups. Very simply, there are more teenage illegitimacies because there are more teenagers!

CLINICS CAN EASILY teach the physiological lessons of contraception or how to prepare a baby formula, but more subtle behavioral problems require everyone's dedication.

These include "the art of child nurture by which a mother and father can be sure to turn their boy baby into a fully functioning mature man," or "guidelines for the doctor faced with a 13-year-old in her second pregnancy, dragging along to the prenatal clinic a baby girl she bore at the age of 12!"

The so-called sexual revolution is in reality only one part of our whole era's involvement in many forms of revolution in which man is re-examining and questioning all of his relationships.

And though experience dictates that the mere thought of the study of "human sexuality" terrifies many Americans and repels a great many others, a well-rounded, up-dated hygiene program in our schools must be made a normal part of every growing child's education if we ever hope to create a healthy society.

Bible Lacks Spark

Scriptures Provide Stuffy Film Material

By Steven Hara

In the beginning, God created the heaven and the earth. From this statement, an audience will visually experience the first 22 chapters of the book of Genesis when The Bible opens at the United Artists theater on December 23.

Director John Huston has done as good a job as anyone in bringing this very well-adapted story to the screen. But he hasn't much to work with in the way of original material.

The Bible was not written to be entertaining, and the movie, by following it so closely, unfortunately inherits this feature. There seems to be something missing in the film—there's no spark!

CECIL B. DE MILLE was a showman who would sacrifice accuracy for entertainment. It's this sort of vitality that's missing in The Bible. The storyline is unemotional—almost objective in its scope, and this tends to make the movie dry and unsatisfying as a form of entertainment.

However, religiously, this movie is as accurate as one could desire on celluloid. The title is a bit pretentious though; giving such a general title to such a small part of the actual Book is much like calling four tires a car.

By inspection, the movie is almost three hours long. In it are sequences depicting the Creation, Noah's Ark, the Tower of Babel and the story of Abraham.

THE CREATION IS one of the best-handled sequences of the picture; the camera work flashes in all its beauty. The selected scenes are quite appropriate for the Scriptures.

The handling of Adam and Eve was touchy, as one should expect. This is the first time that a man and woman have ever romped around an American movie set to such an extent completely in the buff.

The Flood and Noah's Ark is the most pleasant of all the sequences as Huston becomes his own star. The Academy Award-winning actor-director has a field day running his extensive menagerie. Animals from all over the world were brought aboard the ship and where Noah ever got hold of two polar bears will be the mystery of the intermission.

The longest sequence, the story of Abraham, runs almost 90 minutes. The Tower of Babel is made and abandoned in five minutes, and from the chaos comes actor George C. Scott. The movie concludes with the sacrifice of Isaac, but until this time the audience is treated with a bloody battle, a pillar of salt, jealousy, hate and all sorts of gruesome things.

HUSTON HAS TAKEN it upon himself to have a triple role in the film. He acts, narrates and directs.

His acting is faultless; no one could have played Noah better. He adds a bit of comic relief in his role which lifts the heaviness thus far experienced in the film.

His narration covers both the Scriptures and the dialogues, created in the screenplay, of God. This too is admirable as his voice is mellow and properly serious and lends to the atmosphere of the All-Mighty.

In his direction, however, the movie slips with the addition of absurdities, the Abraham sequences being the best examples of this.

SARAH WAS ONLY TEN years younger than Abraham, yet the difference looks more like 50 Abraham goes around unshaven and dirty, wearing what must be a triple thick burlap bag. Sarah, on the other hand, wears gold necklaces, cosmetics, expensive looking gowns and most of all, is clean. No wonder the poor buy goes around in a potato sack—he can't afford anything better.

On the technical side of the picture, the photography is beautiful, colorful and at the proper times, shocking. The propmasters deserve a tip of the hat for their enormous sets which are, to say the least, quite awesome.

"There is no musical score to speak of; most of it is drowned out by the loud noises of thunder, explosions and the like. It is the first score for a major American motion picture written by a Japanese, but one has to wait until the credits are displayed at the end to hear it.

This movie could be recommended for the whole family; two types of people are given special note: the fundamentalist who wants visual stimulation of what he believes, and the atheist who wants a simple way to see the basis of what others choose to believe.

Parking Area Finally Gets "Safe" Stairs

After many years of observing students slipping and sliding, someone, with the proper authority finally had enough sense to have guide rails and stairs installed on the narrow, uphill path leading down into the reservoir parking area known as the "pit."

The operation itself was elementary. Six holes were dug and filled with cement. Then six wooden four-by-four poles were sunk into the cement. The final touches were made when two steel pipes were attached to the poles and the stairs were laid.

This opening, between the two steel fences, had presented a problem to hundreds of students either wishing to attend the enlightening classes on campus or hoping to return to their cars uninjured after an exhausting day at college.

Facing the heart-thumping task of scaling what might properly be called "cardiac hill" is not exactly what a person is going to relish after a day of ups and downs at the college.

Students, who had been unsuccessful in their attempts to descend from the crest, found that the initial slip rapidly developed into a slide, and if the person involved was not gifted in the art of slalom, he found that acrobatic tumbling came in handy. During this period he began rolling and a crowd gathered to watch his masterful, snow-balling descent.

But the new guide rails and stairs will undoubtedly be an incentive for determined students to meet the problem head-on. Its construction was obviously an effort to help the student stand on his own two feet.—T. G.

Art For Art's Sake—Modern Day Conflict

By B.T.

THE CITY IS FULL of unrecognized artists, some of them willing to sacrifice anything for the sake of art, and others unwilling to give up their incomes from other jobs to make time for art.

Those who are unwilling to make time, yet complain of "not getting the right breaks" are perhaps not as dedicated to the arts as they would think themselves to be.

Then, they reflect and realize that perhaps their need for artistic expression is suffering because of their own neglect and rationalizations. That perhaps they MUST make time, for after all, one cannot "have the whole cake and eat it too."

ONE SUCH ARTIST, a former student here, has tried to do just this. Since 1959, he has drifted from various jobs in the advertising art field, and is presently working as an accountant during the daytime, and a waiter in his father's restaurant, at night.

"I believe the only way and the best thing in the world for any artist, is to be locked up in a sort of prison, where he would have nothing to do but paint—there would be no distractions, and he can really concentrate on his art," said this artist, J. K. Lee.

Lee can be located in a sixth-floor walkup in the heart of Chinatown, where he and his paintings are crowded into a small apartment with a wife and two small children. He paints in a small corner of his kitchen whenever he has a free hour.

"I TOOK ADVERTISING art and was told that my medium was in lettering. I held several jobs where I painted labels and did all lettering with a small brush. It was monotonous!

"After my training at City College (1956-1959) and the SF Academy of Art, I earned some money doing sign painting and some designing, but what I did wasn't satisfying. My ambition lies in having a gallery with enough space in the back for commercial artwork," Lee said.

Lee's talent is on display at his father's restaurant, Bach's, at Sutter and Gough streets, where he is employed as a night waiter. Art patrons often compare him to the popular artist, Dong Kingman.

"IT WAS HARD to convince my parents that I needed an education in the field of art although I won many awards in high school. They wanted me to be more practical.

"It's a highly competitive field, and sometimes I get discouraged but I plan to keep trying. I like to do watercolors. Someday I hope to be a member of the Western Artists Association. I must make time, somehow," Lee said.

Phi Beta Delta Finds Ram A Constant Service Project

The job is never finished for members of Phi Beta Delta fraternity here on campus—especially when it comes to maintaining the Ram.

Thanksgiving Eve the Ram, redwood symbol of this college's mascot, received a tender and loving face-lifting ($23-worth) by approximately 25 brothers of Phi Beta Delta.

These fellow students met after a losing basketball game to gently sand off the atrocious pink paint some invading vandals had so crudely coated on the Ram a few weeks ago. Using money from their own treasury for all necessary equipment, they repainted the Ram with a double coat of redwood stain to return him to his natural beauty.

Good things don't seem to last. Monday dawned drippy and gray as the first class day after the Thanksgiving Holidays to reveal to returning students that this campus had again been invaded by malicious daubers. This time they had attacked with paint and feathers.

Streaked on one side with feathers glued in green and yellow paint, the Ram stood helplessly in the rain facing the hill to Science Hall. At his side were two small paint cans while the slit feather-filled pillow lay wetly before his feet.

Whoever the assailants were, they must have departed rather speedily. Not only did they leave most of their equipment behind, but the paint-feather job seemed unfinished.

Phi Beta Delta is responsible for the maintenance of the Ram. It seems this semester like an unending job. As Jim Ahern, one member of the fraternity, said, "We are proud of this responsibility because we like doing this service for the college."

Service Trophy was awarded to Phi Beta Delta last semester for its work in the field of service for the college. Painting and up-keep of the Ram, collecting the most in the Miles Of Dimes and highest support in the King and Queen Contest were the three counts cited for the award.—L.P.

The Observer

By William G. Pates

THE TIDE of progressivism has gone out in the Congress, in the nation and in California, and only the voters can decide, along with their many elective representatives, how long this trend is to continue and whether it is to be beneficial to society.

Many leaders have contended that this country has been moving too far too fast, too soon in regard to the alleviation of social ills through the use of dominant Federal powers. However, the real problem lies in the fact that in too many of these areas we have not moved far enough, fast enough, soon enough to prevent near total desecration.

Man has a tendency to taint and in some ways destroy just about everything he comes in contact with and to go his own course regardless of how destructive it is. In a great many cases concerning social problems Federal government control has been an essential if anything was to be accomplished. In the minds of a number of citizens these controls usurp personal freedoms but without them man, for the most part, would follow a course completely contrary to the public interest.

IN OUR SOCIETY today there are a great many injustices which need to be rectified. There are crises in education, housing, crime, cities, taxation, pollution, transportation, industry, preservation of natural resources, unemployment, administration of government services, and the achievement of human rights.

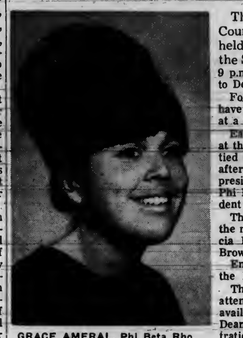
These and other problems, monumental as they are now, will become even more monstrous and complicated as time passes. Foresight, vision, perspective and responsibility are needed in solving these problems. As usual, however, we have lost direction, enthusiasm and momentum.

As responsible as anybody is one Lyndon B. Johnson, the greatest egomaniac ever to gain the Presidency. Mr. Johnson's incessant wish to be the President of all the people, to please everybody and be the recipient of absolute love and adoration from the American people, has certainly helped in weakening the direction and effectiveness of his administration.

A MAJOR FIGMENT of Lyndon's trouble is that he is a complete political animal. This is his greatest liability as well as his greatest asset. Apparently he thinks only in political terms. The President seeks, or so it seems, what the best answer is politically to a problem not what is in the best interest of the people. Therefore it is difficult to tell whether he is sincere.

Heir apparent Hubert Horatio Humphrey has said it all: "He (LBJ) knows how to be President better than anybody I have ever known . . . He knows the pressure points. He is a political man, an expert in the application of power." Johnson knows about power and how to manipulate it. His talents are best served in the job he has left, that of majority leader. He is still trying to run the Presidency as if he were majority leader.

Following the greatest Democratic losses in a midterm election in 20 years Johnson commented that, "In the next two years we are going to concentrate on improving the administration of our programs, on making them as effective as possible, and we're going to make excellence our goal." We don't know. Assuredly the majority of Americans were hoping that this was his program all along.



DEMOCRATIC LOSSES or Republican gains, depending on how you look at it, were far greater than the usual midterm changes and far greater than the issues required.

In interpreting the results of the recent elections, it is apparent that many people want to call a halt, to have a pause, a slow down. There will be a cutback in program expansion and spending. The liberal hour is over in the Congress and in the California legislature for that matter.

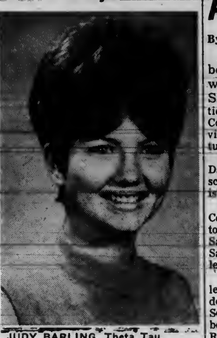
Now that this country and California are not to move forward at a great pace, but are to stand relatively still, it is hoped that they will not go backward. If this is to be the case, it is a time, if nothing else, to put our house in order. It is a time for reform. Only if greatly needed reform of our programs and administrative agencies can be accomplished will this upcoming period of stagnantation be beneficial. As Oliver Wendell Holmes has said, "The greatest thing is not so much where we stand but in what direction we are moving."

Now we know.

15th Annual ISC Winter Cotillion Set For Sir Francis Drake Friday

GRACE AMERAL, Phi Beta Rho.

The traditional Inter-Sorority Council Winter Cotillion will be held in the Franciscan Room of the Sir Francis Drake Hotel from 9 p.m. to midnight Friday, according to Dean Mary Golding.



For the past 15 years the sororities have honored their new fall members at a winter cotillion.

Each new pledge to be presented at the cotillion will receive a diploma tied with the ribbon of her sorority, after she is presented by her sorority president; Grace Ameral, president of Phi Beta Rho or Judy Barling, president of Theta Tau.

The pledge captains who will lead the new members in pledge are Patricia Holm, Theta Tau, and Margery Brown, Phi Beta Rho.

Entertainment will be provided by the Maury Wolohan Orchestra.

The cotillion is open to all students attending the college. Tickets are available for $2.50 per couple at S-150. Dean Golding said. A current registration card must be presented.

JUDY BARLING, Theta Tau.

Architectural Exhibit Now On Display At Cloud Hall

An architectural exhibit, featuring the works of former City College students who are now licensed architects, practicing in the Bay Area, is currently on display in C-207, Lawrence Franceschina, instructor of Architecture here and coordinator of the display, announced recently.

The exhibit, first of its kind in recent years, is being offered as an incentive to students who are presently studying architecture, Franceschina reported. "We want to show what former students have done."

"Also," he added, "it should supply both the faculty and students with an added source of motivation."

According to Franceschina, the exhibit includes work by Edward A. Bonelli (class of '49) who is currently a partner in the firm of Bonelli, Young and Wong; Leslie Baronian (class of '49) a landscape architect; Vincent L. Pelfini (class of '48) an associate of Stone, Marraccini and Patterson, a firm whose specialty is designing hospitals both in this country and throughout the world; and George W. Sinnott (class of '48).

Others include George Ayanessian (class of '56); Paul Dochauer (class of '52); Henry M. Look (class of '50); Gene H. Perry (class of '50); Enrique Limosner (class of '49); Wayne Osaki (class of '48) and Lawrence Franceschina (class of '48).

In addition to architectural drawings, a working-model of Mary's Help Hospital, which illustrates the architectural process from the initial concept to the completion of the final blueprints, is also featured.

Franceschina, who selected and arranged the display, credits Warren R. White, English instructor and Faculty Association head, with the original idea for the exhibit, explaining that White first put the bug in his ear suggesting that it might be "a spark" for aspiring young architects.—R. K.

String Music Class Debuts At Concert

City College's Chamber Orchestra will present a concerto concert at 11 a.m. tomorrow in the college theater, according to Richard Fenner, Chamber Music director.

The concert marks the first time the string music class has assembled and presented a program together with faculty members, Fenner stated.

Participating in the program are faculty members Madeline Mueller, piano; William Grothkopp, piano, and Fenner, cello.

Student musicians include Nancy Langert and Ellen Southhard, piano; Harriet Schindel, Gonzalo Gomez-Lobo, Kathy Graves, Jeannine Trasvina and Cornell Chesnik, violin; Penny Doran and Gregory Peters, bass, and Cheryl Clifford, viola.

The program is divided into two parts; first, concerto for three pianos in C Major by J. S. Bach; second, concerto for violin in D Major Op. 3, No. 9, third concerto for three pianos in D Minor by Bach.

The chamber orchestra will also present an evening program January 11 in the theater starting at 8:15 p.m. The program includes Handel's Concerto, Grosso Opus 6, No. 1 and Samuel Barber's Adagio for Strings.

Both programs will be free.

200 Students Hit By Lightning — Some Liked It

More than 200 students here have voted for the lightning of their choice.

Such was the word from Madison Devlin of the audio-visual department. In his recent photo exhibit in Cloud Hall, he included two prints of the same photo of a flash of lightning. With the two prints was a sign asking students to vote for the print they thought was the better of the two.

"The results," he said, "were very surprising and very revealing." What surprised him was not only the great number of persons who voted, but also the quality of some of the comments made. Even the "fact that students took the time" to vote was outstanding, he felt.

The only thing he objected to was that some students were "stacking" the vote, as he called it. There were a number of students who had put in three or more votes. "They were wasting their time," Devlin said, "Because I can tell when handwriting is the same."

He stated, however, that the two weeks that the vote was run had been a generally healthy contest. The voters had shown a lot of thought in their choice, as brought out by the comments made on the ballots.

Print one showed a thin streak of lightning which illuminated the scene quite a bit. Print two was developed to show a huge streak which completely dominated a darker landscape.

One comment read: "Technically, No. 1 is a better print, but I prefer No. 2 because it is more dynamic through contrast. To me, this is the way the scene would really look."

Another said: "No. 2. It's focal point, lightning, really portrays a feeling of fascination with strength . . . power beyond mortality." —M. W. onable facsimile of dear St. Nick.

The Airplane 'Takes Off 'And 'Is Flying High'

By Viggo Petersen

Jefferson Airplane, the Bay Area's most popular folk rock-group, will soon be striving for nation-wide recognition with the release of their next few recordings, according to backers of the group.

The group plans to release two single records in December and an album in January. If all goes well, the group will enjoy the same popularity nationally as it has enjoyed locally.

Although their previous records, It's No Secret, and Come Up The Years, were sold nation-wide, RCA plans to sell their records on a much bigger scale than it has previously.

An appearance on the Ed Sullivan Show, the ultimate goal of any new group, is scheduled immediately after the release of their album.

THE BELL TELEPHONE Hour will present a special program in January entitled, The Music Of San Francisco, which will be a documentary on the musical trends of this city.

The Airplane will be very much a part of that program, for a good deal of air time will be devoted to the group which has been credited with originating the current musical trend in San Francisco.

Tentatively, scenes from the Fillmore Auditorium will be featured on the program filmed last August.

The time is very ripe for the Airplane to make its talents known to the nation. Since the group began singing last year at the Matrix nightclub, the Fillmore Auditorium and the Avalon Ballroom, the group's popularity has steadily increased and at the present time shows no signs of waning.

Their album which appeared recently sold upwards of 50,000 copies around the Bay Area and close to 37,000 around the San Francisco area alone—a staggering sales record for any local group!

WHENEVER THE GROUP makes a personal appearance anywhere in the immediate area, overflow crowds are frequently turned away and inside the various local establishments where they perform the smoke-filled atmosphere caused by the shoulder to shoulder audience, make dancing or even just relaxing to their music almost impossible.

Their popularity is truly overwhelming as is the desperate need for air while listening to one of their concerts in the jam-packed, smoke-filled corridors of the Fillmore Auditorium.

THE MOST SIGNIFICANT change the group has undergone of late is the replacement of Signe Anderson, former lead singer with the group, by Grace Slick, a talented, dedicated performer who formerly sang with the Great Society.

Miss Anderson left the group because of family responsibilities.

Although Miss Anderson is sorely missed by ardent followers of the Airplane, sponsors of the group feel that Miss Slick as lead singer will eventually fit in with the group's plans if she is given time and practice.

Backers of the group are optimistic about her potential as a lead singer because of her diversified talents such as playing a number of musical instruments and helping to write much of the group's material.

Also much of the Great Society's former material will now be done by the Airplane thanks to the inheritance of Miss Slick.

Notably a tune called Somebody To Love (no relation to the Stone's recording) previously sung by the Great Society, will now be done by the Airplane in its next album.

The Airplane does the song in excellent fashion!

IF ONE HAS NOTICED Miss Slick with the Airplane of late, a truly dedicated performance can be noted quite easily. Along with her talents as a lead singer the group should suffer nothing as a result of the loss of their former lead singer.

The Airplane as a group has improved considerably. This is due largely to a degree of musical maturity within the group itself. Experimenting with all forms of music, from big beat to classical music, has given the group expanded interests and they have incorporated their interests into their music, and are now singing their own style.

During their cross country tours they have been widely acclaimed.

It is conceivable that their success may soon capapult them into the Civic Auditorium, one night stand only, category.

Council Defeats Motion To Ban Proposed Speaker

By Bill Fritz

Emotions ran high at November 21's Student Council meeting when Soph Councilman Paul Shuttleworth presented a resolution to prohibit the Student-Faculty Concert and Lecture Series from inviting a controversial speaker to lecture on campus next semester.

The speaker in question is Saul David Alinsky, who Shuttleworth describes as a "professional revolutionist." The resolution read as follows:

"WHEREAS: the Student-Faculty Concert and Lecture Series coordinators are contemplating bringing Mr. Saul David Alinsky to City College of San Francisco for the purpose of a lecture to be held in Spring, 1967; and

"WHEREAS: if Mr. Alinsky came to lecture under the auspices of the Student Faculty Concert and Lecture Series, the Associated Students would be giving Mr. Alinsky the cloak of Respectability; and

"WHEREAS: the Student Council of the City College of San Francisco feels that the Concert and Lecture Series should pursue a balanced, intellectual and scholarly program rather than one which is based on morbidity and emotionalism;

"THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED THAT: no invitation be given to Mr. Alinsky by the Student-Faculty Concert and Lecture Series; and

"BE IT FURTHER RESOLVED THAT: if any organization in the Council of Organizations wishes to invite Mr. Alinsky, it may, but no honorarium or other financial aid will be paid by the Associated Students of City College of San Francisco."

After an extended debate in which Shuttleworth argued that the Associated Students would be giving Alinsky a reason to come to the Bay Area to promote revolution and that a speaker of this caliber should not be honored by paying him the fee requested, council defeated the resolution by a vote of 5-8-1.

Also at that same meeting, council congratulated the football team and Coach Elston for a job well done.

And by a close vote of 7-6-1, council approved a recommendation to the library staff that a section of the library be opened to low level conversations.

AT THE FOLLOWING Wednesday's meeting, two more resolutions were introduced. The first resolution would have given the Associated Student President a $100 expense account per semester, but this bill was sent into committee for rewording.

The second resolution, Resolution 11, was passed and provided for the distribution of 500 complimentary tickets to high school football and basketball coaches for home games.

Council of Organizations President Fred Reisinger announced that nine contestants are competing in a contest to represent the College at Children's Hospital as Santa Claus. This week the contestants will be collecting money around the campus. The contestant who collects the most money will entertain the infirmed kiddies as a reas-

Football Team Salutes Laney, 13-35

Second-String Back Snaps Rams' Record

By Mike Duggan

Laney College of Oakland rolled over No. 1 ranked City College of San Francisco by a 35-13 score Saturday at Spartan Stadium in the Fourth Annual Prune Bowl Game.

Proving that they are indeed worthy of national recognition, the Laney Eagles completely dominated the second half of play after the Rams had taken a 13-7 halftime lead. In a game matching the only unbeaten and untied teams, Laney's victory left them as the only junior college team in the nation with a perfect record for the 1966 season.

The Eagles opened the second half by moving ahead 14-13 on a 61-yard pass from John Read to speedy Louie Thomas. Thomas caught six passes for 127 yards during the afternoon and increased his national lead in touchdown receptions to 13.

Read, a freshman backup signal caller, entered the game in the second period with Laney trailing 13-0, and he proceeded to connect on nine of 13 passes for 254 yards and earn himself the trophy for the "Back of the Game."

MOMENTS AFTER Thomas had scored, the Rams gave Laney a big break. Forced to punt from deep in their own territory, punter Hugh Miller, who earlier kicked two beauties, had trouble handling a low snap from center and tried to run only to be stopped on the 10-yard line.

Laney moved in for the touchdown on a Read pass to Jesse Mims for two yards, but only after a beautiful one-handed interception by defensive back Craig Johnson was nullified on an interference call.

Read then hit Irby Augustine with a conversion toss for a 22-13 Laney lead. Augustine, who went both ways at end, won the "Outstanding Lineman of the Game" award.

THE RAMS OPENED the fourth period with a "last hope" drive covering almost 50 yards before being halted by Thomas on an interception of a Pete Mullins pass in the end zone. Glenn Baker did most of the work with some hard running up the middle, as the Rams showed their only offense of the second half. Baker was the game's leading rusher with 46 yards on nine carries, as All-American O. J. Simpson was held to 26 yards on the ground in 11 carries, but he still managed to catch seven passes for 87 yards.

A crowd of 13,500 looked on and saw Laney take the opening kickoff and hold the ball for 20 plays while driving all the way to the seven-yard line before Ram linebacker Greg Pedrin intercepted a pass from starting quarterback Don Perkins and race the ball back to the 45-yard line. Helped out by penalties, the Rams marched right in and scored on a one-yard plunge by Milt Frank.

AFTER STOPPING Laney early in the second quarter, the Rams' O. J. Simpson capped a 79-yard drive with a six-yard scoring toss from Pete Mullins, and things looked pretty good for the Rams then, until John Read made his appearance on the field, and then it was all Laney.

Basketball Team Captures Tourney Title With Ease

By G. Frank Cooney

Sid Phelan's well coached cage quintet waltzed to its second consecutive Bakersfield Tournament championship last Saturday by knocking off highly touted Bakersfield, 79-41, in the tourney finale.

And it came as no surprise when two of the Rams' returning stars were elected to the All-Tournament team. Forward Willie Wise, a 6-5 All-Conference sophomore, and "Kangaroo" Gene Williams, who blocked an average of eight shots a game last year, made the honor squad.

But finding out that Wise and Williams are All-Tourney material isn't what impressed coach Phelan.

"I was happy to find that we will be able to substitute more freely this year without fear of the other teams taking advantage," Phelan indicated. "We are definitely a deeper squad than we were last year."

And if Phelan is saying that there is a marked improvement in this year's team, then everybody had better watch out because last year Phelan's five only lost three of thirty-three games and placed second in the state behind a talent-laden Riverside group.

By starting off this year's competition with such runaways as an initial triumph over Hartnell, 70-38, and a semifinal romp of 84-60 over Fresno, it looks like the Ram cagers are a cinch to figure in the 1967 state crown race.

Phelan had praise for nearly everybody on the team, but nothing seemed more appropriate than the coach's comment on a certain 6-foot 5-inch Darling Thomas.

"Darling played beautifully," Phelan said.

In the final game against host Bakersfield, everyone got into the act as Wise, Thomas, Girard Chatman and Ray Hearn all hit into double figures.

Irish Take Over First Place In Intramural Basketball

A little bit of everything happened in the last two weeks of the Associated Men Student-sponsored basketball tournament as some big games were played and some very lopsided scores were posted.

On November 22 in the Independent league, two of the biggest routs occurred when The Guardsman squad whipped Hotel & Restaurant department, 101-37, as Mike Duggan scored 50 points, high for the season. The same night the Irish trounced Charlie Brown's Gang, 102-17, and Rich Rolandson poured in 35 points to lead all scorers.

The Knobs kept second place by defeating the Bearded Crusts by forfeit, and the Red Mountaineers beat Hillel, 59-46.

The following evening in the Club division crucial, the Newman Club defeated Phi Delta, 42-29, to keep up with the Felony Squad who whipped the Beta Bums, 52-9. In the two remaining games Filipino-American Club outlasted Alpha Phi Epsilon, 53-49. In the battle of the last-place teams the Chinese Students squeaked by Alpha Sigma Delta, 30-22.

On November 20 in the Independent league, the Irish defeated the Red Mountaineers, 62-47, to take over first place in the division when the Knobs upset The Guardsman, 43-38, in a highly controversial contest.

The remaining two contests were forfeits as Charlie Brown's Gang won over the Bearded Crusts, and Hotel & Restaurent department forfeited to Hillel.

In the Club league the Newman Club and Felony Squad continued to win as Paul Giambra's 15 points paced the Newman Club to a 52-30 win over Alpha Sigma Delta.

The Chinese Students succumbed to the Campus Police Felony Squad, 56-31. In another game, Phi Delta nipped Alpha Phi Epsilon, 45-43, despite John Broxter's 23 points.

In the final game of the evening, the Filipino-American Club defeated the Beta Bums by forfeit.

Five Ram Booters Picked For First All-Nor Cal Squad

Five City College soccer players were chosen All-Northern California Junior College Soccer Conference out of the first 11 selected, as a result of the 12-0 rout over Victor Valley November 19 that decided the State title.

The five players are Bob Rojas at center forward, Pete Rossi at left halfback, Tom Sammuelson at right halfback, Roger Sarria at center halfback, and Henry Mejia at left wing. Rossi is the only repeater from last year's All-Conference squad. Honorable Mention went to goalie Nelson Ortega.

It was these six for whom Coach Roy Diederichsen had praise and the whole Ram team as they won their fourth straight State championship. "It was a team effort entirely, as it seemed we couldn't make any mistakes," Diederichsen commented. The wet ground was a definite factor in the Ram win as the soggy field made the ball heavy and easier to handle offensively.

It was the team's brilliant offense that was the key to the shutout, as Victor Valley seemed to be on defense the whole afternoon. "We had the ball so often that their defense started to wear down in the latter part of the game," Diederichsen added.

The Rams started off very fast by leading 3-0 after the first period and never looked back after that. Diederichsen put the second team in the second and fourth quarters and they played as commendably as the first unit.

The win was the 97th in 18 years for Coach Diederichsen in two-year college competition, with no losses and one tie.

Simpson Player Of Year, Tucker Lineman As Ten Rams Make All-Conference

By Mike Duggan

Cousins O. J. Simpson and Dwight Tucker made the All-Golden Gate Conference grid teams as the Rams placed ten men on the all-star squads.

Simpson climaxed a tremendous year by capturing the Player-of-the-Year award for the second straight season. Along with his selection, he also received the Murius McFadden award.

This award was inaugurated last year in memory of the late athletic director at College of San Mateo. The Rams' All-American halfback was also the first recipient. Mr. McFadden, called the dean of two-year college coaches, was associated with San Mateo's athletic department for 41 years (1923-64). He served as head football coach for 28 of those years, fielding ten championship teams and seven runners-up.

O. J. RECEIVED the award, which goes annually to the player chosen as the outstanding football player in the Golden Gate Conference, November 28 at the College of San Mateo Football Awards Banquet.

Simpson rushed for at least 100 yards in every game this season as he racked up 1365 yards on the ground. He also caught 19 passes accounting for 519 yards and scored 166 points on 27 touchdowns and two conversions.

Tucker, the only man to be selected to both first team offensive unit and the first team defensive unit, was named Lineman-of-the-Year. He caught 34 passes for 435 yards and was second on the team in scoring with 50 points. This includes a record seven conversion scores.

TUCKER, WHO LAST year was the nation's top two-year college high jumper and triple jumper, also set a conference mark by racing 94 yards with an interception against Contra Costa.

Other Rams on the first team offensive unit are guard John Deschler and tackle Ruby Jackson. Deschler was outstanding all year and played both ways in some games. He most likely would have been Lineman-of-the-Year had it not been for Tucker's accomplishments.

ON THE FIRST TEAM defensive unit, the Rams placed Tucker, tackle Allan Cowlings and defensive back Craig Johnson. Cowlings was the leader of the front wall on defense while Johnson spent his time picking off passes.

Quarterback Pete Mullins and tackle John Monroe both were selected to the second unit on offense. Monroe, only a freshman, made that same team at the same position on the All-City prep selections last year.

MULLINS ENJOYED a fine year in guiding the Rams through nine straight victories. He passed for just a shade under 1300 yards and threw 10 touchdown passes plus a bundle of conversion tosses.

He had one of his best days against the quarterback who beat him out for first team All-Conference, Ed Rosenborough of Diablo Valley. In that game, Mullins passed for 237 yards on 17 of 25 completions.

John Morello was the lone Ram on the second team defensive unit. A former offensive star in high school, Morello was tough all year at his middle linebacking spot, as were other defenders not picked including Greg Pedrin and Ralph Hodge. Injuries may have prevented Hodge's selection, but nobody knows why Pedrin was aced out at the linebacking position.

Block SF Awards Dinner Tuesday

In what will amount to a repeat performance of last year's banquet, the Block SF's seminannual awards dinner will honor the championship football and soccer teams and the lowly cross country squad, starting at 6:30 p.m. Tuesday in Smith Hall.

The Block SF will honor 75 athletes of the three Fall sports, and two championship teams. Soccer Coach "Roy Diederichsen will be honoring 23 men from the State championship squad headed by six All-Conference performers.

Football Coach "Dutch" Elston will be honoring 46 players with football awards on the undefeated Golden Gate Conference squad, 10 of whom are repeaters from last year's team.

Lou Vasquez' cross country team will be on hand to receive their awards consisting of six blocks for his sixth-place team.

Merritt Spikers Capture Title

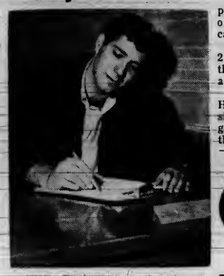
The Golden Gate Conference cross country season has come to a close with Merritt capturing the title and San Francisco finishing the year tied for sixth place with Chabot, with three wins and five losses.

The Rams started off badly this season by losing their first three meets to Diablo Valley, 28-26; San Jose, 32-25, and Merritt, 30-22; they then began to shape up by defeating Foothill, the defending champions, 25-30.

Unfortunately, thereafter any hopes for a winning season were wiped out when Fred Forsberg, the key runner on the squad, injured his ankle while warming up for the then next scheduled meet at Chabot.

Without the services of Forsberg, the team was greatly weakened and retarded, and the Rams wound up the season by losing two of their three remaining meets.

The conference teams finished in this order behind Merritt; San Mateo, Diablo Valley, Foothill, City College and Chabot (tied) and Contra Costa.



Polls Open Today For AS Elections

The Associated Student elections, pitting 33 students in a race for 20 offices, get underway today at seven campus precincts.

The polls, open from 8 a.m. to 2 p.m. today and tomorrow, are at the disposal of all students displaying a registration card.

The sites of the precincts are Smith Hall, the lobby of the library, at the silver pole in Science Hall, the men's gymnasium, the women's gymnasium, the Arts Hall and at the south basement end of Science Hall.

There will be voting machines available in Smith Hall, the library and the basement of Science Hall.

"We're looking forward to a turnout of about 2500 voters for the elections," Don Ghiang, election commissioner, announced.

In past elections the trend has been a sagging student response toward the voting privilege.

The Spring election of 1965 saw 1761 students visit the polls. The Fall of 1965 and the Spring of 1966 continued to slope downward with 1413 and 1041 voters, respectively.

One proposition on the ballot will possibly decide the official title of the college's football field.

The two suggested titles which are being voted upon are Ram Stadium and John F. Kennedy Field.

Selection of a name will not be final. The vote is expected to carry weight, but the decision is left to school department officials.

Change Concerned With 'High School' Image At College

By Marty Arbunich

Bart Weschler and Roland Young, Change's candidates for the Associated Student Presidency and Vice Presidency, respectively, along with its eight nominees for Student Council, unite for a common purpose today—to win the AS elections for Change.

"Obviously we're going to win. I've dreamt five nights in a row we're going to win with 62 per cent of the votes," Weschler announced this week.

With Weschler and Young paving the way in the top two AS positions, Change's only other representatives are seeking posts in the Sophomore and Freshman Councils.

THOSE LISTED ON Change's ticket appealing for a seat on the Sophomore Council are Ron Bianco, Marvin Campbell, Rich Christensen, Tom Crenshaw, Robert Easley, Ron Mellander and Marty Watten.

The sole Freshman Council candidate representing Change is Howard Leighty.

THE PROVISIONS enumerated in Change's political platform are an attack against "the stifling high school atmosphere of this college."

According to its platform, Change feels that "it's time for a change in the campus' image and its nonprogressive student administration."

Specifically, Change's platform seeks a relaxation of certain campus regulations, including: campus dress and the policing in the cafeteria.

Expansion of the student parking by opening the second reservoir is also a plan of Change.

CHANGE ALSO FAVORS better allocation of AS funds, the establishment of a book exchange and the institution of a student-faculty lounge in Statler Wing.

Finally, Change has plans to expand cultural education on campus by extending the concert, lecture and film series presently available.

This expansion includes the appearances of jazz-blues-rock-classical concerts and controversial speakers.

Change believes that "the enactment of our policies will produce a more academically-oriented college, an atmosphere conducive to study, conversation and relaxation."

USA Wants More Student Interest In Campus Activities

Leading the United Students For Action into the Associated Student elections is Joe Parnell, present Sophomore Class President and nominee for the AS Presidency.

"It will be a very tough, hard-fought contest all the way, but I feel our candidates will win out in the results," Parnell commented recently.

In addition to Parnell, USA is supporting 18 candidates for AS offices.

The AS Vice Presidential candidate under the USA ticket is Helen Ferentinos, present Sophomore Class vice president.

THE ELECTION BALLOT features four uncontested offices with USA pitting the only candidates in each category.

The unopposed candidates are Ron Lent for the Associated Men Student Presidency, Linette Wong for the Associated Women Student Presidency, Diane Lattimer for Sophomore Class President and Steve Marigan for Freshman Class President.

Three of these candidates currently hold a political office. Miss Wong is AS Finance Chairman, Miss Lattimer is AWS President and Lent is a member of the Freshman Council.

In order to achieve victory, the four unopposed candidates must receive one vote over 50 per cent of the total votes cast, according to election rules.

IF AN UNOPPOSED candidate receives less than the regulation requirement, the holder of the office will be selected at a special session of the Student Council.

Sophomore Council candidates representing USA in the preferences are Judy Barling, Chris Loo, Bernice Macias, Jim McIntire, Lynne Pozza and Paul Shuttleworth.

USA candidates for the Freshman Council are Pat Fuiren, Ken Jones, Nancy Luseia, Bill McQuaid, Irene Quintero, Shirley Short and Jerry Vanger.

THE USA POLITICAL platform is based upon eight fundamental provisions as a framework for action.

USA plans to provide the student with a more useful Associated Student card, redueing price rates for movie theaters, bowling alleys, professional ball games and other activities.

Another goal of USA is to encourage student participation in student government by instituting student opinion polls and by publiczing issues before voting time in order that students may voice criticism.

The establishment of a Student Judicial Council is another design of USA. This council, composed of the AS President, a representative of the Campus Police and three elected members of the student body, will review all disputes involving disciplinary measures pertaining to students and recommend to the administration any action to be taken—if any.

PLANS FOR MORE external publicity for City College are also on the USA agenda. Such publieilty includes news releases to local daily newspapers and radio stations and to provide City College floats for appearances in San Franeisco parades.

ACTION is what this college needs.

IF ELECTED Associated Student President, I will initiate an Action program that will follow through with the needs and wishes of the students.

I therefore propose the following steps:

1. Creation of a student Judicial Council, so students will have a larger say in campus rules.

2. Surveys of student opinion polls to assist student leaders.

3. Publicizing issues before Student Council so that anyone wishing to voice his opinion will have an opportunity to do so.

I BELIEVE ACTION is the answer. If you agree, elect me, so we may begin.

Joe Parnell

Library Will Stay Open During Yule Vacation

The City College library will be open from December 19-29 during Christmas vacation, and students seeking assistance on term papers and other research projects will find this a good time to use the library, according to Howard Korf, head librarian.

The library will be open from noon until 7 p.m. This will give those students attending evening classes at the college time to use the library. Korf views the library as more than just a place for students to obtain books. He wants the students to feel free to ask the library staff for assistance.

Korf has many ideas and plans for the library, but emphasized that changes can't take place overnight. He stressed the fact that it is often difficult to get ideas approved.

First, money must be appropriated through the school department's budget. The request must travel to the Board of Education and then to City Hall. If approved, the planned change must be again presented through the same channels, and if unchanged, may be followed.

Korf cited a tremendous shortage in library space. Therefore, material and references that seem outdated are being removed.

Korf disclosed that he is also attempting to have the bound periodicals made somewhat more available to the students. The current periodicals are being arranged so that students will be able to locate them without difficulty.

Concerning Student Council passing a resolution to have an area for "lower level conversation" in the library, Korf declared that he felt this was a "marvelous idea."

Jones Pulls Out; 4 Candidates Run As Independents

Percy Jones, Associated Student vice president, unexpectedly withdrew from the AS elections as a candidate for the AS Presidency early this week.

Jones, who headed the roster of Independent candidates, filed for withdrawl because "I will not be able to put in the necessary time as next semester's President.

"After conferring with my counselor about my study list for next semester, I feel I am doing the right thing for both the Associated Students and my own personal benefit. I feel that my education is more important at this time," Jones said.

Running Independently for AS Vice President is Marshalen Taylor, currently vice presidential secretary.

Brenda Brooks, Eldrage Hudspeth and Cheryl Wong are also listed on the Independent ticket as Freshman Council office-seekers.

Best Penny Pincher Wins Santa Role

Today is the big day here for Santa Claus, whoever he is, for today the jars will be emptied, the loot counted and the winner selected in the Santa Claus Contest that has been running since December 6.

Santa Claus Contest is the yearly service project of Alpha Kappa Rho Fraternity. This year the fraternity worked with the Council of Organizations.

Each organization on campus was given four jars. Candidates have since been wondering around with these jars collecting "the penny vote."

Today these votes will be counted and the winning amount will designate what man will be Santa Claus this year at the Children's Hospital.

The money collected will be used to buy presents for one ward of approximately 60 children ranging in age from six months to 14 years. Whatever amount that is left after presents are bought will go to the hospital fund.

Candidates are Buster Hymen of the Ram Ski Club, John Rhoten of Horticulture Society, Dennis Spielbauer of Alpha Kappa Rho, Joe Sigello of the Newman Club, Jim McIntire of Beta Tau and Alpha Sigma Delta's Ron Hough.

Cousins Simpson, Tucker Make Grid Wire All-American Roster

Dwight Tucker and O. J. Simpson, the college's football-playing cousins who have made a family project out of pulverizing Ram opponents, were selected for the 1966 All-America Team put out by Grid Wire last week.

For the second straight year, Simpson was a unanimous choice for the nation's grid honor roll. Described even by the usually partial Southern California press as "the greatest running back in two-year college history," O. J. has scored 54 touchdowns.

Tucker, the nation's leading two-year college high jumper, made the All-American roster as a defensive end. The slender jumping jack broke a Golden Gate Conference record this year when he intercepted a pass and returned it 96 yards for a touchdown.

Between the two cousins, who are also related to Ernie Banks of Baseball's Chicago Cubs, a total of 222 points was scored this year. Simpson alone has scored 320 points in two years, averaging 16 digits a contest.

Receiving honorable mention on the All-American list were brawny 6-5, 295 Ruby Jackson and tough John Deschler. Jackson, an agile offensive tackle, made mincemeat of most players who opposed him and "little" J. Deschler generally raised havoc wherever he was. Against Chabot, he caused and recovered two fumbles, intercepted a pass and blocked a kick.

Photos As Art On Exhibit In Cloud Hall Soon

A retrospective exhibit, emphasizing Photography As An Art Form and comprised of the "best work produced by ten generations of City College student-photographers," is scheduled to go on display in the Cloud Hall Gallery, beginning shortly after the first of the year, Emmett Smith, instructor of Photography, announced recently.

The exhibit, which will replace the one by Madison Devlin, currently on display in the gallery, is expected to run through the end of this semester and, possibly, into the next.

According to Smith, who has studied at the American Academy of Art, Chicago, and the Chicago Institute of Art, "This will be a super show, one which should be eligible for showing at some of the downtown museums.

"Actually," he explained, "the show here will only be a preview, a means for selecting the photographs which will be shown downtown." Although he made it clear that no definite commitments have been made as yet, Smith hinted that he had his eye on the de Young Museum.

In outlining his plans for selecting the photos to be shown, Smith said: "Since the beginning of the photography department in 1939, there have been approximately 45,000 photographs turned in. Out of that number, 3000 have been saved, and out of that number, I'll be selecting between 100 and 300 for the display, concentrating primarily on the period from 1946 to the present—ten generations of students."

Since Photography As An Art Form will be the central theme of the exhibit, Smith stated that the more commercial photographs will not be shown—"unless," he added, "there is enough interest in the show here to merit exhibiting a cross-section of the student's work."

Also, he added, certain photography classes—such as those dealing with motion pictures and color slides—will not be included, since several of the technical aspects involved in that particular form of photography will not permit its use in this type of exhibit. An additional phase of the same project is planned for the future, however, no definite plans have been made as yet.

"There will be an opportunity for viewers—or whatever you call people who look at photography displays," Smith concluded, with a wry smile, "to vote on the pictures of their choice."—R. K.

AS Elections Offer Students Two Parties, 33 Candidates

NOW IS THE TIME for all students to cast a vote for their spring semester leaders. Elections for Associated Student government offices will be held today and tomorrow, and students are reminded of mom, apple pie with cheese (American) and of their privilege and duty to vote.

The candidates number 33, with four unopposed. An uncontested office requires a majority affirmative vote from all the votes cast in order to achieve election.

The strong two-party bid that was successful in the November elections is also present on campus, and the presidential candidates are to be complimented on their objective statements that were a refreshing change from the old ". . . promise to do my best" announcements. All that remains now is for the students to vote; it costs nothing, it's painless, and it will give a warm inner glow to everyone who does vote.

Mod Trend Versus Nature

DIAMOND JIM Brady, who was criticized about his ostentatious display of diamonds in his wardrobe, is rumored to have said, "Them that gots 'em wears 'em." This philosophy should be applied to those females who wear "mini skirts."

Sometimes, when a fad is in the height of its popularity, it influences many people who would be better off by not joining the mod trend. Reference here is made to those females who are not anatomically designed, by nature, to wear a mini skirt but who insist upon wearing one anyway.

The results are pitiful. A knock-kneed coed in a mini skirt; or a coed with either lean or obese extremities exposed under such garb, walking up a flight of stairs or up one of these hills, is a bad joke. Not a dirty joke, just a poor one, like the old elephant joke fad.

They used to get snickers because they were more 'sick' than funny.

Are The Young Going To 'Pot'?

By Connie Skipitares

(Today's On The RAMpage is by Diana Brand.)

THE attitudes and positions adopted by many young people today regarding the use of marijuana and other drugs are both shocking and disturbing—and the number of users is on the rise, according to the Hall of Justice.

The mere fact that marijuana is a drug, and therefore its sale illicit, seems not in the least bit worrisome to the young participants. However, authorities and cognizant, distressed adults are worried.

In 1965, San Francisco juvenile arrests in narcotics carried a 260 per cent increase over 1964, and by October of this year the rate had increased by 39.4 per cent over the 1965 figure. Additionally, authorities believe that for each single arrest, approximately ten other juveniles are, in all probability, also involved.

CONCURRENT IS a steady increase in the juvenile crime rate, and it would be foolish to fail to relate the two problems. FBI figures reveal that in the last decade, juvenile arrests have increased 123 per cent.

Nationally, the age group 15-24 accounts for 70 per cent of all serious crimes. At the same time the syphilis rate in the 15-19 age group has doubled, and the illigitimate pregnancy rate for girls under 20 increased 47 per cent.

In California alone the juvenile crime rate has increased approximately 62 per cent where that age group population has increased but 20 per cent. In 1964 a total of 269,854 arrests was listed as juvenile.

THE EXTRAORDINARY RISE in juvenile use of drugs is centered around that powerful new "mind-opener"—marijuana; a 104 per cent increase is recorded by the San Francisco Narcotics Bureau. Perhaps this increasing habit may be attributed to the popular belief that "pot" is safe.

The fallacy stating that marijuana is a stimulant is as common today as the "old" one claiming alcohol to be the same. Following a momentary period of stimulation in the early stages of administration (tripping out), depressant qualities take over (freaking out).

Contrary also to current thought, the drug can cause physical damage. Although its habit-forming properties remain controversial, marijuana may have a permanent extensive effect on the nervous system, and may cause semipermanent depression of the respiratory and circulatory functions.

Young men and women who have decided that "turning on" is as close as possible to being the ideal date out to reflect on a few facts. If nothing else, perhaps the "ladies" ought to think of feminine vanity.

SIMULTANEOUS WITH the remarkable "trips" come heavily bloodshot eyes, overly dilated pupils, distended puffy upper and lower lids, and breath that could cause "fearless 100" to give up. This far misses the mark of feminine mystery.

Possibly the remarkable "grass's" extra powers may intimidate future experimenters. Not only does it depress the sense of touch and reduce pain, but it tends to cause a semi-conscious mental state resulting in the loss of power to judge time and distance.

Gaining a feeling of well-being, the user is frequently impelled to perform senseless acts that could be dangerous to himself and others. In the final stages, marijuana may induce drowsiness and hence, uncontrollable sleep.

ADMITTEDLY, addiction qualities of the drug must remain a question. Once a user tires of the "mini-trips" afforded by marijuana, is it not natural to want to go on to bigger and better things?

The desire to escape reality is a dangerous whim in which to indulge. And no doubt the need to escape reality is a sickness. Dr. Victor Vogel, a physician with years of experience in the narcotics field, has testified that marijuana "sometimes leads to the use of hard narcotics such as heroin."

Is it worth taking that "sometimes" chance of dope addiction? Anyone thinking that it is should be exposed to films of addicts in the withdrawal stages.

Peace On Earth

Asian Santa—Same Beard, Different Sled

By Connie Skipitares

For much of the Western World, December 25 represents a collage of tree-trimming parties, boisterous caroling, holly-decked halls, and the usual air of gift-exchange savagery.

But little does the Christian hemisphere realize that this sacred 24-hour observance is not celebrated solely by religious advocates of the Nativity—pagan cultures located on an entirely alien face of the globe have adopted amazingly close identification with it also.

It has been said that one can express "Merry Christmas" in a thousand Asian tongues and dialects. The birthday of Christ is celebrated in almost as many different ways in the Orient.

ALTHOUGH ONLY ONE of the Asian nations is Christian, most observe Christmas as an official holiday—and some celebrate it with an exuberance almost beyond belief.

In the Asian realm of thinking, Christmas is "happy day," and such occasions should be shared by everyone regardless of their religion.

In the steamy jungles of Burma little children will go caroling through dusty, darkened streets in jeeps and buses.

Indonesians away from their homeland will hum a favorite Christmas tune, mentally substituting a key word: "I'm dreaming of a rainy Christmas."

IN SOUTH KOREA, the government will lift the midnight curfew for the only time of the year on Christmas Eve, and there will be drinking and dancing and more drinking as an entire nation celebrates all night long.

On Tokyo's glittering Ginza, loudspeakers will blare Christmas carols in Japanese and the cabarets will do a booming business catering to the holiday mood.

Hong Kong's big department stores will have costumed old gents called "San Tan Lou Yin" bouncing children on his knee and listening to their pleas for gifts.

AN ASIAN CHRISTMAS has a flavor and spirit that is distinctly its own.

Christmas is a long holiday of religious festivity and merry-making in the Philippines—the sole Christian nation in Asia.

Christmas season in the Philippines starts officially on the early morning of December 16 when church bells throughout the country peal the start of the nine-day "Misa de Gallo" (dawn-Masses) culminating with the midnight High Mass on Christmas Day. Churches and homes are decorated with lanterns and multi-colored electric bulbs to heighten the atmosphere of gaiety.

During this series of Masses, make-shift stalls blossom near the churches where native goodies are sold—rice cakes with ginger tea.

AFTER THE CHRISTMAS Mass, Filipinos gather at home for the midnight supper of "noche buena" around tables laden with assorted Filipino, American and Spanish dishes.

The mark of an excellent Christmas Eve dinner is the leg of ham adorning the center of the table. Filipinos believe a bountiful table on Christmas ensures prosperity in the coming year.

While celebration of Christmas is markedly influenced by Spanish culture, America has also bestowed its "Santa Claus" on the Filipinos.

THE BEARDED JOLLY Santa is an indispensable feature at Christmas parties, although lately Filipinos have given him a local touch—riding around on a bamboo sled pulled by a carabao (water buffalo) instead of a snow sled pulled by reindeer.

Christmas is also a big day for Filipino children who visit their godparents for gifts of clothes, toys and most often, money. Gift giving does not end till January 6.

Finally, in the land which perhaps claims the second largest population of Americans, Vietnam, the observance of the cease-fire truce will commence for a two-day vigil, and hopefully, serviecmen will be able to enjoy a holiday meal uninterrupted by the muffled ring of falling grenades or the desperate panicked cry for shelter.

The Soft Sell—Newest Role In TV Advertising

By Marc Clarkson

After many years, and billions of dollars poured into advertising, most television sponsors have finally become enlightened to the fact that the majority of TV viewers are fed-up with the jejune high pressure commercials.

In an attempt to increase their sales, most TV sponsors have switched to the popular soft-sell commercial, and this humorous and clever type of advertisement has resulted in an increase in consumer interest—and spending.

No more is that popular complaint lamented by irritated television viewers, "It is impossible to maintain any interest in the plot of a television program when a sponsor breaks in every six or seven minutes to exhort you to buy his product!" Today, many commercials are amusing and worth watching.

IN FACT, now many commercials have more appeal than the chronic diet of ridiculous programs with which the television networks are stuffing their viewers.

Take the Granny Goose potato chip commercials, for instance. The one, in which that familiar Granny Goose, this time a dashing cowboy, rides down from a desert cliff and is held up by two swarthy Mexican bandits.

One of the heavily armed bandits quite blandly asks, "What's in the bag, Goose?" And Granny promptly reaches into his saddlebag and pulls out a package of his sponsor's product, then, skillfully rips away with his teeth the cellophane from the package top—the piece drifts into a trash can that happens to be stationed in this "no man's land."

THE OUTLAWS—who happen to be articulate—sample the chips, describing them as "provocative," "well-seasoned." They all become friendly and Goose rides off, not to be seen again until the next commercial replay.

As might be expected, Granny Goose sales have sky-rocketed because of these humorous commercials.

"Goose" has profited too.

He now stars in his own TV program—Laredo. Philip Carey may never be remembered for his role as Ranger Reese, but most certainly he will be remembered in the hearts of many an ardent TV viewer as that handsome, debonair Granny Goose.

A Phi Epsilon Plays Santa For John Swett Tots

Although the John Swett elementary school is not equipped with a chimney or fireplace, somehow a gift-laden Santa Claus will manage to make an appearance at a kindergarten Christmas party there, thanks to the members of Alpha Phi Epsilon fraternity.

As a social project this semester, Alpha Phi Epsilon fraternity elected to collect money through a designated benefit (which incidentally was held last week) to use in the purchase of the bundle of toys which Saint Nick will distribute among some 85 anticipating children at the Swett school.

Funds collected totaled some $160 which will go solely for toys and party props for the event to be held Friday.

Chairman of the project and originator of the idea, Anthony Robinson commented that he hopes to "make this type of project an annual affair."

Last year the fraternity was involved in a paint-remodeling project, so this year's service will entail a markedly different task as Alpha Phi Epsilon members make their way to the chaotic toy store.

Children Keep Christmas Faith Alive

By B.T.

MAY THIS CHRISTMAS season be filled with fun and games for all! — May it be filled with human warmth and understanding, for Christmas spells H-O-P-E.

Christmas means something to the faithful and the sincere believers in man. To the cynical unbelievers, and to the distrustful, Christmas means nothing, but the Christmas spirit continues, anyway.

For little children make sure of it. They are the true believers, and the eager receivers. And in Paradise they know the following poem:

"IT WAZ JUST before Christmas, and all through da hale, nobody wuz moving, not even one iole.

"Da malos wuz hung upside down, just like pheasants, so da menehune kin fill dem wid presants.

"Da chirren wuz curl on top one sleeping mat, and day dream bout huapia, an all tings like date; while da mudder an me wuz all set for enjoy one nice rest; we plan to get ten hours moemoe.

"When out in da grasses, dere been one beg clatta; I jump up an go, for look whatsamatta!

"Out by da door, I peek through da lauhala, (da moon wuz all shiny, like one silver dolla)

"DEN ALLOFO SUDDEN, guess what I see? Da menehune, wid his eight little kia!

"More quicker dan ukus da bunch of dem came, an he make da kine oeoe, an call dem by name: 'Eh Paki, eh Hiula, eh Leie, Ilio! And Hoku, and Kupi, Hekili, Uwila!

"Up da lanai—on top da paia—now come on you folks, or you get pilikia!

"Like da dry leafs, dat been blow all around, dese guys make one run, and dey take off da ground—

"DEN QUICK LIKE one wink, way up on da roof—you kin hear da kine noises been make by da hoof.

"An just when I'm going back inside da room, dat menehune, he come down wid one boom! He move even more fast dan one Mahimahi.

("His malo wuz pilau euz he land in da ahi) An on top his back, he get one beeg eke all load up wid toys, for each little keiki.

"His eyes wuz all shiny, he get beeg white whiskahs, an his cheeks an his ihu been red like hibiscus.

"His face wuz HAOULI, all fill up wid joy—when he laugh, his opu shake like one finger poi!

"HE SO FUNNY, I staht foa laugh at em, an yet he make wink foa show me he no need be upset.

"He nevah say notting, but he make hana-hana, and fill up does malos wid plenty makani! (Data de kine gifts, you know.) When he all pau he turn, an he smile, an he make me one bow—

"Den he put up his finger alongside his ihu—an more quick dan you kin say 'Jonah Kuhio'—He jump on da roof, an dose guys all togeddah

"Float up in da airs, just like da kine feddah . . . 'Aloha!' he say, 'I like errybody get hisself Mele Kalikimake!"

CHRISTMAS KEEPSAKE: The human race moves forward on the feet of little children.—Phillips Brooks.

A written work is the choicest of relics.—Henry David Thoreau.

The Observer

By William G. Pates

NINETEEN HUNDRED and sixty-eight could be a most meaningful and enjoyable election year for the Republican Presidential nominee or just the return of the sacrificial lamb—the Goldwater debacle revisited. Which one of these two choices it is to be depends entirely upon the actions of the sage of the Pedernales, Lyndon B. Johnson, especially with regard to the war in Vietnam.

On November 22, 1963, when President Johnson took power there were 20,000 American servicemen in Vietnam. In 1966, exactly three years later, there are 400,000 American soldiers in Vietnam and it is costing the United States 50,000,000 dollars a day to keep them there.

Quite rightly so, Johnson fears a still hot war will be the big issue for the GOP in 1968. The basic cause of many Democratic losses in the recent election was the war, which brought all kinds of havoc down upon the average citizen what with inflation, high interest rates, tight money, high prices and large stock market losses.

WHAT'S EVEN MORE important is that the escalation of the war, begun in February of 1965 with vast movements of American troops into South Vietnam and large scale bombings of North Victnam, has not brought an end to the conflict but has succeeded only in lessening the United States' somewhat battered prestige, and the nation's confidence in the Johnson administration.

It has been thought by many that Johnson's weakness since he first entered Congress has been foreign affairs and it has cost this country dearly.

On all foreign affairs the President has had to rely on the so-called experts. President Kennedy soon discovered with the ill-fated Bay of Pigs invasion that you cannot always trust the experts. The President gets advice both good and bad, but it is he alone who must make the final decision.

BEAUSE OF his weaknesses in foreign affairs Johnson had to take the advice of the experts at its worth. They advised him to bomb and move in troops. He believed it was right, he went ahead with this action and now all the generals do is call for more troops and more bombing.

As a result, the President has himself in a war he doesn't know how to get out of without further damaging American prestige abroad, if it still exists at this time. One way out of the Vietnam conflict which would save American lives and a significant number of tax dollars would be to drop low yield atomic bombs on North Vietnam, but the aftermath brought on by this incident would be so destructive as to all but delete any serious intentions of carrying out such a deed except from the mind of Barry Goldwater.

A GREAT MANY American citizens find it hard to support a war which costs them 20,000,000,000 dollars a year to support when there is so much to be done here at home and programs attempting to rectify our social ills are cut because of the cost of this war.

Strangely enough the war is "good" for business. Defense industries producing artillery, ammunition, hand arms, bombs, bombers, chemical warfare implements and all other munitions are employing great numbers of men. At the present, unemployment is at its lowest rate in 18 years.

A number of Republican winners of Senate and Gubernatorial seats have thrust themselves into the presidential race limelight and a few elder statesmen such as Governor Romney, Richard Nixon, also-ran that he is, and Governor Rockefeller are letting their intentions be known.

NIXON DISAPPOINTED many by not fullfilling his promise to retire from public life after his loss to Governor Brown in 1962 but, he contends that he is not a candidate, and that he is not seeking delegates.

George Romney is at present the front runner but George Wallace expects to make a third party bid if Romney is nominated.

If Johnson doesn't heed the message from the people to end this war there will be those who will foresee a Republican victory—as in 1952—as the only way to end the war. The price the country pays will be the end of the progress gained under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson. Another interlude of social stagnation would not be too high a price to pay for peace if the President doesn't change his present course.

A Satire Of Victorian England

Wilde's 'Earnest' Opens Tonight In College Theater

By Melvin Beechman

The James Haran production of Oscar Wilde's The Importance Of Being Earnest opens tonight at 8 p.m., to begin a four-night run in the theater.

"Earnest" is a brilliant satire that exposes the foibles and mores of the upper leisure class of Victorian England in the 1890s. Though it is purely farcical, it is lively and ingenious, with no solemn or sluggish moments.

This dramatic masterpieee was written by Oscar Wilde who was born in Dublin in 1856. His literary career had a controversial start at Oxford where, much to the disgust of other undergraduates, he affected a lackadaisical esthetic pose, which soon became the symbol of a literary cult.

WILDE'S FIRST REAL popular success came with four brilliant comedies which were topped off with 'Earnest.'

Despite the scandal brought on by his homosexual activities, and which brought a sudden eclipse to his career, 'Earnest,' by force of its enduring wit and eleganee, has won for Wilde a permanent place in English literature.

Haran stated that the success of the play depends on the delivery of the lines, and the actors have worked very hard on this aspect.

The difficult part of Lady Bracknell is played by lovely Margaret Calhoun who has appeared on the campus stage before in Playboy Of The Western World, Blood Wedding and Apollo Of Bellac. Miss Calhoun is also active in outside theater, and while a student in Greece, she played Medea for the Athens players.

BLANCHE RICHARDSON, who plays Miss Prism, is another veteran of the college stage, having appeared in Teahouse Of The August Moon and Thurber Carnival. Miss Richardson is also active in little theater, working with the Orb theater and the Firehouse Repertory theater.

Ron Bianco who plays Algernon, was in Blood Wedding last semester, and played in The Drunkard at the Playhouse last summer.

Gwendolyn is played by Cathy Wright who although new to the local stage, has been in quite a few plays. She is encouraged by her brother Patrick Wright, who is a professional actor in Hollywood.

New actors in the cast are John Pantoleon as Dr. Chasuble, Bill McCall as Jack, Ellen Castor as Cecily, Terry McDermott as Lane and Dave Sommers as Merriman.

Ann Crichton is the stage manager, Marilynn Whiting is in charge of the props, and Ronn Henson is handling make-up.

Arabian Nights Theme Of Awards Party In January

By Katie Difani

A prize will be awarded for the most original headdress worn to the Associated Women Student-sponsored Awards and Recognition Party, Arabian Nights, scheduled for 5 to 7:30 p.m. Tuesday, January 10 in Statler Wing.

Although costumes are optional, Diane Lattimer, AWS president, urges all those attending to AWS Executive Board will be in Arabian attire as will members of the Recreation Association and the Inter-Sorority Council who will share hosting duties with AWS.

As the guest speaker, faculty member Mary Tyson will relate her experiences as a student in Egyptian universities. Mrs. Tyson lived and attended schools in the Middle East before coming to the United States and City College as an instructor in the English department.

Gwendolyn is played by Cathy Wright who although new to the local stage, has been in quite a few plays. She is encouraged by her brother Patrick Wright, who is a professional actor in Hollywood.

New actors in the cast are John Pantoleon as Dr. Chasuble, Bill McCall as Jack, Ellen Castor as Cecily, Terry McDermott as Lane and Dave Sommers as Merriman.

Ann Crichton is the stage manager, Marilynn Whiting is in charge of the props, and Ronn Henson is handling make-up.

The Dougherty Cup will be presented to the woman student with the highest scholarship record at City College. A member of the AWS Executive Board will be presented with an outstanding service award.

The Recreation Association will honor its outstanding athlete.

CYNTHIA GEORGE, winner of the Best-Dressed Coed Contest in November, will receive her trophy at this time.

A highlight of the program will be the installation of the new AWS officers for the spring semester. Linette Wong, unopposed candidate for AWS President, will be installed to succeed Miss Lattimer.

Sanford Lecture Set For January 5

Dr. Nevitt Sanford, formerly Professor of Psychology at the Berkeley campus of the University of California, will speak on The Authoritarian Personality during College Hour on January 5 in the theater.

Since 1960 when Dr. Sanford retired from the Berkeley campus, he has been associated with the Stanford School of Psychology. He is the Director of its Institute of Study of Human Problems.

Dr. Sanford holds degrees from Columbia and Harvard.

On December 1, Dr. Sanford was the keynote speaker at the California Junior College Student Government Association state convention where he discussed the Philosophy of Student Government and its advancement.

Handel Concert Thursday

With the accompaniment of a small orchestra and harpsichord, the City College Choir will sing selections from Handel's Messiah at a Christmas Concert during College Hour tomorrow in the theater.

Under the direction of William Grothkopp, the Chamber Choir will sing two 16th Century Renaissance Spanish Carols. The Women's Choir will sing several of the Swingle Singers' numbers.

Letters to the Editor

Ram's Horn

• Tilt!

Editor:

I wish to protest most vehemently, and with all the rage and blasphemies that I can conjure up, the dehumanization of next semester's registration! The age of "Do not fold, spindle or mutilate" has at last reached CCSF.

A student is no longer free to choose his teachers; a machine will decide for him. This is done in the name of such ambiguities as progress and modernization; I curse both of them! Let's face it, there are some teachers in this college that are so dull, boring, numb, spiritless and monotonous, that a prerequisite for their classes should be a prescription from a doctor for benzedrine.

Must the long arm of Big Brother strangle City College?

To the person in the administration who suggested this tragedy I wish ten-thousand devils to torment him! To the people within the administration who support this program I wish a pox upon their respective houses.

And to the faceless, voiceless, brainless, computerized, programized, homogenized, pasteurized, TVized, commercialized students of the Pepsi-generation, I curse them and their third generation!

Long live human beings; the few of us left on this campus!!!

Dress Regulation Change Waits For Presidential OK

By Bill Fritz

In its most decisive move of the semester, Student Council, last Wednesday, voted 11-2-0 to approve a reworded resolution revising the campus dress regulations.

The resolution, which would allow attendance at class for men wearing "tailored bermudas" and for women wearing "slacks" or stretch pants, was presented to College President Louis Conlan by Associated Student President Bruce Fisher, last Thursday.

Fisher reported that "President Conlan, in my opinion, is in favor of this legislation. However, he is going to consult with the Faculty Association and learn their opinion on the matter."

Fisher also pointed out that the new dress code would have to be approved by the Board of Education when they review the college catalogue for next semester.

THE ORIGINAL RESOLUTION was presented to council on Monday of last week by Frosh Councilman Ron Lent, one of four makers of the bill.

At that time, Chairman Fisher, upon the advice of Dean of Student Activities James Wyatt, ruled the motion out of order on the grounds that council cannot change a rule made by somcone else. (In this case, the administration.)

Lent then agreed to alter the resolution to provide that the legislation would go into effect "as soon as agreed to by Dr. Conlan."

However, Soph Counellman Paul Shuttleworth, who had secondcd the motion, would not agree to the change and appealed the chairman's decision to rule the resolution out of order. Council upheld Shuttleworth's appeal by a vote of 8-5-1, and the bill stood as originally stated.

AN EXTENDED DEBATE on the resolution followed and opposition to the bill was based on the argument that the wording was somewhat ambiguous and tactless in parts.

Soph Councilman Rich Heintz then moved that the resolution be placed into committee for rewording, and a majority of council concurred.

The rewritten bill, passed on Wednesday, should go into effect as soon as it receives administrative approval.

Also on Wednesday, council approved another rewritten resolution giving the AS President a semester budget of "$100 to be used for books, luncheon guests and various incidental expenses." The vote was 10-3-0.

On that same day, two pieces of legislation were unanimously approved by acclamation.

THE FIRST WAS a resolution commending Dean Wyatt, Jim Soletti and Judy Guild for their effort in making the CJCSGA conference a success.

The second was a recommendation submitted by Frosh Counellman Steve Marigan asking that the water-filled holes on the path to the women's gym be drained or filled in with soil.

And on Wednesday of last week, nominations and voting were held among council and the president's cabinet to choose this semester's Most Outstanding Student and Most Outstanding Faculty Member. The awardees, chosen for their unsolicited aid to student government, will be announced at the Student Government banquet to be held on January 4.

'Love Book It Is Not; Sex Book It Is'

By Viggo Petersen

Perhaps the most misleading thing about Lenore Kendel's work is the title—the Love Book.

A "love" book it is not.

A "sex" book it is.

If one were to purchase Miss Kendel's book with expectations of reading moving, romantic, beautiful love scenes, he would be somewhat disappointed.

UNLESS AN INDIVIDUAL draws absolutely no distinction between love and sex the poem cannot be regarded as a reading of any kind of love experience as many of her critics contend.

A recent conference of psychiatrists expounding on sexual attitudes in society pointed out that what perhaps is ailing people sexually is that the sex life of the average individual is undertaken with such indifference and with such lack of regard for the opposite person that sex in this day and age has had a tendency to become boring.

They pointed out that people get to know each other sexually before they know each other emotionally or intellectually.

IN THE LIGHT OF this pronouncement, if it is true, Miss Kendel's poem can be seen not as any new form of expression but merely as a reflection of the somewhat disturbed (as the psychiatrists claim) attitudes of the mass society, and as such the poem is really nothing to get excited about.

Perhaps Miss Kendel had this reflection in mind.

The Love Book itself is a poem describing the many pleasures, ecstasies and delights one can experience during sexual relations.

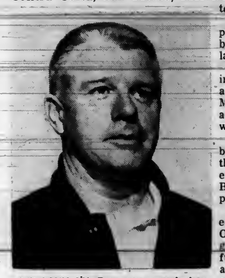
It is a small pamphlet five pages in length which describes in detail all the pleasures and reactions to sex that Miss Kendel has conceivably experienced.

As far as expressing herself, Miss Kendel does a very good job. There should be no doubt in anybody's mind as to what she had in mind.

But to say that the poem is beautiful or that it arouses feelings of love, in the strictest sense of the word, compassion or tenderness for a member of the opposite sex is simply not true. The poem is merely an exploitation of sex.

THERE IS NO background established in the book. There is nothing in the poem that sets any sort of mood or prepares the reader in any way. It just happens.

It describes sex in such a way as to suggest that sex is all that was necessary for a compatible relationship between two people.



As it appears in its present state, the Love Book is a hard, almost brutal expression of a desire for lust resembling only very basic human desires.

Four Teams Figure Strongly In Better-Balanced Golden Gate Conference Cage Competition

By Marc Clarkson

The 1967 Golden Gate Conference, according to Ram basketball Coach Sid Phelan, will be stronger and better-balanced than last year when the Rams ran away with the conference crown, undefeated in 14 games.

This year, at least four teams figure strongly in the competition: Contra Costa, San Mateo, Merritt and San Francisco, according to Phelan.

SID PHELAN, Ram cage coach, has captured eight conference crowns in his 12 years here. The other four years were three seconds and a third.

Contra Costa, considered by many people as the team to beat, should do better than its third-place finish of last year, (9-5).

The return of four starters will improve the team on both defense and offense over last year. Led by McKinley Reynolds, All-State, all-around court standout, the Comets will be shooting for the top.

SAN MATEO, ANOTHER well-balanced and improved team, whom the Rams host in the conference opener, figures to be tough to beat. The Bulldogs have a stout defense and a productive offense.

Since the Bulldogs have much talent, high-scoring, second-year man, Owney Williams will be moved from guard to a forward position to make full use of his rebounding abilities and to reap more from the fine crop of newcomers.

The most promising rookie is Chris Dempsey, 6-7 forward, All-American in high school. Like Williams, Dempsen, a University of Santa Clara transplant, is versatile both on defense and offense. The Bulldogs will be out for the Rams' throats, and hopefully their conference crown, in an attempt to revenge the college football loss to their arch rival.

MERRITT HAS SHOWN itself to be a tough team by defeating powerful Imperial Valley. Merritt, strong on offense as last year when they ranked first in league scoring, also has developed a defense to match its potent offense.

ANOTHER TEAM WORTHY of mention is San Jose City College. New Coach Pat Doherty believes his cagers have a shot at the conference championship. Though the squad has only one returning starter, Steve Schlinke, forward, it has developed a strong offensive unit. A ball control team, light and fast, the Jaguars could surprise everyone—if their weight can stand up under defensive pressure.

Chabot, Foothill and Diablo Valley seem unlikely to be in contention for the championship. They should finish at the bottom of the standings in that order.

City College Rams, defensive minded as last year, "may not be as strong defensively as last season."

Coach Phelan Makes Annual Cager Report

Ram basketball Coach Sid Phelan, whose ability at winning championships is matched only by undefeated soccer Coach Roy Diederichsen, issued his annual gloom report last week on the progress of the 1967 basketball team.

If one were to take the man seriously, one would expect the team to wind up somewhere down around second place. But history proves that there is rarely such a thing as finishing second with Phelan at the helm.

Modesty, or some such poppycock, might prevent him from telling reporters anything about it, but in the estimation of more than a few people in the Bay Area, Sid Phelan is one of the best cage coaches around.

The statistics routine could be recited—eight championships in 12 years and three runners-up, but a better indication comes from a look at the way the man works. Rosters would have to look in the second row at a game if they wanted to find him. It seems that it is from that vantage point that the coach always plans his strategy.

In a crucial game last season the champ-apparents were having some difficulties overcoming a good Contra Costa team. With his team trailing by a couple of points and less than a minute left in the contest, Phelan called time out.

On the in-bounds play the Rams chalked up a quick two, to even the count. Then the mastermind's men controlled the boards, got the ball and proceeded to put the game away.

Cagers 'Robbed' At Cal

Rams Lose To Referees But Beat Gaels, West Valley

By G. Frank Cooney

The basketball team danced to one of its rare losses last week to the tune of "we was robbed" when a string of highly debatable calls forced the Rams to give up their first loss of the season, 57-65, to Cal's Cubs.

The overtime game, played on Berkeley's own hardcourt, did not set the tempo for the entire week, however, as the City College quintet bounced back to drub West Valley, 63-57, and St. Mary's Frosh, 59-47.

RAM COACH Sid Phelan, usually a conservative speaker, had harsh words for the refereeing job at Cal—most of them off the record, however.

He did indicate that he was contacted after the game by five coaches. It was a unanimous consensus, 5-0, that the "Rams were robbed."

After only twenty minutes of playing, Willie Wise was forced to leave the game on fouls. His final two fouls were very questionable offensive charging calls.

With Wise disposed of, the same referee made several consecutive calls —all against the Rams—that cost San Francisco at least ten points.

Even without the services of two-year college "Player of the (Previous) Week" Wise, the Rams outplayed the highly touted Cub group, but couldn't overcome the refereeing.

LAST THURSDAY the Ram five got back into the swing of winning when "Kangaroo" Gene Williams had his best game of the year. He led both the Rams and West Valley in every conceivable department.

The 6-6 (plus) pivot scored 12 points, blocked at least 12 shots, grabbed more rebounds than anyone else and just raised havoc in general. His improved passing also set up many scores.

Playmaking Larry Grey was also a standout in that contest. He was the next highest scorer with nine digits.

The five-point margin of victory over the West Valley squad was somewhat dimmed by the fact that Contra Costa, a Golden Gate Conference member with the Rams, pulverized the same San Jose Valley team, 101-65.

Phelan figures Contra Costa may be tough this year.

LAST SATURDAY, Phelan's five, led by Wise's 17 points, never trailed in their win over the Little Gaels. But neither did they ever put the win in their hip pockets until the final few seconds.

Felony Squad Nips Newman Club, 64-61, In Overtime

By John Le Tourneau

The Felony Squad took over undisputed first place in the Club League, as they beat the Newman Club, 64-61, in overtime as last week's cage intramural competition was marred by four forfeits, a high for the season.

The Felony Squad and Newman Club were both undefeated until their titanic last Wednesday when Ron Delaney's 20 points paced the Felony Squad to the win. Ron Elliot rang up 21 points for the Newman Club but was shut out in the overtime period.

The other three games were incidental in the title bid, but important in the rest of the standings as third-place Phi Delta moved into a tie for second with a win over Alpha Sigma Delta by forfeit. In another forfeit, Alpha Phi Epsilon defeated the Beta Bums.

In another close game the Filipino-Americans won over the Chinese Students, 41-39.

Over in the Independent division, the three top teams all advanced by defeating their lesser opponents. The Guardsman seemed to be looking forward to its big title game tomorrow night and the team seemed to look promising at times and sloppy at others. Mike Duggan and Jerry Calgero scored 16 and 15 points respectively, to pace the journalists to a 52-41 win over Hillel.

Third-place The Knobs knocked over the hapless Charlie Brown's Gang, 57-26. Hotel & Restaurant lost to the Irish, and the Bearded Crusts to the Red Mountaineers by forfeit.

Death Of Curley Grieve Is Loss To Ram Sports

A good friend to City College athletes was lost when Examiner Sports Editor Curley Grieve was stricken with a fatal heart attack last Thursday.

As an energetic 64-year-old Sports Editor, Mr. Grieve paid particular attention to the achievements of the Ram teams in recent times.

It was from Mr. Grieve that the championship Ram football team received its most authoritative support in its quest of a 1966 Little Rose Bowl bid. In a front page headline story just last month the highly respected Sports Editor wrote "City College of San Francisco deserve a Rose Bowl Bid."

And when the bowl picks went amiss, it was he who ordered the whole Little Rose Bowl setup to be staunchly reprimanded. In his paper the Rams have received more coverage than in any other daily.

Block SF Pays Tribute To Ram Champ Teams

The newest additions in this year's long list of Ram championship teams received their just rewards last night at the semiannual Block SF banquet held in Smith Hall.

Heading the list of award recipients were the Most Valuable Players in each of the three fall sports. From the championship football team it came as not much of a surprise when O. J. Simpson was picked Most Valuable Back and Dwight Tucker was chosen Most Valuable Lineman. In soccer Tom Sammuelson won the Most Valuable Player trophy.

The Cross Country team—not quite a champion after finishing in the second division for the second straight year—elected Fred Forsberg as its Most Valuable Player.

A TOTAL OF 74 jackets and letters was given out to the three teams, including 68 jackets to the soccer and football players and six letters to the cross country runners.

In addition to these awards, the football players received Prune Bowl jackets for their participation in the Fourth Annual Prune Bowl in San Jose.

Simpson, perhaps the best athlete ever to attend City College, was awarded with the—and his—second annual Munius McFadden Award at the College of San Mateo earlier this year.

The McFadden award, named after the "dean of two-year college coaches," is awarded to the Most Valuable Player in the Golden Gate Conference each year.

Ram teams have brought home seven titles in 1966.

THESE 22 SOCCER players received championship jackets:

Nelson Artiga, William Ayoub, Ben Boikanyo, Sal Capana, Mickey Dzdevich, Bill Freeman, Peter Gong, Marshall Granger, Tom Jones, Rudy Lucchese, Rudolfo Mesone, Roley Nederloff, Henry Mejia, Robert Rojas, Sammuelson, Irwin Safdie, Carlos Valdillez, Jerry Uribe, Brian Williams, Connie Shiskin, Braulids Trigeros.

FOOTBALL JACKETS were awarded to 46 players from the championship squad:

Bill Alfred, Glenn Baker, Calvin Booth, Fred Bowe, Bob Buchness, Mike Carter, Tom Coleman, Allan Cowlings, John Deschler, Mike Deschler, Kevin Devine, Walter Easton, Milt Frank, Jeff Frates, Tony Gaetani, Ralph Hodge, John Hughes, Stan Hunt, Ruby Jackson, Craig Johnson, Willie Jones, Pat Kearns, Jerd Lapham, John Lazerich, James McEldry, Hugh Miller, Ray Moore, John Monroe, John Morello, Pete Mullins, Tom Noyello, Greg Pedrin, Bob Pellegrini, Bill Price, Bruce Rosenberg, George Rush, John Scanlon, Simpson, Morell Smith, Tom Sobeck, Mike Streich, Tucker, Bill Wasson, Ocie Williams and Mike Vasquez and George Reiser, managers.

Letter winners from the Cross Country team were Bob Annestad, Rich Cuadra, Forsberg, Roger Gribble, Hoy Henderson and Larry Stevens.

Hungrier Laney Gets The Better Of Bowl

RAMBLINGS

By G. Frank Cooney

Elston Looks For Bright Season In '67

(Today's Ramblings is by Mike Duggan.)

IT IS TOO BAD such a great season had to end on a sour note when Laney romped over City College by 35-13 in the Prune Bowl game.

According to Ram Coach Dutch Elston, "they were just hungrier, and why shouldn't they have been. The Rams played the entire season anticipating a trip to Pasadena, and rightfully expected it when they finished the regular season as the nation's number one two-year college team.

After being snubbed by the Little Rose Bowl Committee, the Rams were nominated to represent the Golden Gate Conference in the Prune Bowl.

A TRIP TO SPARTAN Stadium just isn't like making one down south and playing before some 40,000 people in the Rose Bowl Stadium. Many of the players, including All-American O. J. Simpson, Dwight Tucker, Milt Frank, Glenn Baker, Bruce Rosenberg and Jerd Lapham had played in the Rose Bowl just last year. Getting up for this game was not an easy task.

On the other hand, Laney did not expect the trip down south, and was quite happy to get a chance to play City College. Laney had no problem getting up for the game and had little problem winning it.

THE PRUNE BOWL game was the last in a Ram uniform for O. J. Simpson, who without a doubt was the greatest two-year college player in history. In 14 conference games over two years, he led the Rams to a record of 13 wins and one tie while never tasting defeat. In those 14 contests, Simpson scored 42 touchdowns good for 256 points. In his 20 games overall, he scored 54 touchdowns and 328 points while rushing for 2562 yards. These totals are going to be around for a long time.

Simpson met defeat only twice, in the opener of 1965 when Los Angeles Valley College shut out the Rams, 26-0, and not again until his final game in the recent Prune Bowl. O. J. showed his all-around ability this year by chalking up an added 597 yards on 25 pass receptions.

The Rams' current winning streak under Dutch Elston has ended at 18 and beginning with next season's opener, he hopes to start a new one.

Among those players eligible to return for next year are Greg Pedrin, Bill Alfred, Otto Coleman, Calvin Booth, John Scanlon, Bill Wasson, Ralph Hodge, Ray Moore, Mike Deschler, Allan Cowlings, Mike Streich, John Monroe, James McEldry, Craig Johnson and Mike Carter. But, it is likely that some college scouts may have plans for some of these men.

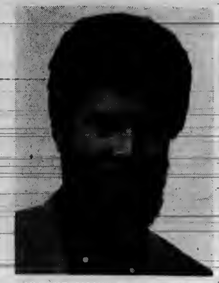
DURING THE NINE regular season games, the Rams racked up 348 points to the opponents' 141. Of the offensive stars who did most of this scoring only end Carter is eligible to return, for end Tucker, and backs Frank, Baker and Simpson are now finished with their two-year college careers.

Domecus Calls For Baseball Oriented

Coach Ernie Domecus today invited all students interested in participating in baseball at the college to see him as soon as possible in the men's gymnasium.

Domecus' 1966 diamond squad was the most successful in City College history, finishing second among California two-year colleges behind an amazing Cerritos group who went through a 42-game season undefeated.

The Rams went through Golden Gate Conference play with an 18-3 record on a triple round robin schedule. It was not only the most successful season but it was also the longest one the Rams have ever participated in.



The team was led by freshman pitcher Bill Kirkpatrick, who won more games than any other pitcher in the league (9-1) and had a 2.04 ERA.

Ballot Theft Triggers AS Election Fraud Charges

ROLAND YOUNG was the Change party candidate for Vice President this semester, who, on the second recount, lost to Helen Ferentinos.

Parnell Wins Top Post As Recounts, Disputes Erupt Between The Parties

By Marty Arbunich

The recent Associated Student elections, which included everything from spirited party rivalry to stolen ballots, resulted in a victorious campaign for Joe Parnell, AS Presidential candidate and leader of the United Students for Action.

Of the 1867 votes cast, Parnell received 1002 of the total, while his Change opponent, Bart Wechsler, fell 137 votes short with 865 votes.

The four USA candidates who ran for respective, uncontested offices each won the desired positions with better than 50 per cent of the total votes cast.

Ron Lent and Linette Wong won the Associated Men and Women Student Presidencies with 1024 and 1108 votes, respectively.

The Sophomore and Freshman Presidencies were won, respectively, by Diane Lattimer (1161) and Steve Marigan (1137).

THE FIVE AFOREMENTIONED offices, however, were not the offices where dispute and controversy arose.

The results of the AS Vice Presidency and the Sophomore and Freshman Councils aroused bitter dispute and protest last week.

The running was so close in these three positions that it was necessary for a recount and later a second recount.

In the initial results, Roland Young of Change edged out Helen Ferentinos of USA, 821 to 810, in the Vice Presidency. Independent Marsha Taylor fell behind with 223 votes.

Because of the small margin between Young and Miss Ferentinos, a recount was proposed.

The first recount also ended in Young's favor (818 to 773). A second recount was proposed, however, since Young mysteriously picked up 34 votes over Miss Ferentinos.

THE UNEXPECTED occurred. Miss Ferentinos came out on top this time, nudging Young 817 to 809, with Miss Taylor also being recounted at 203.

"Young was offered a third recount, but refused it," James Wyatt, assistant dean of student activities, reported; "later, however, he requested a new election."

Miss Ferentinos, despite the apparent victory, was not officially sworn into office along with Parnell at the installation banquet last week since controversy still prevailed.

THE VICTORS IN the original tabulation of the Sophomore Council votes were Tom Crenshaw (Change—1053 votes), Ron Bianco (Change—1020), Ron Mellander (Change—987), Marty Watten (Change—987), Marvin Campbell (Change—932) and Chris Loo (USA—925).

Paul Shuttleworth (USA) and Rich Christensen (Change) tied for the seventh and final Sophomore Council seat with 895 votes each.

JOE PARNELL, USA candidate for president this semester, was sworn in at the Student Government dinner last week.

Therefore, a recount was necessary.

Shuttleworth edged Christensen in the initial recount, 877 to 870. But a second recount was called.

The voting ballots were unfortunately stolen before a second recount could be made, so Shuttleworth and Christensen had to revert back to the original decision of a tie.

Both Shuttleworth and Christensen will be eligible for seats in the council, though. Their qualifications, along with the qualifications of the other six councilmen, will be inspected carefully.

LOSING CANDIDATES who ran for the Sophomore Council were Robert Easley (Change—826), Jim McClure (USA—761), Judy Barling (USA—755), Bernice Macias (USA—745) and Lynne Pozza (USA—667).

The Freshman Council results were just as confusing.

Brenda Brooks (Change—1001), Nancy Luscia (USA—985), Pat Fiuren (USA—973), Howard Leighty (Change—942) and Bill McQuaid (USA—926) were elected to the Freshman Council.

However, Eldrage Hudspeth of Change (896) barely nipped USA's Ken Jones (891) and Jerry Vanger (888).

Since there were only two council seats vacant, but three candidates finishing in close competition, a recount was proposed.

The order shifted somewhat after the first recount. Jones (884) led, followed by Vanger (876) and Hudspeth (855).

A second recount was made.

JONES AND VANGER of USA were elected, but their final tabulations were stolen along with all the voting ballots of the election.

Shirley Short (USA—846), Irene Quintero (USA—838) and Cheryl Wong (IND—801), along with Hudspeth, failed to win seats on the Freshman Council.

Change, which came out on the sore end of the results, was quite perturbed about the handling of the tabulation.

"Don Chiang, election commissioner, expressed regret that voting machines could not be placed at all the voting precincts on campus.

New Dress Code Now In Effect For All Students

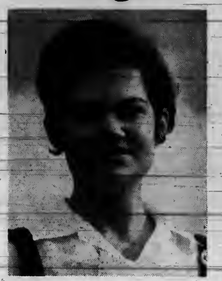
With the advent of the new year, a revised code governing standards for campus dress has come to the college and is now in effect.

The revised code, which was approved by Student Council on December 12, after consultation with administrative heads, reads as follows:

"Students are urged to dress appropriately everywhere on the campus at all times. In general, appropriate campus dress for women is considered to be suits, dresses, or skirts and sweaters or blouses; for men, full-length trousers, shirts, and sweaters and jackets.

"OTHER ATTIRE IS permitted on campus but must be in accordance with the generally accepted standards of good taste."

The last part of this new code may be interpreted to allow women to wear slack suits and stretch pants while in attendance of classes on campus and will allow men to wear neatly tailored bermuda shorts during the warm seasons of the year.



The dress code was originally submitted to Student Council as a resolution, early in December, by councilmen Paul Shuttleworth, Ron Lent, Nancy Lusca and Steve Marigan.

AT THAT TIME, there was disagreement among council as to the clarity and tactfulness of the wording. The resolution was then placed in committee for rewording which would be most palateable to all concerned parties.

Two days later, a revised resolution was approved by council and submitted to College President Louis G. Conlan by Associated Student President Bruce Fisher.

President Conlan immediately expressed favor for this legislation but sought the concurring opinion of the Faculty Association before giving the action his official approval.

On December 12, the officially revised and sanctioned dress code was presented to council, approved and has since been in effect.—B. F.

HELEN FERENTINOS, vice president-elect for next semester, was this semester's Sophomore Class vice president.

Angry Students Picket Council, Ask New Election

By Bill Fritz

Tempers flared, signs were waved and approximately 50 indignant students filled the Student Council meeting last Wednesday, protesting the recent Associated Student elections and demanding a new election.

The fun and excitement all began when Associated Student President Bruce Fisher opened the meeting by calling on Election Commissioner Don Chiang to report on the elections.

Chiang briefly explained the confusion which had taken place during the counting of the ballots and explained that a final recount of the presidential and soph council ballots could not be completed due to the fact that the ballots were stolen. Chiang then announced the official winners of all the elected posts.

AT THAT TIME, Bart Wechsler, defeated presidential candidate from Change, challenged Chiang's decision and demanded a new election on the grounds that no valid final count of presidential and soph council ballots was available.

Fisher then called upon Assistant Dean of Student Activities James Wyatt to explain the decision which gave the presidency to the candidate from USA.

Wyatt commented that the decision was made because Parnell, the USA candidate, had led the tally consistently through the first two counts. He also remarked that the presidential vote had not been disputed until after the ballots were stolen.

At this point, Roland Young, defeated Vice presidential candidate from Change, retorted with the comment that he also "had consistently led through the first two ballots."

A PETITION CONTAINING the signatures of approximately 300 students requesting a new election was then presented to council.

Fisher thanked those students who had collected the petition but pointed out that the signatures totaled only "3.3 per cent of the eligible voters."

Then, without expressing an opinion as to whether or not a new election was warranted, Fisher explained that a new election was not feasible for three main reasons. First, it would take at least two weeks to procure voting machines; second, time does not allow ample publicity; and, third, "by the time a new election is held, we will be in the midst of final exams, and there will not be a representative group of students on campus." He then stated firmly that by official decision, there will not be a new election.

Then, from the midst of the assembled students, a sign reading "Unfair" was raised and verbal protests from the group disrupted the meeting.

WYATT THEN ATTEMPTED to appease the group by proposing an open discussion at some future date. He also added that Helen Ferentinos had agreed to hold off being sworn in as AS vice president at the Student Government dinner last week.

Young, now spokesman for the group, contended that Parnell should not be sworn in either, since his election was now in dispute.

Council then voted to suspend with the discussion and take up the matter of the Spring semester budget.

Theft Of AS Ballots Should Not Obscure Election Results

THE THEFT of the Associated Student election ballots may prove an interesting case for the criminology department and may be good newspaper copy, but it should not obscure the election results, although it was obviously perpetrated for just that purpose.

The ballots were recounted and tabulated for all offices except the seventh Sophomore Council seat, which recount was not completed on Tuesday, December 20, when the ballots were stolen that evening. Hence, only that Sophomore seat should be subject either to a new election or some other form of pacification.

MANY JUNIOR CLARENCE DARROWS, however, are delighting in using the "who done it" as an excuse for a complete re-election, for a proposed sit-in and for bringing in the uptown press.

All this publicity is an exciting way to end the semester, and it will serve to remind the public where City College is, but it's based on a very weak foundation. Like bathtub gin, it's an adequate stimulant, but it can make one go blind.

Most of the whoopee is over the office of Vice President of the Associated Students, which Helen Ferentinos now holds, and rightfully so, in the opinion of The Guardsman.

Roland Young, the other Vice Presidential candidate, accepted Miss Ferentinos' victory after several recounts, and even rejected Dean James Wyatt's proposal for another recount, as the numerical outcome was so close. In any case, after the tabulation was agreed to and accepted, the ballots were lifted that evening.

NOW THE NEW YEAR NOISEMAKERS are saying that the Vice Presidential outcome is invalid, and much lip service is still going on over this subject at this publication date, and it is impossible to predict, at this time, whether all the noise is going to put static into the Big Picture.

Whatever the outcome, it will be covered in the first issue of the spring semester Guardsman, as this is the final edition of Fall, 1966.

The Guardsman thanks those people who wrote intelligent letters to Ram's Horn for so doing, and wishes the other letter writers the best of luck in the future.

LSD Often A One-Way Ticket

By Connie Skipitares

ON THE RAMpage recently commented that many of the therapeutic break-throughs that have been wrought as a result of serious scientific experimentation with the wonder drug LSD have been brought to a disturbing halt by the U. S. government because of the indiscriminate use of the drug by amateur, conformity-conscious servants of the illegal psychedelic.

It is paradoxical that the very virtues of the drug are a curse to its legal existence.

Granted the administration (acting as society's most influential public opinion pace-setter) is ill-equipped to condemn experimentation with LSD, but there is no reason for any conservative or even liberal faction to condone its abuse by the blind, ignorant masses seeking "identification."

THE MOST frequently exploited reason tens of thousands of college students are using or have used LSD and other "psychedelic" or "hallucinogenic" drugs is to seek a "magical cure, magical change, instant-solution."

They do it to learn for themselves, gain new wisdom or win praise from fellow students.

"It is definitely 'camp' on the American campus scene," claims one user. "It's so far out it's in," claims another. Time magazine recently noted scrawled on a fence of the University of Wisconsin "Your Campus Travel Agent—One Trip Is Worth a Thousand Words."

Students are known undoubtedly to be natural experimenters, rebelling, testing and trying to reach conclusions on their own. They are also driven, in school, by a message "inscribed in gold: 'Be Creative.'"

THE YOUNG adults are sometimes encouraged by the LSD literature and by highly regarded professors who promise creativity through "acid." No matter how carefully the promise is qualified, the seductive message remains.

Rejecting the "double-bind" which commands them to act responsibly, but lays down explicit rules about behavior and appearance, students may take LSD "to establish autonomy and provide themselves with an expression and viewpoint which few university officials have shared."

BECAUSE ACCEPTANCE by fellow students can be the most supportive and most devastating experience for a student's development he may choose LSD.

Being able to talk to one's peers about how you took "2000 micros" . . . remained "up" for a week . . . "freaked out" or "blew your mind," may be a passport to acceptance or to heroic elevation.

"Come on, man, wanna take that trip—it doesn't cost but a two or a fiver—and the trip, man, I mean it's cool . . . like unto nothing you've ever been, heard, seen before!"

But Joe College has forgotten to mention that the trip isn't always pretty—and for some it's a one-way ride. And what about the people who really need a seat?

Political liberty is the right of those who are governed to adjust their government to their own needs and interests—Woodrow Wilson.

Theater Lab Test

Krumm, Haran, Crowley Project Proves Successful

By Melvin Beechman

The theater lab, organized by the drama department this semester to improve play productions and to encourage student involvement, has proved to be a successful experiment, Walter Krumm, drama coach and director, declared recently.

The lab is a combination of Paul J. Crowley's stagecraft and theater graphics courses and Krumm's drama class. The students all read the same plays, which are selected for their variety and different styles, Krumm explained.

Self-directed and student-produced scenes from these plays were presented November 3 in the theater.

IN ADDITION to providing experience for the performers, directors James Haran and Krumm gain an opportunity to evaluate talents and to consider the possibility of staging one of the plays in a major production. On the strength of the last scene spectacle, Krumm decided to produce Caligula which bows Friday, and As You Like It, Shakespeare's comedy, which goes on next semester.

New discoveries to the drama scene are Terry McDermott who appeared in The Importance Of Being Earnest and has the title role in Caligula; Kathy Wright, a nifty little actress who did a wonderful job in "Earnest." Ellen Castor who also starred in "Earnest" and Vann Mitchell who is appearing in Caligula. Mitchell, also a dancer, is the reason Haran has decided to stage Raisin In The Sun next semester.

On the technical side, Crowley who up to now has been the sole set-designer, has been training students to understand the intricacies involved. John Barcellano, who couldn't draw a straight line until coming under Crowley's wing, designed the set for Caligula.

RON HENSON, another newcomer, has set a precedent by being the first student make-up artist. He is also the stage manager for Caligula.

The main idea, Krumm stated, is to furnish as much experience as possible to drama students and to make them more responsible.

With men like Krumm, Haran and Crowley, the drama scene here looks very promising.

Exams Defeat The Purpose Of Education

(ACP) Do tests really contribute anything to education? asks the Campus Chat, North Texas State University.

They are not an infallible measure of a student's academic ability, nor do they prompt the student to develop his talents and interests to the fullest.

But because professors place such great emphasis on the outcome of exams, the student begins to play a giant guessing game—what will the professor have on his test?

Two students converse. One says, "Don't read chapter nine. George had Professor X last semester and he said there are no questions from that chapter."

"Thanks," the other says. "By the way, I heard he asks only detailed questions, so don't bother with the big stuff."

Meanwhile, a third student might be busy selling copies of tests.

Like computers, these students tend to spit back memorized knowledge while their own ideas decay. They don't have time to develop their own ideas because they're too busy playing the guessing game.

How could students be evaluated? Give them passing or failing grades based on the amount of work they do? Let them do research papers and use their own ideas instead of memorizing someone else's.

Information Could Prevent VD Cripples

By B.T.

VENEREAL DISEASE, once a hush-hush problem, deserves more publicity than many of the so-called "needed social changes" of today. For "every eight minutes a youngster or teenager contracts a venereal disease!"

Many doctors and scientists believe that information should be repeated at college level, for sex education in these matters can stem the high rate of infection.

"Our major fight is not to do away with sex," but to have the patient be able to tell us the SOURCE. The other problem with the educated is to discourage them from trying to treat themselves," said Dr. Lennig Chang, U. S. Public Health Service Officer of the City Clinic.

"SELF TREATMENT is worse than no treatment at all. Some of the college students avail themselves of pills and penicillin and succeed only in making the disease less noticeable, but it is there.

"Statistics show that syphilis and gonorrhea cases have been accelerated since 1957. More than half of the reported cases are from young people UNDER 25 years of age," he added.

Syphilis, he explained, is less frequent of the two diseases, but more crippling, because some of the after affects are insanity, heart disease, blindness and death.

"IT IS NOT caused by kissing, straining, lifting, faulty zippers, dirty toilet seats or alcohol, as some naive patients think. Both diseases do not result in immunity if treated, either.

"A person can contract either disease AGAIN and AGAIN. A case may be cured, but a few crippling affects may persist if the disease is treated late in its course," said Dr. Chang.

"There should be more education and publicity on this subject. We have cases of V.D. in patients as young as 15! The main age level is that of the early twenties, though.

"MOST OF THE TIME, the disease is hidden. There are disappearing symptoms or none at all. Only blood tests may detect these cases.

Syphilis can mimic almost any other disease. The manifestations may be fleeting and difficult to recognize in the early stages," he emphasized.

Well, here is publicity of interest to every pressure and non-pressure group. Truth and consequences.

Convey its message.

What To Hit, Where To Hit It, Which Targets Are Being Spared

By John Janigian

Stuart Symington, Democratic Senator from Missouri, recently said in reference to the war in Vietnam: "It would seem that we are attacking the least important targets most, the more important targets less, and the most important targets not at all."

Symington's statement came after reports that morale among American pilots was low because they were ordered to risk their lives daily in attacks on buses on highways while military targets were spared under orders.

The question then arose, what types of targets were being spared?

Shortly thereafter, during a two-day period, Air Force planes supported Marines in ground action and blew up a Communist mine factory in an area just outside Saigon.

Simultaneously waves of bombers from Guam unloaded on Tay Ngih Province, an old Viet Cong stronghold and reputed jungle headquarters of the National Liberation Front.

Unfortunately, because of bad weather, carrier-based jets were unable to mount an attack on North Vietnam over that weekend.

Air Force jets also bombed Viet Cong supply lines through Laos, and blew up 34 sampans and three large junks in raids over the Mekong Delta.

It's a mystery as to what American pilots want to and/or are permitted attack. Months ago they started with attacks on North Vietnam by hitting supply lines and troop concentrations.

It's plain to see airpower is far more strategic than ever before.

Computer's Inexorable Takeover

Man's Puzzle: How To Use Leisure Time

By Doreen Ng

Man is soon to face a problem which he has created for himself.

Since the introduction of the first commercial electronic computer, Univac I, to American industry in 1954, automation—the process which substitutes decision-making machines for men—has grown persistently.

Soon enough there will be many skilled unemployed workers with nowhere to turn, thus creating unemployment problems which will eventually lead to man's ultimate goal—when he no longer has to work. The machine will be his slave.

Man will then be left with yet another problem, what to do with the abundance of leisure time which automation has left him.

Think: if automation continues to advance itself, perhaps by the year 2000 man will be able to work one hour each day and produce just as much as if he had worked the full eight-hour day. He will then have to develop new means of entertainment to work off the extra time, or he will be bored to death with nothing to do.

The American is already amidst the effects of automation. He brushes his teeth in the morning with an electric toothbrush which gives 200 strokes of manual brushing power per minute. Then he puts on the electric coffee pot to boil his coffee.

Next he pushes the button which opens his garage door, gets into his push-button car pushing the buttons to open the car windows and starts the engine.

Upon arrival in the office building he takes the elevator up and then sits down in his office chair, one that swivels, to eliminate unnecessary trips up from the chair to see behind him.

And he pushes the buttons on his computers to begin the day's work.

An advertisement in The Daily Californian newspaper on the University's Berkeley campus reads: ". . . another Lousy Date? better try computer dating! Univac makes thousands of checks and you get great dates! Don't miss our next pairing . . ."

Imagine, automation is even taking the time (and fun) aw ay from finding a mate! One would think that at least this activity would be saved for the excess of leisure time.

To business, automation means reduced costs, higher production and improved quality. These results sound reasonable at present, but is this what man really wants, more time to do nothing? Will this make him happier?

Perhaps automation is not as good as man intended it to be. He is actually working himself into the Kingdom of Boredom. When the time comes man may even look forward to the days in which he be working.

To meet the challenge of automation, those who suffer from technological unemployment, or in other words, find themselves replaced by machines, must be retrained. Something must be done.

Nothing would be more disappointing than to reach a goal and then regret it.

The Observer

By William G. Fates

GREAT MASSES of storm clouds are gathering over Lyndon Johnson north, south, east and west in 1967 and they are not blowing out to sea.

The dawn killed the moon for the 710th time this morning since the decision by the President to escalate our efforts in Vietnam, and the situation has grown worse instead of better. The government policy is still operating on the myth that if we destroy enough property and equipment by bombing and a great number of enemy soldiers through troop operation we will stop the flow of supplies and overcome the Viet Cong will to resist.

SINCE THE DEATH of the first American casualty, Specialist four James T. Davis of Livingston, Tennessee, in an ambush near Saigon was recorded for posterity on December 22, 1961, nearly 6600 of his fellows have gone to an early grave and 37,000 have been wounded.

Ironically, Saigon and the surrounding countryside is no more secure than it was more than five years ago when James Davis was deemed a footnote of history. All the bombings and troop actions have escalated the enemy's efforts and lengthened the duration of the war.

It seems inconceivable that people in State and the Pentagon are willing to continue the war, but their advice and the call by the generals for more troops and more bombs and the President's acceptance of such advice would certainly be evidence of such beliefs.

IF SCAPEGOATS are in the offering, John Foster Dulles, Eisenhower's Secretary of State, can be congratulated for making the initial commitment. It was he who set forth the policy for containment of the spread of Communism in Vietnam. President Kennedy saw fit to expedite 15,000 "advisors" to Vietnam and Johnson has blown a brushfire action into a raging war.

NOT CONTENT WITH fanning the flames of world war three, the President is attempting to destroy what has been an impressive domestic legislative record.

Lyndon has lost the sense of consensus that he matriculated in the landslide of 1964, a consensus that was not entirely his in the making. His great majority in the election and a great number of the actions taken by Congress between the assassination and Johnson's inaugural were made in the memory of John F. Kennedy. LBJ was naive enough and conceited enough to believe that the "consensus" was indeed a consensus.

Complexly imbedded at the roots of Johnson's difficulties in foreign and domestic affairs are the affection and the credability gaps.

WHEELER-DEALER, shrewd, secretive, profane LBJ's massive ego's Achilles is a super sensitivity to criticism to a greater degree than any other President. He is scorned and embittered at those who oppose him, distrustful of dissenters and uncomfortable when dissent appears.

His concern over his image has made him morose, secretive, peevish, deceptive, distrustful, distortive, manipulative, and a perpetuator of serial myths about himself such as that he drinks bourbon instead of scotch and that he had a great-great-grandfather at the Alamo.

Not content to let history build his monuments, Lyndon has erected two at his own expense, his birthplace and boyhood home. At present, plans are that he be buried under a tree on the ranch with the rest of the kin, but it would not be inconceivable to carry deception, lying, distortion, manipulation and discreditation into policy. Johnson just can't help himself. His kind of political philosophy was born in the back rooms of Texas one-party government.

Sir Issac Newton made a statement most appropriate. "I do not know what I may appear to the world; but to myself I seem to have been only like a boy playing on the seashore, and diverting myself now and then by finding a smoother pebble or a prettier shell than ordinary, whilst the great ocean of Truth lay all undiscovered before me."

It is time that Lyndon B. Johnson discovered the ocean of Truth, for the benefit of us all.

Anderson Leaves College After Serving 28 Years

After 28 years here, Dr. Oscar E. Anderson, coordinator of Educational Management, withdrew from that poistion last night at the Board of Education meeting to work on his own as a free agent in the field of school finances. He will also be retained by the California Teachers Association to work with them in the field.

"Over the years the CTA has been after me to take a position with the organization," Anderson said, "but there was too much to do until now."

In the past 20 years Anderson has developed a background in school finances; in 1946 he joined the statewide campaign of the CTA and since then has worked on a limited basis during evening hours and weekends with the association.

Anderson received his Doctorate in Physics in 1934 at the University of California, Berkeley, and worked on the atomic energy Manhattan Project while at Cal.

He joined City College in 1939 and taught physics and mathematics until 1946. With the return of the World War II veterans and the rapid expansion and growth of the college he became Coordinator.

He has contributed to the development of the two new buildings, the educational services building and the visual arts building, to be ready for occupancy in the Fall semester of 1968 and it is with finishing of the planning and letting out for bids of these two buildings that he is terminating his administrative status here.

He has been discussing this move with Dr. Louis Conlan, President of City College, for the past year and was only waiting for the buildings to be given the go-ahead.

Anderson's past activities, working with school finances and, with the permission of the School Board, attending the Legislature in Sacramento dealing with schools and colleges, will dictate his activities.

He will be operating from four bases: Burlingame, San Francisco, Sacramento and his home. Dr. Anderson stressed his availability at all possible times to his community, the teachers and administration of City College and to the students.

Heintz Heads Guardsman In Spring '67 Semester

Richard Heintz will head the editorial staff of The Guardsman as Editor In Chief for the Spring semester of 1967 as a result of an election held by the editorial board last week. Heintz was this semester's News Editor.

Connie Skipitares, this semester's Feature Editor, was elected Managing Editor for the spring. The News Editorship went to Steven Hara.

Richard Kliski will take over the Feature Editor's desk, and Marty Arbunich was chosen as Staff Editor. Mike Duggan will succeed Frank Cooney as Sports Editor.

Registration By Computer Still In Testing Phase

By Richard Kliski

Students at City College of San Francisco, especially those who have been sweating strangulation by the long arm of Big Brother, may find themselves granted a temporary stay of execution—since, as yet, computer-registration is still a very tentative thing.

Registration by computer, according to Registrar Gertrude Somerville, is still in the testing phase. "We won't know anything definite for at least another week."

Providing the mechanical brain survives the current battery of tests, however, spring registration has been tentatively scheduled to begin on February 6.

According to previous reports, the process will involve six distinct steps, most of which appear to be relatively painless.

Prior to registration day, students will be assigned to appear at half-hour intervals, according to their registration numbers, at either Smith Hall or the Statler Wing, where pre-registration will be reconfirmed.

On February 6, after being duly recognized, the student will begin his "ordeal" by obtaining a heading card, picking up a registration booklet and having his residence checked. Once these steps have been satisfactorily completed, he will then fill out the registration book and pick up an IBM program—after which he will file the registration card, the IBM program, and the heading card with the appropriate authority.

Barring any technical trouble, it has been estimated, the entire process should require no longer than 30 minutes. Painless, no?

However, in the event certain difficulties do arise, the report further stated, the coordinator of educational management, and his team of assistants will be standing close by, prepared to re-introduce the human factor—thus relieving certain members of the student body of any symptoms of acute paranoia, which may have erupted in the meantime.

Nobel Prize Winner's Caligula Opens Friday For Two-Night Run

By Melvin Beechman

Caligula, written by the late French existentialist and Nobel prize winner, Albert Camus, opens a two-night stand Friday in the college theater. Curtain time each night is 8 p.m.

Camus borrowed the beginning and some of the action of the play from Suetonius' Twelve Caesars, yet Caligula's portrayal is more of fantasy and pretense than of historical reality.

Caligula is not an emperor but an actor in a life that is a masquerade and cruelty a mask for the actor's game of endless self-creation. The key to his brutal mask is his obsession with the absurdity of existence: "Men die, and they are not happy."

THE SETS ARE designed by veteran set-designed P. J. Crowley and John Barcellano, projecting a flavor of ancient Rome and the surrealistic art of Hieronymus Bosch.

Director Walter Krumm stated that the play is difficult to produce because of the dramatic and philosophic implications, but he is pleased to be able to present a play of the caliber of Caligula to an academic audience.

Terry McDermott is playing the demanding title role as he will be on stage for almost the entire length of the performance. Caesonia is played by Cheryl Willis, veteran actress who has appeared here in Blood Wedding and No Exit. Vann Mitchell plays Scipio, Paul Brown is Helicon and John Hunsaker plays Cherea.

Others in the cast are John Pantoleon, James Connolley, John Lechner, Herman Eberitzsch, John Merle, Lucas Madamba, Ramsey Masarweh, Marilynn Whiting, Gail Ross, William McCall, Ron Bianco, Lana Tershy, Sharon Swift, Larry Moore, Al Melodia and Garth Ogle.

STAGE MANAGER is Ron Henson who also does the make-up and his assistants are Anne Crichton and Marilynn Whiting. Frances Wong made the costumes.

Caligula is the second and final major theatrical production this semester, the other was the Importance Of Being Earnest which played to an audience of 700 last month before the holiday break.

Oscar Wilde's brilliant lines, written 71 years ago, were given an airing to treat the audience to some good laughs. The sets were cheerful and neat, displaying Crowley's personal touch.

THE ACTING WAS highlighted by the performances of Kathy Wright and Ellen Castor who added class to the cast. Margaret Calhoun turned in a surprising performance as Lady Bracknell. John Pantoleon and Blanche Richardson were enjoyable in their character roles.

An incongruency was prevalent between the styles of Ron Bianco who played very high and artificial and Bill McCall who played it low and straight, but very well, considering it was his first role.

McDermott did a good job as a butler, and Dave Sommers, suffering from stage-fright in his initial show, also came across.

• Outrageous Wing

Editor:

Being a new student at City College, I am mystified at the operating hours of Statler Wing. A sign at the entrance to the wing states "Open 11-3." This is not entirely true.

One day, when I was about to be run out of the wing by a campus policeman, I decided to find out from him why part of Statler Wing is closed earlier than 3 p.m. The policeman informed me that all of the wing is open to 1:20 p.m., at which time half of it is closed off. At 2 p.m., the remaining part, with the exception of three tables, is closed off. At 3 p.m., all of Statler Wing is closed. He further informed me that the early closing of parts of the wing enables the people working there to clean up those parts before they quit work for the day.

If this is so, I am completely mystified. Isn't Statler Wing provided for the use and benefit of City College students? Couldn't the workers start cleaning the wing at 3 p.m. instead of at 1:20 p.m.?

40 H&R Students Run St. Francis

The Hotel and Restaurant department, in conjunction with the St. Francis Hotel, will hold it 15th annual Operation St. Francis day tomorrow.

There will be 40 students from the department taking part in the event. Meeting at the Mural Room of the hotel, they will be introduced to their prospective department heads for the day. Each student will be with the person who does the particular job for which the student is in training.

Only fourth semester students take part in Operation St. Francis, along with students from the photography, engineering and journalism departments.

Speeches will be made at the end of the day by Dan E. London, St. Francis' managing director, who initiated the program 15 years ago, and by Leonard Nossaman who is the student managing director in observation.

'Light To Moderate' Truth In Official Reporting

By Viggo Petersen

Those concerned with the credibility gap in the United States may have speculated at one time or another just how much the U. S. public would know about the war in Vietnam if it were not for the New York Times.

With State Department concern raging over this "gap" the persistent efforts of various Times staff writers must prove a constant pain to Washington's reliable sources.

TIME AND AGAIN the newspaper has caught information sources in the capitol, as one French newspaper put it, "in the flagrant act of lying."

The Times is the most popular newspaper in the United States today, serving not only the American public but maintaining a number of foreign editions. Its articles are syndicated and appear locally in the Chronicle.

The most recent expose by the Times must have caused some red faces in the capitol when, after repeated denials of ever bombing civilian targets in the north, Harrison Salisbury, reporter and assistant managing editor who was on a legal visit to Hanoi to investigate alleged civilian bombing raids, found himself in the precarious position of having to scurry for a bomb shelter to protect himself from what apparently was a "routine bombing mission" by American fighter-bombers.

ALTHOUGH SALISBURY of late has received a wealth of criticism concerning his report, one fact cannot seem to be denied: American planes have been bombing Hanoi, civilian casualties have been occurring and until the Salisbury report came to light, all this had been denied by the administration.

In Time magazine recently a mid-west senator criticized the New York Times by saying it has been a "consistent critic of the war in Vietnam and that Hanoi was willing to let in a Times newspaper correspondent but not 'objective reporters.'"

(According to Time magazine, Salisbury and Louis Lomax, a commentator from Los Angeles, are the only Americans to gain legal access to Hanoi.)

It may be okay for this particular senator to say that the Times is a consistent critic of the war, but to say that the newspaper is "not objective" is somewhat misleading.

In November of 1965 a battle took place in a region of Vietnam known as the Ia Drang Valley, later dubbed the "Valley of Death."

INFORMATION OFFICERS in Saigon first described the battle as a somewhat isolated incident and reported American losses and wounded as "light to moderate" casualties.

When the wire services first reported the incident the information officers had apparently been taken at their word and stories appeared in newspapers describing "an engagement in the Ia Drang Valley in which American casualties had been light to moderate."

A short time later a story appeared in the New York Times which told of an official head count conducted by one of its own reporters. His findings reputiated the original "light to moderate" statement made by press officials and found that indeed 175 men, almost an entire company, had been massacred that day while returning from an operation.

THE 175 KILLED in the Ia Drang battle brought total American losses of the week to 240, the highest yet.

This latter report which repudiated all official statements, obviously stirred considerable concern at home as well as abroad—concern not only for the mutilated soldiers but concern for the plausibility of statements from the capitol concerning the war effort.

As another example of exposing suppressed information, the Times a year ago gave considerable attention to a story in Ramparts magazine by Donald Duncan, military editor of the magazine and a former "green beret."

The story written by Duncan exposed many stories of the Special Forces' operations in Vietnam as "complete lies." He cited numerous occasions in which the Special Forces had violated treaties and agreements and Duncan described the official statements made to conceal these violations.

It is little incidents such as these in which official sources have been caught in the act of double talk that has caused the American people to have growing concern over what it is being told not only about the Vietnam war but about official news in general.

Basketball, Boxing Head Sport Night Action Tomorrow

Sports Night, sponsored by the Associated Men Students, takes place beginning at 7 p.m. tomorrow in the men's gymnasium.

Heading the program will be the Intramural Basketball Championships and boxing matches organized by boxing instructor Roy Diederichsen.

The Irish, champs of the Independent League in basketball, will be led by footballer Pat Kearns, Steve Vlautin, Rich Rolandsen and rugged Tom Courtney.

The Irish team's opponent in the championship basketball game, will be the winner of the Newman Club-Phi Beta Delta game to be played tonight.

Phi Delta defeated the Felony Squad, 48-42, in double overtime as Frank O'Malley paced the win with 22 points. The game was tied at halftime, 20-20. In the second half both teams traded baskets until it was deadlocked at 40-40 at the end of regulation play.

In the first overtime, each team could muster only two points in the three-minute period, and the score stood at 42-all. However, in the second overtime, Phi Delta scored six quick points and held on to win, 48-42.

In tonight's game two very valuable men will not play. They are Ron Elliot of the Newman Club and Carson English of Phi Delta. Elliot, who is the Newman Club's leading scorer, has been called into the service. English will miss the crucial because of a badly sprained ankle.

Phi Delta had previously upset the Felony Squad in the final game of the regular season to send the Club League into a three-way tie among the Felony Squad, Newman and Phi Delta.

DIEDERICHSEN WILL HAVE eight bouts set up for the entertainment of all fight fans. Each bout will be three rounds of one and a half minutes apiece. The contestants range from lightweights to heavyweights. The winning fighters will receive trophies.

Among those scheduled to box are Don Jordon (145), George Hansen (175), Manuel Estropia (125), Al Reid (140), Jim Fee (136), John Rodelo (heavyweight), Fred Fontana (150), Ray Koch (165) and Dave Herman (155). Both Jordon and Reid were winners last year.

Members of the Block SF will be on hand to serve refreshments as they also help the Associated Men Students conduct Sports Night.

RA To Hold Award, Recognition Nights On January 14, 17

The final two events of the Recreation Association for this semester will be held this month. These events are the awards and recognition night to take place on January 17, and the basketball sports day at Hartnell on January 14.

The awards dinner will be held in the RA social room from 6:30 to 9:30 p.m. All Recreation Association members and alumni of the Recreation Association are invited to attend.

The theme for the evening is Carnival In Venice. To enhance this theme, the menu will be a spaghetti fete. Decorations for the dinner will be supervised by the Italian friend of an RA member.

Funds for the dinner will come out of the RA budget.

There is no advance signup list for the awards banquet. According to Sharron Harris, RA spokesman, a good turnout is expected.

An all-coed basketball sports day at Hartnell in Salinas is scheduled for January 14. Eight women from City College Recreation Association are expected to participate in the games.

Students from eight Bay Area colleges will attend the day's events. Transportation is by car, and the time of departure will be 6 a.m.

Willie Wise Scores 28 As Cagers Roll Over Diablo

By Mike Duggan

The City College of San Francisco Rams opened their league play on January 3 with a 57-52 victory over College of San Mateo on the winners' court.

Center Gene Williams hit a 15-foot jumper with 30 seconds remaining to break a 52-52 tie. Guard Paul Batmale then put the game on ice with three clutch free throws and the Rams were winners of their ninth straight game.

The Rams took a commanding 35-26 halftime as Willie Wise hit 14 of his 16 points. Then the Bulldogs began to fight back and eventually tied the game at 52-52 on a jumper by guard Owney Williams.

Owney Williams took game scoring honors with 20 despite a good defensive job by Ram forward Darling Thomas. Thomas forced the Bulldog star to miss badly on several shots.

Gene Williams led the Ram scorers with 18, including three of his patented "stuffers." Batmale finished with nine markers despite seeing limited action.

Ram Coach Sid Phelan commented that "they (the Bulldogs) were as tough as we expected and their tight zone defense gave us trouble, but we will be ready for it next time."

Wise hit for 28 points and Williams added 18 as the Rams made it two in a row for conference play by downing Diablo Valley, 66-51, Friday night in the losers' gymnasium.

The two Ram All-Conference stars scored the team's first 26 points as City College built up an early ten-point spread, 26-16. Wise's 19 first-half digits paced the Rams to a 35-25 halftime lead over the Viking squad.

The Rams then put the game out of reach by hitting 12 straight points to open the second half.

Wise also finished as the game's top rebounder with 17, while Williams gathered in 15.

Top-Ranked Cagers Finish Preseason With 14-2 Record

The number one ranked team in the state, City College of San Francisco Rams, finished up their preseason with a record of 14 wins and two losses. Included in this were the Modesto and Bakersfield Tourney Championships.

It looks as though Sid Phelan's team has a chance to improve on their number two finish in the state last year, and with the likes of Willie Wise, Gene Williams, Ray Hearne and Darling Thomas leading the way, it doesn't seem too far out of reach.

After taking five of their first six games, the Rams made it three straight victories by edging University of San Francisco Frosh, 47-42, on the Rams' court, December 12. Williams blocked 11 shots and Wise hit 15 points to pace the winners.

Two days later, the Rams met their second defeat as they fell to Hamilton Air Force, 68-62. Guard Hearne took game scoring honors with 16.

THE RAMS THEN got back on their winning ways by whipping Vallejo, 74-44, as Thomas scored 14 and Gary Bradford added 12.

The Modesto Tourney ran from December 20-22 and all teams were forced to play two games on the final day. Hearne sparked the Rams to their opening day win by hitting 21 points in the 86-76 win over Sequoia. Williams controlled the boards and added 17 points while Thomas posted 20 digits.

In the semifinal round, the Rams defeated host Modesto, 66-57, with Williams blocking 10 shots and Hearne scoring 19 points.

The Rams met undefeated Contra Costa in the morning round of the final day. Despite 23 points by Don Lyons of the Comets, the Rams prevailed, 82-71, with Wise hitting 23 and Thomas 21.

COLLEGE OF SAN MATEO Bulldogs were the Rams' opponents for the championship game. Wise scored 28 points as the Rams made it look easy in registering a 68-53 win. Despite the great work of Williams, who collected 42 rebounds, and also Thomas and Hearne, Wise was the only member of the champs to make the All-Tournament team.

The Rams picked up their fifth straight win by beating Laney, 60-49, on Christmas Eve. Reserve Girard Chatman led the way with 18 points.

Two days after Christmas, the Rams continued to be unbeaten by two-year college competition as they rolled over Sacramento City College on the losers' court by 76-63. Wise had 18 points while Williams got 13 and Thomas 14.

The Rams closed out their practice season with their eighth consecutive win by trouncing American River, 75-51, on the winners' court. Williams led the way with 12 rebounds. 12 blocked shots and nine points. Wise took scoring honors with 15, and Hearne added 10.

In the 16 preseason games, Wise led the Rams in scoring with 228 points and he was followed by Thomas with 196 although he missed one game. Williams with 149, Hearne with 147 and Chatman with 102.

ACTION PICKS UP again Friday when the champ-bound Rams invade Foothill at 8 p.m. in what should be an easy chance for Phelan's five.

From there the going gets rough when on January 20 the defending champs are the guests of Contra Costa.

They return home to host San Jose January 27 and wind up first round action at Merritt January 31.

Trophy Case Bulges With Golden Goodies

RAMBLINGS

By G. Frank Cooney

Seven Championships Gild Greatest Year

IN ONE thorough swoop, City College took the "Gold" out of Golden Gate Conference in 1966.

The "Gold"—in the form of numerous championship trophies—is safely put away in the Ram trophy case and is under the protection of many stubborn athletes who refuse to give it up.

And, at this college's present rate, the loot may stay right where it is, indefinitely.

In all, 1966 was more than great—athletically speaking. In fact, City College enjoyed what must rank as the greatest athletic year in the history of two-year colleges. We can't prove that, but we challenge anybody to disprove it.

IT STARTED OUT on an average enough note with the basketball team locking up a league crown.

This did not amaze anyone since City College cage teams have been locking up conference titles so consistently that it is thought that the Rams have a special key for this purpose.

In fact, they do—Coach Sid Phelan.

But even for Coach Phelan, winner of eight championships in the last nine years, 1966 was something very special.

The Ram five became the first team in conference history to go undefeated (14-0). They went on to place second in the State Championships and wound up with a remarkable 30-3 won-lost record.

FOR PHELAN THE story by no means ended there. Two of last year's All-Conference Ram standouts—Willie Wise and Gene Williams—are back again this year, to say nothing of lettermen Paul Batmale, Larry Gray and Bill Berger.

Hardly had equipment Coach Pete Cordellos stored the basketball uniforms away for the year, than City College found itself involved in a baseball crown chase.

The top spot did not come so easily for the Ram batsmen, however, as they found themselves battling right down to the wire before putting the prize away.

And did they stop there?—No!

The Ram nine went on to win the regional and NorCal Championships.

Similar to the basketball team, the baseballers, coached by Ernie Domecus, eventually met their match in a battle for the California State Championship. They yielded to Cerritos, which ran up an awesome 42-game winning streak in its title bid.

STILL, THAT BASEBALL team was this college's best ever, record-wise, and won the league crown with an 18-3 tally.

While the baseball team was spreading devastation, the track team was adding its touches, too.

Coached by Lou Vasquez, who was assisted by Norm Travis, the trackmen romped through their seven dual meets with a perfect record.

Among these fine competitors were two gents who would later figure in yet another undefeated season in a different sport.

Cousins Orenthal James Simpson (the fellers call him O.J.) and Dwight Tucker were among the nation's best in their respective events.

Simpson boasted a 9.5 century clocking and a 21.6 in the 220, while Tucker was America's two-year college champ in the triple (51-1¾) and high (6-10½) jumps.

Was all this enough for Ramdom? —No!

COACHES GROVER KLEMMER and Roy Diederichsen were not loafing either.

Klemmer's golf team took first in the conference tourney and then went on to take the NorCal title and place sixth in the State.

Diederichsen's tennis team had a little trouble but finally captured a conference title in the league's grand finale.

And was that even enough "Gold"? —No!

Summer (vacation) came and the conference rested—briefly.

All the pomp and ceremony that usually accompanies football season seemed even more exuberant in the Fall of 1966.

The Rams had a whopping good team; it was obvious and everyone knew it.

And did the gridders let their fans-faithful down?—Hardly.

They stormed through their second straight undefeated conference season and shortly thereafter found themselves in the National Championship Prune Bowl before the excitement decreschendoed. In that game, however, they found themselves saluting a fine Laney team, 13-35, which snapped an undefeated streak of 18 games.

This was where Simpson and Tucker fit in, again.

Those two were picked as All-Americans.

FOR O.J., who set about a million records in rushing, and scoring, it was a repeat performance of the honor roll as a unanimous pick. He scored 54 TDs, 328 points and ran for some 2600 yards in his two-year tenure here.

And the "Gold" digging went on...

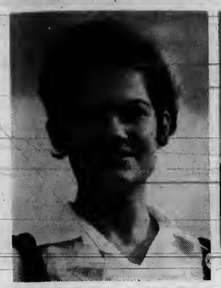
With a tennis title already under his belt, Coach Diederichsen went to work with his soccer team. They simply, perhaps too simply, romped through another season untouched by their peers.

But that was hardly even newsworthy—sort of like rain in December—it happens every year.

THE BOOTERS, a member of the NorCal Junior College Soccer Conference, not only won their ninth "annual" North State crown, but also defended their California title for the third consecutive season.

Diederichsen thus ran his all-time record against two-year college soccer teams to 97-0-1.

That's nearly perfect.



In all, the "Gold" grabbers collected seven league championships in eight sports—the cross country team finished out of the money—and gained no small measure of respect for San Francisco's athletic picture.

Just for the records, the Rams butted the opposition for a total 122-14 overall won-lost count in league competition last year.

Indeed, this was a very good year—revisited.

Largest gate for any single basketball game is 75,000 in the Olympic Stadium, West Berlin, 1951, for a Harlem Globetrotter outdoor game.

Lively Arts

Drama, Music, Journalism Aid Creativity

IT WAS TOLSTOI who said, "Art is a human activity having for its purpose the transmission to others of the highest and best feelings to which men have risen."

Students with the urge for self-expression in the fine arts as well as the applied arts and the lively arts, can achieve this release here on campus by participating in the many diversified programs offered by the college.

But by far the most popular form is in the lively arts which have a cultural value while at the same time they stimulate and encourage local artists.

MUSIC ENRICHES

The College Orchestra gives formal concerts and performances throughout the year, offering students the opportunity to practice and perform all styles of musical works, ranging from classical music to "soul" jazz.

The A Cappella Choir, Chamber Choir, Men's Glee Club, Women's Choir, and vocal soloists take part in two annual vocal festivals and present choral concerts throughout the year.

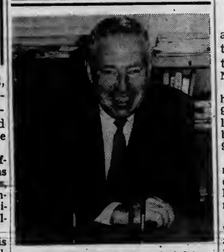
The department of music and the Associated Students also present the fall and spring Concert Series, featuring outstanding professional ensembles, instrumentalists and vocalists. The department also presents the annual Christmas concert.

DRAMA TRAINS, ENTERTAINS

The drama department offers training and experience in all the arts, crafts and techniques of the theater—and entertainment. Courses include theory and technique of acting, play reading, speech for the theater, theatrical make-up and stagecraft.

Drama department productions have included Playboy Of The Western World, Little Foxes, Teahouse Of The August Moon, The Good Woman Of Setzuan, The Winslow Boy, Inherit The Wind, No Exit, The Thurber Carnival and Blood Wedding.

For aspiring disc jockeys, the radio and television broadcasting department operates KCSF, the college radio station.



JOURNALISM INFORMS

The college newspaper, The Guardsman, is a member of the Associated Collegiate Press and has received 32 All-American ratings in 48 semesters of membership. The Guardsman is a weekly newspaper entirely produced by journalism students, who plan and direct all phases of the newspaper publication.

The Guardsman is a vital organ of communication of the Associated Students, serving the best interests of the college to its students. The newspaper also invites student opinion through letters to the Ram's Horn.

ORIENTATION EDITION

This special edition of The Guardsman is published exclusively for entering Freshmen and is the result of joint efforts of both the outgoing and incoming members of the editorial staff.

ON BEHALF OF the administration and faculty, it is my pleasure to extend a most cordial welcome to the Spring, 1967, entering class. We are pleased that you have decided to continue your education here. May I assure you that we stand ready to assist you in every possible way.

YOU MUST REALIZE, however, that this is a cooperative undertaking to which you must contribute your full share if it is to be successful.

JUST A FEW YEARS AGO, students entering college could be quite certain that the world they were preparing to enter, upon completion of college, would not change much during their lifetime. This is no longer true for we are living in an age of change brought about by technology and automation.

CONSEQUENTLY, young people today must be better prepared than ever before if they are to succeed in this changing world.

THE PERSISTENT EXERCISE of a little extra effort is one of the most powerful forces contributing to success. This persistence will, no doubt, allow you to meet the challenges of this atomic, automated era.

Louis G. Conlan
President, City College

Time And Place, Cost And Deeds Of Campus Life

For anticipators, worry-warts and organizers, several important items of interest come under the general heading, What Every New Student Should Know:

For those interested in details, honor students register starting at 9:30 a.m. Monday, February 6, followed by others according to numbers. Registration picks up again at 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, February 7.

Registration will stop that afternoon to provide for any rescheduling of classes. It will begin again at 8 a.m. February 8, and end that day, with no late registration planned.

Freshman Class activities, as such, will start Thursday, February 16, with a class meeting in S-100. Purpose of the meeting is the election of officers to work with the class president and selection of a semester project.

There will be a Frosh Rally on Thursday, February 23, at the Ram during College Hour. And the main event of the semester, the Frosh Premier Show and Dance, is scheduled for 9 p.m. Friday, February 24, in Smith Hall.

Since it is not possible to learn without books and supplies, the Ramporium, the college bookstore, is open from 7 a.m. to 4 p.m., excepting Fridays when it closes at 3:30 p.m.

For those who can't find a place in the cafeteria to study or warm their hands, the library is open from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. Mondays through Thursdays, and from 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. on Fridays.

The cafeteria in Smith Hall is open from 11 a.m. to 1:15 p.m., the fountain area from 7:30 a.m. to 1:15 p.m., and Statler Wing from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m.

College Hour, 11 a.m. Thursday, when a minimum of classes is scheduled, provides time for lectures, plays, concerts and rallies.

And on Tuesdays, during 11 a.m. semi-College Hour, all clubs and campus organizations meet in designated rooms.

Midterm periods end March 31 and May 5, respectively, and finals are June 8 through 16.

'Big Six,' Council, President's Cabinet Play Important Roles In Student Government System

Student government at the college can best be explained by first noting three distinct groups which play a part in its makeup.

First, there is what is referred to as the "big six." Included in this group are the Associated Student President and Vice President, the Associated Men and Women Student Presidents and the Sophomore and Freshman Class Presidents.

Each is elected by the students-at-large semesterly. However, only one of the "big six"—the Vice President—may vote on the official governing body of the association.

I WOULD LIKE to welcome you to one of the finest two-year colleges in the nation. City College of San Francisco has many events and activities to offer you, ranging from fraternities and sororities to athletic and social events.

THE SEMESTER ahead looks like a great one. Last year we won seven championships of which six were in the Golden Gate Conference, and we hope to do the same this time around.

THE KEY TO A well-rounded campus life is an Associated Student card. This card entitles you to free parking on campus, admission to proms, dances, athletic events and other college activities you won't want to miss.

THE PROFITS MADE from AS card sales also help to provide for concerts, bands and rallies.

BESIDES BEING an outstanding athletic and social college, our academic and student government standings rate very high in the state of California.

AGAIN I WANT to welcome you to City College. I also want to remind you that my office will be always open to all your questions and suggestions.

Joe Parnell, President,
Associated Students

STUDENT COUNCIL COMPOSITION

This body is known as Student Council. Its members, all of whom may vote and introduce formal motions, include seven representatives of the Freshman Class, seven representatives of the Sophomore Class and the Vice President.

Each is also elected by the general student body each semester.

The AS President presides over all meetings of council and may vote in the case of a tie.

RESPONSIBILITY, AUTHORITY

Student Council is responsible for and has final authority in the supervision of the affairs, policies, properties and conduct of the Associated Students of the college.

"Associated Students" means those registered students who have in their possession a current AS card available at the beginning of each semester for $5.

One of council's major duties is that of allocating funds to official budgeted organizations on campus for the semester succeeding its term of office. For example, last fall council allocated almost $46,000 to operate student activities for last semester.

TWENTY COMPRISE CABINET

After Student Council comes the third and final division known as cabinet.

A cabinet member may either be appointed or elected by the organization he represents at Student Council meetings, or appointed by the AS President. Like the Associated Men and Women Student Presidents and the Freshman and Sophomore Class Presidents, cabinet has a voice but no vote on the official body.

A question frequently asked is: Are the "big six," council and cabinet all that make up the college's student government system? The answer is no!

PARTICIPATION OPEN TO ALL

All students here are eligible and invited to take an active part in their student government system and are welcome to voice their opinions on campus issues at appropriate times in an appropriate manner.

Council meets from 12 noon to 1 p.m. each Monday and Wednesday in bungalow six, which is directly behind Cloud Hall and the nearest bungalow to Arts Hall.

The college offers units in four areas of student leadership. SL G2 is designed for those students interested in the management of club activities. SL G8 is open to students desiring practice in the organization of assemblies, forums and rallies.

Those students interested in Student Government will be encouraged to enroll in SL G10. This course is primarily for Associated Student officers but is open to others. Student leadership, G16, is for the band.

Eagles Lead Enrollment

Washington High School led the field in the number of San Francisco high school graduates enrolled at City College last semester. They took the lead with the high total of 963.

Second in position was Lowell High with 892 graduates, ten more than Lincoln. Lincoln usually gives Washington stiff competition for the top figure but fell behind last semester with a total of 882.

Next in line of the San Francisco high schools were Galileo with 851, Balboa 525, Mission 391, Polytechnic 353, Wilson 275, Adams and Franklin High Schools 163, O'Connell 25, Gompers 12, Adams Commerce 10, and Continuation 5. The total of 1340 were here from San Francisco's private schools.

From across the bay, Alameda County sent this college 127 of their graduates, while 865 were graduates from schools in other California counties.

Foreign-born students have been coming in from all over the world. Germany led the race with 60 students followed closely by Hong Kong's 59. Next in line was England with 35, El Salvador 33 and Canada 30.

More than 700 ex-military men and women attended this college under the GI Bill bringing the grand total of day-time enrollment to 8,869. As usual, the men outnumbered the women with a ratio of 5,205 men to 3,664 women. There were approximately 1.5 fellows for each coed.

Students Adapt, Not Conform To New College Environment

THE TIME HAS COME when a high school education is not enough. Be it technological advancement or just plain status, employers now require a college education before they even give the job-seeker individual consideration.

Students do not usually like to admit that the reason they are attending college is to be eligible for better jobs and therefore more money. They prefer to quote the more lofty ideals of the desire to seek the Truth—or education for the sake of education alone. There are those who are actually here for this reason and no other, but they are few and far between.

But whatever a person's reasons for continuing his education, one dominant fact remains. He is doing it on a voluntary basis; the time of compulsory education has passed. Anybody on this campus can leave at any time. He will not leave a gap. Annually increasing enrollments show that there will be two new students to take his place.

Entering college means entering a new environment. A person has to adapt to an environment—he does not have to conform to it. There are few rules and regulations to follow at City College, but these few must and will be adhered to.

The two-year college is the backbone of California's system of higher education. It offers relief to the already over-crowded State colleges and universities and it helps the student complete his lower division requirements of a college education with a minimum of cost. It makes possible the dream of a college education to all with the ability to receive one.

But when somebody foots the bill, it is only right that the receiver of the benefits recognize certain obligations. In the case of City College, the city of San Francisco takes care of the major burden of expenses with state funds taking care of the rest.

For their effort, the city and state ask but one thing—that the student receive the best education possible under existing circumstances. Upon graduation, the student is not required to pay back anything. He is not even required to remain a resident in the area that was taxed the heaviest for his education.

The two-year college is a tried and true route to the universities. The time will come when it will be the only route, because of increasing enrollments. A college education is here for the asking, but it is up to the individual to work for it. Learning is never easy, but that is what is offered here. Good luck.

Map Shows Areas For Student Cars

AS Members Have Parking Rights Here

Approximately 1800 parking spaces are available for students driving to the college, provided that the cars parked in these areas have a valid parking permit on their windshields.

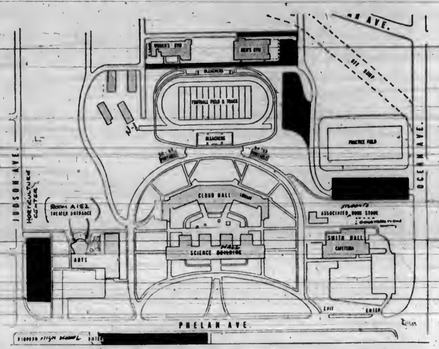
Parking permits are issued by the Campus Police department to those students who have joined the Associated Students. Cars parked in the student parking lots without the permit are subject to citations.

Five student parking lots east of Phelan avenue are as follows:

Parking lot B, the blacked-in area on the map between the football practice field and Smith Hall (cafeteria), is a student parking lot. Entrance to the lot is from Ocean avenue. Walking time from the center of lot B to the flag pole in the center of the main courtyard is three minutes and 20 seconds.

Parking lot C is the area between the football field and track and the practice field. Entrance to this lot is also on Ocean avenue and through lot B. Walking time from lot C to the flag pole is three minutes and 35 seconds.

Lot D is the area next to and along side the men's gymnasium. The spaces against the curb are for physical education instructors only. Students parking there will be tagged. Walking time to the flag pole is four minutes and 35 seconds.



Lots F and G encompass the area between Arts Hall and Judson avenue. Entrance is from Judson avenue. Walking time from the combined lots is clocked at three minutes and 25 seconds.

The "Big Daddy" of all campus parking lots is the north reservoir which can accommodate 1000 cars.

From the reservoir, across Phelan avenue, it takes four minutes and 40 seconds to walk to Science Hall.

All other lots are for faculty or guest parking.

Although the ticket is issued by the Campus Police, it is the same as any citation issued by the regular San Francisco Police force. The fine is payable to the Hall of Justice.

BLACKED-IN AREAS OF MAP denote areas where students with permits may park. On the right, parking lots B, C and D. On the left, parking lots F and G, along Judson avenue. The Big Daddy of all is the reservoir.

High Reg Number, Late Hour Spell Footwork

City College, located on San Francisco's Hill 29, has seven permanent buildings, only one of which, Science Hall, dominates the top of the incline.

Although true, this is little consolation to the incoming student who may have a high registration number and a comparatively late registration hour.

And a typical class schedule can pose problems.

At 8 a.m. the young student finds himself in front of Science Hall, the major building on the crest of the hill. He proceeds to climb the three flights of stairs to his first class on the third floor.

The 9 a.m. carillon rings, and he dashes from his third floor class and realizes that he has only 10 minutes to reach his next class—physical education.

He then staggers down the three floors of Science Hall, walks out the east door and finds himself in a large courtyard with Science Hall behind and Cloud Hall directly in front of him.

He continues to walk east through Cloud Hall and finds himself at the crest of a downward hill which will eventually take him to the men's gymnasium. Upon descending the incline beyond the stadium, there are two large buildings in front of him.

Coeds enter the building on the north, so he assumes that the place for him is the structure on the south.

At long last, 10 a.m. rolls around and he notices that he has a long-sought-after break. Where does he go?

He decides he needs nutrition and begins to climb the hill from which he descended just 50 minutes earlier.

At the top of the incline, he turns south and walks down a hill where he finds Smith Hall and the new Statler wing directly to the left of it and set further back.

After sipping a cup of coffee in the fountain section of Smith Hall and somewhat rested, he decides to explore. Outside he finds to the immediate east the Ramporium, the Associated Student bookstore. This structure is not considered permanent because of future building plans.

At the chimes for the 11 a.m. class he realizes that he has to trudge to Arts Hall.

Now, he makes an about-face, turns to the north and starts the journey back up the hill that took him to Smith Hall, across the middle of the courtyard and then down the hill on the north side of Hill 29.

There stands Arts Hall, soon to be expanded to house photography, advertising and graphic arts.

Success Story — The History Of City College

THIS PORTRAIT OF PRESIDENT Archibald J. Cloud, first president of the college, 1935 to 1949, and President Emeritus, 1949 to 1957, was taken by Madison Devlin, audio-visual aids instructor. A color photograph, it now hangs in the library.

San Francisco The Campus For 1470 Argonauts In 1935

City College of San Francisco (then named San Francisco Junior College) became a reality August 26, 1935, when the first student body met in the War Memorial Opera House to be addressed as "Argonauts."

Between opening-day formal speeches, 1470 students and 72 faculty members read a newspaper bearing the name Emanon — (try it in reverse).

A high point in the speeches was to become a familiar reminder from pioneer President Archibald J. Cloud: "A college is more than buildings..." There were many buildings, yet each was borrowed.

Morning classes met in the University of California's Extension Building at 540 Powell street, afternoon classes in Galileo High School, where administrative offices also were located. Beyond these bases, classes requiring special facilities found them in from 18 to 25 buildings throughout the city.

An automobile tour of 18 of these sites, made in 1938 by an Associated Student President and a Guardsman reporter, clocked two hours and 35 minutes driving time exclusive of parking mileage and stops at the 18 locations.

Thus, without a campus of their own, the early student bodies could rightly call the city itself their campus, Union Square their recreation center between classes, cable car rides around and over Russian Hill to Galileo a stimulating diversion.

Within 30 days after opening ceremonies, the Argonauts had organized the Associated Students, drafted a constitution and elected officers; named their newspaper The Guardsman; adopted a mascot, the Ram; chosen colors, Red and White, and adopted a motto, Ut Adolescentes Vitae Educantur which, translated from the Latin, means That Youth May Be Educated To Life, all through the democratic process — the vote.

One year later, 40 acres of Balboa Park were acquired as the site for a permanent campus, and on April 25, 1937, Science Hall construction, in the form of ground-breaking, began.

A special bond issue, necessary to qualify the school department for federal funds was passed by San Francisco voters — and the two gymnasiums were assured. So, in 1940, 3000 students occupied their own campus — soon to be dubbed pneumonia hill by the more cynically minded.

For three semesters the new campus, the college's own campus after five years of wandering, was at peace, or at least fighting only for familiar items such as adequate parking facilities.

Until December 7, 1941.

Although enrollment ebbed to fewer than 1000 in 1943, the war years saw the college not only maintaining its two basic curricula, university parallel courses and technical training programs, respectively, but also meeting wholeheartedly every effort to aid in the World War II effort.

Summer sessions were inaugurated, victory gardens of vegetables dotted the campus, evening classes were established, and a variety of specialized programs was provided to service units in San Francisco as the need arose.

Through it all, even though necessarily on a limited basis, the traditions, the activities, the spirit established by the Argonauts in 1935 of accepting any challenge continued.

Campus Hits Big Time With 'Lee' Miss America

Although the college had previously made news nationally, notably when it was listed by Look Magazine as one of the top ten two-year colleges in the country, nothing put it on the map more dramatically than the triumph of Lee Meriwether — City College student, 1954 — Miss America, 1955.

The two years marked the trek eastward to the college's permanent campus, a move that had visual evidence shortly after Louis G. Conlan "came home" as President of the college where he had been a member of the pioneer faculty.

Within two years after his appointment, President Conlan led a building program that was to stretch to the present time. The "war babies" were soon to reach college age, and at City College, as well as throughout the nation, accommodations were being made for their education.

The two-year college, largely a product of California, had proved itself and proved to the nation that every person was to be afforded the opportunity of a college education without tuition.

Construction and occupation were the earmarks of the period started in 1954. Cloud Hall: curiously, dedication ceremonies on April 25 marked an anniversary — 17 years to the day after ground had been broken for the construction of Science Hall.

Smith Hall construction, to house the famed hotel and restaurant department and the cafeteria it operates, was started not only in the Cloud Hall dedication year but also in the same month.

Completed in 1956, and already outgrown as a cafeteria what with steadily increasing enrollments, Smith Hall occupancy was followed in 1959 by the start of construction of Arts Hall and the college stadium.

Arts Hall, 1961 — for the first time City College had a real theater, not too large, it is true, but nonetheless a theater, possessed of the most modern equipment possible — and comfortable seats.

Music, art, closed-circuit television, ceramics — each had quarters conducive to carrying on the tradition of artistic achievement bravely begun by the Argonauts in 1935.

Building of a sort not anticipated by San Francisco's school department created a minor furor in 1962 when a freeway tentacle chopped off a corner of the campus. The corner just happened to be the site of the horticulture center, built in 1947.

In 1964, however, a new center was completed along with its greenhouse and room for 30,000 plants rescued from the old greenhouse.

Students entering this semester will push the total number of students who have enrolled here close to the 160,000 mark.

From Powell street and Galileo High headquarters to Balboa Park and the temporary West Campus — City College is the San Francisco School Department's top Success Story.

Works Of Art Adorn Campus

MANY ORIGINAL WORKS OF ART adorn the walls and halls of City College in addition to the Diego Rivera mural and the Redwood Ram.

Usually the first to catch the eye of the visitor because of their location just inside the main entrance to Science Hall; are the twin murals by artist Fred Olmstead, depicting a student engaged in study, (top left and bottom right).

Painted in 1940 and 1941, these impressive works were, almost unbelievably, finished by Olmstead in his "spare time," while he concurrently worked on two stone sculptures now in the courtyard facing Cloud Hall.

The two figures, among the last commissioned by the Federal Work Projects Administration, were set in place in 1941, shortly after completion of Science Hall.

Facing each other, they are the heads of Thomas Edison, (top right), and Leonardo da Vinci, (lower left), meant to represent Theory and Science.

For the record, Edison is on the north side of Science Hall's courtyard, while da Vinci stands on the south side of the court.

In keeping with the impressive murals created by Olmstead, is Stanley Sadler's mural depicting the evolution of type and journalism from the invention of type by the Chinese to the latest presses and newest processes, (top center).

The mural is fittingly mounted in room 345 of Science Hall, near the graphic arts laboratory, the advertising art department and the office of The Guardsman, official publication of the college.

Not exactly an art treasure but deeply revered by faculty and students is the college's motto, The Truth Shall Make You Free, from the New Testament, John, VIII, 32.

Other works of art adorning the college's walls include two 40 by 50 foot mosaics by Herman Volz, outside the north and south walls of Science Hall, a portrait of Dr. Archibald J. Cloud, first President of the college, located just inside the entrance to the library in Cloud Hall.

IF ARTS HALL in the above shot appears as one winding ramp — it isn't. This optical illusion was created by pasting the picture in the upper left-hand corner over the large one. Clear? — sure!

Priceless Rivera In Arts Hall

College Boasts 'Biggest, Best'

A masterpiece by the late Mexican artist, Diego Rivera, self-described as the "biggest and the best," adorns the east wall of the theater lobby in Arts Hall, after lying hidden for nearly two decades before a fitting site was found.

This great masterpiece, a mural, entitled, Marriage of the Artistic Expression of the North and South On This Continent, was given to the college after being painted as part of the living arts displayed at the Golden Gate Internatlonal Exposition of 1939 on Treasure Island.

While being moved to the college at the close of the fair, the mural was insured for $50,000 with Lloyd's of London. It is now insured for $125,000. In the art world, however, "priceless" would be the expression used to indicate its value.

When it arrived at the college, no facilities were available to accommodate the huge mural which is 22 feet high and 75 feet long.

The mural was placed in a protective case and stored in sections near the men's gymnasium where it lay for 18 years.

As the plans were being drawn in 1958 for what is now Arts Hall, provision was made for the mural to be mounted in the theater lobby of the building.

And so with the completion of Arts Hall, the outstanding mural, which is a priceless property of the college, was again displayed after its long period of dormancy.

The mural is divided into panels and in the center one is a serpent-fanged machine god. Around it are inventors, statesmen, personal friends of Rivera and shots from some of his favorite movies.

In the far left panels of the mural, Rivera has created an Aztec motif.

Moving to the right, such great men as George Washington, Thomas Jefferson and Abraham Lincoln are painted.

In the approximate center of the mural, sculptor Dudley Carter is shown carving the Redwood Ram, which, also a "relic" of the 1939 Golden Gate Fair, is now permanently located on the campus near Smith Hall.

The Ram was moved to its present location in 1956 where it has staunchly endured vandals and weather.

Below the Ram, Rivera is seen with his wife.

Rivera also placed dictators Stalin, Mussolini and Hitler in his mural.

Twice Olympic diving champion Helen Crlenkovich, then a City College student, is in the mural as she seems to glide silently above the bay waters and the city of San Francisco.

Finally, on the extreme right of his masterpiece, Rivera showed inventors Thomas Edison and S.F.B. Morse, and Robert Fulton and his steamboats.

The overall theme of the mural was to, and does, deplct Pan-American unity.

When asked why he painted himself holding hands with movie star Paulette Goddard, Rivera explained, "It means closer Pan-Americanism."

THE WORLD-FAMOUS MURAL, BY THE LATE famous Mexican artist Diego Rivera, is mounted on the east wall of the theater lobby in Arts Hall. A section of the priceless masterpiece, entitled, Marriage of the Artistic Expression of the North and South on This Continent is shown here.

Redwood Ram Stands Guard At Main Campus Entrance

The Redwood Ram, the best known symbol on campus, stands guard at the main approach to the campus, serving as a meeting place for students and a reminder of college spirit.
